"Capt. Harry H. Bandholtz, governor, has since yesterday acted counsel for Major Gardener, who, up to the present, declined furnish names any witnesses to board. He has brought several witnesses, but so far his procedure indicates he does not desire full investigation as ordered. Board has had no desire attack Major Gardener, but is pursuing rigid investigation his allegations irrespective what he wishes, and will not permit him shape or dictate the course investigation."

Think any objection Major Gardener lays in fact that the board desires to test accuracy of his information and the condition Tayabas when he was governor. Some time must necessarily elapse before the report is completed. Probably many witnesses to be examined.

CHAFFEE.

Also the following telegram:

WAR DEPARTMENT, May 2, 1902.

CHAFFEE, Manila:

Cable in full Major Gardener's specifications. Your directions to board to afford Gardener every opportunity are approved. Board should be especially enjoined not to permit the proceeding to assume a character giving the least color to a claim that there is an attack on him or allow it to be in any way diverted from a full and fair investigation of the truth of his charges.

ROOT.

Under the circumstances, the investigation pending, the witnesses abroad, the accused persons before the board of inquiry in the Philippine Islands, where Major Gardener can best prove his allegations and those whom he accuses can meet them if they can, it seemed to the committee it was not desirable to take further action at present.

I ask that the resolution may lie on the table and that these papers, which include all the telegrams which have passed, may be printed as a part of my remarks for the information of the Senate.

The papers referred to are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1902.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I herewith transmit to you reports of the condition of Batangas and Tayabas, disturbed districts in the archipelago, with a view, as suggested in our conversation, to an investigation of certain charges made by Colonel Gardener, the governor of Tayabas, as to the conduct by American troops in the suppression of the insurrection in those two provinces.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. TAFT.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 19, 1902.

GENERAL: At the instance of the Secretary of War I inclose herewith a copy of a report of Maj. Cornelius Gardener, Thirteenth United States Infantry, as provisional governor of the province of Tayabas, the same having been made by him to the civil governor of the Philippine Islands.

There is so much contained in this report reflecting not only upon officers of the Army, but the general conduct of affairs and the military branch of the Government, that the Secretary of War desires you to cause a careful inquiry to be made concerning these statements, and, if they be found true, that the necessary administrative and disciplinary measures be applied to correct these evils.

Your particular attention is invited to the portions of the report which are underscored.

You are requested to make a full report of the investigation herein directed as soon as possible.

Very respectfully,

H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant-General, Major-General, U. S. Army.

Maj. Gen. ADNA R. CHAFFEE,

Referring to that part of my communication which states that the warfare in the Philippine Islands has been conducted with marked severity, and to the remarks of the honorable Secretary on that point, it is proper to say that I had in mind such information as is conveyed in the letter of Governor William H. Taft, addressed to the honorable Secretary dated Washington, February 7, 1902, as well as other communications that have been referred to these headquarters or received by me.

The reference in the memorandum to the letter of Governor Taft to the Secretary of War dated February 7, 1902, is to a letter transmitting, for the purpose of an investigation by the military authorities, a report by the civil governor of the province of Tayabas, containing, in general terms and without specifications or names, serious charges against the military administration in that province and against the conduct of the Army generally in its relations to the civil government. This report was on the 19th of February sent to General Chaffee with the following direction:

"There is so much contained in this report reflecting not only upon officers of the Army, but the general conduct of affairs and the administration of the military branch of the Government, that the Secretary of War desires you to cause a careful inquiry to be made concerning these statements, and if they be found true that the necessary administrative and disciplinary measures be applied to correct these evils;" and also "to make a full report of the investigation herein directed as soon as possible."

There has not yet been time for the report to be made, and the direction for the investigation can only just now have reached Manila. It is to be regretted that the officer of the highest rank in the Army should assume the truth of charges reflecting upon the credit of the Army in advance of the investigation which has been ordered, and without giving General Chaffee, upon whose particular command the charges reflect, an opportunity to be heard. Governor Taft's letter shows that the civil governor of the Philippines was unwilling to accept the charges as true without an investigation.

As the Lieutenant-General's memorandum of March 24 was not made until after the introduction of a resolution in the House of Representatives calling for all correspondence and papers in the matter of his application to go to the Philippines, the putting into those papers of the specific reference to the letter transmitting the charges plainly evinces a design to procure the publication of the charges, and of the Lieutenant-General's acceptance thereof as true, in advance of the investigation of their truth, and of a report thereon by General Chaffee. In the interest of good discipline and effective service such a course is much to be regretted. Such charges ought not to be published against our countrymen whom we have sent to labor and fight under our flag on the other side of the world before they can be heard in their own defense.

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, April 15, 1902.

CHAFFEE, Manila:

On February 19 a letter was sent you inclosing, for investigation, copy of charges made by Governor Gardener, of Tayabas Province, which contained general allegations of cruelties practiced by troops on natives, and generally of an insolent and brutal attitude of the Army toward natives.

On April 2 a cable dispatch was sent you urging action with all speed consistent with thorough and searching investigation.

On the 4th of March a cable dispatch was sent you directing disciplinary measures to produce obedience to the President's instructions, subordinating military officers to civil government in pacified provinces, and instructing you to relieve Maj. Edwin F. Glenn and Capt. James A. Ryan from duty and order them to Manila to await investigation into their conduct, in accordance with instructions to follow by mail.

On the 24th of March instructions were mailed you containing statement of charges against those officers and Gen. Jacob H. Smith as the basis of the investigation ordered by the cable of March 4.

Further instructions in both matters are required by the following facts:

Press dispatches state that upon the trial of Major Waller, of the Marine Corps, testimony was given by Waller, corroborated by other witnesses, that Gen. Jacob H. Smith instructed him to kill and burn; that the more he killed and burned the better pleased General Smith would be; that it was no time to take prisoners, and that when Major Waller asked General Smith to define the age limit for killing, he replied, "Everything over 10."

If such testimony was given, and the facts can be established, you will place General Smith on trial by court-martial.

Yesterday, before the Senate Committee on Philippine Affairs, Sergt. Charles S. Riley and Private William Lewis Smith, of the Twenty-sixth Volunteer Infantry, testified that the form of torture known as the "water cure" was administered to presidente of the town of Igbarras, Iloilo Province, island of Panay, by detachment of Eighteenth United States Infantry, under command of Lieut. Arthur L. Conger, under orders of Maj. Edwin F. Glenn, then captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and that Capt. and Asst. Surg. Palmer Lyon, at that time a contract surgeon, was present to assist them. The officers named, or such of them as are found to be responsible for the act, will be tried therefor by court-martial. Conger and Lyon are in this country. Both the Twenty-sixth Volunteer Infantry and the Eighteenth Infantry having returned to the United States, most of the witnesses being presumtively here, the Secretary of War directs that Maj. E. F. Glenn, Twenty-fifth Infantry, be directed to proceed to San Francisco and report to the general commanding the Department of California, with a view to his trial by court-martial under charges alleging the cruelties practiced by him upon a native of the Philippine Islands, at Igbarras, on the 27th of June, 1900.

If you can discover any witnesses still in the service in the Philippine Islands who can testify in support of the charges, or if Major Glenn desires the attendance of any persons now serving in the islands as witnesses for the defense, you will direct them to proceed to San Francisco for that purpose. As the two years allowed for the prosecution by the statute of limitations is nearly at an end, no time is to be lost. You will take such course in advancing or postponing the investigations previously ordered into the conduct of General Smith and Major Glenn as shall be required to enable you to execute these instructions. It is believed that the violations of law and humanity, of which these cases, if true, are examples, will prove to be few and occasional and not to characterize the conduct of the army generally in the Philippines; but the fact that any such acts of cruelty and barbarity appear to have been done indicates the necessity of a most thorough, searching, and exhaustive investigation under the general charges preferred by Governor Gardener, and you will spare no effort, in the investigation already ordered under these charges, to uncover every such case which may have occurred and bring the offenders to justice.

The President desires to know in the fullest and most circumstantial manner all the facts, nothing being concealed, and no man being for any reason favored or shielded. For the very reason that the President intends to back up the Army in the heartiest fashion in every lawful and legitimate method of doing its work, he also intends to see that the most rigorous care is exercised to detect and prevent any cruelty or brutality, and that men who are guilty thereof are punished. Great as the provocation has been in dealing with foes who habitually resort to treachery, murder, and torture against our men, nothing can justify, or will be held to justify, the use of torture or inhuman conduct of any kind on the part of the American Army.

By direction of the Secretary of War:

H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant-General, Major-General, U. S. Army.

[Telegram.]

MAY 1, 1902.

CHAFFEE, Manila:

Has Major Gardener filed specifications under investigation ordered February 19? What is condition of investigation? Cable fully.

CORBIN.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, it appears from the papers which have been offered to the Senate by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that Major Gardener evidently thinks his case is in unfriendly hands. In his official report as civil governor of the island Major Gardener made certain complaints against the military officers in the islands, including the highest officers of the islands. Thereupon the President of the United States, deeming this matter one which should be investigated, directed General Chaffee to organize a court of inquiry to make an investigation of the subject. The bias of that court, the bias of the military officers who are the objects of the complaint in the report made by the civil governor, is manifest.

It appears from the cablegram from General Chaffee read to the Senate that Major Gardener is reluctant to submit himself and his case to the determination of those who are the very object of his complaint. Now, it is proposed by the committee to delay sending for Major Gardener in order that he may be required to go through the farce of——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. RAWLINS. One moment. I will yield to the Senator presently.

Mr. SPOONER. I only wanted to ask a question.

Mr. RAWLINS. When I have finished my sentence I will yield. It is proposed by the Committee to delay sending for Major Gardener in order that he may be required to go through the farce of awaiting the specifications and the inquiry and the determination of this court, composed of military officers selected by the commanding general in the islands.

I appreciate, Mr. President, and sympathize with the motive of the officials in Washington who desire that a thorough and impartial investigation of these charges shall be made, but I do wish to say that it seems to me we would have a better manifestation of that purpose if it were possible to select some tribunal whose impartiality in dealing with it would be beyond question.

The cablegram of General Chaffee, showing his bias, is answered by a direction of the Secretary of War enjoining upon him the duty not to put Major Gardener upon trial, but to make an honest and fair investigation of the specifications or charges made against the military authorities in the islands furnished by the civil governor of Tayabas. Ought we to refuse to send for Major Gardener and demand his presence here in order that the facts may be laid before the Senate committee and the Senate until this court of inquiry in the Philippine Islands, composed of individuals of whom Major Gardener complains, have rendered their verdict for their own exoneration and for his condemnation?

General Chaffee informs us he himself complained of the officers of the Army being complained of, that he has designated some members of the Army to act as this court. He advises us in the cablegram that he has selected the attorney to act in behalf of Major Gardener, that poor privilege not being accorded to the civil governor of the province of Tayabas. He further informs us that he will see to it that Major Gardener is not permitted to give this inquiry the turn which he desires, but that he, Chaffee, and the court will see to it that it is made to assume the direction which they desire.

This is but another example of the character of administration we are having in the islands, a dual government, one civil and the other military, and each acting in conflict with the other; one making accusations against the other; and the question of the trial of such accusation being submitted to the person accused for his own determination.

Mr. President, I do not think there is a sufficient reason shown in the documents which have been presented to the Senate by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, who is the chairman of this committee, why it should not be insisted that this witness be summoned and that this case be laid before a tribunal which will dispose of it impartially.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought the Senator had taken his seat.

Mr. RAWLINS. I understood that the Senator wished to ask me a question.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will yield to the Senator, because I am always glad to hear him.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not ask the Senator to yield to me, Mr. President. Is the Senator through?

Mr. RAWLINS. I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I decline to accept the floor from the Senator. Under the rules I have a right to take it myself when the Senator yields it.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not tender it to the Senator as a matter of courtesy or favor. I yield the floor, and the Senator may occupy the whole of it.

Mr. SPOONER. I occupy it then, Mr. President, as a matter of right, and not by the grace of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the observations which the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] has submitted to the Senate are, in my view, quite characteristic of this debate thus far in its conduct, so far as the other side of this Chamber is concerned. I do not intend to enter into a general discussion of the Philippine question this morning, but only to refer for a few moments to the question presented by the resolution. I have not discovered anything in the cablegram from General Chaffee indicating a bias upon his part as the Senator from Utah did. So far from it, Mr. President, I undertake to deny that there is a word in it which indicates any bias upon the part of General Chaffee against Major Gardener, or any desire to influence in any way or to color this investigation or interfere with its conduct.

The Senator seems to be, if he will permit me to say it, blinded by suspicion of the Army and of everyone else who has been charged with public duty in the Philippines. He says he sympathizes with the efforts of the authorities here to secure a thorough investigation of the truth of the charges made by Major Gardener. I was glad to hear that assertion from the Senator, for I had not supposed he entertained that feeling of sympathy.

There seems to have been a great willingness here to impeach the whole Army in the Philippines. The Senator asks the people of the United States in the few moments in which he occupied the floor to believe that there can not be constituted a board of Army officers in the Philippines who like gentlemen and honorable men will fairly and searchingly investigate the truth of these charges. He says the cablegram indicates that Major Gardener is not satisfied with the court. That is true. But when the Senator said it was a court of officers who had served in the province who were subject to the criticism of Major Gardener's report, so far as I understand the facts, I deny it. I rose to ask the Senator, when he declined to permit a question, whether he intended to say that the officers who compose this board, which is a mere board of inquiry, not a court, are officers who had served in the province of which Major Gardener was the governor. I understand it not to be true.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator asks me a question. I only rose for the purpose of answering.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not ask a question. I said that I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator that question when he was on the floor. He declined to permit me to do so.

Mr. RAWLINS. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not intend any such discourtesy. I was in the midst of a sentence. I had only a few remarks to make. I desired to be entirely courteous, and to yield the floor to him to ask any question that he desired to propound. If the Senator supposes that I did not so intend, I wish to correct that erroneous impression.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, I understand the fact to be, and I was so informed at the War Department yesterday, that these officers are none of them officers subject to the charges contained in Major Gardener's report.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will state what I intended to say. Major Gardener said in his report:

> The attitude of the Army, thereby meaning most of its officers and soldiers, is, however, decidedly hostile to the provincial and municipal government in this province and to the civil government in these islands in general. In Manila especially it is intensely so, even among the higher officers. The work of the Commission in the establishment of provincial governments is ridiculed even in the presence of the natives. It is openly stated that the Army should remain in charge for the next twenty years.

Here is a charge involving the conduct of the army generally throughout the islands and its highest officers, and all I desired to suggest was the question of propriety in submitting the inquiry into the conduct of these very men thus charged to themselves for determination. That is what I meant to imply and nothing more.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I was not directing my remarks to what the Senator intended to say; I was directing them to what the Senator did say, as I understood him.

Mr. RAWLINS. I submit that that is in substance all I did say and that no other inference or implication from my remarks could arise than that which arises from the language which I have read from the report of Major Gardener.

Mr. SPOONER. Then it gets down to this, that Major Gardener, or Governor Gardener, whichever it may be, has made a general impeachment of the conduct of Army officers in the Philippines, and therefore there are not to be found in the Philippines American officers to whom can be safely and properly committed the duty of investigating and reporting upon these charges of Major Gardener. The American people, Mr. President, will not believe that, because they know that that is not and can not be true of the American army in the Philippines or any American army that ever has existed.

There seems to be a disposition here to reflect without limit upon Army officers in the Philippines and upon named officers. This attitude of Senators is a strange one. Of course it has nothing to do with this bill. If an Army officer, stung to the quick by the belief that an attitude here in the United States has prolonged insurrection in the Philippines, that utterances here have given strength and vigor to attack upon our troops, who traces to such utterances responsibility for the death of brave men whom he has seen fall around him, speaks a word of criticism upon it, he is called to book in the Senate; it is demanded that he be reprimanded.

And yet Senators here do not hesitate to make savage attacks upon the Army almost as a whole and upon specific officers. They stand here and speak of Funston, who may have talked too much. If he has he has followed the example of many not in military life. We all talk too much, I expect, at some time or other in our lives. It is said that Funston fought his way to fame with the jawbone of an ass. Funston's lips are sealed. I do not defend what General Funston said, but when he was fighting all unknown as a volunteer in the island of Cuba for Cuban liberty he was not fighting with the jawbone of an ass, and when again and again and again, offering his life every moment at the head of as brave men as were ever led into battle, he won fame as a soldier and the commendation of President McKinley, as brave and pure a knight as ever lived or carried sword, he did not accomplish that with the jawbone of an ass; he accomplished it with a sword in his good right hand, which he knew how to use.

Chaffee's bias! Who ordered Major Waller before a court-martial? Chaffee, on information which he derived over there and under no order from here.

It will not do, and here of all places it ought not to be attempted, to smirch the whole American Army or the great band of officers who have led our troops in the Philippines. That there have been outrages committed there by the Army I have no doubt. That any man here wants to conceal them I do not believe. I do not. Whether there have been outrages in the conduct of the war and, if so, what provocation there was for them, is a matter yet to be determined.

Mr. President, there will be an investigation of the conduct of the war. Wherever officers are found to have violated the rules of civilized warfare, to have forgotten the honor of the soldier, they will be punished. The American people will demand it.

The American people, however, will convict no man without a hearing. They will convict no man on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The American people are not constituted in that way. They hear before they strike. They will demand condign punishment upon those who deserve it, but they will suspend judgment until the charges are proven.

I intended to vote for this resolution when it should have been amended to make it constitutional and other than a palpable invasion or attempted invasion by the Senate of the constitutional prerogative of the President. As it came here, it directed the Secretary of War to order an Army officer home. I suggested that we had no right to do that, because the President would have a right to order that he be not sent home, and that is a test of our right to pass a resolution directing the Secretary of War to order him home. Amended so as to request the President to call him home, I intended to vote for it, for I resent for one the intimation constantly made here that on this side of the Chamber we are for suppression and unwilling that investigations which ought to be made shall go on.

But whether the Army in its military operations in the Philippines has or has not observed the rules of civilized warfare, I take it nobody will dispute that we ought to pass, perhaps not the pending bill without amendment, but that we ought to pass some bill for the better government of the Philippines.

I am not willing to vote for this resolution, Mr. President, and briefly I wish to state why. The Senator from Utah thinks that on the present showing this officer ought to be ordered home and permitted at once to appear before his committee. I think not.

What is the history of this business? This report of Major Gardener was not made to General Chaffee. This report of Major Gardener was not made to the Secretary of War. It was made by him as military governor of a province and sent by him to Governor Taft, who at the time was ill.

Governor Taft brought it with him from the Philippines, and about the 7th day of February he brought it to the attention of the Secretary of War, who remarked to him that it required investigation because of the serious charges which it contained. I am not referring now to the opinion of the military officers as to civil government or municipal government, but to the other charges contained in the report, which was transmitted by Governor Taft, and the record of the committee's proceedings shows it on the 7th day of February. The Secretary of War, it is said, suppressed it. I deny that the Secretary of War did with it other than his duty, Mr. President.

Senators seemed to think the Secretary of War should immediately have given it to the Associated Press; that he should have sent it broadcast all over the world, with its general charges against the army in the Philippines. That has not been the practice, and it never ought to be the practice.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the complaint was not that the Secretary of War did not give it to the Associated Press, but that when Governor Taft, having that report in his possession, was testifying before the committee charged with the investigation of affairs in the Philippines, and was asked for the reports of the governors of provinces, that and another report were withheld, because they had been retained by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. And that report was kept from the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. In other words, it was kept from the public. It had been sent to the Secretary of War and had been retained by the Secretary of War. What did the Secretary of War do with it? He wrote on the 19th day of February this letter, or rather General Corbin did so for him:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 19, 1902.

GENERAL: At the instance of the Secretary of War I inclose herewith a copy of a report of Maj. Cornelius Gardener, Thirteenth United States Infantry, as provincial governor of the province of Tayabas, the same having been made by him to the civil governor of the Philippine Islands.

There is so much contained in this report reflecting, not only upon officers of the Army, but the general conduct of affairs and the military branch of the Government, that the Secretary of War desires you to cause a careful inquiry to be made concerning these statements, and if they be found true that the necessary administrative and disciplinary measures be applied to correct these evils.

Your particular attention is invited to the portions of the report which are underscored.

Relating to the operations of the Army and to the strictures upon Army officers, a matter within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War.

You are requested to make a full report of the investigation herein directed as soon as possible.

Very respectfully,
H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant-General, Major-General, U. S. Army.

Maj. Gen. ADNA R. CHAFFEE,
Commanding the Division of the Philippine Islands, Manila, P. I.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. There was another report that was also withheld.

Mr. SPOONER. I am now talking about this report.

Mr. CARMACK. Well, at the same time——

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; I am dealing with this report now. I will take up the other report and a good many other things when the proper time comes.

What should the Secretary of War have done with that report other than what he did with it? There come here every day hundreds of charges against civil officers throughout the United States; they come to the heads of the departments; they come to the President—charges involving honor, charges of malfeasance and of misfeasance. If the officers to whom they come should immediately give them to the press they would start, in ninety cases out of a hundred, slanders upon good men which would hurt them in their hearts and in their homes. They would act upon a presumption of guilt without investigation. That has never been, to the credit of all our Administrations, the method of transacting public business of that kind.

They direct an investigation; they notify the accused of the charges against him, and they instruct efficient Government officers to look into those charges; and in ninety cases out of a hundred, I am told, the charges are found to be utterly without foundation, to be based upon malice, upon some personal grievance, or upon a misconstruction of something that has been done. That is the right thing to do, Mr. President, and when a charge is made against Army officers, affecting their honor, imputing to them cruelty and a violation of the rules of civilized warfare, general in its terms, mentioning no officer, what should the Secretary of War do with it?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. In a moment. I undertake to say, Mr. President, he should do with it just what Secretary Root did with it. He should send a copy of it to the commanding general in the Philippines, with instructions to thoroughly, searchingly, and fairly investigate the truth of the charges and report thereon.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, this was an official report of one civil governor to another civil governor of a government created by the authority of an act of Congress, the conditions of that government being a subject of investigation, under the authority of the Senate, by a committee of the Senate; and the civil governor-general, to whom the report was made, being before that committee, and testifying fully as to all the conditions of that government, being operated under his authority, had this with other reports in his hand relating to those conditions, all pertinent to a bill which was pending before Congress for consideration, and which had been before that committee. He laid before that committee all except two reports; he carried those away to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War withheld them until by accident the fact of their existence long after came to the attention of the committee, and it was the unanimous opinion——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not yield to the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. RAWLINS. It was the unanimous opinion of that committee that they were entitled to that information, and upon request they obtained it.

I ask the Senator, in connection with that statement, whether he believes a republican government like ours can be carried on if a military commander can suppress information derived from civil governors, or those upon whom devolves the duty of civil government? That was the question, and the only question—not to smirch a commander, but to give us information as to the nature of a government being carried on under the authority of the Congress of the United States.

If the Senator will permit me further——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RAWLINS. I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think it fair to inject a repetition of his speech into the few remarks I am making?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I will yield if the Senator will withdraw the implication. If I had been——

Mr. SPOONER. I will answer any question the Senator wants to ask me, if I can, and if I can not I will say I can not.

Mr. RAWLINS. Then I will ask the Senator—and that was the question I intended to ask him—what objection does he have to our obtaining that information, and what reason can he give why we are not entitled to that information?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, this was a military officer, assigned by military authority to the discharge of civil functions, as I understand it. He sent this report to the civil governor; it necessarily found its way through him into the hands of the Secretary of War; it contained imputations upon Army officers in the Philippines. The Secretary of War, long before this committee called for this report, had acted upon it. He wrote a letter to General Chaffee directing a thorough investigation into these charges. That was his duty as Secretary of War. It was a manly thing to do, not only in discharge of his duty as Secretary, but a just thing to do to the men who had been impeached by this report of Major Gardener.

Under date of April 2, this cablegram was sent to General Chaffee:

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, April 2, 1902.

CHAFFEE, Manila:

Secretary of War desires that investigation directed by letter of the Adjutant-General of the Army February 19 into truth of the charges made by Cornelius Gardener be prosecuted, and report made thereon with all speed which is consistent with thorough and searching investigation. Full facilities should be afforded Cornelius Gardener to establish truth of the specifications, which, of course, he will be called upon to furnish.

CORBIN.

What carping criticism is made of that? Does it afford justification for imputing to the Secretary of War a desire to suppress the charges uninvestigated made by Major Gardener against his comrades in arms? It called upon him, as every man in the Army or out of it who makes sweeping charges upon the honor of men ought to be called upon to do, to file a bill of particulars, to name the men and the outrages, and to furnish a list of witnesses in order that those who are guilty, if any be guilty, may be singled out and punished, and the rest be vindicated.

Nor was that all in this record, Mr. President. Under date of April 8—and although most of this, I think, was given in evidence before the committee, we have heard nothing from the minority members of the committee who have addressed the Senate except suppression; suppression, suppression, and general accusation of misconduct on the part of the Army in the Philippines—under date of April 8 this cablegram was sent:

APRIL 8, 1902.

CHAFFEE, Manila:

Cable progress investigation charges by Cornelius Gardener directed in letter February 19.

CORBIN.

The Secretary of War was not forced to do these things by the pressure of the minority of this committee. He ordered this investigation before they ever heard of this report, and they never did hear of it, as I understand, until it was mentioned in a letter of the Commanding General of the Army.

Under date of April 9 Chaffee replies, and I get to the reason now why I think this resolution ought not to pass and this man ought not to be summoned by cablegram to testify before this committee:

[Telegram.]

APRIL 9, 1902.

CORBIN, Washington:

With reference to your telegram of 8th. Your letter February 19 and inclosures received April 4. Same day Cornelius Gardener directed submit specifications; not received yet. Investigation expedited as quickly as possible.

CHAFFEE.

Then, in answer to a cablegram asking whether Major Gardener had submitted specifications, comes this cablegram, that a board of officers has been appointed, giving their names—Colonel Wint, Colonel Duncan, and Captain Johnston, said to be fair-minded and able men, with honorable military records behind them, Captain Johnston being a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States—who are investigating the truth of these charges, and that Major Gardener up to this time has produced several witnesses, but has furnished but one name.

Now, while this investigation is pending, Senators propose to bring Major Gardener quickly away from the Philippines in order that he may furnish, if he has them to furnish, the particulars of the charges against the Army officers before this committee of the Senate; to go to the world 7,000 miles—yes, 8,000 miles or more—from the witnesses and the officers who would be impugned and impeached by his charges, a proposition which shocks the common sense and decency of every fair-minded man.

Mr. President, there will be plenty of time for Major Gardener to be examined before this committee. Why he was in such haste to get away from there I do not know, but it has been stated on the floor of this Chamber that he wrote asking that he be summoned by cablegram to testify before this committee. I make no reflection on Major Gardener.

I am told he is a brave man, with the record of a brave soldier. If I were given to insinuation, which I am not, I would indulge in some of the suggestions which have been with the utmost generosity poured out in volumes in this debate as to Army officers and the conduct of the Army in the Philippines from the other side of this Chamber. But I respectfully submit that the Secretary of War as to this matter has done his duty; that he acted with alacrity; that he ordered a searching investigation; that he sought by every means in his power to obtain from Major Gardener specifications of these charges, so far as they relate to the Army and to Army officers, and that the place for Major Gardener first to make his charges against his comrades in arms is where the Army and Major Gardener are, where the witnesses are, and where the officers are whom he accuses, if he accuses any.

So in this situation, Mr. President, as a matter of fair play to the Army over there, and in order to give Major Gardener an opportunity, which an honorable soldier ought to court, he ought to remain in the Philippines until he has formulated and presented these charges, directing attention to the men whose honor he impugns furnishing some testimony, at least his own, to sustain them, and not for the first time to file his accusations before this committee, to go at once to the public to smirch men far away, helpless for the time being, and leave to them later, after conviction has fastened upon the public mind or a part of the public, to remove by evidence those accusations. A man never does succeed, when you put a charge in circulation against him, in removing it from the mind of everybody. Many, many people remember the charge, and they forget or do not even know of the vindication.

If there were no other opportunity to examine this witness, I might feel a little differently about it, but this Congress will not die with the expiration of this session; and, as we have been proceeding, it looks as if this session would not die until the expiration of the summer. I do not think it will until we have passed a bill for the government of the Philippine Islands. I have not read this bill, and I may want to amend it, but there will be plenty of opportunity, Mr. President, to investigate Major Gardener, and to obtain his testimony before one of our committees, as to what happened in the Philippines, and opportunity, either here or over there, to investigate the conduct of the war there on both sides. So I shall vote against this resolution.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I desire to add just a word to what has been so well said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and the word I wish to add is a word of defense, if it is proper to use that term, of Governor Taft.

It has been stated in this debate, and it was twice stated here this morning, that Governor Taft was guilty, when a witness before this committee, of withholding the two reports which have been referred to, and I find in the RECORD that he was charged with lack of candor in doing so.

The record of the hearings before the committee, Mr. President, shows conclusively that such a statement is unwarranted. Governor Taft went to the Philippines as president of the Philippine Commission, under an order and appointment with which we are all familiar. In the order issued by President McKinley to Secretary Root, announcing the appointment of this Commission and defining its powers, it was expressly stated as an order to the Commission that they will, from the exigencies of the situation while there, be constantly under the control and direction of the Secretary of War. Therefore, while Governor Taft was civil governor, yet all his powers were to be exercised under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of War, and his reports were to be made to the Secretary of War.

When the two reports referred to were made to him, as he relates in his testimony, they were handed to him as he was leaving for the United States, and he did not see them until he was on the ocean. When he arrived in Washington he presented them to the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War at once directed Governor Taft to deliver the reports to him, not that he might suppress them, but, as the Senator from Wisconsin has so well pointed out, in order that he might order an investigation, such as has been referred to, into the truth of the charges that were made in those reports—the one made by Major Gardener and the other made by the secretary of the province of Batangas.

When Governor Taft was upon the stand testifying he did not withhold anything that he had in his possession or control. He was asked to testify and he undertook to testify as to the reports that were in his possession, and all those reports he did give to the committee, and they are to be found in the record. It is due to Governor Taft to put in the RECORD in this connection what he himself said in regard to this matter.

On the 8th of April, 1902, having learned that a charge of this nature was made against him, he sent to the Secretary of War, from Cincinnati, Ohio, where he then was, the following statement:

[Telegram.]

CINCINNATI, OHIO, April 8, 1902.

SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.:

I send to you for transmission to Senator LODGE the following:

I am advised by morning dispatches that I am charged with disobeying the rules of your committee in not producing before it a report made by Colonel Gardener, governor of Tayabas, on conditions in that province.

The report was handed to my secretary, with many others on various subjects just before I sailed from Manila, December 24 of last year. I did not read it until I was well on my way across the Pacific. On reaching Washington I submitted it to Secretary Root, with the statement that Colonel Gardener was successful as military commander in Tayabas in keeping it peaceful; that he was a good governor, and was popular with the people, and that I would believe implicitly anything stated of his own knowledge, but that I feared the great friction between him and those officers succeeding him in military command had so influenced his judgment that charges made by him, necessarily based on evidence of others, against the conduct of military affairs in the provinces ought not to be acted on without giving those accused an opportunity to be heard, and that had I read the report before leaving Manila I should have referred it to General Chaffee for investigation and comment.

The Secretary of War accordingly directed me to transmit the same to him for the purpose of forwarding it to General Chaffee, and I did so under date of February 7. At the same time I submitted to him a report from secretary of Batangas Province (also delivered to me on the steamer), a report which by law could only be called for by the military governor. and this was also transmitted to the Secretary of War. Thereafter, on the same day, in my testimony before your committee, I produced reports from 23 governors of organized provinces, expressly limiting them to those in which there was no insurrection. (See record, p. 190.)

In other words, Mr. President, it appears from the statement of Governor Taft that what he testified about, and all he undertook to testify about, were the reports from the provinces that were pacified, and as to reports in his possession; but these particular reports had been, under the order of the Secretary of War, transmitted by Governor Taft to the War Department, in order that there might be this investigation made.

Now, I want to suggest just one other thought in addition to that which was suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, or rather I want to elaborate one point a little more than he did. We are asked here to require that Major Gardener shall be summoned to Washington to testify in regard to charges which he has already made in a general way, but with respect to which he has refused to furnish any specifications or to give the names of any witnesses whatever. Why should he be brought here in order that there may be an inquiry into these matters when Senators must know that he can not give evidence without naming the offenses and without naming the witnesses who are in the Philippines, and if we are to have an investigation after we have heard Major Gardener, we must then send to the Philippines for the witnesses to either confirm him or to disprove that which he may have to say here.

If it be a question of having this matter investigated before Congress adjourns, it seems to me that the delay of the investigation until he can be brought here will be to make it absolutely impossible that we shall adjourn, even at the end of the summer, as the Senator from Wisconsin suggested we might possibly be able to do.

So it seems to me that the place where these charges ought to be investigated is in the Philippines, where they were made. Look over the report of Major Gardener and see the nature of it, and you will find that every charge he makes has reference to something that is alleged to have been done there; something that is alleged to have been said there; something that is alleged to have been done in the province of which he was governor, or something which is alleged to have been said in the Philippine Archipelago, and particularly something which is alleged to have been said at Manila by officers of high rank. That is his statement. If that be true, what he is talking about is not the statement of some indefinite somebody, but of somebody whose name can be given, somebody who can be found, somebody who can be brought before the board of inquiry, and somebody who can give a statement upon which these officers will be enabled to arrive at a conclusion as to whether or not there is any truth in what Major Gardener has said, or whether it has been in any manner whatever exaggerated.

There can not be, Mr. President, it seems to me, any abuse of the rights of Major Gardener in this matter. Every word of testimony that will be taken before this board of inquiry we have a right to assume will be taken down stenographically—it will be reported; and if he has heard witnesses say thus and so, he has but to name them there, and the records will show whether or not he was warranted in imputing to them what he says they have said, and we can judge when the record is made up and has been transmitted here whether or not the board has acted fairly.

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that we have a right to rely upon the honor of the officers of the American Army, and we have a right to rely upon it that what men with such military records behind them as have the officers constituting this board will do will be honestly done, be truthfully and justly done, and be done without any malice or without any intent whatever except only to arrive at the truth.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when I made the request that the resolution lie over I supposed I was consulting the convenience of Senators upon the other side.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to finish what I have to say. I did not suppose debate would arise upon it. I now wish to withdraw the request. I hope the resolution will be brought to a vote if we are to pass upon this matter. It seems to me it is perfectly monstrous to bring a man here to make charges in the safe shelter of a Senate committee, with the accused and the witnesses 10,000 miles off in the Philippines. I hope it will be met here and voted down and that the Secretary of War will be sustained in his action.

Moreover, I for one do not believe that by Senate resolution we can dissolve a board of inquiry now proceeding in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask a question about that matter of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Is that court of inquiry in organization?

Mr. LODGE. It is organized and sitting.

Mr. MORGAN. And Major Gardener is before the court answering an inquiry?

Mr. LODGE. He is.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not understand how the Senate of the United States has the right to dissolve the court or take him out of its custody for the purpose of bringing him here to testify as a witness.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I did not rise when I submitted the remarks I did this morning for any purpose of provoking a general discussion on the question of the Philippines. I simply rose for the purpose of calling attention to the peculiar situation of this case and of the inquiry which is proceeding, or about to proceed, in the Philippine Islands based upon the report of Major Gardener, and that the result of the inquiry would, in all probability, not be satisfactory. I did not, in the remarks which I made, insist that Major Gardener should be summoned at this time and heard before the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAWLINS. Permit me to complete my statement, in order that I may be understood, and then I will yield.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. But I did make the suggestion for the purpose of calling attention to the status of that case as it now appears to the Senate. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator rise for the purpose of telling the people of the United States that, in his opinion, these three officers, who have not really begun yet this inquiry, could not be trusted to conduct it fairly and justly, and make an honest report upon it?

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will allow me to answer his interrogatory, I will say I know neither of the officers who have been designated as members of the court of inquiry. For aught I know they may be thoroughly honorable and fair-minded men. They may do exact justice in this inquiry. What I desired to call attention to is the fact that the Army as a whole, including the highest officers of the Army, were embraced in the accusation in the official report of Major Gardener, and that under those circumstances it is scarcely possible to obtain officers in that very Army who would hold the scales of justice even in that inquiry; because officers of the Army, like all other men, are human, and in the administration of justice everywhere, whenever it appears that the presiding judge has an interest in the controversy, is one of the objects of the inquiry, and that the result of the decision is to be to his injury or his benefit directly, in no civilized country is he permitted to sit. Indeed, it has been so held everywhere, as the Senator from Wisconsin well knows.

But this inquiry is instituted. Major Gardener is there, and is called upon to make his specifications and furnish his evidence. They have designated for him some person to act as his counsel, and under those circumstances I know that the Senate is not going to demand him to appear here at this time. Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of insisting that it should make that direction.

Now, in answer to some suggestions and statements made by the Senator from Wisconsin, I will say that I agree with him that we should presume no man guilty, whether he be an Army officer or a private soldier or simply an American citizen, unless there is clear and satisfactory evidence of the fact of his guilt.

The minority has made no general charge against the Army; it has made no general imputation against officers of the Army; and I challenge any Senator upon the other side to point to a single instance where we, on this side, have made any accusation other than by the simple presentation of the proofs and the evidence and official documents and orders, concerning which there has been no dispute.

In that connection I said I was loath to hold up the officers, the men who are fighting in good faith the battles of the Republic, to criticism of any description whatever, and I would not do so except as the evidence conclusively proved the things which were made matters of accusation.

The effort of the minority has been not to besmirch the Army or any officer or man in the Army, but that before a competent committee of the Senate there might be a full, a fair, and a complete inquiry in order that those who are guilty may suffer the censure of the American people and the just punishment which the proof may show them to merit, and that those who are not guilty may be exonorated and receive the benefit of the exoneration in the mind of every fair and reasonable man in the country.

When, therefore, we ask that Major Gardener or any other witness be invited to appear before a committee of the Senate charged with this inquiry by a resolution passed by the Senate, we do so in order that we may ascertain the truth, in order that the charges made in the report of Major Gardener may be sifted, in order that we may ascertain how much of foundation there may be in them.

It will not do for Senators upon the other side to obstruct our efforts to obtain a full investigation in order to ascertain the truth, in order that we may not make general accusations, in order that we may not hold up to ignominy Major Gardener, in order that we may show the facts in this case. We are met everywhere with obstructions.

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. RAWLINS. Even when we ask to have a witness summoned——

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that no Senator on the floor is entitled to charge other Senators with obstructing an investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Especially when they are not doing it.

Mr. LODGE. Especially when they are not doing it.

Mr. FORAKER. If I may be allowed to make a suggestion, I want to say to the Senator from Utah that, notwithstanding all he has said, he could very well wait until after the investigation in the Philippines is concluded before examining this man. Nobody is objecting to the committee having this witness here; but inasmuch as he is there, yonder, we feel it is due to truth and justice that they shall first conclude that examination before this one is commenced.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator from Massachusetts says I am out of order because I have stated that we have been obstructed in obtaining a full and complete investigation of this case. The Senator from Massachusetts, as a rule, has summoned witnesses, who have been suggested, who might have competent knowledge to give to the committee upon the question under consideration. When other witnesses have been suggested, the committee have decided that they ought not to be summoned for one reason and another. The sufficiency of the reasons I do not care to discuss. It may be satisfactory to those Senators who make the objection. They are entitled to their judgment as well as I am entitled to mine. I am going to pass from that question. I desire to call attention to a matter to which the Senator from Wisconsin alluded, namely——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I dislike very much to interrupt, but I do it simply for information. I am not a member of the committee, and I have not been present at the hearings, and I do not know what witnesses were asked for who were subpœnaed, except as I have learned from the newspapers. I wish to ask the Senator whether any witnesses were asked for and not subpœnaed except only Edward Atkinson and Aguinaldo?

Mr. RAWLINS. Well, I do not know.

Mr. FORAKER. Were there any except those two? I have not heard of any.

Mr. LODGE. I will tell the Senator, if the Senator from Utah will allow me. I stated it on the floor of the Senate the other day. We refused to summon Edward Atkinson, Aguinaldo, Mabini, Pilo Del Pilar, Howard M. Bray (an Englishman at Hongkong), and Sixto Lopez.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg pardon for not being familiar with it. I did not, I suppose, happen to be in the Senate when the Senator from Massachusetts made the statement.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senate committee decided, and I think the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with me, that no witnesses should be summoned who had not been in the Philippine Islands. Without desiring to detain the Senate at length, in regard to some of these witnesses testimony has been elicited, hearsay in its character, as to statements made by these men whom we desired to summon. We thought it but fair that they should be brought here and be permitted to make their own statements in their own way rather than have a repetition of those statements made to us secondhand by others; that if the statements made by them were material, it was wise to have the best evidence of their statements and their declarations and their opinions. As the committee was determined to have those opinions from the men whom we asked to have them summoned, our contention was that the persons whose opinions were desired ought themselves to be summoned and be permitted to state them.

There is Aguinaldo, who has acknowledged allegiance to the United States, who advised the insurgents who were formerly under his control to surrender their arms and do likewise; Aguinaldo, who is acknowledged to be the most influential man in the islands among the native people there, a man who is very highly spoken of by General MacArthur and others. We thought it but fair to him, as the majority were eliciting from other witnesses declarations claimed to have been made by him, that he should be summoned and be permitted to tell his own story.

The Senator from Wisconsin properly desires to protect the reputation and honor of the men who have gone out to fight the battles of the Republic. I share that desire with him. As for the Secretary of War, so far as he is concerned in the protection of the honor of the men who have gone out to fight the battles of the Republic——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. RAWLINS. Just a moment. I have here in this book a series of cases, some forty in number, statements made by men who have gone out and borne the heat and trial of battle in the Philippine Islands. One of them is Sergt. Charles S. Riley. He told a truthful and plain story of certain occurrences which had happened there. They were of importance to the American people, and the person to whom the letter was addressed furnished it to the press. The attention of the War Department was called to it, and it assumed to make an investigation of it. Did they permit Riley to be heard before announcing their determination as to the truth or falsity of that charge? It has been investigated, and I have what the Secretary of War has said about it:

In a letter written by Sergt. Charles S. Riley, Company M, Twenty-sixth United States Volunteer Infantry, which was published in the Northampton (Mass., Herald) about March 8, 1901, in which letter the soldier related various crimes of violence against natives, it was stated that the "water cure" was administered to extort information, and that the town of Igbarras, Panay, was burned to the ground. This publication called forth a number of letters to the Department protesting against such outrages. One letter, from Isaac Bridgeman, dated Northampton, Mass., March 13, 1901, was on March 19, 1901, referred to the commanding general, Department of California, for reference to the commanding officer Twenty-sixth United States Volunteer Infantry, upon its arrival in the United States, for report. This letter was returned by indorsement of the commanding officer of the Twenty-sixth United States Volunteer Infantry, dated April 24, 1901, with his report, as follows—

This was given to the Associated Press—

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY,
UNITED STATES VOLUNTEERS,
Presidio of California, ——, ——.

Respectfully returned.

Sergeant Riley, Company M, Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Volunteers, states that the publication inclosed was of a private letter and without any authority whatever. The tendency of enlisted men to draw the long bow in such cases is well known. Major Cook, Captain McDonald, and Sergeant Riley state that no officers or soldiers of this regiment took part in any so-called water-cure proceedings or other threats against the natives on the occasion stated.

Undoubtedly there were violations of the rule and custom of war; and as the complainants may have overlooked notice thereof, I shall state a few cases within my personal knowledge——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator ought to say that he has been reading from the report of the lieutenant-colonel of the regiment.

Mr. RAWLINS. I was going to say that. But upon investigation by the committee we found that every statement made by this sergeant was true. It was proved so conclusively that members of the committee declined to hear further testimony of the facts, because it was no longer a matter of controversy. Riley was before the committee, and his testimony, which is no longer disputed, is that he told the colonel, to whom this reference was made by the Secretary of War, that the things which he had stated in that letter were true. And the Secretary of War thereupon makes publication of the report of Colonel Dickman.

The Secretary of War perhaps relied upon the truth of this report made by Colonel Dickman. But it shows what reliance we may put upon these investigations. There are 40 of them published, involving the character for truth and veracity of men who have gone out and done battle for the Republic, and in every instance where the committee has had an opportunity to investigate we have found that the charges made in those letters were true. The attempt on the part of these official documents, published broadcast, to brand these men who have simply told the truth——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator, I think, in justice ought to state that this is the only case of the 40 which has been sustained.

Mr. RAWLINS. If I may be permitted, this is the only one of the 40 which has been investigated by the Senate committee. If time will permit us ever to complete an investigation of these numerous things, the Senator will find, I think, that the Riley case is a sample one.

In every statement which I have made to the Senate I have scrupulously avoided referring to letters and newspaper articles and declarations which have not been furnished under the sanction of an oath before a competent tribunal. I have my desk full of information which I believe would be supported by the oath of those from whom it emanates. I do not intend to allude to it. I have alluded to no case except that which has been conclusively shown to be founded in fact, and I make no innuendo or implication against any officer or any soldier beyond those things which have been proved to be true.

Mr. CULBERSON obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to give a notice?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to give notice that on Monday at 2 o'clock I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to address it on the Philippine bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, there is a statement in the hearings before the Committee on the Philippines questioning the candor of Governor William H. Taft with reference to the report of Major Gardener, civil governor of the province of Tayabas. I made the suggestion of lack of candor, and I take it that I am the Senator to whom the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] referred in his remarks.

When Governor Taft was testifying before the committee, he stated that he had the reports of the civil governors of certain organized and pacified provinces in the archipelago which he would submit, and as others were received he would submit them to the committee as a part of his testimony in the case. After he had submitted the reports of the civil governors of 23 of those provinces the question came up as to why other reports had not been made, and I desire to read to the Senate a brief extract from the proceeding before the committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator from Texas state from what page he is about to read?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will read from page 293:

Senator CULBERSON. You have referred to the letters of the governors in the record. As I count them, there are only 18 out of 34 organized provinces.
Governor TAFT. Whatever the number may be.
Senator CULBERSON. Why are there no letters from the other organized provinces on the question of pacification?
Governor TAFT. With respect to the pacified provinces, the request was made by General Wright, I think, not longer than a week before I left, by telegram, and the reports had not all come in. Shall I proceed?

Mr. President, the province of Tayabas was an organized province in the archipelago. The Philippine Commission had appointed a civil governor of that province, and he was discharging the duties of that office. Governor Taft said in substance and led the committee to believe that he had delivered to the committee all of the reports which he had received from the governors of organized and pacified provinces in the archipelago.

That is not all about this matter, Mr. President. The direct question was put to him why there were no letters from the "other organized provinces on the question of pacification," and he answered evasively that the reports which had been received from pacified provinces had been submitted, when at that very time, at the very moment the Governor was testifying, he had in his possession or subject to his control in the War Department this extraordinary report of the governor of the province of Tayabas.

Is that candor, in the opinion of the Senator from Ohio? Was that a fair, a manly, a candid statement upon the part of Governor Taft to say, in effect, that he had submitted to the committee all the reports of the civil governors of organized provinces in the archipelago on the subject of pacification when he had at that time, in conjunction with the Secretary of War, withheld, and, in my judgment, undertook, to that extent and for that time, to suppress from the committee and from the American people this report, which was from the civil governor of an organized province?

There is yet another phase of this question.

On the 27th day of January of this year the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] submitted a resolution, which was at once adopted, from the Committee on the Philippines, empowering the committee to examine into all the conditions in the islands, and since that date the committee has been engaged in the exercise of that duty; and while it was proceeding one of these reports was withheld, and the Secretary of War is now attempting to take from the Senate committee and from the Senate an examination into the condition of that province as directed by the Senate.

This effort on the part of the Secretary of War to take from the Senate committee and from the Senate the right which it was proceeding to exercise of examining into these conditions is indorsed by the Republican side of this Chamber, and when we suggest that we ought to be allowed to proceed they answer us that the procedure should be under the direction of the Secretary of War because he had first assumed jurisdiction, when as a matter of fact the Senate had first assumed jurisdiction. The Secretary of War took from the committee, through Governor Taft, a portion of the testimony to which it was entitled, and he now endeavors to take this examination into his own hands and out of the hands of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of War had ordered this investigation before the Senate committee ever heard of the existence of such a thing?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is not the question.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the question I put.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator might put it a little more mildly.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg pardon; I did not mean to be offensive.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Anything seems to be offensive that is not all on one side in this business.

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, no. I will not say all that I feel about it.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator read from Governor Taft's testimony partially, and he read from page 293. I notice on page 292, when this very matter was before the committee, Governor Taft said:

Governor TAFT. Now, as to the conditions prevailing in the pacified provinces—I leave out Batangas, Laguna, Tayabas, and Samar, because all of Batangas is involved in the present so-called "guerrilla warfare," part of Laguna, part of Tayabas, and all of Samar, and possibly, though there is a difference of opinion about that, a little tract in Misamis, the difference of opinion being as to whether Rufino is an insurrecto or a ladrone.

What I wish to call the attention of the Senate to as respects Governor Taft is that in submitting to the committee the reports of governors he only submitted the reports from the provinces that were pacified at the time, and he expressly omitted Tayabas, and the committee did not make inquiry concerning it.

I have great regard for the Senator's statement that Governor Taft by this may have misled some member of the committee, but it would have been quite easy, in view of his testimony, to have asked Governor Taft as respects the provinces that were not pacified, which he especially excepted. So I do not think from the statements on pages 292 and 293, taken together, it can fairly be charged that Governor Taft in any way sought to mislead the committee upon that subject.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, Governor Taft said in his testimony that the province of Tayabas had been organized, a civil governor had been appointed, and that with the exception of a small portion of it it had been pacified. The reference which the Senator from Iowa makes to the record in the hearings is as to the testimony that Governor Taft was giving and not with reference to any report of the governors of provinces. In order that I may be thoroughly understood, I want to read again my question to him. It was as follows:

Why are there no letters from the other organized provinces on the question of pacification?

I did not ask him why he had not submitted any letters from other organized provinces on the question of pacification, but I asked him why there were no other letters on that subject; and the governor was uncandid enough to evade it and suggest that he had submitted all of the letters he had received from what he called the pacified provinces, when, as I have repeatedly said, he had at that time this unfavorable report of conditions in the province of Tayabas, which was organized.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I interrupt the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I have before me the record from which the honorable Senator has read. He is more familiar with it than I am, but it seems to me that the two following questions and answers do not quite sustain the Senator's charge that Governor Taft was suppressing the truth.

Mr. CULBERSON. I did not expect to convince anybody over there to that effect.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Well, I do not know the purpose of the Senator's argument.

Governor TAFT. With respect to the pacified provinces, the request was made by General Wright, I think not longer than a week before I left, by telegram, and the reports had not all come in.

Showing that he did not have full reports and did not pretend to present them.

Mr. CULBERSON. But he had this particular report.

Mr. FAIRBANKS (reading):

Shall I proceed?
Senator CULBERSON. Certainly.
Governor TAFT. It is quite possible that before I get through there will be in the mail other reports; and if so, I will be glad to submit them to the committee, if they desire.

Mr. CULBERSON. Now, what is the question?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It seems to me that that is a thoroughly frank statement.

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the question of the Senator?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I propounded no question. I suggest whether the Senator's stopping where he did in the testimony gave a fair inference and whether he did Governor Taft justice. I understood him to say that Governor Taft had suppressed reports; that he had pretended that all the reports from pacified provinces had been furnished. I read the testimony following the point at which the Senator stopped to show that Governor

Taft did not pretend to have furnished all the reports from the pacified provinces.

Mr. CULBERSON. The trouble with the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana is that Governor Taft did, up to the time he spoke and by the testimony from which the Senator has read, leave the committee under the impression that he had presented all of the reports from organized provinces which he had received, promising that if any other reports came in afterwards he would submit them to the committee; but at the very time he was testifying, from which the Senator has just read, the Governor had in his possession this report, which was with reference to the condition of pacification in one of the organized provinces of the archipelago; and when I asked him why there were no letters from other organized provinces with reference to pacification he evaded it. He left the committee under the impression—and, in my judgment, designedly so—that there were no other letters from governors of organized provinces on the subject of pacification.

Mr. President, reverting for a moment, and a moment only, to the other suggestion which I have made, that this is an effort upon the part of the War Department to take from one of the committees of the Senate an investigation with which it had been charged long before the Secretary pretended to take any action in the matter, I call attention again to the fact that this resolution was reported on the 27th of January, 1902, by the chairman of the committee and adopted, and this committee was proceeding with an examination into the condition of that very province, among others, when the Secretary of War, in connection with the civil governor of the archipelago, took from the committee, about February 7, one of the reports to which it was entitled, and it is now insisted that he has jurisdiction of the subject instead of the committee of the Senate.

The fact that the Secretary of War had ordered an investigation before the committee came into possession of the report, as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, is of no consequence; it is but a phase of the scheme to take from the committee an examination into the matter upon which it was proceeding when the report was withheld from the committee and delivered to the Secretary.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate merely for the purpose of requesting the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to withdraw this resolution, because we are in a situation where the witness can not be had, and why press it, and why press this discussion, which leads only to bitterness at last?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has talked to us about a lack of candor, lack of frankness, about evasion, about intentional suppression of the truth, and has charged all these offenses to Governor Taft. I have the highest respect for the Senator from Texas. I believe that he thinks he believes everything that he says. But, Mr. President, he has said some things here which I am sure he will not adhere to when his attention is called to the record from which he has quoted. He has told us not only once, but repeatedly, in the course of the remarks he has just made that when Governor Taft made the answers to his questions which he read from page 293 of this record he had in his possession, these two reports, one from Major Gardener and the other from the secretary of the province of Batangas.

Mr. CULBERSON. I said he had them in his possession or subject to his control in the War Department.

Mr. FORAKER. At one time the Senator added that qualification but when he was answering the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] he said without any qualification whatever that the trouble with Governor Taft's answer was that when he said he had given these reports he had in his possession two reports which he was withholding, and he not only said he was withholding these reports, but he said he was withholding these reports for the purpose of keeping the truth from the committee that had a right to the reports. I may not quote his exact words, but I do not exaggerate the statement the Senator from Texas made. I think I have quoted almost identically the language that he employed.

Now, what is the truth? That testimony was given by Governor Taft on the 14th day of February, 1902, before the committee. In his letter which I read a moment ago, when I last had the floor, Governor Taft tells us that on the 7th day of February, seven days before that time—in response to an order made upon him by the Secretary of War, whose order he was bound to obey—he had transmitted both these reports to the Secretary of War.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I simply want to ask the Senator from Ohio to give us the date of the letter from which he quotes.

Mr. FORAKER. April 8, 1902. Governor Taft at that time had concluded his testimony before the committee, and had returned to his home at Cincinnati. While in Cincinnati he learned, from what was published in the daily papers, that it was being charged here that he had withheld these two reports from the committee. Thereupon he wired to the Secretary of War the telegram which I read, and requested him to furnish the same to the chairman of this committee. I called attention a moment ago to the fact that he is bound by the orders under which he is acting, to be governed and directed in all things by the Secretary of War. He is bound to make all his reports to the Secretary of War, and to communicate all his proceedings through the Secretary of War.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Ohio——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 14019) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to conclude the few sentences I want yet to speak before taking my seat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill touching civil government in the Philippine Archipelago is before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. So I understand.

This interruption has been so long continued that I am afraid I have forgotten just what I was saying when it commenced, but my recollection of what I was saying is that I was undertaking to point out to the Senator from Texas that at the time when Governor Taft answered the questions cited by him from the record, namely, on February 14, for that is the date given in the record, when he was giving that testimony, he did not have in his possession these two reports. He could not therefore have withheld the two reports, and it is not true, as I understand it, Mr. President, that he had any control whatever over these reports. It was his business to obey the order of the Secretary of War with respect to that as with respect to everything else, and when he received an order from the Secretary of War to turn over to him these two reports and he complied with it that was the end of his control over the reports.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I will yield.

Mr. CULBERSON. Just a moment. The Senator undertakes to defend the action of Governor Taft in withholding these reports on the ground, as he puts it, that he had been ordered by the Secretary of War to deliver them to him, and that he was compelled to obey, whereas the facts, undisputed in the record, show that Governor Taft voluntarily delivered the reports to the Secretary of War himself.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas is again in error. If the record shows any such thing as he now states, I do not know where in the record it can be found. I can point out to him, and I have already pointed it out to him and to the Senate, that the record shows just the contrary, for Governor Taft says in this communication——

Mr. CULBERSON. I will read it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I will yield, of course, if the Senator wants me to, but I should like to utter at least two sentences without being interrupted.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will read it.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the page?

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator was replying to what I said, and he charges distinctly that there is nothing in the record such as I suggested.

Mr. FORAKER. I said, Mr. President, that I did not know where you could find in the record what the Senator said was in the record, and I said I knew where I could find the contrary in the record.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will show it to you.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; but could you not wait a little while until I conclude?

Mr. CULBERSON. It comes in very good just now.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON (reading):

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1903.

Mr. FORAKER. On what page?

Mr. CULBERSON. Page 886 of the record.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I herewith transmit to you reports of the condition of Batangas and Tayabas, disturbed districts in the archipelago, with a view, as suggested in our conversation, to an investigation of certain charges made by Colonel Gardener, the governor of Tayabas, as to the conduct by American troops in the suppression of the insurrection in these two provinces.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. TAFT.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I submit that what the Senator has read does not show that Governor Taft voluntarily placed these reports in the hands of the Secretary of War. He states in his communication that he transmits them pursuant to their conversation, his language being—with a view, as suggested in our conversation, to an investigation of certain charges made by Colonel Gardener, the governor of Tayabas, as to the conduct by American troops in the suppression of the insurrection in these two provinces.

Now, Mr. President, let that be read in connection with what I have already called attention to, the statement of Governor Taft, as found on page 889 of the record. Governor Taft there says:

The Secretary of War—

After he had acknowledged the receipt of these reports—

The Secretary of War accordingly directed me to transmit the same to him for the purpose of forwarding it to General Chaffee, and I did so under date of February 7. At same time I submitted to him a report from secretary of Batangas Province (also delivered to me on the steamer), a report which by law could only be called for by the military governor, and this was also transmitted to the Secretary of War.

Now, Mr. President, we have it in the record upon this statement of Governor Taft that he did not act voluntarily, but by direction of the Secretary of War. While the Senator from Texas talks as though he did not want to believe him, I submit that other Senators here will believe him, for no man who has ever known Governor Taft has ever, so far as I am aware, questioned his candor or his frankness down until this occurrence. If there is a man in all the world absolutely faithful to the truth in any statement that he may make, and conservative in the statement of it, that man is Governor William H. Taft. I have known him all his life. I know whereof I speak when I pay to him that high compliment, for a high compliment it is.

Now, here is his statement in this record. It is a statement that when he arrived here, having received these reports at the steamer, not knowing anything about them until while he was on his voyage, he acquainted the Secretary of War with them, as it was his duty to do, he being his superior officer to whom he must make report. Thereupon the Secretary directed him to deliver these reports to him in order that he might order an investigation, which it at once occurred to them ought to be made as to the truthfulness of these charges.

So, Mr. President, I say that when the Senator from Texas said to the Senate—and he said it without excuse, Mr. President, for he is a member of the committee; he helped make this record; he was familiar with it, or at least he should have been; and when I say without excuse, I mean there was no excuse for his not knowing what the record showed, for he undertook to tell us what was in it, and we had a right to believe that he thoroughly understood every page of it—when the Senator from Texas said, in reply to the Senator from Indiana, that on the 14th day of February Governor Taft had these reports in his possession and withheld them, he was stating what this record shows conclusively he was not warranted in saying. He did not at that time have them, and he had no more control over them than had the Senator from Texas.

Now, Mr. President, another word. The Senator says that is the only defense I have to make for Governor Taft. Mr. President, that is the only one I need make, in view of the remarks made by the Senator from Texas, but it is not the only defense to the charge he makes. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] called attention a while ago to what, I think, is at the bottom of all the misunderstanding there is here, and it could not be anything but a misunderstanding, for I have that respect for the character and the integrity and the sense of justice of the Senator from Texas to believe that he would not intentionally do any man an injustice. At the bottom of it all is exactly what the Senator from Iowa called attention to. On page 292 of this report Governor Taft testified before the committee, and on the same day, at the same moment almost, for it immediately precedes what the Senator from Texas calls attention to—on the same day he made the statements the Senator takes exception to. He said, prefacing it all, when asked in regard to these various reports, as follows:

Governor TAFT. Now, as to the conditions prevailing in the pacified provinces—

I want Senators to notice the language—conditions prevailing in the pacified provinces—

And then he adds this parenthetically:

I leave out Batangas, Laguna, Tayabas, and Samar, because all of Batangas is involved in the present so-called guerrilla warfare, part of Laguna, part of Tayabas, and all of Samar, and possibly, though there is a difference of opinion about that, a little tract in Misamis, the difference of opinion being as to whether Rufino is an insurrecto or a ladrone.

In other words, Mr. President, there were, at the time when Governor Taft was testifying, pacified and unpacified provinces—pacified provinces, in which civil government had been established, and provinces not pacified, still being governed by military officials acting as their governors. Therefore, when he came to testify he said—speaking of pacified provinces, not only saying that he leaves out the unpacified provinces, but naming the pacified provinces to which he refers, and in that connection naming the very province where Major Gardener was acting as governor—he said: "I am speaking of them, and them only, and not of the others," thus and so——

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I should be glad if the Senator would yield to me for a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the Senator's attention to page 293 of the testimony, where Governor Taft states that a few days before he left the Philippines Acting President Wright had sent for the report of the pacified provinces, showing that he drew this distinction very clearly and fully.

Mr. FORAKER. I thank the Senator from Iowa for calling my attention to that fact, for it is true, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, that on page 293 of this record Governor Taft does make exactly that statement.

But, Mr. President, it must be perfectly clear, it seems to me, to any man who wants to judge this without bias or without prejudice that it must have been a misunderstanding—for it could not have been anything else—that led the Senator from Texas to impute to Governor Taft a lack of frankness or a lack of candor. The Senator should understand the fact that Governor Taft had specified the unpacified provinces, and Tayabas as one of them, and that he then simply dismissed them from his mind. He was talking, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] calls my attention to the fact, about the pacified provinces, and about them only. That is not all. Governor Taft speaks again on that very point in the communication from him that I have already read, at page 889 of the record. After having made the statement I have read, he says:

I produced reports from twenty-three governors of organized provinces, expressly limiting them to those in which there was no insurrection. (See record, p. 190.) I did this for the purpose of discussing tranquillity in those provinces (see record, p. 292 and following)—

That is just what I have been reading—and I expressly omitted from such discussion Batangas, Samar, Laguna, and Tayabas, where there was insurrection. While Tayabas had not been formally turned over to military government, the writ of habeas corpus had been suspended in cases of prisoners in military custody. My attention was called to the fact that only twenty-three reports had been submitted, and I explained that all the reports from pacified provinces had not been obtained before I left Manila, and offered to file all reports as they came by mail. I was asked to file all reports I might receive while in Washington, and I agreed to do so. (See p. 293 of record.) From time to time I have complied with this request, and all reports from pacified provinces are now on file. (See p. 349 of record.)

I have on hand three formal annual reports from the governors of Romblon, Capiz, and Isabela, reports from whom have already been filed, and these annual reports will be also filed. I submit to your honorable committee that I have not disobeyed your rules in failing to produce any reports called for from me or agreed by me to be produced.

WM. H. TAFT.

Mr. President, the only criticism the Senator from Texas, it seems to me, has any right to make on Governor Taft is that when he was being examined on this point he did not volunteer to him the information that a report had been received from one of the unpacified provinces of which mention is made. That is explained by the fact that he had been required by the Secretary of War to turn that report over to the Secretary of War in order that the Secretary might order an investigation, and have it conducted, of the charges therein made. I can understand how the Senator might think that Governor Taft ought to have said that, but, knowing the character of Governor Taft as I do, I know that it never occurred to him that he was evading anything when giving his testimony.

It seems to me that, on the contrary, his frankness is marked by statements that indicate that he was not withholding anything, but that he was verbally painting a picture of the conditions exactly as they existed; and it is no breach of confidence for me to say that, in the course of a conversation I happened to have with Governor Taft while he was on the stand as a witness—I do not mean while he was on the stand actually testifying, but I mean during the period while he was in attendance upon the committee—he said to me that he had no responsibility for consequences, and the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, would be the statement he should make on any question he might be asked about. I know it never occurred to him that he was withholding any truth; it never occurred to him that he was evading the point of any question the Senator from Texas or any other Senator was asking him or might ask him.

Therefore, I submit, Mr. President, that Governor Taft can not be charged here in the Senate, after the full and frank and truthful—manifestly truthful—statement made, with attempting to evade, or with a lack of candor, or with misleading the committee, for he expressly stated to the committee, and the committee was given to understand—and it was not the fault of Judge Taft if they did not understand—that he was speaking only of the pacified provinces, and not of Batangas, Laguna, Tabayas, and Samar; and when he made that announcement to the committee any fair-minded man should have concluded that Governor Taft had a right to believe that every man on that committee would know that the questions propounded to him, unless they were specified otherwise, would have direct relation to the provinces about which he was testifying and concerning which he had a special responsibility.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has stated that, in his opinion, Governor Taft was guilty of a want of frankness in dealing with the Committee on the Philippines. I think that when the entire record—and it has not yet all been called to the attention of the Senate—is understood, it will appear that the Senator from Texas is more than justified in the statement that he makes.

Senators have been proceeding upon the theory that the 14th of February was the first time at which, before the Committee on the Philippines, the question of reports from the Philippine provinces was presented. Such is not the case. On the 7th of February the record shows the following——

Mr. FORAKER. On what page?

Mr. PATTERSON. On page 189. While Governor Taft was being examined, in a lull in the examination, the chairman of the committee, the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], made the following statement:

The CHAIRMAN. Governor Taft has advised me that he has reports from different provincial governors, heads of constabulary, etc., and if it is agreeable to him, in order to save time, we will have them printed.

Governor TAFT. I should be glad to have it done, with the permission of the committee.

The Senator from Ohio will observe that in that statement by the chairman of the committee, in the presence of Governor Taft, no reference is made either to organized provinces or to pacified provinces; but the plain blunt statement that Governor Taft had advised him that he had "reports from different provincial governors, heads of constabulary, etc., and if it is agreeable to him, in order to save time, we will have them printed."

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to call the Senator's attention to a feature of the record which seems to have escaped him. It is true that that occurred on the 7th. I was not, however, aware of it until the Senator called my attention to it, for I have not had an opportunity to familiarize myself with this record, as have the Senators on the committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suppose not.

Mr. FORAKER. But I call the Senator's attention to this:

The CHAIRMAN. Governor Taft has advised me that he has reports from different provincial governors, heads of constabulary, etc., and if it is agreeable to him, in order to save time, we will have them printed.

Governor TAFT. I should be glad to have it done, with the permission of the committee.

What the chairman said was that Governor Taft has reports in his possession; and then, to accommodate Governor Taft, the permission of the committee is asked to have them printed.

Governor Taft, at page 889, speaking of the delivery of this report to the Secretary of War, says:

Thereafter, on the same day—

After he had made this delivery—in my testimony before your committee, I produced reports from 23 governors of organized provinces, expressly limiting them to those in which there was no insurrection. (See record, p. 190.)

On page 190 of the record is the testimony I read a while ago.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will say to the Senator that I intend to refer to all these matters, and I shall treat them fully, frankly, and justly.

Mr. FORAKER. What I want to call attention to is the fact that Governor Taft did not have those two reports in his possession at the time when this colloquy occurred in the committee, which the Senator now reads, but he had already theretofore, although on the same day, delivered them to the Secretary of War, pursuant to order of the Secretary theretofore given.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Ohio, I think, has made himself plain. What he has now stated is simply a reiteration of what he said before, but based upon this new item in the discussion of February 7. These reports were present in the committee room, they were turned over to the official stenographer, and the reports from twenty-three provinces were regularly printed, according to the rules of the committee, within a day or two thereafter.

The contention the Senator from Ohio is making is that Governor Taft laid great stress upon the proposition that he had certain papers in his possession. What I maintain, and what the Senator from Texas maintains, is this: That since there was nothing in Governor Taft's statement to indicate that he had disposed of the reports from other provinces in any other manner than the manner in which they were disposed of at that time, the committee had a perfect right to suppose that he, through the chairman of the committee, was producing to the committee the reports from all the provinces that he had had in his possession.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, I trust the Senator from Ohio will allow me to proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. I will not interrupt the Senator, of course, if it is not agreeable to him.

Mr. PATTERSON. I clearly understand the distinction the Senator is making.

Mr. FORAKER. I simply want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the committee had no right to suppose that these were all the papers of this kind that Governor Taft then had in his possession or "ever had had" in his possession. That was the language employed by the Senator from Colorado. There was not a word said to indicate it. He simply said: "I have certain papers here in the nature of reports," and they were ordered to be printed. There was no description given of them, and later he testified in regard to them.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will come to that a little later on if the Senator will permit me to proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well, I will not trouble the Senator any more.

Mr. PATTERSON. Before I get the statement completely made, I trust the Senator from Ohio is not going to desert the Chamber. I would rather agree to have him interrupt me as often as he pleases.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to desert the Senator; but if he will not allow any interruption and will not allow any debate—if we can not correct what we think are misstatements of the record—then I do not care to sit and hear him, when I have an urgent and pressing demand to go to the restaurant.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I suggested that if the Senator would remain he might interrupt me as much as he pleases, but since he has become the special champion of Governor Taft, I suppose because Governor Taft is from his State——

Mr. FORAKER. On that statement of the Senator I will change my mind and stay here.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think it is due to Governor Taft, if not to myself, that the Senator should remain.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. PETTUS. This conversation is absolutely to the disorder of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The Chair will admonish Senators to address the Chair and get permission from the Senator having the floor before proceeding with their remarks. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to finish my statement that it is at least due to the gentleman whose cause the Senator is especially championing that he should remain here during the entire controversy upon the subject.

I was suggesting that the Senator from Ohio bases all of his defense upon the proposition that Governor Taft was invariably talking of orders that he had in his possession, while at the time he made the statement certain papers that had been in his possession were not then in his possession, but had been delivered to the Secretary of War. But, Mr. President, it was on the morning of February 7, the date upon which, in his letter of April 8, he said he had delivered reports from the two disputed provinces to the Secretary of War; that, through the chairman of the committee, in general terms, he submitted to the committee reports from different provincial governors, heads of constabulary, etc., which the chairman desired to have printed.

I maintain that logically, though not in language, the committee had a right to suppose at that time that the governor was delivering to the committee the reports of all the provinces that he had under his control, and not that before coming to the committee he had surrendered two of the reports to the Secretary of War, in order that technically he might at some subsequent period say that at the time he turned over the other reports he did not have those particular two reports with him.

Mr. President, we come now to what occurred on February 14, and I call the attention of the Senate to a distinction that the Senator from Ohio did not attempt to make.

Governor Taft was giving extensive verbal testimony, oral testimony, concerning the different provinces. He had detailed to us the provinces that had been organized, and according to his testimony both Batangas and Tayabas had been organized and civil governors appointed to preside over them; but, by reason of the disturbances subsequently occurring, a part of the provinces had, for the time being, been turned back again to the military authorities.

There are two classes of provinces in the islands, distinguished by Governor Taft himself—organized provinces and unorganized provinces; provinces organized by the Philippine Commission and provinces that had not been organized by the Philippine Commission. The reason that some of the provinces had not been organized was because they were in a state of war; but Tayabas and Batangas had been organized, although troubles had broken out there subsequently.

Mr. President, Governor Taft was testifying verbally, orally. The matter of the reports from the provinces had nothing to do with the oral statement he was making concerning the different provinces. The first information the committee had was on the 7th of February, that he had reports concerning these provinces, when he made the proposition to submit these reports from Philippine provinces and have them printed, and until the 14th of February the minority committee, at least—we do not know what information the majority or some of the majority of the committee had—until the 14th of February we of the minority of the committee believed that we had every item of written testimony concerning all of the provinces of the Philippines that Governor

Taft either had or brought with him. There was no suggestion that a report that had been in his possession had been surrendered by him to the Secretary of War or to any other person.

It is true that so far as the oral testimony is concerned he made this statement:

Governor TAFT. Now, as to the conditions prevailing in the pacified provinces—I leave out Batangas, Laguna, Tayabas, and Samar, because all of Batangas is involved in the present so-called guerrilla warfare, part of Laguna, part of Tayabas, and all of Samar.

That was simply a notification to the committee that he would not discuss those particular provinces for the reasons stated. But after he made that statement then comes the colloquy between Governor Taft and several of the minority Senators on the committee, and all of that has not yet been read to the Senate.

Senator CULBERSON. You have referred to the letters of the governors in the record. As I count them, there are only 18 out of 34 organized provinces.
Governor TAFT. Whatever the number may be.
Senator CULBERSON. Why are there no letters from the other organized provinces on the question of pacification?

Batangas and Tayabas were organized territories.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Governor Taft had, in the paragraph read by the Senator from Colorado only a few moments ago, expressly exempted Tayabas from the list of those provinces that were organized.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg pardon of the Senator. If he will look at the record he will see that that is exactly what Governor Taft said; and in the letter which I read a moment ago, printed on page 889 of the record, Governor Taft says that although Tayabas had been given a civil governor, yet the writ of habeas corpus had been suspended, and the conditions were such that it had been exempted from the pacified provinces, about which he was talking, as organized; all these inquiries are in regard to organized provinces, and all of Governor Taft's answers are confined to organized provinces.

Mr. PATTERSON. But there is a distinction between organized provinces and pacified provinces. If the Senator will read all the testimony given by Governor Taft in the earlier part of the record, he will discover that these two provinces had been organized, both Tayabas and Batangas, and because of the troubles subsequently arising by reason of guerrilla warfare they had, in part, been given over to the military, but the civil governors were yet there and the civil secretaries were yet there. Therefore, when the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] asked Governor Taft about organized provinces, he was asking him about the very provinces concerning which Governor Taft had spoken as organized provinces. Now, let us see.

Senator CULBERSON. You have referred to the letters of the governors in the record. As I count them, there are only 18 out of 34 organized provinces.
Governor TAFT. Whatever the number may be.
Senator CULBERSON. Why are there no letters from the other organized provinces on the question of pacification?
Governor TAFT. With respect to the pacified provinces, the request was made by General Wright, I think not longer than a week before I left, by telegram, and the reports had not all come in. Shall I proceed?
Senator CULBERSON. Certainly.
Governor TAFT. It is quite possible that before I get through there will be in the mail other reports; and, if so, I will be glad to submit them to the committee, if they desire.
Senator PATTERSON. I think we ought to request the Governor to submit anything he gets while he is in Washington.
Governor TAFT. All right. I will do that.

Mr. President, if Governor Taft wanted to be entirely frank when he distinguished between organized provinces and pacified provinces, when these two provinces in dispute were organized and had been pacified, but had relapsed by reason of guerrilla warfare in certain portions of them, he would have said, in response to these questions, "there are reports from two of the provinces that were organized that I received, and for some reason or other I have turned them over to the Secretary of War," but he was as silent as the grave, Mr. President, upon the subject of these two provinces, the reports of which were the most momentous and startling of any that have been published either through Governor Taft or the War Department.

Mr. President, it is suggested to me by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] that a message has been received from the House of Representatives transmitting resolutions of that body touching the death of Representative CUMMINGS; and I give way at this point, in order that the resolutions from the House of Representatives may be presented to the Senate.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS ON ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, be taken up for consideration on Monday morning immediately after the morning business, and that its consideration be proceeded with until disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be taken up for consideration on Monday morning after the routine morning business. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 3, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, once more brought face to face with the mystery of mysteries in the death of one of the members of this House, we look up to Thee, source of light and life and love, for strength and consolation. We bless Thee for his long and faithful career as a journalist and statesman.

Conservative in his views, strong in his convictions, he stood fearlessly, boldly, for what he conceived to be right, on the field of battle, in his writings, and on the floor of this House.

Be very near to those who knew and loved him best, his friends and colleagues, and especially those who were near and dear to him in the ties of kinship.

Peace be to his ashes and repose to his soul. With faith in Thee may we look forward with hope to the future, that on some near or distant shore we shall finally meet where sorrows never enter and joys are eternal; in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURTON, Mr. KITTREDGE, and Mr. GIBSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee on Claims asks unanimous consent that immediately after the disposition of the statehood bill, reported from the Committee on the Territories——

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, is there any prior order which would interfere with claims business?

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The Chair finds that a bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] from the Committee on Foreign Affairs has been made a special order, to come up immediately after the disposition of the statehood bill.

Is there objection to this request?

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to inquire whether, under this proposed order, the Calendar will be called in the same way it would have been to-day, or whether only bills on the Calendar reported from that committee will be in order?

The SPEAKER. Only bills from the Committee on Claims will be in order under this request. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow thirty minutes be given to the consideration of unobjected pension bills and bills to correct the military record of soldiers, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the conclusion of the routine business, thirty minutes be given to the consideration of unobjected pension cases and cases unobjected to involving the record of soldiers. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I make no objection to the request, but I give notice that after to-morrow I shall call up the pending Philippine bill immediately after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

MAJ. CORNELIUS GARDENER.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Chair what is the status of the resolution for the calling of Major Gardener?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the Calendar, its right on the table having been exhausted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no such thing as unfinished morning business, except by unanimous consent.

During the debate on Saturday the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines expressed a desire that the resolution should be voted upon and called upon his friends to vote to defeat the resolution. Mr. LODGE. The Senator can move to take it up at any time. If he will let us have a vote on it, I shall be very glad.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF THE ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 2992.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud reservation in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect.

Mr. TELLER. There is an amendment pending which I offered. It is to strike out in section 3, line 25, page 6, after the word "entry," and the balance of the section, which takes the first three lines on page 7, and then to insert:

No person taking a homestead under the provisions of this act shall be allowed to commute under the provisions of section 2289 or 2301 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 6, line 25, after the word "entry" strike out the remainder of the section, in the following words:

Except that homestead settlers who commute their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, shall pay for the land entered the price fixed herein.

And to insert:

No person taking a homestead under the provisions of this act shall be allowed to commute under the provisions of section 2289 or 2301 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, this matter has been so long before the Senate that the Senate is tired of it, and yet it is an important matter and it ought not to be disposed of without full consideration.

With regard to the pending amendment, the proposition is to apply a different rule for the securing of homesteads to this reservation and the lands which are to come into settlement from what is applied to any other lands in the United States. I do not think that there should be an exception made with regard to this reservation. The law as it now stands, if I am correct, is that upon any of the public lands of the United States a person may obtain a homestead entry, and it requires him to live upon the land for five years, at the end of which time he may obtain a patent without any payment to the Government. But the law also provides, if I am correct, that in all such cases of homestead entries the person who goes upon the land as a homesteader may commute his holding at the end of fourteen months by paying to the Government a dollar and a quarter an acre, unless other rates have been fixed by different acts of Congress.

Now, that is the general land policy of the United States. If we are ready to repeal as to all lands the commutation provision, then it is all right; but so long as we are to keep it with reference to other lands, I know of no reason why it should be repealed as to these lands, which are to be opened for settlement.

There has been a good deal said to the effect that the commutation clause is the one which leads to fraud or speculative entries upon the public lands, but it is a clause which is both for the benefit of the Government and the benefit of the settler. It is for the benefit of the Government in this way: If the entry is commuted, the Government receives pay for the land. It is for the benefit of the settler in this way: He can put no mortgage upon his property; he can neither encumber it nor sell it until the end of five years without the commutation privilege. He can, with the commutation privilege, if he can find friends to advance the money, get a perfect title to his land in fourteen months from the time he settles upon it. That enables him to acquire the means by which the better to improve his holding. It has been for many years the settled policy of the Government that he should have that opportunity.

I do not wish to take up more time with this matter, but I wished to make this statement of the situation. I do not believe it wise to make one section of land which is open to homestead entry subject to the commutation law and another one not subject to the commutation law.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, what troubles me about this case is the price of the land. We have not sufficient information on the subject, it seems to me, to pay $2.50 an acre for the land. The best of it, along the streams, has been already allotted to the Indians, and inasmuch as the treaty may remain pending until next March, I think it would be a wise course to recommit the bill and let us have an investigation of the price of the land. There is not enough evidence to satisfy my mind that it is worth $2.50 an acre, and I am not prepared to vote for the bill with the knowledge I have. It seems to me that the price is too high. If we go on in this way we shall have to spend a vast amount of money for the land.

In order to test the sense of the Senate, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, so that we may have more information as to the price of the land before it is finally acted on by the Senate. I make that motion.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire very much indeed to vote for any bill that would facilitate the improvement of the State of South Dakota or any of the Northwestern States, but there is a principle involved in this bill that I can not reconcile myself to support. It is the lottery principle. Why should the United States Government condemn in a criminal and highly penal statute all lottery arrangements of every kind and then turn around and by a statute invite the people from all over the United States to come and enter into a drawing of lands in South Dakota? We simply stultify ourselves, in my judgment, in abandoning that principle which has worked so much good in this country. The suppression of the lottery system in the United States has worked one of the greatest moral reforms we have ever inaugurated in this country.

I notice that other governments, particularly the Government of France, resort to the lottery scheme for the purpose of raising money out of the people to carry on works of improvement, and it seems to encourage a disposition to gamble and to sanction the principle that gambling must be resorted to here to get rid of public lands.

It is true these men do not put up anything except their homestead qualifications against a tract of land, but there are hundreds of thousands of tramps and hoboes in this country who are entitled to qualify. If I were living in a State like South Dakota, or any of the Northwestern States, I think I would not like to fill up the population of that State by men invited in under such circumstances. I would rather wait and let a decent, strong, earnest population come in there who are able to take care of themselves, and not bring in the poorest off scourings of the earth, or men who might gamble themselves into an opportunity to make a settlement there.

The principle of the bill, in my judgment, is wrong, and I am obliged to vote against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to recommit the bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. I submit the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend the bill, in section 3, line 16, page 6, by striking out after the words "And provided further, That" the words "the price of said lands shall be two dollars and fifty cents per acre, but;" so as to make the additional proviso read:

And provided further, That settlers under the homestead law who shall reside upon and cultivate the land entered in good faith for the period required by existing law shall be entitled to a patent for the lands so entered, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, in connection with this measure, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD that portion of the report of the Secretary of the Interior describing the manner of disposing of Indian lands by lot. It is a very interesting report, and I will also ask that it be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks that the papers sent to the desk by him may be printed in the RECORD and also printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The report referred to is as follows:

REPORT OF W. A. RICHARDS, ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE, RESPECTING OPENING OF KIOWA, ETC., LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, October 9, 1901.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report respecting the opening to settlement and entry of the Kiowa, Comanche and Apache, and Wichita lands situated in the Territory of Oklahama, ceded to the United States under agreements respectively ratified by the acts of March 2, 1895, and June 6, 1900.

Acting under instructions dated May 13, 1901, I subdivided the territory embraced in the above-named lands into three counties, after having first attached to some of the surrounding counties small portions of the lands more properly belonging to those counties.

The county embracing the lands to the northeast was named Caddo County; the one embracing the lands to the northwest was named Kiowa County, while the one embracing the lands to the south was named Comanche County.

Sites were also selected for the county seats of these new counties, that for Caddo County being in the immediate vicinity of Anadarko station on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, which was named Anadarko; that for Kiowa County being near the station of Kiowa on the above-named railroad and named Hobart, while the site for the county seat of Comanche County was located 5 miles south of Fort Sill and named Lawton. These town sites each embraced 320 acres and were surveyed into blocks, lots, streets, and alleys. The surveys of these town sites were made by examiners of surveys detailed from the General Land Office for that purpose.

The location of the boundaries of the three new counties and of the town sites for their respective county seats was completed upon June 11, 1901, and a detailed report of my action in connection therewith was submitted and approved.

The expenses incident to the surveying, subdividing, and platting of the town sites, reimbursable to the Government from the sale of lots by the act of March 3, 1901, were $5,284.24, as set forth in the itemized statement herewith submitted.

REGISTRATION.

In accordance with your letter of June 20, 1901, under which I was instructed to take charge of the prospective opening of the Kiowa, Comanche and Apache, and the Wichita reservations, I proceeded to Elreno, Okla., arriving at 2 o'clock a. m. of July 10, the day upon which registration was to begin.

Under date of July 4, 1901, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by direction of the President, established two new land districts in Oklahoma—the Elreno land district, which includes the Wichita Reservation and the northern portion of the Kiowa Reservation, with the land office at Elreno, and the Lawton land district, which includes the remaining portion of the Kiowa and Comanche and Apache reservations, with the land office at Lawton.

By the proclamation of the President of July 4, 1901, Elreno and Lawton were designated as places of registration, it being provided that the registration at each office should be for both land districts, but that at the time of registration each applicant should be required to elect and state in which district he desired to make entry. It was calculated that under this plan three-fourths of those desiring to make entry would register at Elreno and one-fourth at Lawton, which estimate proved to be practically correct. Thirty-three clerks were detailed from the General Land Office to make the registration, 8 of whom went to Lawton and 25 to Elreno.

The proclamation also provided that the office at Lawton should occupy provisional quarters in the immediate vicinity of Fort Sill until suitable quarters could be provided at Lawton. Under authority obtained from the honorable Secretary of War, the registration for the Lawton district was made at Fort Sill, where a commodious building was furnished for the use of the clerks. The registration at this point was very greatly facilitated by the efficient service rendered by the commanding officer, Maj. G. L. Scott, and the officers and men under his command. A very large proportion of those who registered at Fort Sill came there in wagons and went into camp in the valley of Cache Creek, upon the military reservation. During a portion of the period of registration this camp contained more than 10,000 people. Good order prevailed both in the camp and at the registration booth, which speaks well for the efficiency of those in charge of the registration, the military, and the people themselves.

The registration at this place proceeded in a perfectly orderly manner throughout the entire period and was concluded at 6 p. m. of July 26 with a total registration of 29,000, and no qualified applicant was left unregistered at the close of business. Upon the conclusion of the registration, the clerks in charge were transported to the railroad station, 30 miles distant, in Government ambulances kindly furnished by Major Scott, and at 5 o'clock a. m. of July 27 reported for duty to me at Elreno.

The clerks who were to make the registration at Elreno reached that place at 2 a. m. of July 10, and at 10 a. m. of that day began the registration at six booths, which had been previously secured and furnished. Four clerks were placed in each booth to work under the direction of one of their number designated as chief.

Upon the opening of the booths several thousand people were in line before them, some of them having been there more than twenty-four hours. There being a great many women in the lines, I proceeded to secure and furnish a booth to be used exclusively by women, and opened the same at 1 o'clock p. m. of July 10 with two land-office clerks and two clerks temporarily employed, the places of these two clerks in their respective booths being filled by hiring two additional temporary clerks.

The establishment of this booth was heartily indorsed and highly appreciated by the women, of whom about 8,000 were registered there. As they were not prohibited from registering at the other booths, it is estimated that about 2,000 were so registered, making an estimated total of 10,000 women who were registered at Elreno.

Upon July 10, the first day of registration, 4,018 people were registered, which was very satisfactory, all things being considered.

As it was necessary that applications for registration should be sworn to before being presented to the registering clerks, notaries public, clerks of courts, justices of the peace, and others authorized to administer oaths engaged in the business of preparing such papers. At first exorbitant charges were made for such services. To correct this practice I refused to furnish blanks to any officer who would not agree to charge but 25 cents for his services in each case, which resulted in fixing that amount as the general charge. At Fort Sill, where, on account of the military supervision, the matter could be more easily controlled, the charge was fixed at 10 cents.

Upon July 13, through an accident to the pumping machinery at the waterworks, water was shut off from the mains supplying Elreno with water. The weather was very hot, and there were not less than 15,000 transient people in the city, making the situation one of great seriousness. Unless it could have been remedied at once it would have been necessary to have transferred the registration to some place where there would have been sufficient water. In conference with the city officials, this fact was impressed upon them and it was urged that immediate steps be taken to repair the waterworks. It was also suggested as a means of temporary relief that casks, with drinking cups attached, be placed at convenient places upon the streets and kept filled with water obtained from wells, with a cake of ice in each cask. These suggestions were acted upon without delay, the waterworks were speedily repaired, and the public drinking places provided and found to be so useful that they were maintained during the entire period of registration.

In this connection I take pleasure in stating that during the registration and the drawing which followed it the people of Elreno put forth every exertion to provide for the comfort and convenience of the strangers who visited their city. There was no raise in the prices of any of the commodities or accommodations necessary to their comfort, and while for thirty days the city contained more than ten times its normal population, there were no hardships nor suffering, but all were well cared for and made comfortable at very reasonable expense.

The registration progressed in an orderly manner, but on account of the applicants being largely in excess of the number which had been expected it became necessary to employ additional assistance. Booth No. 1 was so situated that a greater number of people applied for registration there than at any other point, and the largest number of clerks employed in one place were in this booth. It was used as a training school, from which clerks could be taken as needed for use in other booths. By keeping fully informed of the movement of trains upon the railroads entering Elreno I was enabled to so arrange the clerks as to be continually prepared to speedily register the great numbers of people who arrived daily. After the second day no unregistered people were left in front of the booths when they were closed for the night. The time appointed for the opening of the booths was 8 o'clock a. m., but they were frequently opened earlier by the voluntary action of the clerks. The hours of closing were regulated by the number of people who arrived during the day, but 5 o'clock p. m. was the general hour for closing.

Upon Wednesday, July 24, the reports from the railroads and the numbers of people present indicated that the registration would be unusually large, for which we were fully prepared. Between the hours of 8 a. m. and 12 o'clock noon 11,556 people were registered. As eight heavily loaded trains were due to arrive between 4 and 6 p. m., it was arranged that the booths should be kept open until 8 o'clock or until everybody who so desired had been registered. We were disappointed by the railroads, however, and only two of the trains arrived before 8 o'clock, the total registration for the day being something in excess of 16,000.

Registration was effected by the applicant presenting a sworn statement of his qualifications and his desire to be registered, which was received and filed. A small blank was then filled out with the description of the applicant, the name of the land district in which he desired to make homestead entry, and his post-office address, which he signed, after which he was given a certificate of registration.

Upon July 11 a force of clerks was engaged and, in charge of an experienced clerk, was employed in separating by districts and arranging in alphabetical order the applications and identification cards received at the booths on the preceding day. After having been placed in order, each identification card was compared with its corresponding application, and by this means any errors which might have occurred in the registration were corrected. At the same time a typewritten list was made for each district, embracing the names of those registered for that district, each day's work alphabetically arranged.

The applications, identification cards, and lists for each district were subsequently placed in the respective land offices and afford a means of detecting any frauds which may have been attempted through double registration or the attempt to impersonate another person in making an entry.

After the first week of registration the applications of soldiers to register by agent became so numerous and so impeded the registration of others that it became necessary to organize a separate booth for the registration of soldiers by soldiers' agents, which booth was placed in charge of an efficient clerk, and in which were located the register and receiver of the Elreno office, who rendered faithful and efficient service.

It is believed that the fact that all soldiers' agents were required to register at one booth prevented some designing men from attempting to act as agent for more than one soldier, which they might have done successfuly if allowed to register at any of the other booths.

Upon Friday, July 26, registration was closed in every booth simultaneously at 6 o'clock p. m., the chief of each booth having set his watch by city observatory time, in addition to which the city fire bell was struck at that hour. At the time of closing there was no unregistered person in front of any booth in the city.

The total registration at Elreno was 135,416. Upon the first day of the registration there was considerable disorder at several of the booths at this place, the people appearing to have an idea that it was necessary for them to secure and hold their positions in line by force and to take every means to guard their own interests. In a very short time they appeared to become satisfied that they were to receive fair treatment; that there would be no favoritism, and that the entire matter was to be honestly managed, after which there was absolutely no disturbance of any kind in connection with the registration. In fact, there was very little disorder of any character in the city at any time, notwithstanding its overcrowded condition.

Upon the conclusion of the registration all of the land-office clerks were immediately employed in placing the identification cards in proper envelopes and sealing the same, which had been delayed until this time by the fact that it was impossible to obtain the envelopes in time to place the cards in them when the regisration was made.

I consider that it was an advantage to those who registered that the cards should not have been placed in the envelopes at the same time that the registration was made, as by the delay an opportunity was afforded to compare each identification card with the sworn application, thus affording a complete check upon the registration and a means of correcting any errors that might have been made in the rush of work.

The identification cards were carefully guarded during the day, at the time of registration, by being placed in locked cash boxes through a slit cut for that purpose, no one but myself having a key to any of these boxes. At night these cards were placed in the vault of the Citizens' State Bank, of El Reno, and were taken out only upon my order.

No one but land-office clerks were employed in placing these cards in the envelopes, which was completed about 4 o'clock of Sunday, July 28, this being the only Sunday upon which we found it necessary to work.

THE DRAWING.

By your letter of July 20, 1901, Hon. David P. Dyer, of Missouri; Hon. Frank Dale, of Oklahoma, and myself were appointed a committee to have the supervision of the drawing to determine the order in which registered applicants would be permitted to make entry in conformity with the President's proclamation of July 4, 1901, of which committee I was appointed chairman.

This committee first met at Elreno on the evening of the 25th day of July and readily agreed upon the plan by which the drawing should be conducted. In pursuance thereof a platform 32 feet square was erected in one of the streets of the city, fronting the high-school grounds, which rose gradually from the platform, affording ample space for those desiring to witness the drawing. A canvas roof covered the platform and canvas curtains were provided with which to inclose its sides in case of a storm.

Two boxes were constructed in which were to be placed the envelopes containing the names of those who had been registered. Each of these boxes was 10 feet long, 2½ feet deep, and 2½ feet wide, with an iron rod running the entire length through the middle of each box, securely fastened. Iron bolts were placed in either end of the boxes and served as pivots upon which the boxes could be revolved. On one side of each box there were three openings about 2 feet apart for the purpose of receiving the envelopes. On another side of each box there were five holes, each separately numbered, large enough to admit the hand and arm of a person and through which the envelopes were to be drawn. These holes were covered with slides except when opened for the purpose of withdrawing an envelope.

On the morning of the 29th of July, at the hour designated in the President's proclamation for the drawing, these boxes were taken upon the platform and placed upon trestles, upon which they could be revolved. The envelopes, containing the names of all who had been registered, were also brought upon the platform. These envelopes had been separated according to the respective land districts, were of two colors, one being buff and the other white, and bore no distinguishing mark other than the name "El Reno" on those for one district and "Lawton" on those for the other. The envelopes were in pasteboard boxes, each of which contained 400 envelopes, and the boxes for each district were consecutively numbered. Small cards had been prepared bearing numbers corresponding to the numbers upon the envelope boxes, which cards were placed in a receptacle, from which they were drawn at random, and the envelope boxes taken in the order in which the cards were drawn and their contents placed in the larger boxes, a portion of each box through each of the three larger openings, and well scattered throughout the entire length of the box.

When all of the envelopes had been thus placed, these openings in the drawing boxes were closed and securely sealed, and the boxes revolved until the envelopes were thoroughly mixed. Ten reputable young men had been selected, all of whom were under age and therefore not registered and in nowise interested in the drawing, to draw the envelopes from the boxes. These young men were assigned to the holes in these boxes by lot, and it was also determined by lot which one should begin the drawing at each box. The young man at the hole numbered 3 drew the number entitling him to take the first envelope from the Elreno box, and the young man at the hole numbered 4 drew the number entitling him to take the first envelope from the Lawton box, the drawing thereafter to continue in numerical order.

The drawing began with the Elreno box by the young man at hole No. 3 drawing an envelope, which he handed to Mr. Dale, of the committee, who caused the same to be numbered 1. He then opened the envelope and took therefrom the identification card and caused the same number to be placed upon it, and then handed the card to Mr. Richards, of the committee, who inspected the same and in turn handed it to Mr. Dyer, of the committee, who announced the name and description of the person to the people. This course was followed until 25 envelopes had been drawn from the Elreno box, after which the box was closed and 25 envelopes were drawn from the Lawton box in the same order and disposed of in the same manner, after which this box was closed and both boxes securely sealed and adjournment taken until 2 o'clock p. m.

Great interest was shown by the people in this part of the drawing, and it was estimated that there were not less than 30,000 present to witness it. The location of the stand and the elevation of the grounds surrounding it were such as to enable all to have a fair view of the proceedings. There was no disorder of any kind, and the announcement of the names drawn was received with great applause.

In the afternoon of this day the drawing was continued until 500 names had been drawn from each box, the same order observed in the drawing of the morning being followed, except that instead of the announcement being made from the platform typewritten lists were prepared, which were taken out into the midst of the audience and read and then posted upon bulletin boards which had been provided for that purpose.

Provision had been made upon the stand for the accommodation of newspaper reporters, of whom a large number were in attendance, and to whom manifold copies of these typewritten lists were furnished and by them supplied to their respective newspapers. All of the daily papers of Oklahoma and many of those of the States of Kansas, Missouri, and Texas published complete lists of the names and numbers of the first 6,500 drawn for each land district, thus affording notification to those interested.

While the drawing of names was in progress a force of land-office clerks was engaged in preparing postal-card notices to those whose names had been drawn, which were placed in the post-office upon the evening of that day. This course was followed during the entire drawing of the 6,500 names from each land district, the postal cards being mailed on the same day upon which the names were drawn.

At the close of the first day's drawing the boxes were sealed up and left in charge of some of the land-office clerks and a guard of deputy United States marshals, which course was pursued during the entire period of the drawing.

The drawing was continued upon the platform at the rate of 2,000 per day for each land district until the total of 6,500 envelopes had been drawn for each district, which covered a period of four days. The drawing of this number might have been concluded in a shorter space of time, but it was not deemed advisable, as the number drawn per day was as large as the newspapers could conveniently handle. As it was estimated that there was only a sufficient amount of land in each land district to supply 6,500 entrymen, only that number in each district were notified to appear at the respective land offices upon stated days.

Upon the conclusion of the drawing of these 6,500 names for each land district the boxes were removed to a building where the drawing could be more expeditiously conducted and where it was continued in the same manner, each envelope and identification card being given corresponding numbers. The drawing continued until the afternoon of the 6th of August, when the whole number of envelopes deposited in the two boxes had been separately drawn and numbered.

The postal-card notices for all of the 6,500 names drawn for each land district were mailed by land-office clerks, who exercised great care in this work in order that each one might be properly notified. Upon the conclusion of the mailing of these essential notices a force of clerks was employed, who were nearly all residents of Elreno, and placed in charge of a competent land-office clerk and proceeded to mail notice of the number drawn by each of the remaining ones in each of the land districts. This was done in accordance with the requirements of the President's proclamation, and was a wise provision, as by it each applicant had the satisfaction of knowing that his name had been placed in the box of the district in which he desired to enter and had been drawn in its order.

The commission duly certified to the land officers at Elreno and Lawton the lists of 6,500 names for each land district drawn from the box, showing the order in which those whose names were drawn might make their homestead entries.

While the greatest interest was shown by the people in the first day's drawing, and a larger number were present that day than upon any subsequent day, a very large number of people remained at Elreno until the conclusion of the drawing of 6,500 names in each district. There was the same good order which had prevailed throughout the entire period of registration. No dissatisfaction was at any time expressed as to the plan of the drawing or the manner in which it was conducted, but, upon the contrary, both were very generally commended. Even those who met with disappointment in the drawing of numbers had no criticism to offer, but expressed themselves as satisfied that they had been treated with absolute fairness.

SALE OF TOWN SITES.

By your letter of July 19, 1901, I was instructed to take charge of and superintend, subject to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1901, and the regulations contained in said letter, the offering and sale of the town lots in the county-seat town sites of Lawton, Anadarko, and Hobart, in the respective and duly formed counties of Comanche, Caddo, and Kiowa, which instructions were supplemented by your telegram of July 26, 1901, relating to the appointment of commissioners.

Acting under these instructions, I appointed J. R. Hampton as commissioner for the sale of the town site of Lawton, C. F. Nesler as commissioner for the sale of the town site of Anadarko, and E. P. Holcombe as commissioner for the sale of the town site of Hobart, and designated the auctioneers and clerks who were to assist them. These commissioners gave the required bonds, which were approved by the Department, entered upon their duties, and began the sale of the town lots promptly at 9 o'clock of August 6 in each of the three town sites. The sales were continued from day to day without any special incidents worthy of note. There was no occasion to suspend the sales and no evidence of any combination among the bidders to suppress competition or prevent the sale of lots at a reasonable value, nor was there any disturbance among the bidders or those present which prevented the orderly progress of the sale. All lots purchased were immediately paid for in cash, and the money received therefor was transmitted by each commissioner, without delay, to the subtreasury at St. Louis. Every precaution was taken for the safe-keeping of the money while in the possession of the commissioners. The greatest precaution taken to protect the money received from these sales was at Lawton.

When the sales began at this place, on the 6th of August, the nearest railroad station was Rush Springs, Ind. T., a distance of 30 miles, the road from Lawton to which place ran through an unsettled country. A military escort of 10 cavalrymen, in command of a sergeant, was provided by Major Scott, the commanding officer at Fort Sill, and as it was necessary to make this trip of 30 miles six times a week, it required two details upon the road all the time. Subsequently the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad was completed to a point 12 miles north of Fort Sill, at which point an express office was established, after which the funds were taken to that point, and at the conclusion of the sale the road had been completed to Fort Sill.

A guard of cavalrymen was also furnished each day for the protection of the money during the sale and during its transmission from Lawton to Fort Sill, where it was necessary that it should be kept overnight, which was also done under guard. The money paid for town lots at Lawton was under a military guard from the time it was paid to the commissioner until it was delivered to the express company. The same was true of the money received from the sale of lots at Anadarko, a detachment of cavalry being stationed at that place for the purpose of guarding the receipts of the sale of that town site.

There were no troops stationed at Hobart, the protection of the funds received there being provided by deputy United States marshals. The deputies furnished by the United States marshal also rendered very efficient services at Anadarko and Lawton, in conjunction with the military guard. There was no loss of funds of any kind at either of these town sites.

The sales progressed without interruption, every lot in each of the town sites being sold and paid for and the sales concluded within the time prescribed by your instructions. The receipts from the sales of these town sites were as follows:

Town site.	Number of lots.	Total receipts.
Lawton	1,422	$414,845
Anadarko	1,129	188,455

making the total receipts from the sale of the three town sites $736,033.

The expenses incurred in making the sales of these town sites are as follows:

Lawton	$2,489.62
Anadarko	1,544.53
Hobart	1,797.00

which is a little less than four-fifths of 1 per cent of the total receipts.

Under the authority of your telegram of August 3, 1901, these expenses, which included the pay of the commissioners, were paid from the receipts of the respective sales, and the net receipts only were deposited in the subtreasury at St. Louis to your credit as trustee for the respective town sites. These amounts so deposited are, respectively, as follows:

Lawton:
Total receipts	$414,845.00
Total expenses	2,489.62
Amount deposited		$412,355.38
Anadarko:
Total receipts	188,455.00
Total expenses	1,544.53
Amount deposited		186,910.47
Hobart:
Total receipts	132,733.00
Total expenses	1,797.00
Total amount deposited		730,201.85

It is provided in the act of March 3, 1901, that "the receipts from the sale of these lots in the respective county seats shall, after deducting the expense incident to the surveying, subdividing, platting, and selling of the same, be disposed of under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the following manner," etc.

A statement has heretofore been submitted of the expenses incident to the surveying, subdividing, and platting of the town sites of Lawton, Anadarko, and Hobart. As these town sites embrace the same number of acres, and the expenses incident to their survey were practically the same in each case, no attempt has been made to keep an account with each town site, but the expenses incident to their survey are submitted in one account, with the suggestion that in my opinion they should be divided equally between the three town sites, one-third of the gross amount to be charged to each one.

These accounts have all been audited in the General Land Office and paid from the appropriations to which they are properly chargeable.

It appears that the entire amount of expenses so incurred and paid and which should now be deducted from the receipts of sales of said town lots on account of said expenses, and deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, is $5,284.24, one-third of which is $1,761.41, which amount it is recommended should be charged against the receipts from the sale of each town site.

If the distribution of expense of survey is made as herein suggested, the net balances to the credit of the town sites will be as follows:

Lawton:
Gross receipts		$414,845.00
Less expense of survey	$1,761.41
Less expense of sale	2,489.62
Total expense		4,251.03
Total net receipts			$410,593.97
Anadarko:
Gross receipts		188,455.00
Less expense of survey	1,761.41
Less expense of sale	1,544.53
Total expense		3,305.94
Total net receipts			185,149.06
Hobart:
Gross receipts		132,733.00
Less expense of survey	1,761.41
Less expense of sale	1,797.00
Total expense		3,558.41
Total net receipts from sale of three town sites			724,917.62

Great credit is due to the commissioners and those associated with them for the successful manner in which the sales of these town sites were conducted. At the beginning of the sales there were no buildings upon either of the town sites which could be used by the commissioners, and it was necessary that temporary platforms should be erected, upon which the sales were conducted. At Lawton a small building was also constructed, which was occupied by the commissioner and his clerks, while they occupied sleeping apartments and boarded at Fort Sill. At Anadarko the commissioner and his assistants obtained board and lodging at the Indian agency, adjoining the town site, while at Hobart the commissioner and his assistants lived in a tent adjoining the platform upon which the sales were made.

While the time devoted to the sale of lots was from 9 a. m. until 4 p. m., it was necessary that the commissioners and their assistants should begin work much earlier than 9 o'clock, while the making up of their accounts and reports occupied their time for several hours after the sales were closed.

At each one of the town sites it was necessary that the money received from the day's sales should be retained by the commissioner over night, as the express company would not receive it until the following day. This necessitated a night guard upon the money, and was a constant source of care to the commissioners.

The sales were conducted to the entire satisfaction of those who participated in the purchase of lots, while the amounts received were larger than had been expected. The expenses incident to the survey and the sale were as small as the conditions under which they were made would permit, and the net receipts are sufficient to place each of the new counties upon a good financial basis.

THE ENTRIES.

In accordance with the President's proclamation, the land offices at Elreno and Lawton were duly opened for business upon the qualification of their respective registers and receivers. Prior to August 6, 1901, the business of these officers was principally confined to passing upon applications for reservations for town-site purposes, of which there were seven in the Elreno district and three in the Lawton district which finally received your approval, and to receiving the additional entries of those entrymen having entries adjoining the ceded lands of less than 160 acres. While not so employed the local land officers of these districts were engaged upon the registration in progress at Fort Sill and Elreno, in which they rendered valuable assistance. Upon August 6, at 9 o'clock a. m., these officers were opened for the receipt of entries by those holding numbers entitling them to make homestead entries. Both at Lawton and Elreno buildings suitable for land-office purposes had been erected and furnished.

In addition to the usual supply of blanks, maps, and plats, each office was provided with a map of its district, drawn upon a scale sufficiently large to distinctly show each smallest legal subdivision of land. Each of these maps was in charge of an experienced land-office clerk, and was accessible to those desiring to make entries. As soon as made each entry was marked off upon the map, and thus it constantly showed the land open to entry in that district, which was of very great assistance to the entrymen. In addition to the regular clerks allowed the local land offices, several detailed clerks from the General Land Office were on duty in each of these offices. With this force no difficulty was experienced in receiving and recording the 125 entries per day provided by the proclamation. Those holding low numbers entitling them to make early entries, generally selected land contiguous to some one of the town sites, preference being given to those designated as county seats. Upon the land adjoining these town sites, and especially at Lawton, large numbers of people had congregated prior to the day of opening. This unwarranted occupation was not brought to my attention until August 5. As the entries were to begin at 9 o'clock a. m., of August 6, and these occupied lands would be the first applied for, immediate action was necessary. I therefore prepared the following order to the register and receiver of the Lawton office, a copy of which was also filed in the Elreno office:

"The occupation of the south half of section 31, township 2 north, range 11 west, or any other portion of the unreserved lands in your district, by any person for purposes of residence, trade, or business, except after having made a legal entry of the same, is in violation of law and the President's proclamation, and gives such persons no rights whatever. You will allow homestead entries of said lands by qualified entrymen, notwithstanding any such occupation. Acknowledge receipt."

A copy of this message was filed in the telegraph office, and another mailed, but as both these means of communication were very uncertain owing to the great pressure of business, another copy was intrusted to a clerk going to Lawton by way of Rush Springs, while a fourth copy was given a clerk going to Anadarko, who placed it in the hands of an Indian courier, who left that place at midnight and made the ride of 40 miles to Lawton before 9 o'clock of August 6. The first two entries made at the Lawton office were for the half section of land mentioned in this order. Several attempts have been made to contest one of these entries upon grounds covered by this order, but all have failed.

The entries at the land offices continued without interruption throughout the prescribed period of sixty days. The numbers of those entitled to make entry each day were called in their order. Anyone failing to respond was passed until after the other applications assigned for that day had been disposed of, when he was again called both by name and number, and if he still failed to appear he was held to have abandoned his right to make entry under the drawing.

In accordance with your telegraphic regulations of August 5, appeals from the action of the local land officers at Elreno and Lawton rejecting applications to make or amend entries could only be taken within one day, Sundays excepted, after such rejection. When such appeals were taken, the papers were immediately forwarded to the General Land Office, where they were at once carefully examined and forwarded to you, with appropriate recommendation, when the cases would be promptly decided and closed.

Applications to contest entries made during this sixty-day period were treated in the same manner.

This course provided an adequate and speedy method of correcting any material errors in the local offices, and it is believed that at the same time it tended to discourage groundless appeals and contests. While there were quite a number of applications to contest entries sent up from each of the local offices, such contests were allowed and hearings ordered in but a comparatively small number of cases in each office. Hearings were ordered only in cases where it was shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the entryman was disqualified at the time of making entry, which fact he had concealed from the land officers, or in some other manner had made what might be termed a fraudulent or illegal entry.

During the entire period occupied in opening these ceded lands to settlement and entry suits at law were in progress calculated to prevent such opening in whole or in part. Of those brought in Oklahoma, the suits in equity brought by Lone Wolf and others in the district court of Canadian County, Okla., asking that the Government be restrained from disposing of said ceded lands were, prior to August 6, 1901, decided in favor of the Government. Subsequent to August 6 temporary restraining orders, granted by the probate judge of Canadian County, Okla., against the disposal of certain described tracts on the application of Rebecca Young and other alleged Indians, were modified by the district judge of Canadian County, permitting the disposition of said lands, subject to the rights, if any, of the said alleged Indians.

Restraining orders were issued by the probate judge of Canadian County, Okla., on the application of William H. Brintle and ten other alleged settlers on the western boundary of the Wichita Reservation. The two suits last above mentioned have not been disposed of, but the Attorney-General has directed the United States attorney for the district of Oklahoma to appear for the Government in said cases.

The suits of Lone Wolf and others did not in any wise interfere with the registration, drawing, or disposition of said lands. Those of Rebecca Young and others temporarily prevented the disposition of a small number of tracts, and those of Brintle and others affected less than a dozen claims, and were not filed until near the close of the sixty-day period.

While an itemized statement of the expenses incident to the registration, drawing, and making entries under the proclamation can not be prepared until full reports have been received from the local land officers at Lawton and Elreno, a very close estimate of the same can be made, as follows:

Salaries and per diem of W. A. Richards and 33 detailed clerks during the time engaged in registration, drawing, and making entries (estimated)	$8,271
Railroad fare and necessary traveling expenses of same from Washington, D. C., to Oklahoma and return	3,100
Incidental expenses of registration and drawing, as shown by advances made to the local officers	5,920
Salaries of registers and receivers for two months	2,000
Salaries of 10 local land office clerks for two months	1,500

In addition to other fees of which no account is now available, the land offices at Lawton and Elreno received as fees upon the 11,638 homestead entries made during the sixty-day period the sum of $162,932, which sum will be deposited in the Treasury. Deducting from this sum the amount of expenses as estimated, a balance of $142,141 is left to the credit of the Government upon this account. This is a net sum accruing to the Government in the transaction of the business of opening these ceded lands to settlement and entry.

As showing the financial working of the plan prescribed by the proclamation, it is proper to take into account the net receipts from the sale of the three county-seat town sites, although they will be devoted to public improvements in the respective counties. The net receipts from the town-site sales were $724,917, which, added to $142,141, the net receipts of the homestead entries, makes a total of $867,058 as the net receipts from the opening of these lands up to October 4, 1901, the end of the sixty-day period fixed by the proclamation.

During the first days for making entries there were very few who failed to appear and make entry when their names were called. As the entries progressed, however, and good claims became more difficult to find, the proportion of those failing to appear increased. This was not entirely due to a failure to find a desirable piece of land, but partly to the fact that many holding a high number and living at a distance from the land district abandoned the idea of making an entry without visiting the district and making an effort to find an acceptable claim. A few were prevented by sickness from making entry, and several deaths were reported of those holding numbers entitling them to make entry. The entries under the proclamation were concluded at each of the land offices upon October 4, 1901.

At the Lawton office 5,895 entries were made, including soldiers' declaratory statements filed, and 605 either failed to appear or were found to be disqualified.

At the Elreno office 5,743 entries were made, including soldiers' declaratory statements filed, and 757 either failed to appear or were found to be disqualified.

There were filed at the Lawton office 243 soldiers' declaratory statements, and 275 such filings were made at the Elreno office. There were 346 women who made entries at the Lawton office and 424 women who made entries at the Elreno office.

During the sixty days prescribed by the proclamation 11,638 filings were made, of which 518 were soldiers' declaratory statements and 770 were made by women, while 1,362 holding numbers entitling them to make entries failed to do so.

The period during which these ceded lands could only be taken in accordance with the President's proclamation ended upon October 4, and reports since received from the Lawton and Elreno land offices are to the effect that the lands remaining open to entry by reason of the failure to make entry of some who were entitled to do so are being rapidly settled upon and entered under the general homestead laws, without confusion or disorder.

In the foregoing statements I have endeavored to report everything of importance pertaining to the action taken under your direction in disposing of these ceded Indian lands, in accordance with the acts of Congress pertaining thereto and the President's proclamation. It is believed that the intent and purpose of those acts and of the proclamation have been fully carried out. There has been no complaint of discrimination or unfairness, and there were but little of the hardships and suffering usually encountered in the settlement of a new country. Without strife or contention, but in a quiet, peaceful, and orderly manner, these lands have passed from the condition of an Indian reservation to that of a populous, thrifty, peaceable agricultural community.

Very respectfully,

W. A. RICHARDS,
Assistant Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 11, 1901.

Hon. W. A. RICHARDS,
Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your report dated the 9th instant, respecting the opening to settlement and entry of the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, and Wichita lands, situated in the Territory of Oklahoma, and ceded to the United States under agreements respectively ratified by the acts of March 2, 1895, and June 6, 1900.

I have read your report with care and the greatest satisfaction, and beg to cordially thank you and every member of your staff for the very thorough, economical, and successful manner in which you, with their assistance, conducted and completed the somewhat unusual, extremely laborious work, and for the systematic, business-like method in which you discharged the duties imposed upon you by the Department, you having made a record which, I trust, will be accepted as a precedent for all future openings of the public domain.

The quiet and orderly manner in which the opening was accomplished is most gratifying, especially when contrasted with the utter disregard of law and order, the outrages, and the contests which characterized the former openings on the "sooner" plan, and the spectacle of 151,000 disappointed applicants quietly retiring in favor of the 13,000 successful ones is a characteristic demonstration of the willingness of the American people to respect and obey the law when its enforcement is accomplished by such rules and regulations as to provide an absolute equality of opportunity to all, as was the case in the opening which you have conducted with so much credit as to have also secured the unqualified approval of all who were interested therein.

Again thanking you and your assistants, I remain,

Yours, most respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER,
Washington, D. C., October 16, 1901.

Hon. E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant relating to my report respecting the opening to settlement and entry of the lands in Oklahoma ceded by the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, and Wichita tribes of Indians.

It is a matter of great satisfaction to me to be so cordially assured that my efforts to carry out your plans and instructions are so highly appreciated and the results obtained meet with your approval. While I and those associated with me put forth our best endeavors, the success which was achieved is in a large measure due to the perfection of the plans and to the hearty support and excellent advice received from you.

I fully appreciate the trust and confidence shown in giving me such great latitude in this work, and prize your letter more highly because it assures me that you were not disappointed.

Thanking you for your kindly consideration and expressions of approval, I remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

W. A. RICHARDS,
Assistant Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, there is about an hour now remaining before the time for taking up the unfinished business, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to consider what is known as the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment on page 84 which was passed over. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment to strike out the clause from line 10 to line 18, inclusive, as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause to be sold as waste paper or to destroy all population schedules of the Eleventh and prior censuses of the United States. The population schedules of the Twelfth and all subsequent censuses of the United States shall likewise be sold or destroyed as soon as the results therein contained shall have been tabulated and published. All expenses arising and requisite hereunder shall be paid from the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Department of the Interior.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to assemble in the office of the permanent census all the schedules of the several decennial censuses of the United States taken from 1790 to 1900, both inclusive, and to cause to be preserved in the office of the permanent census the schedules of the First, Second, Third, and Eighth censuses; and he shall cause to be offered to the several States all or any portion of the schedules of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh censuses relating to said States, respectively, and if said schedules, or any of them, shall be accepted by any or all of the States interested therein within five years from the passage of this act they shall be delivered to the proper authority of said State or States, and all of the said schedules hereinbefore last mentioned not distributed within said period shall be sold as waste paper or destroyed; and a like offer shall be made to the several States as respects the schedules of the Twelfth and all subsequent censuses, which schedules, when completed and the results published, shall be proffered to the States as hereinbefore provided, and if they or any of them shall be accepted within five years from the publication of the results of the said censuses those accepted shall be turned over to said States or any of them in like manner, and if said offer shall not be accepted in whole or in part within said period of five years, the remaining schedules shall also be sold as waste paper or destroyed as hereinbefore provided. All expenses arising and requisite under this paragraph shall be paid from the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Interior Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has offered an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is a substitute for the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words proposed to be inserted by the Committee on Appropriations, beginning on line 19, on page 84, and ending in line 22, page 85, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to assemble in the office of the permanent census all the schedules of the several decennial censuses of the United States taken from 1790 to 1900, both inclusive, and to cause them to be preserved in the office of the permanent census. All expenses arising and requisite under this paragraph shall be paid from any general appropriation for the expenses of the Census Office.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Connecticut simply proposes to strike out the words after the word "census," where it occurs in line 24, on page 84, down to and including the word "provided," in line 19, on page 85. Do I understand the Senator to move to amend by striking out the whole paragraph and inserting what has been read, or does he propose to amend by striking out a portion of the amendment of the committee?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Either way, Mr. President, arrives at the same result. I thought perhaps it would be more easily understood by an amendment in the way of a substitute for the committee amendment than by passing on different amendments. What I have suggested as a substitute for the committee amendment will make it read as it would read if a series of separate amendments were offered and adopted. I do not care in which way the amendment shall be acted upon. The proposition of the House of Representatives is, I believe, to destroy all the population schedules of the census. The Senate Committee on Appropriations does not wish to do that. It proposes that all the schedules of some of the earlier censuses shall be preserved in the office of the permanent census, and that others shall be offered to the States; and, if they are accepted within five years, shall be delivered to the States; if not, then those schedules are to be destroyed or sold for waste paper. I believe I state the difference between the purpose of the House of Representatives and that of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

The difference between my amendment and the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations is that I propose that none of the schedules shall be destroyed, but that they shall all be kept by the Government rather than be distributed to the States.

I said what I had to say on this subject at a former period when the Senate was thin; but I know that the proposition to destroy any of these census schedules has excited considerable discussion and has aroused a good deal of interest and opposition to it among literary and scientific men, men who are interested in the historical records of the country. Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, not to to speak of historians, are continually writing to the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain facts which can be found only in these records, and certainly I do not think, because there may be a temporary lack of room, that these records should either be destroyed or distributed among the States.

Since the House provision was inserted we have in the Senate provided by an amendment for the purchase of the present Census building; and I hope that amendment will be adopted by the House. In that case I think there can be no valid reason why these somewhat cumbersome records can not be preserved. I should very much regret to see any of them destroyed or to see any of them scattered among the different States. I think the Senate may as well present this proposition to the other House as a plain disagreement with them as to the destruction of any of these records in any manner. I think the Senate ought to say that it wants to preserve them all. Here at the national capital they will become more valuable as time goes on.

While considerable of the matter has been tabulated and published, a great variety of it has not been tabulated and published, and the information contained in the various schedules is required for historical, for literary, and for scientific purposes. They are useful in the courts; they help to establish titles, and there are a variety of uses for them. I had hoped that the chairman of the committee would assent to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I have said upon this subject about all that I think it is desirable to say. I will only add that the committee dealt with this question as best they could. We have submitted the proposition to the Senate, and we shall be content with any decision the Senate may make regarding it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over is on page 97; which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, beginning with line 18, the paragraphs relative to the Executive Mansion, down to and including line 9, on page 98, were passed over.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that those paragraphs may be passed over a little while longer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was an amendment passed over on page 113 relating to the Shiloh Military Park. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe the amendment in line 5 of that paragraph, changing the number of civilian commissioners from three to two, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment was agreed to. The amendment not acted upon is the one found in line 9, reducing the total amount of the appropriations for the Shiloh National Military Park from $40,000 to $37,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I am authorized by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

Office of Commissioner of Railroads: For Commissioner, $4,500; 1 clerk, $1,000; 1 assistant messenger, $720; in all, $6,220: Provided, That the office of Commissioner of Railroads is hereby continued until the 30th day of June, 1903, when the same shall terminate.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to ask the Senator if a provision to abolish that office has not heretofore been adopted, and if this is not an extension of the period when the office shall terminate?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; this is an extension for another year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 108, line 23, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

For additional buildings at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., $227,512.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 115, line 23, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

For reconstruction, in part, of the present Providence Hospital building and finishing of nurses' home, $50,000; in all, $69,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the committee, I offer an amendment to come in on page 116, after line 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 116, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of land belonging to heirs of M. H. Schneider, adjoining the present Garfield Memorial Hospital land on the west, from the boundary street back to Clifton street, in Washington, D. C., containing about 67,000 square feet, $50,000, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one-half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the land shall be graded by the present owners to an elevation satisfactory to the trustees of the above hospital: And provided further, That the District of Columbia assume all special assessments pending against said land of the heirs of M. H. Schneider.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer, by direction of the committee, an amendment to come in on page 59, line 12, after the word "it," which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, after the word "it," at the end of line 12, it is proposed to strike out the period and to insert a colon and the following:

And provided further, That sections 8 and 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri," approved March 3, 1901, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That said commission shall provide for the dedication of the buildings of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, in said city of St. Louis, not later than the 30th day of April, 1903, with appropriate ceremonies, and thereafter said exposition shall be opened to visitors at such time as may be designated by said company, subject to the approval of said commission, not later than the 1st day of May, 1904, and shall be closed at such time as the national commission may determine, subject to the approval of said company, but not later than the 1st day of December thereafter.

"SEC. 12. That the national commission hereby authorized shall cease to exist on the 1st day of July, 1905: Provided, That upon the approval of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined at the mints of the United States 250,000 gold dollars of legal weight and fineness, to be known as the Louisiana Exposition gold dollar, struck in commemoration of said exposition. The exact words, devices, and designs upon said gold dollars shall be determined and prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and all provisions of law relative to the coinage and legal-tender quality of all other gold coin shall be applicable to the coin issued under and in accordance with the provisions of this act. And in payment of so much of the $5,000,000 appropriated by said act of March 3, 1901, to aid in carrying forward said Louisiana Purchase Exposition, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay said 250,000 gold dollars so coined as aforesaid to the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, subject to all the provisions of said act, except that payment of said gold dollars may be made at any time upon the request of said exposition company, and upon said company filing with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond in a sum sufficient to protect the Government and satisfy him as to the future performance of all the conditions under which said $5,000,000 so appropriated is to be paid to the said exposition company."

And provided further, That the proviso of section 21 of said act, approved March 3, 1901, be amended so as to read as follows: "Provided, That the branch office authorized hereby, if the same shall be a branch of a national bank, shall not be operated for a period longer than three years, beginning not earlier than July 1, 1902, and closing not later than July 1, 1905."

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission shall hereafter receive a salary of $4,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps I had better briefly explain the amendment. Its effect is to extend by law the opening of the exposition one year, but all the other incidents are a part of the amendment, except the last proviso, which increases the compensation of the secretary from $3,000 to $4,000. That would not be in order. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it may be considered a part of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment presented by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 7, after line 18. It is a matter which has come to the attention of the committee only within the past two or three days.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For court-house and post-office at New York, N. Y.: For completing the mezzanine story over an area of approximately 5,000 square feet, including necessary changes in arrangement, $35,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Iowa is through, I would like to offer an amendment. I submit the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 150, after line 2.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Capitol police: The board of Capitol police is hereby authorized and directed to place on the roll of the Capitol police, as an additional member thereof, E. D. Turnure, formerly belonging to said force, who was injured for life in the discharge of his duties, and pay him at the rate of $900 per annum, which sum is hereby appropriated; and when appointed under the authority of this act the said E. D. Turnure shall be assigned to duty as a watchman in the Dome of the Capitol.

Mr. ALLISON. I have an amendment which has been recommended to the Committee on Appropriations by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I had a request from the Senator from Massachusetts to introduce the amendment, which I will do in his absence. It is to be inserted on page 148, before line 8.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Department of Labor: To enable the Commissioner of Labor to collect and report to Congress the statistics of and relating to marriage and divorce in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia since January 1, 1887, $25,000, to be available until exhausted, and should this sum not be sufficient the Commissioner of Labor is authorized to complete the investigation under the regular appropriations for the Department of Labor.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say there are two other amendments which the committee desire to offer before the bill is disposed of. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] also has an amendment. I shall ask that the committee amendments be passed over for a moment, and I will yield to the Senator from Ohio to offer and amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. On page 107, in line 5, after the word "dollars," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For reconstruction of stone wall inclosing the Confederate cemetery at Camp Chase, Ohio, $2,000.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 109, after the word "storehouse," in line 24, insert "and such other purposes as the Secretary of War may designate."

Mr. ALLISON. That seems to be a matter of detail. I am not familiar with it, but will allow it to go into the bill to be considered later on.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Secretary of the Interior be, and they are hereby, appointed a commission to select a site upon public land in the Mall, within the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for the erection thereon of a public building for a hall of records, and if said commission shall be unable to find available public land in the Mall for such site, it shall select a site elsewhere in the city of Washington, D. C., outside of public land, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to acquire the same, as soon as practicable, at such prices as may be fixed by agreement between the said Secretary and the respective owners, and approved by the said commission, not exceeding the cash value therof, and payment shall be made to the respective owners by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the release and conveyance of said lands to the United States by good and sufficient deeds, executed in due form of law: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of said land or any part thereof until the written opinion of the Attorney-General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title to said land. And if the Secretary of the Treasury shall be obliged to institute condemnation proceedings in order to acquire said site or any part thereof, such proceedings shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 26, chap. 837). And the cost of said site shall not exceed the sum of $500,000. And the said commission shall cause plans to be made for said building, the same to be selected after competition of architects designated by said commission for the purpose or otherwise. Said building when completed shall contain not less than 5,000,000 cubic feet. And the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to cause to be erected upon the site selected by said commission a suitable building with fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators and approaches, to contain, approximately, 1,800,000 cubic feet for immediate necessities, the same to be in conformity with the plans for the completed building, approved by the said commission for the use and accommodation of the hall of records. The cost of that part or wing of said building, exclusive of site, shall not exceed the sum of $500,000. The sum of $250,000 shall be immediately available for the purposes hereof. The Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress at the commencement of the next session a detailed statement of all the proceedings under the provisions hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in on page 148, after line 7.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For compensation and expenses of two commissioners, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to investigate and report the resources of each of the Central and South American States, the location and condition of the railway lines now in operation, the existing condition of their commerce, and the prospect for business for an intercontinental line of railway, and also to ascertain and report what concessions each of the respective Governments is willing to grant to the enterprise, in pursuance of the recommendation of the Second International Conference of the American States, recently held at the City of Mexico, and incidentally to investigate and report upon the means of extending the commerce of the United States within those regions, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. QUARLES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after line 22, on page 109.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For the improvement and repair of the military cemetery on the Fort Crawford Reservation at Prairie du Chien, Wis., and for the purpose of purchasing a suitable approach to such cemetery, $3,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to which I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know exactly where it ought to go in, but the clerks will find the proper place, if it goes in at all, as I trust it will.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

Fort Constitution, Newcastle, N. H.: For acquiring, by purchase or condemnation, the land in the square surrounding Fort Constitution, at Newcastle, N. H., to be used for barracks and quarters for troops, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in addition to the $30,000 specially appropriated for this purpose by the sundry civil appropriation act of June 6, 1900.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will make a brief statement concerning this matter. Fort Constitution, in Portsmouth Harbor, is a very important strategic point, and the Government now owns about 6 acres of land there. It is utterly inadequate for the purposes of a fort, such as the building of barracks, etc. There are 6 additional acres of land which it was attempted to purchase some three years ago. My former colleague, Mr. Chandler, and I supported an amendment providing for an adequate appropriation for that purpose.

The owners of the land at that time demanded $72,000 for it. The committee of conference allowed $25,000, which was so inadequate as to be of no use whatever, and no proceedings have been taken under that appropriation. The matter was placed last year in the hands of the United States district attorney for the district of New Hampshire, and after careful investigation and negotiation with the owners of the land he secured an option on the whole tract for the sum of $55,000, which option will continue until the 1st day of August of the present year, the amount being a decrease of $17,000 from the amount demanded three years ago and $25,000 in excess of the former appropriation.

Mr. President, I gave notice of a proposed amendment, which was printed and sent to the War Department some six weeks ago. For some reason or other it was somewhat neglected there, and the return was made only last Saturday. That return shows that the Acting Quartermaster-General does not recommend the appropriation, nor does he oppose it, but he says it is barely possible that the money might be expended to better advantage somewhere else.

The Chief of Artillery makes the following indorsement:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ARTILLERY,
Washington, April 16, 1902.

Respectfully returned to the Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters of the Army.

The garrison required to man the guns projected for the defense of Portsmouth Harbor is 219, and two companies of coast artillery were, by General Order 126, Adjutant-General's Office, series of 1901, assigned to this harbor. Whatever may be the ultimate distribution of the troops, Fort Constitution will be a most important point and used largely as the base of supplies for the other two forts in the harbor. The submarine mining material is stored at Fort Constitution.

The present reservation is about 1,000 feet long and 270 feet wide, containing approximately 6 acres. One-third of this area is occupied by the old brick and stone fort and another third is occupied by a battery of two 8-inch disappearing guns, leaving between the two ends of the reservation thus occupied only about 2 acres for buildings for garrison and other purposes.

Any location which could be obtained on this ground for building is open to the serious objection that it comes within the sector of fire of at least one of the two 8-inch guns.

In view of the above, and of the importance of adequately defending the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H., it is recommended that the additional six and two-tenths acres be acquired, and that Congress be asked to appropriate $25,000 for that purpose, in addition to what has been specifically appropriated heretofore.

WALLACE F. RANDOLPH,
Chief of Artillery.

The Lieutenant-General of the Army makes an indorsement, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1902.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War and concurring in the views of the Chief of Artillery expressed in the third indorsement.

NELSON A. MILES,
Lieutenant-General.

So the Chief of Artillery and the Lieutenant-General of the Army warmly recommend this appropriation; and I feel sure the chairman of the committee will see the propriety of letting the amendment go into the bill, and I trust it may be retained there. We now have $30,000 appropriated for this purpose. Twenty-five thousand dollars more will complete the purchase, and I hope that the amendment may not only be allowed to go into the bill, but that it will be retained there.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee had this matter under consideration, as the Senator stated, two or three years ago. Of course the details of the matter have passed from my mind. But from the statement now made I should think this purchase necessary——

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLISON. Although I regret very much to hear that land is so valuable in New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are valuable buildings on this land, I will say to the Senator, and the Government will be somewhat reimbursed by their sale. Those buildings are now being damaged by the fire from these guns. That is what makes the land valuable. If the buildings were not there, the land of course could be purchased for a much less amount.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like very much to have the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary" inserted, if they are not already in the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Those words are already in the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope there may be some little remission in the price; but perhaps there can not be.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is improbable, because there has been a remission already of $17,000, which the United States district attorney secured after very diligent work on his part.

I omitted to say, Mr. President, that the amendment was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses, and a majority of the committee have recommended it; in fact, all of the members of the committee who could be seen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, line 23, strike out "eighteen thousand" and insert "one hundred and sixty-five thousand;" so as to read:

For extraordinary repair and refurnishing of the Executive Mansion, $165,000, to be expended by contract or otherwise, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

For a temporary building to accommodate the offices of the President, and to be located in the grounds of the President's House, $30,000; and for furnishing the same, $10,000; in all, $40,000, to be expended under the direction of the President and to be immediately available.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have the amendment read again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the words "Executive Mansion" may be inserted instead of "President's House."

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not put it White House?

Mr. ALLISON. The words "Executive Mansion" seem to be used all through the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the words "White House" would constitute a better phrase. There are executive mansions all over the United States. "White House" is distinctive. It is the only one in the United States. However, I do not care anything about it if the Senator from Iowa does not.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not, either; but the words "Executive Mansion" are already found at two or three places in the bill.

Mr. BATE. Will this conform to the contour of the building?

Mr. ALLISON. It is to be an additional building.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD a brief statement concerning the two amendments just adopted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

REPAIRS TO THE WHITE HOUSE.

After as careful an examination of the White House as could be given while the house is being occupied, it appears that it is necessary, first, to support the floors of the second story by placing a steel truss or trusses in the attic and hanging the floors therefrom. The attic itself should be provided with a stairway, access at present being by elevator only. The rooms on the second floor should be converted from offices into chambers.

A new elevator should be provided for the house, and throughout the first floor the old beams should be relieved of the undue strain now placed upon them, a strain which makes certain of the rooms dangerous to the large number of people that frequently congregate in them.

In portions of the house the original trimmings, mantels, and doors remain. These are of such a character as to indicate pretty clearly the line on which the restoration in the house shall be conducted, the idea being to reinstate the house as it was originally built and to rid it of those excrescences which follow the temporary fashion in the days when taste was not so well developed as it was at the time when the house was built and as it is to-day. There should be no changes from the original structure of the house, nor any interference with the architectural features of the exterior; but the building should be restored in such a dignified and permanent manner as to be lasting.

It is impossible in so short a time to state in full all the items that are necessary to be done in refitting the building, but a rough estimate of $165,000 is made, subject to such revision, either by way of decrease or increase, as may be found necessary on a detailed examination of the house.

The most economical practice of to-day in regard to such constructions and reconstructions is to place the plans in the hands of a thoroughly competent and reliable builder and to hold him responsible for thorough work and completion within a given time; to have him submit the items of cost and to receive a reasonable amount for his work. If Congress shall see fit to place in the hands of the President the work of reinstating the White House and give him the same authority that he has frequently exercised in connection with very much larger and more important public works, the President is satisfied that the White House can be restored so as to be ready for occupancy in December next at an expenditure which can be properly guarded and economically used.

In this connection it may be well to state that it is not contemplated to discontinue the public access to the East Room under the limitations which it is now visited, nor is it proposed to make any such structural changes in the White House as will eliminate any of its historical features.

A one-story temporary office building, approximately 100 by 50 feet, can be erected in the space immediately west of the White House conservatory in such a manner as to be not inharmonious with the White House. A driveway, with a turn, connecting with the main driveways in front of the White House, can be constructed.

The building itself would be of brick, painted white. It would have high ceilings and would be comfortable for work in summer. It would contain a cabinet room, a room for the President, a room for the secretary to the President, a room for one of the assistant secretaries to the President, a telegraph room, a room for the executive clerks, a room for the press, toilet rooms, and file rooms. The executive offices would thus occupy from 50 to 75 per cent more space than is now allowed to them.

The cost of the building itself would be not to exceed $30,000, and it could be finished in ninety days from the time of beginning.

The furniture now used by the executive clerks in the White House is not suited for further use; and for the furniture, rugs, etc., necessary for the new building, in addition to the furniture which for historic reasons the President may see fit to transfer, will cost about $10,000.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. After the word "dollars," in line 21, of page 73, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 21, page 73, it is proposed to insert the following:

And timber procured from forest reserves created under section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," shall not be used outside of the State or Territory where cut, except in cases in which, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the exigencies are such as to render it advisable to permit the use of the timber elsewhere.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Wyoming presented the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations. It is pure legislation, but I think there is perhaps need of some such legislation. I am willing that the amendment may go in for consideration in conference, if the Senator will be content with that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope it will not only be received for consideration, but that it will receive favorable consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the conference committee will give it such consideration as is possible, but I do not now commit myself to the amendment as one which ought to remain in the bill. I will hear the Senator from Wyoming in any statement he may desire to make, and I think it might be wise for him to explain the necessity for the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, briefly I will state the condition which exists under the present law creating forest reserves or providing legislation for them, which has largely been done upon appropriation bills, and much of it on this particular bill. The condition of the law is such that timber upon the forest reserves can only be disposed of to citizens of the State wherein the forest reserve is located. Oftentimes the forest reserve is located near a State line, where all the timber that can be of use must of necessity be taken across the State line. This can not now be done even by permission of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment proposes that the Secretary of the Interior shall be allowed to use his discretion; and in a letter, which I ask to have published in connection with the amendment, the Commissioner of the General Land Office says that this legislation is needed. The amendment is in the exact form of a bill which he proposes, and which has already been introduced in the other House.

It is an amendment of much local interest where these forest reserves are, and is especially called for at this time because of the burning down of a schoolhouse just across a State line from one of these reserves. The district can not afford to pay a large sum of money for lumber, to be hauled for 40 or 50 miles from the railroad. The Secretary of the Interior would be only too glad to give them timber to rebuild their schoolhouse, but he is unable to do it under the present status of the law. It is to cure such conditions that the amendment is introduced. It leaves it entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior when and where and under what conditions and circumstances he will permit such timber to be used in other States. I make this statement so that the matter will be understood.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the letter referred to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the request I make.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE.
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1902.

Hon. C. D. CLARK, United States Senate.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt, through you, of a letter addressed to you by Thomas Widdop, on November 27, 1901, inclosing a petition signed by a number of residents in the extreme southern part of Uinta and Sweetwater counties, in the State of Wyoming, which sets forth that that region is devoid of timber for ordinary domestic, ranch, and homestead purposes, all the timber available for the purposes of fencing, corrals, and houses being located south of the State line, in the State of Utah, in a locality where there are few settlers requiring said timber; in consequence of which facts the petitioners pray that some action may be taken or some recommendation be made by this Department to Congress to make the timber in question available for the legitimate domestic requirements of the petitioners.

In reply, I have the honor to inform you that this office fully appreciates the stress of circumstances pleaded in this case. Many similar cases have come up from other localities, and this office has given the matter most careful consideration. Under existing legislation, however, it does not appear that any relief can be afforded, the laws granting public timber privileges in the locality in question being plain upon the point of limiting the use of the timber to the State where cut.

For your information on this point, I inclose herein copies of circulars issued by this Department under dates of January 18, 1900, and February 10, 1900, containing regulations governing the use of timber on unreserved public lands in said locality, under the respective acts of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat., 88), and March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1093).

It appears that the only relief in this matter as regards timber upon the unreserved lands would be through an act of Congress, modifying the restriction in question in cases in which it would operate to work a hardship.

Since the Uinta Forest Reserve lies in the immediate vicinity of these petitioners, a few miles across the State line, your attention is also invited to the fact that the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 34-36), providing for the administration of forest reserves, expressly stipulates that timber procured therefrom, either by purchase or without charge therefor, shall be used within the State or Territory within which the reserve lies.

I inclose herein existing regulations respecting both the free use and sale of forest reserve timber under said act, and also the form of application in cases of public timber sale.

Appreciating the hardship worked in many cases by the restriction in question, this office, on the 28th ultimo, invited the attention of the Secretary of the Interior to the fact that in administering the act of June 4, 1897, it has been found defective in requiring that all timber procured from forest reserves shall, without exception, be used in the State or Territory in which the reserve lies, since while such limitation is undoubtedly well in some instances, yet cases arise in which it results in working a serious hardship. For instance, persons living in the State of Wyoming near the Black Hills Forest Reserve and others in Idaho and Montana near the Teton and Big Horn Forest reserves are compelled by their necessities to violate the law, since they live on prairie land and can only secure timber from the said reserves lying across the State line. While these reserves contain their natural sources of timber supply, they are deprived of it. Another instance of the defective working of this restriction has been found in the fact that in the timbered districts of Washington, Oregon, California, and Idaho the practical working of the act is to cause much of the timber in these States to be left to waste and decay, since there is not a sufficient demand in the local market in each State to utilize all of it.

It appears that, while leaving this restriction operative in general, the Secretary of the Interior should be given discretionary powers in exceptional cases, and I accordingly submitted, with my said letter of the 28th ultimo, for the approval of the Secretary, the draft of a bill so modifying the restriction, by empowering the Secretary of the Interior to exercise his discretion in all such cases.

For your information in the matter I inclose herein a copy of the draft of said proposed bill.

Should Congress enact such a law, it would undoubtedly afford much-needed relief in many cases.

I return herewith Mr. Widdop's letter and copies of petition therewith.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN, Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I trust it may be adopted. I wish to make just a word of explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after the word "courts," in line 11, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the investigation of claims for the reimbursement of expenses of the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners shall be at the instance and under the direction of the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, and no part of any accrued pension shall hereafter be used to reimburse any State, county, or municipal corporation for expenses incurred by such State, county, or municipal corporation under State law for expenses of the last sickness or burial of a deceased pensioner.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] is especially interested in this matter, and if the amendment goes into the bill he will undoubtedly seek an opportunity to explain it to the committee of conference. I have not had time since it was called to my attention to examine it very carefully, but I believe it to be all right. The existing law provides that any "person" caring for a soldier in his last sickness shall be reimbursed. A court somewhere has has decided that the word "person" as used in the law applies to municipal and other corporations, and this is intended simply to provide that the payment shall be made only in case an individual cares for the soldier. It may or may not be wise to incorporate it in the pending bill, but I trust it may be allowed to go in, and that the Senator from South Dakota, who has investigated the matter very carefully, will be given an opportunity to talk with the committee of conference about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield for a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does this change the present method of adjustment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all, as I understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It leaves it still with the Auditor for the Interior Department?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; with the accounting officers.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] presented this matter to the Committee on Appropriations, and was heard before the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know that.

Mr. ALLISON. But the committee was not able, from the investigation it could make, to ascertain whether or not it would change the law as it now exists upon this subject. It was with hesitation that we considered it at all. With that view, supposing that the Pension Committee would present bills for correction, I referred the Senator from South Dakota to the Senator from New Hampshire, knowing that he is familiar with all these statutes and would be able to state to the Senate whether this was a wise provision to insert and whether it changed existing law. I am willing that it may go into the bill with a view——

Mr. GALLINGER. To inquiry.

Mr. ALLISON. With a view to inquiring into it later.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all I can ask. I am sure it does not change existing law at all, but simply limits the payment to individuals rather than to individuals and corporations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. On page 69, after line 10, I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate and report to Congress through a special commissioner, to be appointed by him, with the approval of the President, the general subject of Government receipts and expenditures and what changes, if any, should be made in the methods of classifying and reporting the receipts and expenditures of the Government to the Congress, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask that the bill may be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have an amendment which I wish to present. I desired to have time for consultation with the Interior Department, but I will present the amendment now if the Senator wishes to get the bill through. It is in line with the other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 74, after line 12, insert:

: Provided, That in granting permits for grazing on the Uintah Forest Reserve no preference shall be given to the flocks or herds of one State over those of another, nor shall authority, direct or indirect, be given to any person not in the service of the United States nor to any association or corporation to grant any permit or permits to graze sheep or other live stock on said reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. That is pretty radical and serious legislation. I trust the Senator from Wyoming will not ask it to be put on this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. An explanation of the amendment would require some time, and I hope the Senator will allow it to become a part of the bill with a view of my presenting the matter to the conference committee. Otherwise I shall feel it to be my duty to discuss the subject at some length. It is a very serious proposition so far as our people in the immediate locality of this particular reservation are concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. I think a matter of so much importance should not be put upon the bill without a thorough understanding of the question. I had hoped to complete the bill this morning, but if the Senator insists upon his amendment, of course I shall listen to him, and reserve the right to make a point of order on it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I will state the exact situation, and I shall address myself more particularly to the chairman of the committee, in order that he may be fully informed of the reason why I offer the amendment at this time.

Under the law the Secretary of the Interior is permitted, in his discretion, to allow grazing upon the forest reserves under such rules and regulations as to him seem proper. I call especial attention to the fact that the Uintah Reservation is situated and located differently from any other reservation in the United States. It lies immediately over the line south of Wyoming. All the sheep that pasture on that reserve in the summer come from the State of Wyoming and are driven in there.

This portion of the reservation is inaccessible to sheep coming from any other locality. On the contrary, two-thirds of the sheep grazing in the southern part of Wyoming are owned by flock masters in the State of Utah. The result is that after the grazing of sheep in southwestern Wyoming during the late spring and early summer when the lands have been depastured the sheep are driven to the mountains for pasturage. They are of necessity driven and herded toward this forest reserve, where permission is granted to graze sheep during that season by the Secretary of the Interior.

Under the rule, as it now stands, when the sheep that have been grazing side by side all the winter and all the spring upon the public lands within the State of Wyoming seek to go south into the higher regions where there is grass, on this reservation, and the band of Wyoming sheep and the band of Utah sheep, having grazed side by side and eating the same grass all the spring, come to the State line, as the regulations provide that the pasturage in the reservations shall be confined to the States in which the reservations are situated, the Utah sheep pass over the line into the rich pasturage of this reserve and the Wyoming sheep are turned back upon the barren land that has been already pastured over.

It is not strange, Mr. President, that in cases of that sort quarrels arise between the different herdsmen. It is not strange that a herdsman, believing that he has as good a right to the public grass as another, should feel that he was outraged by a law of this kind. It is not strange, as it happens time and time again, that personal encounters have taken place and Winchesters have been used and life lost. The situation is more acute at this particular season than at any other time.

It is a matter not only of property rights, but it is a matter in that locality of life and death. It is a matter that the Congress of the United States ought to take hold of, and I sincerely hope that the amendment may be adopted in that particular.

The other part of the amendment which I have proposed provides that the power of the Secretary of the Interior shall not be delegated to any private person or to any corporation or association to grant these permits. Under the decisions or regulations or rules, or whatever you call them, of the Interior Department, the authority to grant the right to graze upon these reserves is given to the sheep associations of the various States. In other words, a corporation formed of sheep owners is given authority absolutely to shut out from any of these reserves flocks of sheep that do not belong to the particular persons composing the association. This works untold hardship. It gives an absolute monopoly of all the grass within the reserves to a local association or corporation. This we believe to be altogether wrong. We believe that the Secretary of the Interior should grant these permits. We believe that his powers should not be delegated to any sheep or stock association. We believe that the grass should be apportioned without respect to the State line, which is often arbitrary, and in this case is a geographical line drawn without reference to national boundaries or the people who live there or the business conditions.

the amendment submitted by the Senater from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask the Senator the meaning exactly of the last clause of his amendment, and whether it conveys his idea. It says:

That in granting permits for grazing on the Uintah Forest Reserve no preference shall be given to the flocks or herds of one State over those of another; nor shall authority, direct or indirect, be given to any person not in the service of the United States, nor to any association or corporation to grant any permit or permits to graze sheep or other live stock on said reservation.

Has it been the custom to give authority to a corporation to grant permits?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is not the authority given to the corporations to grant permits, but the permits are granted on the recommendation of the corporation. What I want to get at is the indirect granting of permits through a corporation.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the language covers it at all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am perfectly willing that it shall be amended.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming what is the particular object of this amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The object of the amendment is, as I explained, that there shall be no discrimination made in regard to this particular reservation between the sheep of Wyoming and the sheep of Utah.

Mr. ALLISON. If this matter is to be tested between Senators from States having different interests, I must make the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa make the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I do if it is to lead to debate. I wish to finish the bill this morning.

Mr. RAWLINS. I can not consent to the amendment as I am at present advised about it. This is a forest reservation in Utah. There have been some permits granted, of a limited character, to graze sheep upon the reservation. I doubt whether any permit of that kind ought to be granted, but certainly I should seriously object to having permits indiscriminately granted to sheep owners in Utah and in surrounding States. The object of the amendment is to give Wyoming access to our forest reservation, as well as Utah. I am willing that Utah should be shut out, but I am not willing that Wyoming should be let in.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator is willing that Utah sheep shall be shut out from Wyoming, I will make that trade with him.

Mr. RAWLINS. No. I am willing to have Utah sheep shut out of a Wyoming forest reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will withdraw this amendment. If it is a matter of pressing importance, as suggested by him, it can be taken up any morning by the Committee on Public Lands which, I understand, has not considered the amendment at all, and be considered in the Senate at a later day. It is as much in order upon any other bill as the one pending.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the point of order is raised, I shall not discuss it, although I believe it is in order, because nearly every bit of forest-reserve legislation we have had has been on appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLISON. Mostly by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will not insist upon the amendment, but I will say to the Senator from Iowa that this is a matter of greater importance than he believes. It is a matter that even now is arming men upon that State line, and I greatly fear the result of delayed action in regard to it. We have had difficulties of this kind in the Western country before, not because of the inherent wickedness of men, but because the destruction of property impels men to defend their own. I had hoped that the amendment might go on the bill as mere matter of justice, a mere matter of equity and right.

Mr. COCKRELL. How near is the reservation to Wyoming?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is within 6 miles of the Wyoming border. All the summer grazing land is up there, and it is the natural place for all the sheep that graze over twenty or thirty thousand square miles in Wyoming at this season of the year and earlier. As I said before, two-thirds of those sheep at this time and heretofore in the grazing season are Utah sheep grazing in Wyoming, and just the moment they begin to cross the line the Wyoming sheep are sent back to the exhausted range and the Utah sheep go up to the reservation. The bands have been grazing side by side in Wyoming, and it is no wonder that armed conflicts have arisen, and it is no wonder that they will continue to arise. You can not prevent them under present conditions. I hope the amendment may be allowed to go in the bill.

Mr, ALLISON. I make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LODGE. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert the following:

For the purpose of preparing and printing a new edition of the charters, constitutions, and organic laws of all the States, Territories, and colonies, now or heretofore forming the United States, and any acts of Congress relating thereto, $25,000, the same to be expended under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations examined this amendment very carefully and found that an employee of the Senate has completed a revision of the constitutions and charters, and that the revised edition is about ready to be published. The committee did not think it was wise to make this appropriation. I do not know whether it comes from any committee or not.

Mr. LODGE. If the work is being done, as the Senator from Iowa suggests, I have no desire to press the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. It is almost completed by a very competent employee of the Senate. I ask that the bill may be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to an amendment, but I shall not press it if he will not agree to it.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me a moment, I have prevailed upon the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] to withdraw an amendment which he thinks is all important, and about which the committee has not sufficient information to allow it to go in at this time. The Senator expects further information on the subject.

Mr. BATE. As to the amendment touching the battlefield of Shiloh, on page 113, I regret that we can not have it considered now.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator expect to pass the bill now?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope to do so.

Mr. HOAR. I shall be obliged to call the attention of the Senate to one amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. What is it?

Mr. HOAR. An amendment referring to the transportation of some coin.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee was not understood at the desk.

Mr. BATE. I only said that I regret exceedingly that my amendment could not be considered now, as we are about closing the bill, and it is but a few minutes before the regular order is called. I merely call attention to it now to say that it proposes a worthy and needed appropriation, touching the battlefield of Shiloh Park, increasing the amount $10,000 for the purpose of building new roads to the sites of the old Confederate hospitals, where numbers of Confederate soldiers lie in unmarked graves. I will not go into it now, as there is no time in which to do it. As the commissioners of that park failed to make an estimate for it, I can not reasonably ask it in its present shape, but shall look to it hereafter. I therefore withdraw the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator from Iowa I shall not press my amendment unless he consents to it. I conferred with him, and I thought at one time I would readlily accept the $50,000 and not ask for any more. During the present session Congress passed a bill providing for a marine hospital at Savannah, Ga., at a cost of $175,000. I see on page 11, line 15, "For marine hospital at Savannah, Ga.: For commencing construction of hospital under present limit, $50,000."

I would be glad, if the Senator can do it, to insert "$75,000" instead of "$50,000," because I am informed that $75,000 can be used by the time Congress will convene in December. I told the Senator that I would be satisfied with $50,000, but I hope, under the circumstances, the Senator will accept it. If he can not, of course I will not press it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other puposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I would be glad to have unanimous consent to complete the appropriation bill, which I think can be done in a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not press it if it is to occupy any length of time.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to one amendment which has been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Iowa that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. HOAR. It will take five minutes to say what I have to say, and I think the matter will lead to some debate.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will not press my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall ask Senators to excuse me if I decline interruptions in what I have to say to-day. I desire to trespass as short a time as possible upon the attention of the Senate, and I have a special reason for not wishing to extend the time further than I possibly can. I also have many facts to state in support of the propositions which I shall advance, and I desire to present my argument, such as it is, as a coherent and connected whole and not be diverted from it. After I have concluded, if Senators desire to ask any questions I shall be only too glad to answer them so far as I may be able to do it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. The only purpose I have is to request the Senator, when he cites testimony or authorities, to kindly give us the page, so that there will be no necessity of interruption on that account.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I will do that with great pleasure.

Mr. President, I think there has been a marked improvement in this debate over the last debate which was held upon the question of Philippine affairs, because in this debate, so far as it has proceeded, there has been more or less said about the pending measure. I am aware that we devoted one afternoon to a discussion of politics and election methods in North Carolina, but possibly it was not amiss to consider the quality of mercy exhibited in certain parts of our common country as well as in the Philippines. It is true also that we devoted one afternoon to trying to decide whether Aguinaldo caused the assassination of General Luna, whether he had him assassinated in self-defense, or whether Luna was merely killed by the guard because the guard did not like his manners. But all these things, Mr. President, have more connection with the matter before us than the discussions about the Revolutionary history and the character of a judge at Nome, in which we before indulged. I think, Mr. President, I am not too optimistic, therefore, if I express the hope and the belief that the time will come, and come before long, when we shall discuss measures in regard to the Philippines as we discussed the Chinese-exclusion bill, with a view to getting the best legislation possible in the interests of the people of the islands and the people of the United States, and when we shall cease to make the affairs of the Philippine Islands a field for the investment of political capital by a party whose ventures in other directions have not of late been very successful.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], with the grace of phrase characteristic of his eloquence, asked if anyone would have the effrontery to defend the pending bill. In all humility, Mr. President, I will say that I have the effrontery not only to defend the bill, but in my feeble way to advocate it. I believe it to be a well-considered measure, dealing with subjects of great difficulty, to which the committee have given careful attention, over which they have labored assiduously, and to parts of which the minority of the committee have made valuable contribution, for which I am happy to make acknowledgment.

The mining provisions of this bill occupy 28 pages. The mining law on which the provisions of the bill are founded was prepared by the Philippine Commission with great labor and attention. It has been revised by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Philippines, consisting of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and I believe, speaking as a layman in regard to mining laws, that we have embodied in this bill as excellent a mining law as stands on any statute book. I think the obligation for it is due to the subcommittee of the Committee on the Philippines, and in a large measure to the Senator from Utah, who brought to the work an expert knowledge which was of great value. I shall not detain the Senate by discussing the details of those mining provisions. That is a task which I leave to the better instructed members who prepared it.

The coinage sections of the bill occupy 6 pages and provide for coinage in the Philippine Islands. I will only say in regard to the coinage provisions that the committee were satisfied after a careful investigation of the subject, unanimously, with one possible exception, that no greater mistake could be made than to change the system of currency now in existence in those islands and to alter the standard to which the people have been accustomed for many years. It is always a dangerous thing to change the money standard of a people; and it seemed to the committee that at this time it would be exceedingly perilous. They are now, and have long been, upon the single silver standard, with the free coinage of Mexican dollars as the unit of value and the current coin of the islands. We make no change in the standard. We simply substitute for the Mexican dollar an American Filipino dollar, to be coined at the mint of Manila and at the mints in the United States, following in that respect the example of Great Britain in Hongkong, Singapore, and the Straits Settlements, for which she has coined what is known as the Bombay dollar, which has been of very great advantage to her and to her trade in the commerce of the East. I shall not go further into this question. The sections were prepared by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and I shall leave him, abler and more skilled than any other man in public life to deal with such a question as this, to explain these provisions fully and in detail to the Senate.

The remainder of the bill occupies 19 pages. We begin by continuing the present Philippine Commission. The only change we make in the existing conditions is to require that the Commissioners shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and we apply the confirmation of the Senate also to the judges of the supreme court. That, Mr. President, is necessarily a temporary and tentative arrangement. It is designed to leave the government of the islands in the hands of the present Commission until the provisions of the succeeding sections may be carried into effect. Those sections provide for taking a census of the islands, which shall give not only the numbers of the people, but all the information that can possibly be desired, in order to enable us to establish there "permanent, popular, representative government."

It will require, in the nature of things, some time to take such a census, and it is impossible, as it seemed to the committee, to enter suddenly upon the establishment of representative government until we know the numbers of the people, until we have differentiated the wild tribes, who are said to number nearly a million, from the Christianized Filipinos, and also to determine our relations with the Mohammedan tribes of the south. The object of the census sections is to enable Congress to legislate intelligently with a view to giving those people a "popular representative government;" in the meantime, while we take the census to which I refer, the bill instructs the Commission to continue, and to extend as far as possible the municipal and provincial governments, to be chosen by the people, with the suffrage to be enlarged as rapidly as they think it safe; and to continue to build up in that way the self-government of the people of the islands.

We provide also for the public lands. That, again, is a temporary provision. There is a vast body of public land in the Philippine Islands. The total area of the islands is estimated at 72,000,000 acres, and it is believed that not more than 5,000,000 of those 72,000,000 acres are now in private ownership. That leaves in the hands of the United States, as the heir of Spain, some 67,000,000 acres of public land. The committee felt that it was necessary to have a proper land law—one adapted to the conditions of the islands. It has been left to the Commission to prepare such a law, to be transmitted to Congress for its consideration and approval. Until that land law is enacted, we give to the Commission power only to make leases of the public lands.

We also provide that they shall give good titles to the occupiers of public lands, of whom there are a great many among the natives, who have never been able to secure from Spain any title to the little homesteads or farms which they live on and cultivate, and which, in many cases, they have lived on and cultivated for generations. I think that that is one of the most necessary and beneficent provisions of the bill.

There are also sections which provide and give authority for the issuance of municipal loans, intended for municipal improvements, which are greatly needed, especially in the city of Manila.

We also have provisions in the bill in regard to timber lands, and we have followed the same careful policy in regard to those lands that we have pursued in regard to the public lands generally. We permit the Commission only to issue licenses to cut timber, and not to sell any more land than is necessary for the establishment of a sawmill or the opening of a road to give access to the forests.

We have also made provision for the purchase of the friars' lands, as they are called. That is a difficult and unusual question. We authorize the Commission to buy the lands of the friars for the purpose of selling them immediately to the people who now occupy them. However witnesses or experts may differ in regard to the affairs in the Philippine Islands, there is but one opinion as to the necessity of taking these friars' lands and giving them over to the people who actually live upon them and cultivate them. The possession of the lands by the friars was one of the bitterest grievances of the Filipino people against Spain. The testimony is universal as to their desire to have those lands restored to them. The sections in regard to these lands, of course, in the nature of things, give a large power to the Commission, but there is no other way that I have seen suggested to get those lands out of the hands of these religious corporations and back into the hands of the people who cultivate them.

We have also clauses in the bill providing for franchises. They are guarded with the utmost care. I can not now undertake to read, and I shall not detain the Senate by reading, those franchise clauses, but I invite Senators to examine them with the utmost care. They are guarded in every possible way compatible with giving any reasonable opening to capital to enter into the islands with the hope of profitable investment.

The main object of the bill, Mr. President, is, in a word, to replace military by civil government—to advance self-government; and yet it is delayed in this Chamber and opposed by those who proclaim themselves the especial foes of military rule.

The second object of the bill is to help the development of the islands, and yet, as the committee felt, to help that development only by taking the utmost pains that there should be no opportunity given for undue or selfish exploitation. The opponents of this legislation have dwelt almost continuously, when they have spoken on this bill, on the point that it is intended to open the islands to exploiters, to syndicates, and to carpetbaggers. Why, Mr. President, if we go on the proposition that it is a crime for an American to make money, undoubtedly there is opportunity in this bill for men or associations of men to enter into the islands and to make money in a legitimate way. I am aware, after many years of experience, of the hostility of the Democratic party to any man who has made money or to any man making money, and it was that one of their principles, the only one, I think, which was carried out with complete success during their last tenure of power. Few, if any, Americans at that time made money. But these exploiters, these syndicates, these carpetbaggers, who march back and forth through the speeches of Democratic Senators like the sceneshifters' army, have as little reality as the air-drawn dagger of Macbeth. It is continually reiterated that they are to be brought into the Philippines by this bill; and while Senators in opposition are declaiming against this bill as throwing the islands open to improper exploitation and speculation I have had many gentlemen come to me who desire to invest money in the Philippine Islands and who say that the bill is so drawn that it is impossible for capital to go in there to any large amount. When gentlemen who desire to invest take that view and the Democratic party takes the view that the bill is simply for purposes of exploitation my own conclusion is that we have got a pretty good bill.

We are also told that the Chinese are to be poured in there. Mr. President, as we have excluded the Chinese from the Philippines by legislation already passed, how absurd that proposition is. Passing lightly from the proposition that the Chinese are to be poured into the Philippines, from which our laws expressly exclude them, the dismal picture is then drawn of what will happen to the islands if we do not let the Chinese in. The testimony is very clear to my mind that the Filipino people, if they have an opportunity to earn good wages and to have them regularly paid—something which has never happened to them under Spanish rule—will be found quite capable of doing all the work that is needed in the islands. They are skillful workers in the factories they have there, such as the cigarette factories; they are noted as good machinists; they are deft and ingenious with their hands; they work in the rice fields under a sun which is too much even for Chinamen, and they carry on all the cultivation of the islands. If we once give them an opportunity to perform this new work and receive regular wages and be properly paid, I am sure we shall find that the labor is there, so that the Filipino people can develop their own territory. It may be a slower process than if we should throw the islands open now to sudden exploitation in large masses of territory, with great bodies of capital and with Chinese labor; but that it is simple justice to the people of those islands, and that it is infinitely better to give them the arrangement that we have given them, is, to my mind, too clear for argument.

In connection with these exploiters and syndicates and carpetbaggers, we have been told on the other side of the Chamber that the Moro war was started in order to open the southern islands to exploitation. The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] criticised us with the utmost severity on that ground, whereas the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] reproached us because the war with the Moros was not being pushed with sufficient vigor, they being brave, wild Mohammedans, instead of peaceful, Christianized Filipinos.

Mr. CARMACK. Which I did not do at all.

Mr. LODGE. I so understood the Senator; and if I misquote him, I shall be glad to correct it.

The facts are very simple. The Moros seized and put to death some American soldiers. Indemnity was demanded and the delivery of the murderers. The President warned our generals there to avoid a general war if it could possibly be done. The Moros, as I understand, declined, and engaged in continued hostilities. The news of events there is in the newspapers to-day.

Mr. President, what we have done in the islands so far in a short three years is to establish schools, to establish courts where there can be quick justice instead of long denial, to establish the writ of habeas corpus, to erect civil governments throughout all the pacified provinces, and in this bill we propose to restore to the Filipinos the friars' lands and to give the people title to those portions of the public land which they now occupy. All those things are great and beneficent measures—measures which we ought to enact, no matter what our opinion may be as to the ultimate disposition of the islands.

The charge has been made, and has been made as frequently as the charge about exploitation, that we are intrusting these islands to a commission—a commission of foreigners, of outsiders, as it is called. Mr. President, it is well enough to say "commission," as if it were some kind of vague, ill-defined monster; but a commission is made of men; and when we discuss the commission we ought to look at the men who compose it, to whom we intrust this great work until a popular and representative government can be established. It would not be right for us to say that until a census was taken and all the arrangements, which may occupy many months, possibly some years, are completed for the establishment of a representative government—that during all that time no city shall borrow money; the friars' lands shall not be returned; no railroad shall be built; no street lighted; no electric roads put in; that we should hold the islands back from all progress, when we have there a commission perfectly suited to deal with all those matters.

What is that Commission, Mr. President? The head of it is Judge Taft, known throughout the United States. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] on Saturday last were at some pains to try to prove that Judge Taft was lacking in candor. I think, Mr. President, that there is no one who knows Judge Taft who is not perfectly familiar with the fact that a more honorable, candid, fair-minded man does not live. I believe that wherever he is known the suggestion that he is evasive or uncandid will be an opinion enjoyed in solitude by the Senators who hold it. He had an assured judicial career, or, if he preferred, he could have gone back to the bar and commanded a great income. He gave up all those prospects, went out into the East as disinterestedly and from as pure motives as ever caused any man to undertake a great work. He has devoted to it his time, his health, and strength. He has come back here with impaired health, and yet he is going to return to those islands because he is devoted to the interests of their people. He regards himself as their guardian and their trustee. No man ever acted from better motives; no man ever labored more disinterestedly than he has done or with greater industry and intelligence.

Judge Taft is a Northern man and a Republican. The acting governor, Luke E. Wright, is a Southern man, an ex-Confederate, and a Democrat. All that I have said of Judge Taft, I believe, from everything I have ever heard, I can also say of Governor Wright. Those are the two men at the head of the Commission to whom we propose to give this great trust in the years to intervene between this time and the day when we can establish a general representative government in the Philippines. It is not a mere name—the Philippine Commission—it is just those two American gentlemen whom I have named and their associates—associates in every way worthy to be with them. Are they not honorable men? Do they not stand high in their community? Is there one who knows them who would not be glad to make them trustees for his wife or his child? Are they not eminently men "secundis temporibus dubiisque recti?" They stand high before the people of this country; there is not one of them we would not trust with our own affairs; and is it to be supposed that we can not trust them with this great public duty? If we can not trust them, there is no man in the length and breadth of the United States fit to be trusted, and I have not yet reached the point when I am ready to admit that there are not Americans fit to be trusted with the interests of other people in the sure faith that they will administer them with an eye single to the benefit of their wards and the honor of their country. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. President, I have stated the provisions of the bill. I have tried to speak in regard to some of the points of attack upon it; but the real attack which has gone on in this Chamber for the last ten days has not been upon the bill. So far as the civil government goes, with anyone who has read the testimony and knows the facts and has considered the bill the attack upon it has broken down. The real attack here has been directed against the Army of the United States by those who are delaying this bill, which seeks to replace military with civil government.

Why this attack upon the Army? Because, it is said, it has been guilty of cruelty and torture to natives of the Philippine Islands. Ah, yes, Mr. President, perhaps so; but it has been guilty of a greater crime than that. It has been guilty of a crime not yet brought against it upon this floor, but which rankles deeper than all the tortures and all the cruelties laid to its charge—it has been guilty of the crime of success. It has been a victorious Army; it has put down the insurrection, and it meets now, as it met after Appomattox, abuse and attack. The days have dropped into history when Grant, too, was called a "butcher," but they are not forgotten. This charge is brought now against the Army of the United States because they have been victorious, because they have crushed the insurrection and disappointed those who sympathize with the insurgents. That is one reason for the assault upon our soldiers, and that is a sin for which in some quarters no forgiveness is possible.

But I am not going to deal with the crime of victory. I am going to deal with the cruelty and the torture of the natives with which the Army has been charged. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] said that he thought no exaggeration was possible. I think he wronged himself. The charges can be for they have been greatly exaggerated. Why, Mr. President, the American Army has been held up here as guilty of greater atrocities than all history can show. The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] said:

> My God, Senators, will anyone rise and tell me when and where among the most barbaric peoples you ever read such an act of brutality as that? When was anything like that disclosed elsewhere upon the face of the earth?

Mr. President, I can not suppose that the Senator, with his wide reading, has forgotten such a notorious fact as the Neronian persecution of the Christians, when they were tied to pillars and burned to give light in the streets of Rome. I have heard of nothing of that sort in the Philippines. Is it not true, and does not history show, to take another familiar example, how the Tartar hordes swept over Russia; that they impaled the people in the villages, and that those they did not impale they tied to stakes with their hands above their heads and dipped them in tar and lighted them and left them there to burn, so that affrighted Europe called them Tartar candles? I have heard of nothing of that sort from the Philippine Islands, and yet we are told that the atrocities there are worse than anything that even the most barbaric nations in history can show.

Indeed, Mr. President, the wide knowledge of the Senator from Utah was exhausted in finding comparisons to portray the infamy of the American Army. Not only have the conventional torturers of history, Philip II, Alva, and Torquemada, flitted across the debate, but Quintus Cicero, the nephew of the great orator, has been brought in here, and has had his piteous story told. We have been informed also that Julius Cæsar in all his campaigns never was guilty of such cruelties as the American Army has been guilty of in the Philippine Islands. I am afraid for the moment the Senator's classical learning betrayed him. He has forgotten that it was Julius Cæsar, in truth, the most merciful as he was the greatest Roman, who, nevertheless, in his early days, when he captured pirates in the Mediterranean, crucified them at Pergamus, and so gave them over to one of the most cruel and agonizing forms of death that men have ever known.

But not content with all this, Mr. President, not content with what history furnished, the Senator from Utah in his zeal for comparisons made some contributions to history himself.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the Senator has alluded to an instance in my speech where I asked if there had been anything in history comparable to the particular matter to which I was then referring, and that reference was to the order of General Bell, which I quoted.

Mr. LODGE. I have a right to proceed, Mr. President.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator will permit me——

Mr. LODGE. I should like to go on with my speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield.

Mr. LODGE. I am not misquoting the Senator. I am reading his own words.

The Senator, I said, not content with exhausting history, made some contributions to it himself. He said:

> While in that situation the interpreter, doubtless compelled to perform this infamous service, stooped over him and said, "Confess, confess." It makes us think of Copernicus when he was subjected to the torture and thrown down. They wanted him to announce that the world did not revolve upon its axis, and was promised if he would say so that they would let him go, or else they would take his life, and, he refusing to say so, they took his life.

Mr. President, the great astronomer and mathematician Copernicus died at the age of 70, in his bed, a canon of the church, in the bosom of the church, and his great work about the revolution of the celestial orbs was only published to the world as he lay dying. He was never tortured. It is possible——

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. It is possible, Mr. President, that the Senator was thinking of Galileo, but Galileo recanted, and lived ten years longer. [Laughter.] So that, as the story applies neither to Copernicus nor Galileo, it must be some other tortured astronomer the Senator has in mind. [Laughter.] Ah, Mr. President, if the Senator had only told the right story of the right man, if he had only described Galileo reciting his recantation and then as he arose from his knees muttering under his breath the famous words which have come down to posterity the Senator might have taken that golden opportunity to teach the party to which he belongs the lesson, which they seem to be as slow in learning as the Roman curia in the sixteenth century, "that the world moves." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, to pass from these fascinating historical studies to the facts of to-day. The American Army is accused of atrocities in the Philippine Islands. Some cases, far too many, have been proved of cruelties to native prisoners and to hostile natives, and more, I fear, will be proved. To me it is a source of bitter, bitter regret that any American, whether soldier abroad or civilian at home, should ever have tortured anyone, or that any order should ever have been issued by an American general which, on its face, and without knowledge of the conditions, seems, as I said the other day in the Senate, revolting. But we as Senators, representatives of great States of this great Union, are not here to indulge in frothy denunciation, but to get at the truth, to punish the guilty when they are proved guilty, to mete out judgment upon proved offenses, and thereby in strict justice to clear our honor and good name and keep the fame of our Army without spot or blemish.

There has been an ingenious effort made here from time to time to separate soldiers from officers. Soldiers are more numerous than officers. They have more votes. They have larger connections, more friends who vote, because there are a hundred thousand of them and only a few officers, comparatively. But, Mr. President, this separation can not be made.

There was brought before our committee, on the demand of a philanthropist—one of the kind evidently who never feels that his philanthropy is well exercised unless it involves in its exercise some shame to his country and some discredit and disgrace to his fellow-citizens—there was brought before us a young officer of the Thirty-fifth Regiment, named Grover Flint. He testified that at Candaba, in the island of Luzon, Macabebe scouts tortured a number of Filpinos—20 or more—with the water cure in order to make them reveal the places where their arms were concealed. He said that in the morning of the day after the town was taken, while this was going on, American soldiers volunteered to go down to the well where it was being done; that there were no orders given; that he said to the major commanding—Major Geary—"I think I had better go down there and see whether excesses are being committed," and that he went down there. He was asked if he interfered. He said that he did in two or three cases where he thought excesses were being committed. I asked him, as was my duty—it was a painful question to ask and I disliked to put it—as to other cases where he did not interfere, "Did you approve at the time what was being done or did you not?" He answered that question with a fearless truth, painful as it was to him to do it, that he did approve it at the time; and I honored him for his brave, true answer.

Mr. President, there were our own soldiers and the young officer all engaged together. You can not part officers from men. Mr. Flint himself comes of a family eminent for three generations in the practice of one of the noblest of professions. He is a graduate of Harvard College; he is an honorable man; he is a brave soldier; he has been wounded in battle—battle for the Republic. There must be some reason for these things, and presently I shall try to state it.

Let me give another example to show that you can not separate the soldiers from the officers. Only last night I heard from a young officer who commanded a company that at the first skirmish in which they were engaged they drove back the insurgents and took the town. The insurgents in retreating carried off three of our men, carried them to a neighboring town, stripped them naked, and said that if they would cry, "Long live the Filipino republic!" they might run away into the bush as they were. One man refused, and stood up there naked, in the midst of that hostile crowd, and cried, "Long live America!" They tied him to a tree, and the women and children stoned him to death. The other two, who lost heart and cried, "Long live the Filipino republic!" were cut to death with bolos; and the young officer said when they next went into battle the men cried out as they charged the enemy, "Remember Parnay!" Do you wonder that they did? I do not. I am not here to excuse torture or cruelty to any man, but I can not forget that there is, and ought to be, human nature in an American soldier under such circumstances as those.

The effort has been continued to separate the officers from the commander. Listen to what the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] said about General Chaffee:

> Mr. President, I do not believe that Bell himself ever conceived this iniquity, this outline of policy. Perhaps it may have been Chaffee, who received his education in savagery—> and in cruelty and in barbarity over in China, where we are informed the allied forces took little children and brained them upon posts, threw them into rivers, and slaughtered and persecuted without mercy and without limit helpless women. After he had received that training he superseded the more humane officer, General MacArthur. Then it was that this diabolical programme seems to have been adopted and carried out in all its hideousness and rigor.

Mark the words: "Who received his education in savagery"—

Against those cruel words I set the record of General Chaffee. I will print it in the RECORD, with my speech, just the dry official phrases, through which shines the story of a brave life given to the service of the country.

WM. H. CARTER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
January 29, 1902.

Thus it appears that he entered the Army as a private; that he rose to be a sergeant and a first sergeant in the Sixth United States Cavalry, serving from the 22d of July, 1861, to the 12th of May, 1863; that he won his first commission in battle for gallantry on the field; that he got his promotion in the same way; that the first brevet came for services at Gettysburg, and the second for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Dinwiddie Court-House, Va.; that he served with his regiment until wounded in the Gettysburg campaign at Fairfield, in Pennsylvania; that he was wounded again at the battle of Brandy Station.

I will not go into the details. After the war he passed into the Regular Army. He gave the best twenty-five years of his life to service on the plains as a captain, with slight hope of promotion, serving with small pay in heat, in cold, at remote frontier posts, helping to guard those Western communities against the shock of Indian warfare. He was doing this when the Senator from Utah was making those legal and historical studies and cultivating those gifts which have enabled him to delight a listening Senate. Ah, Mr. President, there are some things to be said for the fighting man who gave his life in silence to that thankless work!

From there Chaffee went into the war in Cuba, and then the long delayed promotions came to him. Let me read you one word of description as to Chaffee in the Cuban campaign, not by an American witness, but by the British military attaché, Colonel Lee, who was down there:

The strong post—

That is El Caney—

The strong post had been carefully reconnoitered by Brigadier-General Chaffee in person on June 28 and 29, and he had submitted a plan of attack which was afterwards carried out almost to the letter.

I feel it only just at this point to mention that, however novel the absence of reconnoissance in other directions, nothing could have been more enterprising or systematic than General Chaffee's exploration of his own theater of operations. I had the pleasure of accompanying him on more than one occasion, and derived much profit from a study of his methods.

Leaving his staff behind, he would push far to the front, and, finally dismounting, slip through the brush with the rapidity and noiselessness of an Indian. My efforts to follow him were like the progress of a band wagon in comparison, but I gradually acquired a fairy-like tread and a stumbling facility in sign language, which enabled me to follow the General without too loudly advertising our presence to the Spaniards. On one occasion we approached so close to the Spanish pickets that we could hear the men talking over their suppers, and until I began to speculate on the probable efficacy of the British passport, that was my sole defensive weapon. In this silent Indian fashion General Chaffee explored the entire district, and was the only man in the Army to whom the network of bridle paths around El Caney was in any sense familiar.

Again, I will read a word about him in battle:

Wishing to see how they were faring, I crawled through the hedge into the field beyond, and incidentally into such a hot corner that I readily complied with General Chaffee's abrupt injunction, "Get down on your stomach, sir." Indeed, I was distinctly grateful for his advice, but could not fail to notice that he was regardless of it himself. Wherever the fire was thickest he strolled about unconcernedly, a half-smoked cigar between his teeth and an expression of exceeding grimness on his face. The situation was a trying one for the nerves of the oldest soldier, and some of the younger hands fell back from the firing line and crept toward the road. In a moment the General pounced upon them, inquiring their destination in low, unhoneyed accents, and then taking them persuasively by the elbow led them back to the extreme front, and, having deposited them in the firing line, stood over them while he distributed a few last words of pungent and sulphurous advice. Throughout the day he set the most inspiring example to his men, and that he escaped unhurt was a miracle. One bullet clipped a breast button off his coat, another passed under his shoulder strap, but neither touched him, and there must be some truth in the old adage that fortune favors the brave.

Such, Mr. President, is the description of an eyewitness of his conduct at El Caney. From there he went to China. The entire world bore witness to the conduct of the American troops in that campaign. No one, not the most jealous or the most envious among the foreigners, ever charged that the American troops were guilty of any of the cruelties or atrocities with which that campaign may have been smirched. It has been left to have this imputation upon American soldiers made for the first time in the American Senate.

Mr. President, those troops went there to save the legations, and when the allied commanders were debating as to whether they should wait a month before starting—wait until the Germans arrived—it was Chaffee who stood up in the meeting after they had been talking and talking and said, "Gentlemen, whatever you may do, I march at once," and the Japanese general rose and said he trusted that the American general would permit him to go with him. Then they all went, and history tells the rest. Here is what General Chaffee himself says in his report for the year ending June 30, 1901:

The unusual conditions which have surrounded the command, while offering many temptations and inducements to wrongdoing, can not be permitted to excuse soldiers of our Army who, as citizens and soldiers, have been accorded instruction, through example in communities where living, that respect for law, protection of personal and public property, and the maintenance of order are special requirements imposed upon all United States soldiers, never to be broken under any circumstances. (Report of operations in China from November 30, 1900, to May 19, 1901, by Maj. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, U. S. A., from Report of the Lieutenant-General Commanding the Army for year ending June 30, 1901. Part 4, p. 505.)

That is the order he issued to his men. That is the policy he pursued throughout the Chinese campaign. It was he who interfered, and attracted the attention of Europe by his interference, to prevent the loot of the great Chinese observatory. Mr. President, after those brilliant services in China they are referred to here only that we may be told that it was there that our general received his education in savagery.

Mr. President, not content with the attack upon General Chaffee, the effort has been made by implication to carry it still further. The source of military command in this country is the White House. All the world knows what was the attitude of President McKinley. A soldier himself, the most humane and generous of men, we know that his one word from the beginning to the end was to be merciful and kind, to uphold the authority of the United States, to carry on the war firmly and vigorously, because that was most merciful and most humane, but to show the greatest kindness and consideration to the people of the islands. From that policy his successor has not deviated. No orders can be found issuing from the White House of which any American may not be proud. It is only the other day that the order went out from there to investigate and probe to the bottom, and that whoever had done wrong, to bring him to speedy and prompt justice.

Then, passing from the Presidents, the effort has been made to lay the blame upon the Secretary of War. Mr. President, as he has been attacked I desire here in my place to say one word in regard to him. In all the long list of able men of all parties who have held the great post of Secretary of War I think there has been no abler, no more public-spirited man than the one who now holds it. He took it at a time of great trial—with difficulties in China, with difficulties in Cuba, with difficulties in the Philippines, and he has borne that burden with strength, with honesty, with courage. He has wrought for improvements in the Army, many of which have been attained, which will stand in our history as great advances in the improvement of our military organization. He set himself to cure defects which the Spanish war disclosed and his labors in great part have been crowned with success. He is a man of high ability, of irreproachable honor, and of quite as great humanity as any who rail at him. He has been especially attacked in regard to the Major Gardener report and charged with deliberate suppression, because he did exactly what the Senate is doing to-day—leave it to the board there, where the witnesses and the accused are, to make the first inquiry. When those charges, sweeping, nameless, without date or specification, were laid before him he felt that it was his duty not only to probe the matter to the bottom, but also to see that the officers of the Army committed to his charge had fair play and exact justice; that the accuser and his witnesses should be in the same place where the accused and their witnesses were gathered. It was the part of an honorable and a loyal man, true to the service in which he was engaged and of which he was the head. He has ordered investigation of every case of wrongdoing which has been brought to him. More than 350 courts-martial have been held, for great offenses and small, against the natives. There has been no desire to screen a guilty man from punishment. Wherever a reasonable charge has been brought, the man has been ordered before a court-martial and tried. There have been many, many convictions and much severe punishment. That is all any Secretary can possibly do. He has done his entire duty. If gentlemen think that these instances of cruelty in the Philippines are to us, as they are, a source of bitter and deep regret, can they for one moment suppose that to a man like the Secretary of War, with his heart bound up in the fame and well-being of the American Army, they are not an even deeper sorrow? His object is to elevate the American Army, not to pull it down. But he also means, and he will always mean, to have justice, at least, for all the men and officers committed to his charge, and he will not knowingly condemn them unheard and untried.

Mr. President, these attacks, as I have said, strike officers and men alike. They fall upon the entire organization. Senators who have listened, as I have listened, to the speeches which have been made upon the other side will realize the truth of what I say. Senators who listened to or who have read the course of the questioning pursued with witnesses before the Philippine Committee will realize still more the truth of what I say when I assert that these attacks are leveled at the entire American Army, from the commander to the private. I would not do anyone an injustice, but let me read as an example a single question that was asked on Saturday of a witness before the committee by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]:

By Senator CULBERSON:

Q. You have testified, I believe, that five or six of these men were killed in attempting to escape?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not their effort to escape was encouraged by the American officers and soldiers?

A. I do not know, sir.

Q. What I wanted to find out was whether it was a bona fide effort on their part to escape or whether they were ever encouraged to make the effort for the purpose of affording an opportunity to shoot them. How was that?

A. All that I know is that it was reported that they were killed while trying to escape.

Mr. President, that seems to me a terrible imputation upon American officers and soldiers. What is proved?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have just come into the Chamber, and I heard the last portion of the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts.

I desire to say that before propounding that question to the witness I spoke to one of my associates beside me on the committee, and said that I intended to ask the question so that the real truth might be known and that there should be left nothing undone, so far as the committee was concerned, to establish clearly the fact that there had been no connivance upon the part of American troops with reference to that attempted escape.

Mr. LODGE. If the question was asked in order to vindicate and defend the honor of American officers and soldiers, it certainly meets with my cordial approbation; but as it reads it seems to me open to misconstruction.

Now, what is proved? No case of cruelty has been proved before our committee less than a year old, some eighteen months old, and some two years. All the witnesses without exception have testified to the kindness of our troops toward the peaceful Filipino natives. They all have testified to the good care and treatment of the wounded in our own hospitals by our own doctors and nurses. No case of cruelty has been proved that did not occur while guerrilla warfare existed and where war was flagrant.

Towns, it is true, have been burned, and before this towns have been burned in war. Towns were burned where insurgents were sheltered, or where it was believed they had help, or where attacks were made upon our troops after occupancy. It was a military necessity. Towns have been burned before in war. They were burned in our civil war by troops on both sides, and the towns then burned were not composed of nipa huts.

Mr. President, there was the case of young Meiggs, who was shot by bushwhackers in the Shenandoah Valley. General Sheridan sent his staff officers around to the neighboring houses, from one of which this boy had been killed, and gave orders to the inhabitants to leave, and then he burned them to the ground. Let me go outside of our own record. I read from a book entitled "With an Ambulance During the Franco-German War" an account of the burning of Bazeilles.

The French inhabitants had fired upon the Bavarians; they had set their bedding and furniture alight and thrown them on the heads of the Germans, who were packed close in the streets, and after the first repulse of the invaders (Germans), several wounded Prussians had been barbarously butchered; some even had had their throats cut with razors.

Upon retaking the village, when the Germans discovered what had been done, they retaliated by shooting down and bayoneting all before them; nor in some instances did the women and children escape this cruel fate. So exasperated, indeed, were the Germans that not a life did they spare nor a house did they leave intact in that miserable town.

From the same book, chapter 12, page 136:

On coming to Mantes we put up for the night at the Hotel de France. Much consternation had been caused the day before by five Uhlans coming into the market place with a train of wagons and carrying off all the corn and fodder they wanted. Then the Uhlans proceeded to set the station house on fire, as also to saw down the telegraph posts. "What pluck these five men must have had!" will be the reader's exclamation. But the feat was not so daring. Everyone knew that if the inhabitants interfered with these Uhlans the place would be visited the day after and reduced to ashes.

So the Germans treated guerrilla warfare; and the Germans are a kindly people, highly civilized, and were carrying on war against another civilized people under the rules of war recognized by all nations. The burning of towns which shelter guerrillas in a guerrilla warfare is a common incident of war. War is horrible, but it is by such methods that guerrilla warfare is put down and stopped. Now, take the evidence as to a single town, the town of Igbaras. It appears from the testimony of witnesses that the people were warned. The witnesses were asked repeatedly whether women or children were burned in the fire, but they knew of none; and that, I suppose, is a fair instance of the towns which have been burned in the course of the war.

That reminds me of women and children. They have been slaughtered by myriads, in the speeches made on the other side, but, so far as I am aware, there has not been a case proved of the intentional killing of a woman or child by an American soldier or officer in the Philippines. Now, what remains? A certain number of proved cases of water cure, of menaces of shooting, unless information was given up; of rough and cruel treatment applied to secure information. That such cases have occurred in different parts of the islands is incontestible, and we all deeply regret it. We all wish to see justice done upon those who are guilty. We do not like to think of any American soldier or officer torturing a prisoner or a helpless man. But as soon as it was known that this had been done every effort was made to stop it. Most stringent orders went out from Washington not only to stop all such practices where they existed, but to bring to punishment those who were guilty of them. They appear to have stopped, but, as I have said, there has not yet been a case shown that is not at least a year old. What concerns us is to know——

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator permit me just a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I will say to the Senator that it is practically impossible, under the rules of the committee, to prove anything that is going on there now. We can only prove the incidents that have occurred by soldiers who have returned from the Philippine Islands. We can not bring anybody from there at this time to prove what is being done now.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall let my statement stand, for it states the evidence as, I believe, correctly. What concerns us, and it concerns us very deeply, is to know why these things ever happened at all at any time, near or remote. Whatever has been done has been done by the American Army. What is the American Army? One would suppose from what has been said here in debate that it was an army of aliens and mercenaries; that we had out there in the Philippine Islands some strange foreign force which we had let loose upon that helpless people.

Why, Mr. President, those soldiers are our own. They are our flesh and blood, bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh. They are volunteers, all of them. There is no conscription in this country. The men in the Regular Army are in it as the result of volunteer enlistment. Thirty-five thousand of the men out there were United States volunteers. They are men drawn from our American communities, from all ranks and conditions of life—graduates of West Point, graduates of Harvard and of Yale, young men who were in the Spanish war and went from thence to the Philippines, graduates of our high schools and our common schools. Amid that great body of men there were no doubt some black sheep. You can not get 100,000 men, young, adventurous, drawn in hither and thither, and have them all good and perfect. But they represent well and they represent fairly the American community which gave them birth. They are not saints; no, and they are not devils, either. They are American soldiers.

What is it which has led them to commit these atrocities which we all so much regret and over which we sorrow? That, Mr. President, is what I want now to explain. I think I know why these things have happened. I think they have grown out of the conditions of warfare, of the war that was waged by the Filipinos themselves, a semicivilized people, with all the tendencies and characteristics of Asiatics, with the Asiatic indifference to life, with the Asiatic treachery and the Asiatic cruelty, all tinctured and increased by three hundred years of subjection to Spain.

Half the story has been told on this floor. I want to tell the other half and I invite attention to it. It may be dry in places, but it deserves attention, for the honor of the American name is concerned in knowing why these things have happened as they have happened.

Let me take the first case, which has been so much talked about—the case of the presidente to whom was given the water cure at Igbaras. He was the presidente of the village. He pretended that he was our friend; that he was favorable to us. He was really a captain of the insurgents and his police force were men belonging to the insurgent ranks. He was living within our lines. He did not wear his uniform. He came within the technical definition of a spy. He could have been taken out and shot after a drumhead court-martial with the same justice that André was hanged. Our men discovered him and believed that he was treacherous. They administered the water cure to him and to two or three of the policemen in order to get information as to where the insurgents had gone. It was administered to him twice. It was not administered in retaliation; it was not administered as a punishment. It was administered to get information, and when they got the information he mounted his horse and rode with them across the mountains to show them where the insurgents had gone, and they then took him to prison at Iloilo.

Now, those are the facts, told without any reduction. Igbaras is situated a little north of Iloilo. In its neighborhood is the town of Dumangas. I ask attention to these towns and distances. In its neighborhood is Dumangas, lying off to the eastward. Dumangas is 40 miles distant. To the south and east Leganes and Mina and Barota, respectively, 24, 28, and 32 miles. Up to the northeast is Calinog, 28 miles; Dingle, 24 miles; Pototan, 24 miles, and Leon, 9 miles. Those are the towns and the distances I have mentioned. The farthest is only as distant as Baltimore is from Washington. They are a part of the towns of the province of Iloilo, not far from the capital. I now read from an official report:

At Dumangas the body of Corporal Donehy, of Company D, was dug up, burned, and mutilated. Colonel Dickman says details can be furnished of the butcheries at Leganes and Mina and of the burial alive near Barotac Nuevo. There has been no demand from the opposition, so eager for light, for those details. At Calinog Privates Dugan, Hayes, and Tracy, of Company F, were murdered by the town authorities. Private Nolan, at Dingle, was tied up while in a stupor; the insurgents were sent for and cut his throat with a sangut. Lieut. Max Wagner was assassinated on the road to Pototan. I happened to know that young officer; he came from my State. I knew him first as a Signal Service sergeant at Nantucket in charge of the Government cable. He went into the Spanish war. He served well in Porto Rico. He then got a commission as lieutenant and went out to the Philippines. He was murdered on the road by Filipinos dressed in American uniform. I have heard from the other side no word of sympathy for him. I feel sympathy for him because I knew him. His widow and three little children are in the town of Nantucket, and there is a bill on your Calendar to give her a pension.

Private O'Hearn was captured by apparently friendly people near Leon, was tied to a tree, burned for four hours with a slow fire, and finally slashed up. We had a witness who told about the water cure as administered at Leon. It was administered to the men who had seized O'Hearn, burned him for four hours, and slashed him up with bolos. They confessed to it under the water cure. Information was brought by another native who had previously confessed. It was not denied afterwards. His bones are buried out there. He did not get on a horse that afternoon and ride away. It is only Private O'Hearn; that is all. It is an American soldier; that is all. I have not heard of any sympathy from the opposition or from philanthropists for him. I have not heard that atrocity denounced in this debate. And yet there it is, and those are the cases occurring around that town of Igbaras alone.

I read from another official report. On January 10 five bodies of native scouts, who, with one soldier of the Fifth Infantry, were taken prisoners in a barrio off Batac January 1, were found east of Batac. The heads, legs, and arms had been cut off and the bodies otherwise mutilated. One white soldier named Lyons, Company K, Fifth Infantry, after having been taken prisoner, was cut with bolos and was left for dead on the field. He revived, and was able to crawl to a shack when night came on. Information was given to a local leader, and he was again taken prisoner and murdered.

I now read from some of the court reports cases where men were captured, regularly tried, and these cases proved by witnesses.

The accused [Marciliano Vergara] and his semisoldiers wore no uniform, continued in their peaceful occupations, and came together only upon special call. In this manner it is evident that they had no special difficulty in concealing their identification as banded men; but it is plain from the evidence the accused found his prisoners a great embarrassment, as the near presence of the American forces threatened to make it impracticable for him to successfully conceal them and at the same time keep concealed his own status of guerrilla. Hence his resolution to murder his prisoners Five of his followers agree in their testimony that, in obedience to the orders of the accused, they came together at an appointed place and, with bolos in their hands, hacked to death these two men, the accused standing by to witness the execution of his orders. Covering the dead bodies with grass, the band then dispersed, each man going his own way.

Another case:

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Damascio Biating, native, about August 17, 1900, with one or more companions, assassinated with daggers Private T. Burgey, Company C, Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Volunteers, while the latter was acting as a guard of prisoners hauling water for the garrison stationed at Baratoc Neuvo, Panay. It also appears that the accused participated in a similar assassination of a native, Gervacio Besas, August 29, 1900.

To the first charge accused pleaded guilty, and the evidence fully sustains the charge, and also the second charge.

Accused claims to have been a regular insurgent soldier, operating against United States troops, of which Private Burgey was one, and to have been acting under the orders of his superiors. Opposed to this plea is the fact that he was within the American lines uniformed and disguised as a pacifico.

I read only here and there.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Juan Biron, an alleged lieutenant of the insurgent army, captured at Bascaran, Albay, one Felix Losedo, a scout in the employ of the United States, bound him to a tree and then with a razor cut off an ear and slashed his eyes with the intent to blind him, with the result that the sight of one was totally destroyed and that of the other permanently impaired.

Again:

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Julian Confesor, native, while holding the respective offices of presidente and vice-presidente of the pueblo of Cabatuan, during a portion of which time he was under oath of allegiance to the Government, systematically exerted his individual energies and official functions to the aid and assistance of the insurgents by supplying them with information, money, and needed supplies. General orders were issued by him to the police to abstract arms from the American soldiers where opportunity presented itself; to kill American soldiers where they could be individually isolated from their companions; and specifically it is shown that he caused two of the policemen of his pueblo to assassinate Private George O. Hill, Eighteenth United States Infantry, and then sent the rifle of the dead soldier to the insurgents.

Another case:

Rosario Espiritu, a Filipino and resident of Bacoor, Island of Luzon, P. I., did, on or about the 15th day of November, 1899, then, as now, a time of insurrection, at Bacoor, Island of Luzon, P. I., then, as now, a place under the United States military occupation and Government, feloniously, willfully, and with malice aforethought kill and murder one Private George A. Wagner, Company F, Fourteenth United States Infantry, then and there present and in the discharge of his duty, by shooting him, the said Wagner, in the abdomen with a revolver, and by stabbing him, the said Wagner, with a sharp instrument commonly called a bolo.

These are all where they were within our lines. I could multiply them. I have pages of them here which I will print as an appendix. Here is another:

At or near the rancheria of Sabed, Union, Luzon, during the month of March, 1900, this accused ordered a squad of his command to kill these prisoners with bayonets at a preconcerted signal. His escort was so disposed in marching as to favor this purpose, and on reaching an isolated part of the road a corporal stepped in front of the victims, took off his hat, which was the signal agreed upon, whereupon the soldiers behind, with fixed bayonets, sprang forward and ran them through from the back. Private Husketh, not dying immediately, was shot with a rifle by order of and in presence of the accused.

Again:

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Dionicio de la Cruz and Pio de Castro, about May 11, 1901, at barrio Gatboca, Calumpit, seized, bound, and conveyed to the fields one Juan Salvador, a native sailor of the U. S. gunboat Charleston. There, while the victim was held by De la Cruz, he was stabbed repeatedly in the stomach and abdomen by De Castro, who literally obeyed De la Cruz's order to "cut out the intestines of deceased."

And another:

In the foregoing case of Clemente de la Cruz it appears from the evidence that the accused was a sergeant in the insurgent forces and was given charge of a detachment of six men, with orders to conduct to a safe distance from the public highway five American prisoners, taken captive by a successful ambuscade two or three days previously, and to kill said prisoners with daggers or bolos. In obedience to his orders, willingly and unhesitatingly undertaken, the accused bound the arms of his appointed victims behind their backs, and, taking them to a distance of about 4½ miles from camp into a marsh known as the Candaba swamp, then and there caused his men to assail them with their bolos until they were dead.

Let me read one more. We shudder, and naturally, at the order which is said to have been given, and quoted in the Waller trial, by General Smith. I take from the press dispatches these brief extracts of the evidence at the court-martial:

Corporal Pritchard, of the Ninth Infantry, who took part in the fight at Gandara, testified that he saw boys of 12 years of age fighting and slashing with bolos.

Sergeant Bonicastle, of the Ninth Infantry, an Apache, testified regarding Capt. P. K. Schoeffel's fight in Dapdap Province, Samar, against Dios's fanatics. He saw a soldier attacked by two boys under 15, one armed with a bolo and the other with a dagger.

Private Nicklo, of the Ninth Infantry, explained the dangers and difficulties of service in the island of Samar.

Private Nanjo, of the Tenth Cavalry, told how Americanistas (natives friendly to the Americans) were butchered there in cold blood.

Sergeant Brumly, of the Ninth Infantry, a survivor of the Balangiga massacre, described that disaster, including the mutilation of the American dead by the Samar natives.

Here is an account which I cut from Collier's Weekly, April 26, report by Stephen Bonsal, whose previous letters the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and others have printed in the RECORD:

One more incident of the many that came under my observation and reconciled me to the character of the war we are waging in Samar. A little midshipman just out from Annapolis was patrolling the strait in a yawl from the flagship New York. He was after the smugglers who bring arms to the insurgents from Leyte. The great gale had blown the yawl out into the Pacific, and when it subsided little Noah and his six men were exhausted. Their water had given out, and they tried to make Basay, Admiral Rogers having ordered them not to land except at an armed post. The wind died away while Basay was still 2 miles off.

Two of his men were delirious with thirst, and there was the little village of Nipa Nipa only a few hundred yards away flying the white flag of peace and friendship. Noah, as he floated near the shore, lifted up his empty water jar, and the kindly people on the beach understood. They lifted up water jars overflowing with the precious fluid and pointed at the white flag to reassure him. He pushed his boat into the surf, and, telling his men to wait in the boat, advanced some 50 yards up the beach, where the good samaritans were awaiting him with their water jars. As he drank his first deep draft two of the natives, one a woman, crept behind him and buried their knives in his back.

That little midshipman comes from Chattanooga, Tenn., I believe, and he lies buried there in the Philippines, the victim of as foul a murder as ever was done. We do not whine as a people over our men who die in battle with their face to the foe. Our grief is proud, and we lift them up and bury them with the silent sorrow of a nation. But that boy was murdered, and if justice is sought I want it on his murderers as well as on American soldiers. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend for one moment. The Chair desires to say to the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate no marks of approval or disapproval are permitted, and if repeated it will be necessary to have the galleries cleared.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, one more case and I have done. The man was an American sailor, and I ask the attention of the Senate to this case:

With respect to the first specification, it is made plain by the testimony that after the fight had by Lieutenant Gilmore, of the Navy, near Baler, four American sailors lay on the bank of the Sabali River, and that the accused and a detachment of insurgent soldiers were detailed as a burial party. This party, accompanied by one Quicoy, a staff officer of the insurgent chief who commanded the district wherein Baler is situated and the forces serving therein, proceeded to where the Americans lay and found two dead and two wounded. Four unarmed natives had been compelled to go along to act as gravediggers, and these were put to work preparing a grave sufficiently large to hold four bodies. The grave being completed, the two dead sailors were placed in it, and the party then waited for the wounded to die.

One of the latter was shot through the thigh; the other was shot in the chest as well as in the leg, and was near the point of death. The wounded men asked for water and it was given them from the river; but beyond this no relief or assistance appears to have been given. When the third man died he was placed beside the other two in the grave and the party again waited for the fourth man to die. His wound, however, was of a kind not necessarily fatal and death was slow in coming, so that the party became impatient. The gravediggers had begun about 9 a. m. and it was now past noon. The dying man asked for water, and was able to drink when it was given to him. Shortly afterwards he was placed in the grave beside his three comrades, and the native who was standing in the hole began covering him slowly from the feet, so as to give him time to die. In this way the body was covered to the neck, and then the gravedigger called out, "What about this man; he is alive yet;" to which the accused replied, "Go on burying him," and it was done.

Ah, Mr. President, I think when we read cases like that, and I have read only a very few out of many, we can understand at least why the incidents that we all so deplore have arisen.

But, Mr. President, I have read thus far only what has been done to American soldiers and sailors. I have here, and I am going to print as an appendix, the proved cases in regard to friendly natives. I shall confine myself in speaking of the natives to some statistics. I will not weary the Senate by reading case after case. I will print them, with the permission of the Senate, as an appendix to my remarks. They well deserve reading and consideration, but they would consume more time than I can give them now.

The actual number of natives returned by the officers in the different districts who have been assassinated for sympathizing with Americans is 350. The number of natives who have been assaulted and mutilated for sympathizing with Americans is 442. The number of municipal officers friendly to Americans who have been assassinated is 67, and the number of municipal officers who have been assaulted and mutilated is 40.

We are told, Mr. President, that we have no friends among the Filipinos. Apparently the insurgents thought we had enough friends to make up this awful roll of assassination, and they were assassinated for being our friends, for being pacific natives, friendly to the Americans. Why, Mr. President, I have heard torrents of sympathy poured out for the insurgents fighting against the flag and the authority of the United States, and not one word of sympathy for the Filipinos, men of the same race, who are friendly to us, and ask only to live in peace beneath our flag. Has it come to this, that it is a crime to be friendly to America, and that the men who are cut down and mutilated and die because they are our friends are to have no sympathy? No great divine has yet thundered in his pulpit in behalf of those men on that list whose lives were as dear to them as were the lives of those Filipinos who were aiding the insurgents. They were our friends, and there are more of them there. I say that, whatever else may be true or false, if we go out of those islands and leave those friendly Filipinos to a fate like that, we are unworthy of the name of a great nation, and it will be a deeper infamy than any cruelty that has ever been proved. Those people trusted to us, they have been murdered for us, and those who survive and live under our protection are still entitled to our protection. I think that when we are mourning over the hostile Filipinos, we may turn aside for a moment and shed a tear for those who gave up their lives because they were our friends.

Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I intended. I do not stand up here to defend in the remotest way any cruelties practiced upon helpless prisoners. I regret them, as I have said over and over again, as bitterly as anyone can; but, as I have listened to this debate, I confess I have felt shocked beyond measure at the attacks made upon the American Army. It is not a Republican army; it is not a Democratic army; it is the Army of the United States. Their honor is our honor. If they have done wrong, let us punish them; do not let us condone a single proved offense; do not let a single man proved guilty escape; but let us, oh, let us be just, at least, to our own; let us remember when we judge, we living here in sheltered homes, far from the sound and the trials of war—let us remember not only their sufferings, but their temptations, their provocations, their trials. When we condemn Waller for shooting treacherous guides, who lured 10 of his men to death by starvation, when we think of that little band of his that struggled through the wilderness of Samar, where no Spaniard had ever gone, and came out on the other side delirious with suffering, so that Waller himself was reported, when he first reached Manila, to be out of his mind—let us remember the circumstances ere we condemn.

Think of those five or six hundred posts scattered all over those tropical islands with little squads of 15 or 20 men under the command very often of a sergeant, under the command very often of a young second lieutenant, perhaps just a boy from West Point or just graduated from some American college, living there among people apparently friendly, and the first thing this boy in command or this sergeant in command knows is that one of his men has been assassinated in the night. Oh, Mr. President, those are the things that hardened their hearts and made them feel that there was deadly treachery about them.

There is but one testimony as to their treatment of the friendly natives. Soldiers and officers alike have treated them as we should expect Americans to treat a people of that kind—generously and humanely.

Now, Mr. President, I do not seek to defend any cruelty, but I do want to have justice done to the American Army. I want the people of the country to know when they read of cruelties to the hostile Filipino what the provocation has been; I want them to think of what our men have suffered and endured; I want, and we can afford to give, absolute justice to the American Army. I do not wish to be put in a position of being the defender of cruelties; but if I must take my choice between men, then I am for the friendly native, the friend of America, against the men in arms against the United States. I am for the American Army against the insurgents. I do not like to hear that Army assailed as it has been assailed. It is our Army; its glory is our glory. We can not tarnish that glory without tarnishing the glory and the fame of the country abroad. When we heap obloquy upon them on account of these cruelties, I say again, remember the provocation, remember the faces of the dead boys under the sands of Luzon—not dead by battle, but dead by murder; remember the dead and the treatment of captured prisoners, and let us show some little understanding of the trials which those officers and those soldiers have had to undergo.

No, Mr. President, the scheme has been to raise this cry about cruelties in the Philippines in order to make it react upon the party in power. Ah, Mr. President, the American Army ought not to be subjected to experiments like that. It is not made to be the football of politics, and what it does or does not do to be used to raise up or to pull down any political party. It is the Army of all Americans alike. But when justice has been done, when the guilty have been punished for proved offenses, when the whole story has been made up—ah, Mr. President, when that day comes, I believe that after all that has been said, and all the denunciation which has been heaped upon our troops and our officers has fallen into silence, we shall find that in the history of the country the record of that Army, gleaming with victories from Trenton to Manila, will shine bright in the annals of the Republic when those who now villify it are but noteless blots on a remembered name.

APPENDIX.

OROQUIETA, P. I., October 13, 1900.

GEO. A. LICKISS, Arlington, Iowa.

SIR: In answer to your communication addressed to the President and by him referred through channels to this post to be answered, I have the honor to write as follows:

The post of Oroquieta, Mindanao, was garrisoned by Company I, Fortieth Infantry, United States Volunteers, upon July 9, 1900, the troops going into quarters in the former convent next the church. The company was sent to the post to open the port as requested in an act formed by the town council, assembled and all members present.

The day following the arrival the people commenced to leave the town, and we received word irdirectly that the insurrectos were going to attack. No word was given by any native of authority, though many knew it before the attack took place. Being the first American troops to land here, the formations for roll calls and all other purposes were watched by large numbers of people daily, and at reveille roll call upon the 12th of July conditions were the same, and though the women had nearly all left town there were a large number of men watching the roll call. Lieutenant Masteller was at the time commanding the post. The soldiers were allowed to leave quarters in groups of not less than two, and then they were required to be armed.

Following the reveille roll call two sergeants proceeded down the street two blocks and just out of sight of barracks to a native store (bakery). Here, while standing in the street with butts of their rifles upon the ground, each was jumped upon by three natives armed with knives, and one was stabbed in the stomach, dying upon the spot, and the other was stabbed under the arm (wound moderate). The former in the scuffle, before being killed, managed to fire his rifle, giving the alarm to the garrison. The other sergeant escaped to the quarters almost immediately. By now the insurrectos had surrounded the barracks and commenced to fire at the barracks from both front and rear. The convent itself is surrounded by a stone wall about a large yard, and behind this wall and the church (distant 75 feet) were about 200 insurrectos, some with rifles, the majority with knives. The insurrectos firing from the front were hidden by an old stone-house foundation, and also by high weeds and brush. The orders were such that in case of attack the most of the company should go to the windows and porch and a squad report to Lieutenant Masteller in front of the barracks.

This squad the latter officer deployed and charged around the church and wall, not knowing what hostile troops were there nor how they were armed. This was where the majority of the 89 "innocent" natives were killed and a firearm or bolo or spear removed from each. The number of firearms taken was six, one of which was a Krag rifle which had been taken from an American soldier killed at Loculan, 12 miles from here, by the same troops in part that attacked this garrison. There the attack was more successful, as the natives rushed into the house where the American troops were, and before they could be repulsed had stabbed to death seven American soldiers, being the whole guard, and wounding a number of others. The method they follow is to get close and then draw their bolos, always concealed until the moment of using under loose trousers, and you can easily guess what mischief they can do when they are mixed with your own men so the latter can not fire. Vigorous measures have been taken against large numbers, when they are close, to prevent this occurring, as it did in the instance referred to. By each of the prisoners captured that morning we were told that they had come in to fight the American soldiers. From later knowledge it is known that near 1,000 natives were engaged in the attack, but all had not gotten to the quarters when it commenced.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY,
UNITED STATES VOLUNTEERS,
Presidio of California, ——— —, —.

Respectfully returned.

Sergeant Riley, Company M, Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Volunteers, states that the publication inclosed was of a private letter and without any authority whatever. The tendency of enlisted men to draw the long bow in such cases is well known. Major Cook, Captain McDonald, and Sergeant Riley state that no officers or soldiers of this regiment took part in any so-called water-cure proceedings or other threats against the natives on the occasion stated. Undoubtedly there were violations of the rule and customs of war; and as the complainants may have overlooked notice thereof, I shall state a few cases within my personal knowledge. In November, 1899, at Jaro, a large flag of truce was used to entice officers into ambush. By order of the commander all persons displayed white flags in the country where our troops operated. This was not for protection, but to give warning to insurgents to hide their guns and disguise themselves.

Privates Dugan, Hayes, and Tracy, of Company F, were murdered by the town authorities at Calinog. Private Nolan, at Dingle, was tied up by the ladies while in a stupor; the insurgents were sent for and cut his throat with a sangut. The body of Corporal Donehy, of Company D, was dug up, burned, and mutilated at Dumangas. Private O'Hearn, captured by apparently friendly people near Leon, was tied to a tree, burned for four hours with a slow fire, and finally slashed up. Lieut. Max Wagner was assassinated on the road to Pototan, October 1, by insurgents disguised in American uniform. These are only a few instances confined to this regiment. Atrocities committed by Sandatajanes or Pulajanes are too numerous to mention. Details can be furnished of the butcheries at Leganes and Mina and of burial alive near Barotac Nuevo. The conduct of the American troops in the Philippines has been so humane as to be a continued source of surprise to all foreigners and to the natives. Although General Orders, No. 100, has not been revoked, its provisions against treachery, according to the law and custom of war of all civilized nations, have never been applied to my knowledge.

J. T. DICKMAN,
Lieutenant-Colonel Twenty-sixth Infantry,
United States Volunteers, Commanding.

[Extract from report of Brig. Gen. J. F. Bell, commanding First District, Department of Northern Luzon. Part 3, Report of Lieutenant-General Commanding the Army, 1901, pp. 34, 35.]

I have been in Indian campaigns where it took over 100 soldiers to capture each Indian, but the problem here is more difficult on account of the inbred treachery of these people, their great number, and the impossibility of recognizing the actively bad from the only passively so. If it was deemed advisable to pursue the methods of European nations and armies in suppressing rebellions among Asiatics, the insurrection could have been easily put down months ago; even now, although the seeds of rebellion have permeated all classes, such methods would soon put an end to all active insurrection.

* * * * * * * *

On January 10, five bodies of native scouts, who, with one soldier of the Fifth Infantry, were taken prisoners in a barrio of Batac, January 1, were found east of Batac. The heads, legs, and arms had been cut off, and the bodies otherwise mutilated. One white soldier named Lyons, Company K, Fifth Infantry, after having been taken prisoner, was cut with bolos and was left for dead on the field. He revived, and was able to crawl to a shack when night came on. Information was given to a local leader, and he was again taken prisoner and murdered.

In the foregoing case of Damiano Sabido and Mariano Tabanbungua, natives, it appears from the evidence that the accused were regularly appointed policemen of the pueblo of San Miguel under American authority, and that while so employed they were members of a band of insurgents lurking in the vicinity of the said pueblo, and on two occasions secretly joined said band and, contrary to the laws of war, traitorously participated in an attack made upon American troops, resulting in the death of one and the wounding of two other American soldiers.

Being war traitors of a most dangerous class, their sentences, approved by the department commander, are confirmed and will be duly executed, except that the period of confinement in the case of Mariano Tabanbungua is, upon the recommendation of the department commander, mitigated to confinement at hard labor for the period of twenty years.

In the foregoing case of Gaudencio Año, Simeon de la Cruz, Juan Mariano, Alexandro San Pedro, Nicolas Asuncion, Pedro Florencio, Ambrosio de los Santos, Valentin Felix, Eugenio Ramos, Marcelo Ygnacio, and Romualdo de la Cruz, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears by the evidence that the accused, while well known as neighbors attending their ordinary peaceful pursuits, were at the same time members of a band of insurgents and were actually present, and so officially reported by the insurgent officer in command, at the attack upon an outpost of the American troops stationed at or near San Mateo, which resulted in the death of one and serious wounding of another American soldier.

Specification.—"In that Servillano Aquino did, on or about the 5th day of January, A. D. 1900, then, as now, a time of insurrection in the Philippine Islands against the lawful authority of the United States, in the barrio of Camansi, pueblo of Magalang, in the province of Pampanga, Luzon, P. I., a place, then, as now, within the theater of military operations and within the territory occupied by the armed forces of the United States, then and there being the leader and in command of a band of armed insurgents, guerrillas, and rebels, in insurrection against the lawful authority of the United States, and having in his custody five soldiers of the United States Army, to wit, Private Alonzo Brown, Private Charles C. Cook, Private Joseph C. Cook, all of Company B, of the Ninth United States Infantry, and Regimental Com. Sergt. Christian Pederson, of the Twelfth U. S. Infantry, and Cook Edward E. Norval, of Company B, Twelfth United States Infantry, willfully and maliciously and with malice aforethought kill and murder Private Alonzo Brown, Private Charles C. Cook, and Private Joseph C. Cook, aforesaid, by then and there ordering and causing nine members, more or less, of the said band, whose names are unknown, then and there under his command and subject to his orders, to shoot and kill them, the said Private Alonzo Brown, Private Charles C. Cook, and Private Joseph C. Cook, with guns held in the hands of the said nine members, more or less, of the said band, and thereby inflict wounds whereof the said Private Alonzo Brown did then and there die, and whereof the said Private Charles C. Cook did afterwards die, to wit, on the 5th day of January, A. D. 1900, and whereof the said Private Joseph C. Cook did afterwards die, to wit, on the 11th day of January, A. D. 1900."

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Hilario Quesada, was a lieutenant of insurgents and in command of an escort having in charge two American prisoners, one, Private James H. Husketh, Company H, Twenty-ninth Infantry, United States Volunteers, and the other, George B. Sullivan, a civilian merchant and noncombatant.

At or near the rancheria of Sabed, Union, Luzon, during the month of March, 1900, this accused ordered a squad of his command to kill these prisoners with bayonets at a preconcerted signal. His escort was so disposed in marching as to favor this purpose, and on reaching an isolated part of the road a corporal stepped in front of the victims, took off his hat, which was the signal agreed upon, whereupon the soldiers behind, with fixed bayonets, sprang forward an ran them through from the back. Private Husketh, not dying immediately, was shot with a rifle by order of and in presence of the accused.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Dionicio de la Cruz and Pio de Castro, about May 11, 1901, at barrio Gatboca, Calumpit, seized, bound, and conveyed to the fields one Juan Salvador, a native sailor of the U. S. gunboat Charleston. There, while the victim was held by De la Cruz, he was stabbed repeatedly in the stomach and abdomen by De Castro, who literally obeyed De la Cruz's order to "cut out the intestines of deceased."

Specification.—"In that he, Clemente de la Cruz, a sergeant of a band of guerrillas commanded by one Manuel Gonzales, native, did, in company with five or more other natives, whose names are unknown, feloniously and with malice aforethought, kill and murder five American soldiers, to wit: Private John T. Hickman, Company B, Thirty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers; Private William A. Smith, Company C, Thirty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers; Private Hamlet Jarvis, Company C, Thirty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers; Private Elmer Dane, Company E, Thirty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers, and Private Frank H. Wilson, Company E, Thirty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers, held as prisoners of war in the hands of the aforesaid Manuel Gonzales, by striking and cutting them, the aforesaid American soldiers, with sharp instruments called bolos, from the effects of which they then and there died. This at or near the sitio of Bisal, jurisdiction of the pueblo of Baliuag, province of Bulacan, Philippine Islands, on or about the 4th day of November, 1900, this being in time of insurrection against the authority of the United States and in a region at that time the scene of active military operations."

In the foregoing case of Clemente de la Cruz it appears from the evidence that the accused was a sergeant in the insurgent forces and was given charge of a detachment of six men, with orders to conduct to a safe distance from the public highway five American prisoners, taken captive by a successful ambuscade two or three days previously, and to kill said prisoners with daggers or bolos. In obedience to his orders, willingly and unhesitatingly undertaken, the accused bound the arms of his appointed victims behind their backs, and taking them to a distance of about 4½ miles from camp into a marsh known as the Candaba Swamp, then and there caused his men to assail them with their bolos until they were dead.

The accused admitted in open court the essential facts of the murder in language to the import of the foregoing, but pleaded the order of his company commander, Lieutenant Gonzales, to relieve him of responsibility. He admitted that he knew that order "to be bad," but "was afraid not to obey;" was afraid he "would get a hard punishment," and "might have been shot." He also admitted that he never saw or heard of a Filipino soldier being punished with death for disobedience of orders.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence him, Albino Villarel, native, "to be confined at hard labor, at such place as the reviewing authority may direct, for twenty years."

In the foregoing case of Albino Villareal, native, it appears from the evidence that the accused was an ex-policeman of Lipa, and that prior to and including the 1st day of July, 1900, was following the occupation of a barber; that on the next day, July 2, a detachment of United States troops early in the morning left Lipa, and about 4 miles out, on the road to Tanauan, at about 8 o'clock, was fired upon by a large body of armed men; that the accused was seen and instantly recognized as one of the assailants, standing in the rear of the detachment, and from a distance, variously estimated from 25 to 75 yards, raise his rifle and fire repeatedly at and in the direction of the men of said detachment.

Before noon of the same day the accused had returned and was acting the part of the peaceful neighbor in Lipa. The evidence leaves no reasonable doubt that the accused is one of a class of men who, while enjoying in their daily avocations the protection of the American soldiers, waylay and fire upon them whenever they fancy they have found a safe opportunity.

In the foregoing case of Marciliano Vergara, native, it appears from the evidence that upon the approach of the American forces to Mangatarem two Americans who were held as prisoners in that pueblo were committed to the care of the accused, apparently to be kept concealed in a neighboring barrio. It also appears that a semimilitary organization or militia had been organized by enrolling the "tributantes" of the cabeza of this barrio, the cabeza regarding them as his soldiers, but holding himself subject to the military authorities, represented in this instance by the accused, who was styled "major," and had authority to call these enrolled men together. The accused and his semisoldiers wore no uniform, continued in their peaceful occupations, and came together only upon special call. In this manner it is evident that they had no special difficulty in concealing their identification as banded men; but it is plain from the evidence the accused found his prisoners a great embarrassment, as the near presence of the American forces threatened to make it impracticable for him to successfully conceal them and at the same time keep concealed his own status of guerrilla. Hence his resolution to murder his prisoners. Five of his followers agree in their testimony that, in obedience to the orders of the accused, they came together at an appointed place and, with bolos in their hands, hacked to death these two men, the accused standing by to witness the execution of his orders. Covering the dead bodies with grass, the band then dispersed, each man going his own way.

II. Nicacio Leonor, a native.

CHARGE I.—"Murder, in violation of the laws of war."

Specification.—"In that he, Nicacio Leonor, native, on or about February 2, 1900, then, as now, a time of insurrection, at or near the barrio of Bagbag, pueblo of Tanauan, island of Luzon, P. I., a place then, as now, under the military government of the United States, in company of and consorting with a band of guerrillas armed with deadly weapons, to-wit, Mauser and Remington rifles and bolos, did make an assault upon and did wilfully, feloneously, and with malice aforethought, kill and murder one Albert Votrie, quartermaster-sergeant, Company K, Thirty-ninth Infantry, United States Volunteers, by stabbing him, the said Votrie, with said bolos held in the hands of members of said band, and by striking him, the said Votrie, on the head with a blunt instrument held in the hands of members of said band, inflicting various mortal wounds upon the head and body of said Votrie, whereof he, the said Votrie, then and there died; he, the said Nicacio Leonor, being then and there present aiding and cooperating with said band. This at the time and place above specified."

CHARGE II.—"Assault with intent to murder, in violation of the laws of war."

Specification.—In that Nicacio Leonor, native, on the 2d day of February, 1900, and on each succeeding day to include the 7th day of February, 1900, then as now a time of insurrection, at or near the barrio of Bagbag, pueblo of Tanauan, island of Luzon, P. I., a place then as now under the military government of the United States, in company of and consorting with a band of guerrillas armed with deadly weapons, to wit, Mauser and Remington rifles and bolos, did make a violent assault upon one Isaac Evans, corporal, Company K, Thirty-ninth Infantry, United States Volunteers, by shooting him, the said Evans, with rifles held in the hands of members of said band, inflicting therewith a wound upon the said Evans, with intent then and there feloniously, willfully, and with malice aforethought, to kill and murder the said Evans, the said Nicacio Leonor being then and there present participating in said assault. This at the time and place above specified.

CHARGE III.—"Assault with intent to kill."

Specification.—In that he, Nicacio Leonor, native, on or about the 2d day of February, 1900, then as now a time of insurrection, at or near the barrio of Bagbag, pueblo of Tanauan, island of Luzon, P. I., a place then as now under the military government of the United States, in company of and consorting with a band of guerrillas armed with deadly weapons, to wit, Mauser and Remington rifles and bolos, did make a violent assault upon one Edward Behring, private, Company K, Thirty-ninth Infantry, United States Volunteers, by shooting at him, the said Behring, with said rifles held in the hands of members of said band, with the intent then and there, feloniously, willfully, and with malice aforethought, to kill and murder the said Behring, the said Nicacio Leonor being then and there present and participating in said assault. This at the time and place above specified.

PLEAS.—To the charges and specifications the accused pleaded "Not guilty."

FINDINGS.—Of the charges and specifications, "Guilty."

SENTENCE.—And the Commission does sentence the accused, Nicacio Leonor, native, "to be hanged by the neck until dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, two-thirds of the members concurring therein."

CHARGE.—"Murder."

Specification.—"In that he, Rosario Espiritu, a Filipino and resident of Bacoor, Island of Luzon, P. I., did, on or about the 15th day of November, 1899, then as now a time of insurrection, at Bacoor, Island of Luzon, P. I., then as now a place under the United States military occupation and Government, feloniously, willfully, and with malice aforethought kill and murder one Private George A. Wagner, Company F, Fourteenth United States Infantry, then and there present and in the discharge of his duty, by shooting him, the said Wagner, in the abdomen with a revolver, and by stabbing him, the said Wagner, with a sharp instrument commonly called a bolo, thereby inflicting certain wounds, by reason of which wounds the said Wagner died on the 15th day of November, 1899. This at the times and place above specified."

To which charge and specification the accused, Rosario Espiritu, pleaded as follows, to the specification, "not guilty;" to the charge, "not guilty."

FINDINGS.—The Commission, having maturely considered the evidence adduced, finds the accused, Rosario Espiritu, of the specification, "not guilty;" of the charge, "not guilty."

In the foregoing case of Macario Estrella, native, it appears of record that the accused, in concert with companions, all acting the part of peaceful citizens and watching their opportunity, seized hold of the rifle of Sergeant Ray from behind, while the said Ray was proceeding along the highway, and following up their advantage they succeeded with bolos in inflicting upon the person of said Ray many grievous wounds, resulting in the loss of one of his arms.

In the foregoing case of Vincente Prado, native, it is clearly shown by the testimony of many witnesses that the accused established a camp in a strong position, difficult of access, in the mountainous district near Rosario, in Union Province; that he intrenched his camp and erected buildings for the band of armed outlaws which he gathered about him; that he was chief in command and had subordinate officers under him; that while in command of said camp two Americans were brought as prisoners before him and for no assigned reason other than that they were "enemies," they were forthwith ordered to instant death; that about a month later two Igorrotes, a man and a woman, were brought before him charged with being American spies, and, without attempt at proof or form of trial, were also ordered to be forthwith executed. In both instances the accused, from a short distance and in plain view, witnessed the bloody execution of his orders, with bolos held in the hands of members of his outlaw band, upon these unfortunate and defenseless people.

It further appears that the accused ordered his subordinates to proceed with armed detachments of his band to attack and burn the pueblo of San Jacinto and to arrest, and, "if he resisted, kill" the presidente of Rosario, and that in pursuance of these orders the presidente of Rosario and his son were killed, and 103 houses in San Jacinto burned.

That the accused ordered and caused to be executed these awful crimes of murder and arson, that in the fancied security of his bandit stronghold he had entered with set purpose upon his self-appointed work of destroying the lives and property of all who offended against his savage conception of what they ought or ought not to do, and that he had pursued this course until he had become a terror to the inhabitants of a large section of country, are proven beyond all reasonable doubt.

Specification 4.—"In that he, Benito Amansec, native, on or about April 10, 1900, a time then as now of insurrection against the lawful authority of the United States, at Nantangalan, a barrio of Pozorrubio, P. I., territory then as now occupied by United States troops, in company of and consorting with a band of armed outlaws to the number of 17, more or less, commanded and led by the said Benito Amansec, did willfully, feloniously and with malice aforethought kill and murder Private James Dawson, Company B, Thirteenth United States Infantry, by shooting him with a rifle held in the hands of Alejandro Galang, native (since deceased), inflicting wounds therewith whereof he, the said Private James Dawson, then and there died, the order for the murder of the said Private James Dawson having been given by the said Benito Amansec in person, and the murder having been committed in his presence. This at or about the time and at or near the place specified."

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Damascio Biating, native, about August 17, 1900, with one or more companions, assassinated with daggers Private T. Burgey, Company C, Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Volunteers, while the latter was acting as a guard of prisoners hauling water for the garrison stationed at Baratoc Nuevo, Panay. It also appears that the accused participated in a similar assassination of a native, Gervacio Besas, August 29, 1900.

To the first charge accused pleaded guilty, and the evidence fully sustains the charge and also the second charge.

Accused claims to have been a regular insurgent soldier operating against United States troops, of which Private Burgey was one, and to have been acting under the orders of his superiors. Opposed to this plea is the fact that he was within the American lines ununiformed and disguised as a pacifico.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Sotero Calingao and Santos A. Rumbaoa, in company of other natives, did, at barrio Colo, Batac, Ilocos Norte, entice away an American soldier to an isolated place, there kill him with bolos, and bury his body on the spot.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Esteban San Juan, was a colonel of insurgents and the ranking officer in the vicinity of Cavite, P. I.: that two American soldiers, while unarmed and unresisting, were captured by insurgent forces near San Francisco de Malabon, and transferred from insurgent station to station until they reached the encampment of the accused, who thereupon ordered and caused these prisoners to be bound to trees and strangled to death with cords.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Juan Biron, an alleged lieutenant of the insurgent army, captured at Bascaran, Albay, one Felix Losedo, a scout in the employ of the United States, bound him to a tree, and then with a razor cut off an ear and slashed his eyes with intent to blind him, with the result that the sight of one was totally destroyed and that of the other permanently impaired.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Agapito Ygnacio, a major of a so-called band of insurgents, and Pio Sacdalan and Benito Clemor, lieutenants, were officers exercising functions of command in a band, part of whom were dressed in the ordinary clothing of peaceful inhabitants of the country, which lay in ambush within the lines of American occupation on the road from Caloocan to Novaliches about July 1, 1900. On the approach from Novaliches of an officer, evidently First Lieut. Richard H. Brewer, Twenty-seventh United States Volunteer Infantry, and an enlisted man of the same regiment, the band opened fire upon them. These deceased then dismounted, ran to shelter, threw down their revolvers, and raised their arms in sign of surrender. The band then surrounded them, conveyed them to a point of some 50 yards distant, stripped them of their clothing, made them kneel, and killed them by stabbing one in the back with a dagger and shooting the other from behind with a revolver. The accused, Agapito Ygnacio, Pio Sacdalan, and Benito Clemor, personally ordered and participated in the consummation of this barbarous crime.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Julian Confesor, native, while holding the respective offices of presidente and vice-presidente of the pueblo of Cabatuan, during a portion of which time he was under oath of allegiance to the Government, systematically exerted his individual energies and official functions to the aid and assistance of the insurgents by supplying them with information, money, and needed supplies. General orders wore issued by him to the police to abstract arms from the American soldiers where opportunity presented itself; to kill American soldiers where they could be individually isolated from their companions; and specifically it is shown that he caused two of the policemen of his pueblo to assassinate Private George O. Hill, Eighteenth United States Infantry, and then sent the rifle of the dead soldier to the insurgents.

CHARGE.—"Murder, in violation of the laws of war."

Specification.—"In that they, Juan de Jesus and Roque Escarios, native Filipinos, and each of them, on or about the 13th of February, 1901, then as now a time of insurrection, near the barrio of San Pedro, pueblo of Cordon, province of Isabela, Northern Luzon, P. I., a place then as now in the theater of active military operations, in company of and consorting with a band of armed outlaws numbering six, more or less, armed with bolos, did willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought kill and murder Privates Alva Feagans and William Gray, Company A, Sixteenth United States Infantry, by cutting and stabbing them with bolos held in the hands of said band, inflicting wounds whereof the said Privates Feagans and Gray, and each of them, then and there died."

CHARGE.—"Murder, in violation of the laws of war."

Specification.—"In that Isidoro Torres, native, while occupying the position of general officer in the so-called insurgent army, in the province of Bulacan, Luzon, P. I., territory then, as now, occupied by United States troops, some time during the month of September, 1900, exact date unknown, a time then, as now, of insurrection against the authority of the United States, did willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, procure and obtain the killing and murdering of one Corpl. Crestof A. Fiedler, Company F, Third U. S. Infantry, acting provost-sergeant of Malolos, by ordering and directing that said Corporal Fiedler be put to death, in consequence of which orders and directions, and in pursuance thereof, the said Corporal Fiedler was killed and murdered at the barrio San Vicente, pueblo of Malolos, province of Bulacan, P. I., on or about September 29, 1900, by being struck on the head with iron missiles, by being stabbed with a dagger, and by being shot with a revolver at the hands of Marcelino Trapiel, and by being shot with a revolver held n the hands of one Mariano Cruz, whereby divers and sundry wounds were inflicted, whereof the said Corporal Fiedler then and there died."

In the foregoing case of Emilio Santa Maria, native, it appears that the accused was a trusted soldier, and at the time an acting lieutenant in the insurgent forces; that he and his companions, while in the ordinary dress of noncombatants, kidnaped in the streets an American soldier, and, taking him to a safe distance, the accused with a rifle shot his prisoner and caused him to be buried. The accused, upon his trial, admitted facts making him clearly a principal in this wanton murder, and the weight of the testimony of eyewitnesses leaves no reasonable doubt that he conceived as well as executed it.

CHARGE.—"Murder."

Specification.—"In that he, Gabino de la Cruz, a native, on or about the 1st day of June, 1899, a time of insurrection, in the town of Bocaue, Bulacan, P. I., a place then within the theater of active military operations, did willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, kill and murder one American soldier, name unknown, by stabbing or cutting said American soldier, name unknown, with the weapon commonly known as a 'bolo,' said American soldier being asleep in the street and in a helpless condition from intoxication, inflicting wounds whereof said American soldier, name unknown, then and there died. This at Bocaue, Bulacan, P. I., then within the theater of active military operations by the United States forces, on or about the 1st day of June, 1899, a time of insurrection against the United States."

PLEA.—"Not guilty."

FINDING.—"Guilty."

SENTENCE.—And the Commission does therefore sentence him, Gabino de la Cruz, native, "to be hanged by the neck until dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, two-thirds (⅔) of the Commission concurring therein."

In the foregoing case of Gabino de la Cruz, the alleged crime was committed in June, 1899, and the commission has found the accused guilty of all the allegations of the specifications without exception, whereas there is not a word of evidence, oral or documentary, that the deceased soldier had been killed by a bolo or that he was "asleep in the street and in a helpless condition of intoxication." No one saw the accused strike decedent. Subject to the foregoing remarks the finding is confirmed.

A strong chain of circumstantial evidence connects accused with the crime. He was the first man seen with the dead body, and he called others to assist him in removing it and to obliterate traces of blood from the place where the body had lain. He was also the last man with the body in a banca in which he caused it to be placed and by which he alone conveyed it down river toward the open sea. All this was done at night under cover of darkness. This evidence, all circumstantial as to the fact of the killing, is supported by the testimony of one witness, who testified that the accused volunteered the statement that he, accused, killed the soldier.

In view, however, of the fact that this crime was committed a long time ago, when the hostile feeling occasioned by active warfare was very great, and the people of these islands had practically no knowledge of the laws of war, and also moved by the fact that the sentence first imposed was less than death, the sentence as finally imposed by the commission under its lawfully invited action to reconsider its first sentence, while confirmed, is commuted to imprisonment at hard labor for the term of thirty years. As thus commuted, the sentence will be duly executed at the Presidio de Manila, to which place the prisoner will be sent under proper guard.

By command of Major-General Chaffee.

TOOK THE WATER CURE—FORMER LIEUTENANT JAMES TELLS HIS EXPERIENCE—HAD NO BAD EFFECT—HE WAS A PRISONER AT THE TIME—FILIPINOS ADMINISTERED IT TO HIS COMPANIONS ALSO—NO ONE WAS INJURED.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 28, 1902.

Charles E. James, formerly first lieutenant of the Thirty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteers, who is now a resident of Los Angeles, is quoted as having said that the present agitation against the use of the "water cure" in the Philippines is due to reports which magnify the cruelty of the operation.

"I have taken the 'water cure' and know what it is, since it was administered by the Filipinos," said Lieutenant James. "I have seen it administered to several hundred natives and know its effects. Let me state that I never knew of the 'water cure' killing a victim. When the statement is made that the subject is given water until his lungs are filled it is an untruth. Anyone of common sense knows that a man would strangle to death in a very short space of time in such circumstances.

TOOK THE CURE HIMSELF.

"My own experience took place in June, 1900. Capt. Jack Robert, a son of General Robert; a private of the name of Gallion, and myself were scouting just north of Biacanabato Pass, out from San Miguel, when a force under General Treson surrounded us. We were taken into the mountains and forced to march three days without food. We made from 18 to 22 miles a day. This starvation was carried out with the intention of forcing us to divulge army news. It did not succeed, however. At the end of that time we were introduced to the 'water cure,' which by natives is called 'tubig.'

"Regarding the effects of the 'cure' I will state that the distension of the stomach and the accompanying pain is all there is to it. I strangled once, but one quick cough ended it. The 'cure' is not pleasant, but I would rather take it than receive a beating. My companions suffered no after effects that I could notice."

SMITH'S ORDER TO WALLER—LATTER TESTIFIES "KILL AND BURN" TACTICS ENDED WAR IN SAMAR—TESTIMONY ADDUCED TO SHOW THAT YOUNG BOYS FOUGHT IN NATIVE RANKS—OUTBREAK NEAR MANILA.

MANILA, April 28, 1902.

The trial by court-martial of Gen. Jacob H. Smith on the charge of conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline was resumed here to-day. Maj. Littleton W. T. Waller, of the Marine Corps, testified to receiving from General Smith the orders to "kill and burn" and render Samar "a howling wilderness," previously referred to in these dispatches. The natives of Samar, said Major Waller, were more treacherous and implacable than the tribesmen of the Soudan. Without General Smith's drastic measures the war there would not have been ended yet. General Smith never intended killing women or children.

Corporal Pritchard, of the Ninth Infantry, who took part in the fight at Gandara, testified that he saw boys of 12 years of age fighting and slashing with bolos.

Sergeant Bonicastle, of the Ninth Infantry, an Apache, testified regarding Capt. P. K. Schoeffel's fight in Dapdap Province, Samar, against Dios's fanatics. He saw a soldier attacked by two boys under 15, one armed with a bolo and the other with a dagger.

Private Nicklo, of the Ninth Infantry, explained the dangers and difficulties of service in the island of Samar.

Private Nanjo, of the Tenth Cavalry, told how Americanistas (natives friendly to the Americans) were butchered there in cold blood.

Sergeant Brumly, of the Ninth Infantry, a survivor of the Balangiga massacre, described that disaster, including the mutilation of the American dead by the Samar natives.

Five men of the constabulary have been ambushed at San Juan del Monte, near Manila. One of the party was killed and one was wounded. The Filipino band consisted of 30 ladrones, well armed, nearly all of them carrying Mauser rifles. A force of constabulary is scouring the neighborhood for the bandits.

The surrender of the insurgents of the island of Samar, headed by General Guevarra, who succeeded General Lucban in that island, has been officially effected, though some southern ports are yet to be heard from. It is believed, however, that the insurrection in Samar is ended.

THE RIGHT TO KILL.

There seems to be no doubt as to the guilt of the men. This plea was not raised in the course of the court-martial. The charge seemed to be that Waller had no right to execute the men so summarily, even if they were guilty. And what becomes of the thousand and one drumhead courts-martial, followed by summary execution for treason and espionage, which the annals of the rebellion reveal—and that, it will be remembered, was the most civilized war ever waged?

One more incident of the many that came under my observation and reconciled me to the character of the war we are waging in Samar. A little midshipman just out from Annapolis was patrolling the strait in a yawl from the flagship New York. He was after the smugglers who bring arms to the insurgents from Leyte.

The great gale had blown the yawl out into the Pacific, and when it subsided little Noah and his six men were exhausted. Their water had given out and they tried to make Basay, Admiral Rodgers having ordered them not to land except at an armed post. The wind died away while Basay was still 2 miles off. Two of his men were delirious with thirst, and there was the little village of Nipa Nipa only a few hundred yards away flying the white flag of peace and friendship. Noah, as he floated near the shore, lifted up his empty water jar and the kindly people on the beach understood. They lifted up water jars overflowing with the precious fluid and pointed at the white flag to reassure him. He pushed his boat into the surf, and telling his men to wait in the boat, advanced some 50 yards up the beach where the good Samaritans were awaiting him with their water jars. As he drank his first deep draft two of the natives—one a woman—crept behind him and buried their knives in his back.

STEPHEN BONSAL.

In the foregoing case of Teodorico Novicio, a captain in the insurgent forces, a single witness relates how, in obedience to the orders of the accused, he enticed Rodriguez from his home and beat him to death with a club, and he produced what purports to be a written order of the accused to do this murder.

A comparison of the writing and the signature of the accused as they appear in his alleged written order to the witness with his letters and signatures known to be genuine reveals an unlikeness between them which, while not precluding the possibility that the accused wrote the order to kill Rodriguez, yet leaves a strong impression that he did not in fact write or sign it.

The disappearance of the deceased and the unsupported word of his confessed murderer is all there is to show that the deceased may not yet be living, no effort having been made to verify the presence of the body at the place where the witness says he buried it.

In view of the serious doubts here pointed out the finding upon the second specification is disapproved.

With respect to the first specification it is made plain by the testimony that after the fight had by Lieutenant Gilmore, of the Navy, near Baler, four American sailors lay on the bank of the Sabali River, and that the accused and a detachment of insurgent soldiers were detailed as a burial party. This party, accompanied by one Quicoy, a staff officer of the insurgent chief who commanded the district wherein Baler is situated and the forces serving therein, proceeded to where the Americans lay and found two dead and two wounded. Four unarmed natives had been compelled to go along to act as gravediggers, and these were put to work preparing a grave sufficiently large to hold four bodies. The grave being completed, the two dead sailors were placed in it, and the party then waited for the wounded to die. One of the latter was shot through the thigh; the other was shot in the chest as well as in the leg, and was near the point of death. The wounded men asked for water and it was given them from the river; but beyond this no relief or assistance appears to have been given.

When the third man died he was placed beside the other two in the grave and the party again waited for the fourth man to die. His wound, however, was of a kind not necessarily fatal and death was slow in coming, so that the party became impatient. The gravediggers had begun about 9 a. m. and it was now past noon. The dying man asked for water, and was able to drink when it was given to him. Shortly afterwards he was placed in the grave beside his three comrades, and the native who was standing in the hole began covering him slowly from the feet, so as to give him time to die. In this way the body was covered to the neck and then the gravedigger called out, "What about this man; he is alive yet?" to which the accused replied, "Go on burying him," and it was done.

That dissolution was close at hand and the victim nearly, if not quite, unconscious is probably true; that he was still alive when the earth was finally heaped above his head can not be doubted. Some of the party may have thought the sailor was dead, but the accused had notice to the contrary, and there is no evidence that he made in person, or caused to be made, any examination to ascertain whether the fourth man was actually dead when under his orders the burial was completed.

Also that one Eulalio Santiago was reported to have been buried alive at some place in the vicinity of Pasay cavalry barracks, on or about October 6, 1900, because he persisted in accepting employment from the United States quartermaster's department as an overseer of laborers in violation of the orders issued by the chiefs of the insurrection.

Lieut. W. N. Hughes, jr., Thirteenth Infantry, Alava, P. I., under date of December 21, 1900, states that while no natives had been assassinated, 6 persons were sequestered in September, 1900, and that they had not been heard of since then. Two of this number were municipal officers. He further states that the presidente, tieniente of police, and secretaries would undoubtedly have been killed if they had not been rescued by a squad of soldiers twenty minutes after their capture. When rescued they were securely bound and were preparing to be hacked with talihones and buried alive because they had surrendered three rifles to us and were considered friendly with us. The other two municipal officers, who were sequestered September, 1900, have never been heard from.

John W. Bubb, lieutenant-colonel Twelfth Infantry, writes from Tarlac, P. I., under date of December 19, 1900, as follows:

"It is believed that there have been many cases of assault and even killing of natives by others for real or suspected friendship to the Americans in this subdistrict. But conditions that existed in the past and still exist in a large measure prevent our having knowledge on the subject. Fear is the predominating element of control over natives, and insurgents, ladrones, and their sympathizers exercise it to such an extent over neutral and friendly natives that information of misdeeds is very hard to obtain."

Lieut. George H. Shields, Twelfth Infantry, provost marshal, Tarlac, P. I., under date of December 18, 1900, states that while it has been impossible for him to obtain any actual information owing to the short time since the Twelfth Infantry occupied the pueblo of Tarlac, from hearsay 3 natives have been assaulted for suspected sympathy and assistance rendered to the American cause.

The commanding officer at Cuyapo states that "no natives are known to have been assassinated for friendship to the United States; 1 has disappeared, and it is rumored that he has been assassinated for that reason."

Capt. R. K. Evans, Twelfth United States Infantry, commanding at Moncada, reports that Presidente Placido Cucliapian was fired on by Gregorio Vallero November 11, 1900, presumably because Cucliapian held office under the American Government.

Maj. J. W. Duncan, Thirteenth Infantry, commanding at Binalonan, under date of December 29, 1900, reports that 2 natives who acted as guides to part of General Lawton's command from Binalonan to Pozzorrubio, November, 1899, and 4 natives, in February last, who depended upon Americans to protect them in refusing to contribute supplies to a so-called insurgent band, had been assassinated.

He also states that 1 native was killed and 1 left for dead by a band of outlaws, who accused the two of being spies to the Americans.

He further states as follows: "When the 4 natives were killed, in February, as above noted, assault was made on the people in a cluster of houses in the barrio of Aruas. While the band of insurrectos seemed to want to kill the men only, they beat a number of women, probably in the endeavor to get them to tell where their husbands were."

Lieut. Hector A. Rochiben, Thirteenth Infantry, commanding at Mangaldan, reports, under date of December 29, 1900, as follows: "Although no absolute proof, 5 of the people murdered in the town since the American occupation are supposed to have been murdered for suspected sympathy or assistance to the American cause."

Of the 2 persons assassinated at Cabangan, 1 was a municipal officer and the other was a member of the police force, while 1 of those assaulted was a sergeant of police.

He also reports that 13 natives had been assaulted for the same reason.

Lieut. L. A. Curtis, Twenty-second U. S. Infantry, reported from Santa Rosa, under date of December 31, 1900, that since his arrival at that place, September 29, 1900, none had been killed, but that "the vice-presidente of the pueblo was taken from his house one night in November and dragged several miles into the country by masked men and harshly treated. This was because of refusal to contribute funds and of loyalty to the Americans."

Buttler, Third Infantry, commanding at Apalit, reports under date of December 11, 1900, that two natives, Francisco Salaveria and Tolesforo Ponce, were assassinated for suspected sympathy and assistance to the American cause. These men, he states, had given information against the insurgents and thieves to the commanding officer of the United States troops.

Lieut. J. T. Moore, Third Infantry, commanding at Maycauayan, reports under date of December 10, 1900, that "two natives who acted as guides for American troops of this place disappeared afterwards, one in April and the other September 25, this year, and rumors indicate that they were killed."

"There have been natives assassinated for suspected sympathy and assistance rendered to the American cause within jurisdiction of this post according to my best information, though the following natives have disappeared from this post and it is believed they were forcibly taken away by insurrectos: Roman Mendoza, barrio Dagat Dagatanm, disappeared while searching for a cannon in mountains April 28, 1900; Alejandro de la Cruz, Dinalupigan, disappeared while acting as messenger to Balanga, September 7, 1900; Vicente Lapan, telegraph lineman, disappeared December 2, 1900, having gone ahead of detail contrary to orders."

Captain Griffith, commanding at Hermosa, reports under date of December 16, that of the 6 natives reported assaulted, 2 of them were captured and have never since been heard from, and that of the 3 persons reported assassinated, 2 were policemen, and the third was a son of a policeman and a boy.

The two natives reported assaulted by Capt. W. R. Standiford, Forty-first Infantry, commanding at Bacolor, were named Ignacio Mendoza, barrio de Concepcion, and Benito de Jesus, barrio de Patrerio.

Capt. John H. Boston, jr., Forty-first Infantry, commanding at Magalang, under date of December 15, 1900, reports as follows:

"Pedro Perez, killed by soldiers of Elias Pacson, at barrio Dapdap, about June 15, 1900. Angel Torres, killed at barrio Bical, about August 10, 1900, by soldiers of Gregorio Lasamani. Domingo Suma, killed at barrio San Jose Molina, about November 8, 1900, by Lorenzo Camaya. None of these natives were municipal officers, but were killed for giving information."

Davidson, Forty-first Infantry, commanding at Santa Ana, reports under date of December 12, 1900, that "in the month of January, 1900, Alberto Borja, a native, was killed in San Pablo, a barrio of the municipality, by parties unknown, for being suspected of spying in interest of the United States forces." He further reports that "in January, 1900, Inocencio Cunanan and son, Felipi Cunanan, natives of Santa Ana, who were working in Lackmit, barrio of Arayat, were taken to the mountains by Lieut. Eurojio Gamboa (now dead) by General Alejandrino's order and assaulted for being suspected of spying in the interest of United States forces. In April, 1900, Leoncio de Onjio, lieutenant, of San Pablo, was assaulted by Major Camaya, in San Pablo, a barrio of this municipality, for being suspected of spying in interest of United States forces. In June, 1900, Angel Lancangan, lieutenant, of barrio San Jose, was taken to the house of Alejandrino and then to Mount Arayat, where he was threatened with death until he paid the sum of $1,500 Mexican currency. Lancangan paid this amount to escape death and was then liberated."

Capt. T. C. Siviter, Forty-first Infantry, commanding at Mexico, reports under date of December 16, 1900, that in addition to those reported as assassinated and assaulted "there may have been more, and probably were, as it is commonly reported that Camaia has killed and robbed a great many natives, though those reported are all that can be traced back to the reason given."

Capt. James Clark, Forty-first Infantry, commanding at Candaba, reports under date of December 11, 1900, in answer to the first question, as follows:

"First. Two men have disappeared; both were friendly to Americans, one being the father of an interpreter and the other a policeman. No trace of either has been found. The body of one woman with the throat cut was found in the river. She was known to be friendly to the Americans."

The commanding officer, sixth district, Department of Northern Luzon, transmitted reports from that district showing:

Natives assassinated for sympathy with the American cause	14
Natives assaulted for sympathy with the American cause	3
Municipal officer assassinated	1

Lieut. Col. John H. Beacom, Forty-second Infantry, United States Volunteers, reported under date of December 15, 1900, from Malabon, stating: "Seven natives had been assassinated and two assaulted." He adds: "I am of the opinion that there have been many cases of assault that were not reported."

Capt. D. T. E. Casteel, Twenty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, reported from Montalbon, under date of December 15, 1900, regarding those assassinated for sympathy with the Americans: "None definitely. One probably, he having disappeared after acting as guide."

Capt. C. S. Burns, Forty-second Infantry, United States Volunteers, reported on December 11, 1900, from San Felipe, that a native named Bengino was assassinated early in 1899.

Lieut. Charles H. Roessing, Forty-second Infantry, United States Volunteers, on December 18, 1900, reported from Taytay that one native had been assassinated and one assaulted for sympathy with the Americans or assistance rendered them.

Col. Albert S. Cummins, Twenty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, reported under date of December 14, 1900, from San Mateo:

"Number killed, 5. Victorino Rodriguez and Gregorio del Rosario, natives of San Mateo, were suspected of being in the American secret service. They disappeared in March, 1899. It was afterwards learned that they were killed by the insurgents in the hills north from Montalbon, where they had gone to look after some of their land. Euaristo Soto, native of province of North Ilocos, killed about February, 1900, for suspected sympathy with American cause. Señor José Monojan and Marcelo Cayetano, his servant, were killed near San Mateo in March, 1900. It is not positively known, but it is believed they were killed for being friendly with the Americans. Of the killed, Señor José Monojan was the vice-presidente of San Mateo."

On page 133, General Young, from Vigan, February 3, 1901, referring to the assassination of the presidente and a schoolmaster, said:

"Captain Van Way reports from Bangued that courier brought information that at 6 p. m., February 1, an officer and seven insurrectos entered San Jose and shot and killed Presidente Hilaron Crisologo, Schoolmaster Perfecto Cruz, and Manuel Javier, the latter having been a guide for American forces. The party then left, presumably to join Villamar in the mountains."

On page 136, General Young, from Vigan, in a telegram to the chief of staff, referring to the murder of the presidente, said:

"Following just received from Lacag:

"'Regret to inform you that the presidente of Pasuquin was taken off yesterday morning and killed by a band of about 20 ladrones. Have two detachments after them. Hope to kill the whole band, but difficult to find.

"'HOWZE, Commanding.'"

On page 143 General MacArthur, referring to the conditions at Cabaruan, said:

Colonel Smith saw nine women and several children who had been tortured by bolo cuts inflicted on all parts of their bodies. It is also a fact that this part of Pangasinan has been terrorized by these people, the large town of Malasiqui being almost entirely depopulated in consequence of their depredations.

In the report of the first Philippine Commission, made in January, 1900, on pages 177, 178, referring to a report from General MacArthur on the taking of Malolos, the Commission say:

"When General MacArthur began the movement which ended in the taking of Malolos, the natives, at the order of General Luna, fired their towns before his advancing columns. Those who were unwilling to leave their homes were driven out by insurgent soldiers, who burned their houses. The object of this inhuman procedure was to compel the inhabitants to flee before us, and thus prevent their learning from experience that the fearful tales concerning our soldiers, with which they had been deceived, were myths. This method of procedure, eminently successful at first, in the end recoiled on its authors, provoking so much opposition that the obnoxious order was revoked.

"A visit to those towns at this time revealed a greatly changed public sentiment. The inhabitants had neither burned their homes, nor, as a rule, abandoned them, but had quietly awaited the arrival of the American troops. Those who had remained soon learned that their confidence had not been misplaced, and those who had fled speedily returned. We found their condition to be most pitiable. They had been plundered by the insurgent troops, who had robbed them of jewels, money, clothing, and even food, so that they were literally starving. Peaceable citizens had been fired upon. Women had been maltreated, and there was general satisfaction that the Americans had come at last.

"We found them thankful for the considerate treatment they had received from our troops, and willing to aid us against the insurgents, at whose hands they had suffered so severely. They seemed, however, powerless to act on account of lack of organization, and there was a universal desire for the establishment of some form of municipal government."

On page 384 of volume 2 of the same Commission's report, Benito Legardo, a witness before the Commission, testified as follows:

Q. "What was this kidnaping by Pio del Pilar?

A. "He ordered people to be seized who favored the Americans, or even people who had strongly favored the Spanish. Some were carried away and flogged, and others were taken off in the hills and disappeared and were never heard of again. Then, the principal agitators of Aguinaldo, who were Sandico and others, established here in Manila the 'popular clubs,' which was a society similar to the Katipunans, and this society became very widespread here, and its principal object was to prevent Filipinos from getting in sympathy with the Americans.

On February 28, 1901, Corporal Merkel and six men, Company F, Forty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, left Daraga at about 8.30 a. m. and scouted to the north as far as Buctong in search of bolomen who had waylaid and cut the eyes out and the ear off of a native. Two prisoners were taken in Buctong and identified as the parties who had maltreated said native. Returned to Daraga about 11.30 a. m. Distance marched about 8 miles.

II. In the foregoing cases of Silvestre Tarug, Joaquin Pider, and Pascual Gutierres, natives, the evidence shows that these three accused, with a band of Negritos, armed with a rifle, bolos, and bows and arrows, entered the barrio of Dayacdac, pueblo of O'Donnell, province of Tarlac, P. I., on or about February 16, 1900, and murdered seven natives, including one woman. The established motive of the crime was robbery. The two accused who have received sentences of death, Joaquin Pider and Pascual Gutierres, are shown by the evidence to have tied up two of the victims of this murderous assault, and, compelling them to lie on the ground, chopped them with bolos, in this way causing their death. The third accused, Silvestre Tarug, who has received sentence of imprisonment for twenty years, is shown to have been present with this band, aiding and abetting these murders.

The remarks of the reviewing authority in the case of Antonio Morales and Faustina Gonzales, published in General Orders, No. 16, March 8, 1900, Headquarters Department of the Pacific and Eighth Army Corps, apply in this case. The crimes alleged were committed by a band of native outlaws against fellow-natives and under circumstances of peculiar atrocity, unworthy of even a moderate degree of civilization,

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence them, Buenaventura Gamboa, Cipriano Villapa, Felizardo Mariano, Nicolas Melinderas, Cipriano Sarabay, and Hilario Nicolas, as follows: "Buenaventura Gamboa to be hung by the neck until he be dead, at such time and place as may be designated by the reviewing authority, two-thirds of the members present concurring; Felizardo Mariano, Cipriano Saribay, and Nicolas Melinderas, and each of them, to be confined at hard lubor, at such place as the reviewing authority may designate, for twenty years; Cipriano Villapa to be confined at hard labor, at such place as the reviewing authority may direct, for fifteen years, and Hilario Nicolas to be confined at hard labor, at such place as the reviewing authority may direct, for ten years."

In the foregoing case of Buenaventura Gamboa, Cipriano Villapa, Felizardo Mariano, Nicolas Melinderas, Cipriano Saribay, and Hilario Nicolas, natives, it appears that the Macabebe, who was murdered by the defendants, was unarmed at the time, was engaged in peaceful pursuits and was going on foot along the road leading through the barrio of Quitaquita, pueblo of Bulangao, province of Pangasinan, Luzon, P. I., when suddenly he was set upon by a band composed of the accused persons, armed with knives and clubs, and of which Buenaventura Gamboa was the ringleader; that he was severely beaten and was finally stabbed to death by Buenaventura Gamboa. The said Gamboa makes no denial of the assault or of the killing, but freely admits it, stating that the deed was committed in pursuance of orders received from the vice-president of the town of Bulangao. The vice-president denies this and says that he sent no such orders. However this may be, there can be no doubt about the physical facts nor about the criminality of the deed. The sentences are, therefore, approved. The sentence of death by hanging awarded Buenaventura Gamboa will be duly executed in the barrio of Quitaquita, pueblo of Bulangao, province of Pangasinan, Luzon, P. I., on the 13th day of July, 1900, under the direction of the commanding general, Department of Northern Luzon. The sentence of twenty years' confinement awarded to Felizardo Mariano, Cipriano Saribay, and Nicolas Melinderas; the sentence of fifteen years' confinement awarded Cipriano Villapa, and the sentence of ten years' confinement awarded Hilario Nicolas, will be duly executed at the Presidio de Manila, to which place the prisoners will be sent, under proper guard.

By command of Major-General MacArthur.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence him, Jacinto Ebron, native, "to be confined at hard labor, for the period of five years, in such penitentiary as the reviewing authority may direct."

In the foregoing case of Jacinto Ebron, native, it appears that the accused was a member of a band of armed outlaws.

This band operated in Cagayan Province, Luzon, during the early part of this year, committing various outrages upon the natives and keeping the whole population in a constant state of terror.

The identity of the accused as a member of the band, and as having been present upon the occasion of the crime here charged, is clearly proven. The proceedings and findings were approved June 28, 1900. The sentence of confinement at hard labor for the period of five years was approved on that date and will be duly executed at the Presidio de Manila, to which place the prisoner will be sent under proper guard.

By command of Major-General MacArthur.

M. BARBER.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence him, Basilio Lalu, a native, "to be hanged by the neck until he be dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, a unanimous concurrence therein."

In the foregoing case of Basilio Lalu, native, it is clearly shown by two witnesses for the prosecution that a band of men, of whom the accused was one, armed with rifles and bolos, and none of them in uniform, beat and wounded Francisco Salaveria with these weapons for several hours, his arms being tied behind him, conducting him while so doing to a secluded spot, where, as testified to by two other witnesses, he was stabbed with a bolo in the hands of the accused and where he died and was buried by these witnesses, at the command, as one of them testifies, of the accused, who threatened them with death if they should divulge the crime which they had been compelled to witness.

The accused, though represented by counsel, offered no evidence to meet this convincing testimony. Sworn at his own request as a witness for himself, and informed of his rights and privileges, while accusing two of the witnesses against him as being equally guilty with himself, he admitted "taking Francisco away and killing him," and he attempted no justification therefor other than that "the people of the barrio were making so many complaints about Francisco being a detective for the Americans that our captain, Simeon Mamangun, ordered us to seize and kill him."

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence them, Terega Pagarigan and Raymondo Bergora, natives, and each of them, "to be hanged by the neck until dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, two-thirds of the members of the commission concurring therein."

In the foregoing case of Terega Pagarigan and Raymondo Bergora, natives, the evidence that the accused deliberately beat to death with the butts of their rifles three natives who were bound while their murder was being accomplished, is overwhelming and conclusive, and established the further fact that the accused are ladrones or guerrillas. Both of the accused, after being informed of their privileges, were at their request sworn in their own behalf. One, Terego Pagarigan, admitted that the murdered men were tied, as previously testified to, but claimed that this was done by people from San Juan, and denied that the men were killed, claiming that they died from lack of food. The other, Raymondo Bergora, contented himself with saying that the murdered men had robbed him of two carabaos, and that when he arrived upon the scene they were already tied. He explained that he did not untie them, because he was afraid of his companion in crime, Pagarigan, who he says was armed with a gun. The evidence of these accused in no way discredits the testimony against them, which is complete and convincing.

That the prosecution was unable to prove the names of the murdered men is explained in the testimony of record, from which it appears that they had lived in another locality than that in which the murder was committed. The fact in no way affects the correctness of the findings or sentence. The gist of the crime was proved when it was shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused beat to death, in the manner and form as charged, the three natives, the burial as well as killing of which a number of witnesses have testified to.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence him, Edwardo Mamangum, a native, "to be hanged by the neck until he is dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct—an unanimous concurrence therein."

In the foregoing case of Edwardo Mamangum, native, it is clearly shown by the testimony of several witnesses that the accused was one of a band of outlaws armed with rifles and bolos; that he gave directions and appeared to be in command of said band which, about midnight, took by force Francisco Salaveria from his home and with threats and blows compelled him to go with them to a distant and secluded place, where the following morning, with a bolo in the hands of a member of the band, their prisoner was murderously assaulted, the accused also aiding in the fatal wounding by thrusting a dagger held in his hand through the neck of his victim. Two witnesses who were present at the killing of Francisco Salaveria testify that they were taken by the band from their work and compelled to be present at the time of the murder for the declared purpose of burying the body of the victim. Sworn in his own behalf, the accused first denied and then admitted that he was present with the band. His admissions make conclusive the chain of evidence against him and leave no reasonable doubt that more than any other member of the band he was responsible for and was an active principal in a most brutal and deliberate murder.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence him, Roman Santiago, "to be hung by the neck until he is dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, two-thirds of the commission concurring therein."

In the foregoing case of Roman Santiago the evidence conclusively establishes that the accused was in command of a guerrilla band of outlaws, of thirty or more, armed with bolos and rifles, which descended in the night-time upon the barrio of Namipitan and forcibly seized and dragged from their homes and barrio Roman Docosin, Maximino Tabaldo, Severino Prado, Maximo Saborboro, and Dolores Dingli, natives; that within two weeks thereafter the dead bodies of these persons, with the exception of Dolores Dingli, of whom no trace has since been had, were discovered in a field near the said barrio, mutilated with wounds that must in each case have resulted in death, and inflicted by weapons similar to those with which the accused and his band were armed.

The identification of the accused as the leader of the band, and his commands to it for the seizing and taking away of his victims, are established by evidence that is absolute, positive, and direct. Though represented by counsel, he had no witnesses to call, did not desire to be sworn in his own behalf, and attempted no denial of the testimony against him.

The evidence of the murder by the accused of the four persons spirited away by him and his band, and whose dead bodies were subsequently found close to the scene of their forcible and illegal kidnaping is presumptive only, but considered with the indisputable proof of the death by violence of these persons and of the accused's clearly and directly established connection with their kidnaping as the leader of the band who gave the commands therefor, and with the absence of all evidence to weaken or rebut the presumption of guilt to which these established facts give rise, is so cogent and convincing as to preclude a reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty in the manner and form as found by the commission.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence him, Pablo de la Cruz "to be hung by the neck until he is dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, two-thirds of the members of the commission concurring therein."

In the foregoing cases of Roman Santiago and Pablo de la Cruz, the finding upon the first charge and its specification in each case is disapproved, the offense being "kidnaping" instead of "abduction." The evidence is conclusive that these accused were members of a band of guerrilla marauders, which, armed with rifles, violently attacked upon the highway two natives, Antonio Estrada and Angel Acosta, while these were engaged in peaceful and legitimate pursuits; that the band tied and bound them and robbed them of their money, accusing them in the meantime of being "spies of the Americans," and then took them to the barrio of Baag and tied them to a telegraph pole; that thereupon the band, including these accused, arranged themselves about and fired into their victims a volley, the command for which was given by the accused, Pablo de la Cruz, and as a result of which Estrada fell dead and Acosta received three gunshot wounds; that the latter, though left for dead by the accused and his band with the body of Estrada, revived and reported the crime to the authorities, with the result that the dead body of Antonio Estrada was recovered at the place where he fell.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence Guiliermo Garcia and Florencio Semana, natives, and each of them, "to be confined at hard labor, for the remainder of their lives, at such place as the reviewing authority may direct."

In the foregoing case of Guiliermo Garcia and Florencio Semana, natives, it appears from the testimony of many witnesses that two men, one woman, and a young girl were killed by bolo wounds in the neck, and that the accused confessed that they inflicted these fatal wounds because they were ordered to do so by a neighbor.

What motive other than the mere lust for taking human life may have actuated the accused is not disclosed in the record.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence them, Pedro Dacoco and Lazaro, natives, and each of them, "to be hung by the neck until they are dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, two-thirds of the members concurring therein."

In the foregoing case of Pedro Dacoco and Lazaro Daro, natives, it appears in evidence that upon the approach of a troop of United States cavalry to the pueblo of Asingan, the presidente and others of said pueblo fled for safety to the barrio of Cocalditen; that three days later they were surrounded in their place of refuge by a band of armed outlaws, natives, and the presidente and five other men of the refugee party were assaulted and driven forth with blows inflicted with bolos in the hands of said outlaws, and that from that day until the present no one of the assaulted party has since been seen among living men. One of the refugee party testified that upon the first appearance of the outlaws he fled and screened himself from view, and that the outlaws afterwards passed so close by him that he was able to recognize the accused, who were acquaintances of his, and saw them strike Cirapion Altre with bolos held in their hands, and that after falling to the ground the body of said Altre long remained motionless and until the witness, through fear, fled from the spot. Witness also heard men among the outlaw band say they had "dispatched" the other kidnaped men.

Why these men while hiding from the American troops should have been ruthlessly murdered by their own people does not appear.

SENTENCE.—And the Commission does, therefore, sentence him, the accused, Pedro Negranza, "to be confined at hard labor, at such place as the reviewing authority may direct, for the period of twenty years."

In the foregoing case of Manuel Bautista, Isidoro Ramires, Maximo Roldan, and Pedro Negranza, natives, who were jointly tried, the evidence clearly establishes that on the night of January 10, 1900, a band of thirty or more outlaws and guerrilla marauders, armed with rifles and bolos, of which the accused Maximo Roldan was the captain, and in whose criminal acts of that night these other accused took part, descended upon the town of Bangar, province of La Union, Luzon, P. I., and forcibly seized and dragged from their homes Cipriano Gavino, Pio Lopez, and Antonio Morales, at the same time robbing them and the members of their families of money, clothing, and other valuables; that shortly after the band departed with their prisoners shots were heard, and within twenty-four hours thereafter the dead bodies of Hilario Aquino, Cipriano Gavino, Pio Lopez, and Antonio Morales were found within a mile of the town with gunshot and knife wounds that must in each case have proven fatal.

The evidence of the murder, as charged, by these accused of Cipriano Gavino, Pio Lopez, and Antonio Morales, though circumstantial and presumptive, is so cogent and convincing as to preclude a reasonable doubt of their guilt.

SENTENCE.—And the Commission does therefore sentence them, Mariano Buen and Roman Melindez, natives, and each of them "to be confined at hard labor, at such place as the reviewing authority may direct, for the period of twenty (20) years."

In the foregoing case of Mariano Buen and Roman Melindez, the evidence establishes that an armed band of guerrilla marauders, under the leadership of one Benito Amansec, descended in the nighttime upon the pueblo of Pozorrubio, and, after surrounding their houses, forcibly dragged therefrom Doroteo Bautista and Augustine Castillo, together with three other native residents, and, after tying their prisoners, removed them a short distance, where four, including Doroteo Bautista and Augustine Castillo, were shot to death, their dead bodies being recovered on the following morning. Both of these accused are positively identified by the wife of one of the murdered men as two of four men who entered her house and dragged therefrom her husband, and Mariano Buen is further identified as among the band by one of the five natives kidnapped by it and whose life was spared.

The unlawful kidnapping of the murdered men by these accused and the departure of the band with them as prisoners toward the place from which shots were shortly afterwards heard, and where the bodies of the murdered men were found the next morning, are established beyond a reasonable doubt. These accused were represented by counsel and offered no testimony to rebut their positive identification as members of the band, except that one witness attempted to establish an alibi for Roman Melindez, which was so vague and general in its nature as to be valueless against the convincing evidence to which it is opposed. The established facts in this case preclude a reasonable doubt of the murder by these accused of Doroteo Bautista and Augustine Castillo and of their guilt in the manner and form as charged.

In the foregoing case of Agipito Mendoza, Apolonario Lantano, and Apolonio Garcia, natives, who were jointly tried, the evidence conclusively shows that a band of outlaws, armed with rifles, talibones, and bolos, forcibly seized and carried away from their homes on or about March 2, 1900, Lorenza Soriano, Gelasio Jacobe, Arcadio Jacobe, Tasinto Echavarre, and Felipe Bacungan; that these accused were members of the band and participated in its criminal acts, the accused Agipito Mendoza being in command; that no trace has since been had of Arcadio Jacobe, Tasinto Echavarre, or Felipe Bacungan, but that the dead bodies of Lorenza Soriano and Gelasio Jacobe, mutilated with wounds that must in each case have resulted in death, were some three weeks later recovered in a well in the neighborhood, the identification being complete by reason of the clothing and articles found upon their bodies.

Of these accused, all of whom were represented by counsel, Agipito Mendoza and Apolonario Lantano attempted to prove an alibi, but failed to shake thereby the direct, positive testimony of the numerous eyewitnesses to the kidnapping. The accused Apolonio Garcia attempted no defense.

The evidence connecting these accused with the murder of Lorenza Soriano and Gelasio Jacobe is presumptive, but establishing, as it does, their participation in the forcible and criminal seizing and carrying away of these persons in their lifetime, who are not again seen or heard of by anyone outside of this band until their dead bodies were discovered in a well, covered with wounds, prove beyond a reasonable doubt that they are guilty of the murder of this man and woman in the manner as charged.

In the foregoing cases of Severo Entialbo (who was jointly tried with Primo Tibis, Tomás Entialbo, Pedro Entialbo, Francisco Estiqueta) and Sotero Magbanua, natives, it appears from the records that a number of neighbors had assembled in the evening at the house of one Salvador to condole with him on the death by drowning of his little boy. That at the suggestion of Salvador seven or eight men left his house and accompanied him to the house of Victor Pere, where, with the active assistance of these accused and two others of the party, Victor Pere and his wife, Martina Pincao, were taken by force, their arms bound behind them, and, with the threat that the last day of their lives had come, were conducted to the Panay River, where the woman, first being struck by one of her assailants with a bolo, was thrust into the stream, from which her dead body, with pinioned arms and bearing the bolo wound, was recovered a few days later. The husband of the deceased, witnessing her murder and anticipating his own, sprang into the river and, notwithstanding his arms were tied, succeeded in swimming to the opposite shore. From his testimony, supported by other eyewitnesses, the facts attending the taking of the life of a helpless and unoffending woman, and the active part these accused took therein, as related, are proven beyond any reasonable doubt. The witnesses all agree that the motive for the crime was a superstitious belief that the murdered woman was a witch, the plain inference being that her ignorant assailants attributed to her the possession of occult powers whereby she had, in some mysterious way, brought to pass the death of Salvador's child.

In the foregoing case of Luis Ordona, alias Catubig, native, several policemen and other eyewitnesses agree in their testimony that an armed body of men, about 9 o'clock at night, entered the official residence of Gregorio Arenas, who was at that time presidente of Aguilar, and placing all the other inmates under fear of death and removing them from the room in which said Arenas was held captive, then with bolos in their hands killed the said Arenas and by decapitation mutilated his body. The evidence is conclusive that the accused took an active and leading part in this bloody deed, and that in this and in the murder of Juan Rosario he and the band of outlaws and murderers with whom he consorted were actuated chiefly, if not solely, by a desire to rob the unoffending but reputedly rich men whose lives they took in each case by the savage and barbarous method of decapitation.

In the foregoing case of Catalino Untalan, Feliciano Cortes, Juan Seguig, Alberto Marana, Melicio Gayiton, and Ambrosio Zuelacio, natives, who were jointly tried, the evidence conclusively shows that a band of outlaws armed with rifles, talibones, and bolos forcibly seized and carried away from their homes, on or about March 2, 1900, Lorenza Soriano, Gelasio Jacobe, Arcadio Jacobe, Tasinto Echavarre, and Felipe Bacungan; that these accused were members of the band and participated in its criminal acts, the accused, Catalino Untalan, taking an active and leading part; that no trace has since been had of Arcadio Jacobe, Tasinto Echavarre, or Felipe Bacungan, but that the dead bodies of Lorenza Soriano and Gelasio Jacobe, mutilated with wounds that must in each case have resulted in death, were some three weeks later recovered in a well in the neighborhood, the identification being complete by reason of the clothing and articles found upon their bodies.

The evidence connecting these accused with the forcible and criminal seizing and carrying away of Lorenza Soriano and Gelasio Jacobe is direct and positive and so intimately connects them with the murder of these persons as to leave no reasonable doubt of their guilt in the manner charged.

In the foregoing cases of Mariano Castillo, alias Macabat, Paustino Pascoa, Pioquinto de Jesus, and Rufino Bacarizas, natives, the evidence of many witnesses, including the confessions of three of the accused before the commission trying them, makes it conclusive beyond all reasonable doubt that the accused belonged to an organized band which, under the assumed style of "Guardia de Honor," had for its declared object the exercise of unlawful power, and, as the murder of their peaceful and unoffending victim in this case exemplifies, if found necessary to gratify either a desire for revenge against anyone falling under their displeasure or a feeling of envy against the rich, to resort to the foul crime of assassination. The evidence reveals the orderly methods of the band in first issuing through its chief, Mariano Castillo, alias Macabat, the order to kill, in the employment of force through a detail of men, of which the defendant Rufino Bacarizas was one, led by the defendant Paustino Pascoa, to kidnap their selected victim, and in the designation of an executioner in the person of the defendant Pioquinto de Jesus, to deliver with a bolo the fatal blows whereof said victim did at once die.

These inhuman methods remove all the participants, whether chief or willing follower of the band, from the pale of the law, and place them among that class of cowardly and secret assassins which all civilized men the world over hold to be enemies of mankind.

In the foregoing case of Leon Pascual and Paulino Madarang, natives, it appears from the testimony of many witnesses that an armed band of outlaws entered the pueblo of Infanta at night, and, surrounding the house of Mamerto Mirador, three of their number forced an entrance, and with bolos in their hands and with threats of death assailed said Mirador, who, defending himself, repelled his assailants, whereupon the band set fire to the house, thus forcing their victim to come out, when the band rushed upon him and, striking him down with their bolos, took his life.

Leon Pascual, one of the accused, was recognized by the inmates as one of the three men who entered the house and assailed the deceased.

The evidence also clearly shows that Adriano Mayor and Estevan Mapa were at the same time taken by force by these outlaws from their homes in Infanta, that they had not since been seen in life, and that the remains of two men were later found unburied in the forest and articles of their clothing recognized with sufficient certainty to leave no reasonable doubt of the murder of the men named at the hands of this band of outlaws.

In the foregoing case of Moices Lomabao, native, it appears from the evidence that an armed body of ladrones, about thirty in number, entered the barrio of Namipitan at night and, taking four men and a woman by force and violence from their homes, disappeared with them; that, after search was made for the captives, the bodies of all but the woman were, three days later, found shockingly mutilated and decaying in death. It further appears that the accused was active and cruel in taking captive these unoffending people and that no motive other than robbery and a savage delight in taking life appears to explain this act of wholesale murder.

In the foregoing case of Marcelino Versosa, Narciso Garcia, Bentura Barcena, Gabriel Espenosa, and Estarvan Estrada, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears from the evidence that the deceased had been banished by the Spanish Government to the Caroline Islands; that by permission of the American authorities he returned in February, 1900, to his home in Uli and was, at the time of his death, making preparations for changing his place of residence to Dasol, which was occupied by American troops. His apparent friendly relations with the American authorities appears to have given offense to these accused, who came together at night under the active leadership of Marcelino Versosa, and they, with five or six other men, armed with bolos and carying among them a rifle and a pistol, proceeded to surround the house where the deceased was staying for the night, and, threatening to burn the house, compelled him by force and fear to come out; when, the deceased attempting to escape by running, these accused followed, shot him down, and inflicted upon his prostrate body fifteen or more bolo wounds, from which he immediately expired.

In the foregoing case of Hermogenez Lorian and Tomas Caliboso, natives, it appears from the evidence that one Cirapion Altre, presidente of the pueblo of Asingan, and a small party of men, women, and children had, through fear of the approach of American troops, fled from Asingan to the barrio of Cocalditen, and while there, in hiding in a deserted house, were set upon in the nighttime by a band of armed outlaws, which had long infested the locality; that said outlaws seized the said Altre and four other men, bound them, and, with blows and wounds of bolos and threats of death, drove them forth and so far fulfilled their threats that these men have never since been seen among the living, and have been dead to their families and friends.

One of the refugee party, who escaped on the approach of the outlaws, testified that, from his near-by place of concealment, he witnessed these accused take part, with bolos and daggers in their hands, in striking to the ground Cirapion Altre, and that they and others thereafter inflicted many cutting and stabbing wounds upon his prostrate body, which long lay motionless after his murderers had left him for dead, and until, with the coming of morning, the witness fled in terror from the place.

The testimony of this witness is supported in part by that of other witnesses, who were present when the band assailed the refugee party, recognized the accused among them, heard their threats of death, and saw them beat and with bolos wound the persons of the men they carried away.

In the foregoing case of Eliseo Adulta, Pedro Mercadejos, Fausto Avellado, Jose Ropa, and Miguel Cantal, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears from the record that a band of outlaws entered the pueblo of Unisan and with bolos proceeded to murder Gabriel Castillo, the father-in-law, and Feliciano Maxino, a nephew, of Antonio Maxino, and to kidnap his family, consisting of his wife, daughter of 14 years, and three sons, one aged 11 and one 4 years and an infant aged 5 months; that they robbed his house of all the money and valuables they could find; that a few days later, in a secluded spot in the forest, the mother and helpless children were murdered with clubs, with which the accused and other members of the band beat out their brains; that the mother was then buried in a shallow trench, and the bodies of the children were folded up and forced into two other small, shallow holes, and all loosely covered with earth, wood, and leaves.

It is clearly revealed by the evidence that while Antonio Maxino was absent, a prisoner in the hands of the American troops, and his home, as a consequence, left without his protection, this band of assassins practically exterminated his family, not sparing the unoffending wife, innocent maid, nor helpless infant.

All the accused save Eliseo Adulta admit their participation in this crime, but claim either that they did not deliver any fatal blows upon their victims or were present with the band from compulsion. But the evidence of many witnesses proves beyond a reasonable doubt that they were willing and principal actors in these murders, and all agree that, of the accused, Eliseo Adulta planned and was present and directed the horrible details of their execution.

In the foregoing case of Francisco Frani (alias Quicoy Frani), native, many witnesses testify that the accused gave the order to kill two peaceful men, and, in pursuance of his said order, these men were killed and buried. Before the commission trying him the accused admitted that he did cause the death of these men and among other things said:

"The killing of the two prisoners, Medina and Badel, was done pursuant to a general order from General San Miguel. This order was to the effect that those prisoners who had committed acts against the Filipino republic should be killed. * * * I was simply carrying out the orders of my superior officer, General San Miguel. I had no discretion whatever. If I had not carried out these orders, I should have been killed myself."

The accused could not, however, produce written orders from his superiors to do this murder, nor was he able, although he made the attempt, to support his statements by the testimony of others. Whether or not the accused murdered these men in obedience to orders from his superior or upon his own unprompted will is not, however, material. It is a principle of law, long recognized by all civilized and peace-loving people, that no man shall deliberately kill another who is a prisoner, as were the deceased at the time they were murdered, unless such killing be done under an "imperative duty prescribed by law," such as the execution of one found guilty of a capital crime by a court of competent criminal jurisdiction and sentenced to suffer death by execution. In this instance the deceased, who appear to have been peace-abiding men, were first unlawfully deprived of their liberty, and without the sanction of either the laws of war or peace, and while bound and helpless, were deliberately put to death.

The defense of the accused, that unless he had killed these men his superiors in authority over him would have taken his life, is, in the first place, not borne out by the evidence, and, in the second place, is not good in law, which does not suffer that one man, through fear of a remote danger to his own life, shall obey the unlawful commands of another to kill peaceful and law-abiding men.

In the foregoing case of Regino Antonio, Jose Madamba, Toribio Lopez, and Augustin Echevarri, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears from the testimony of many witnesses and from the statements of three of these accused, made before the commission trying them, that three men who had taken service as policemen in a pueblo under American control were, for some purpose not clearly revealed by the evidence, sent by a native official to the neighboring pueblo of San Nicolas, where they arrived about midday and repaired to the presidencia for rest and a siesta; that while asleep they were seized by a band of men, about ten in number—chiefly citizens of San Nicolas—armed with a pistol, bolos, and clubs; that first tying the arms of their captives behind their backs, the band proceeded to beat and wound them with bolos; that they were then taken into the sacristy of the church to be confessed by the padre, then put into a carromata and taken to the outskirts of the pueblo, where, bound and helpless, but resisting as best they might, they were thrown into a well "about 'six varas' deep" and literally buried alive with earth thrown upon them until the well was partly filled.

In the foregoing case of Ysidro Cacho, native, it appears from the evidence that the accused was an officer of militia having two barrios under his jurisdiction; that, upon his own orders or the orders he had received from higher insurgent authority, he caused the deceased, who at the time was employed as a cook for the American officers in the pueblo of Bolinao—and apparently for this reason only—to be seized and delivered to him at his residence in the barrio of Natulang; that the accused and one Bonifacio Bonson took the deceased to the fields one-half mile from the house of the accused and proceeded to kill him by striking him with a bolo over the head, stabbing him with a dagger in the breast, and then cutting off his hands and feet and cutting out his tongue.

In the foregoing cases of Enrico Alarcon, Esteban Palaganas, and Leopoldo Salvador, natives, it appears of record that the first named was the leader and the two others active members of a band of ladrones, that, armed with rifles and bolos, about midnight entered the pueblo of Malasiqui and, surrounding the house of the presidente, induced him by threats to give orders that the cabezas and other officials of the pueblo should assemble at his house, which being done, the band bound them, and after a delay sufficient to accomplish the looting of the houses of their captives, marched them to a point a few yards beyond the limits of the pueblo and there with rifles shot them to death.

In the foregoing case of Julian Robillos, Dalmacio Robillos, Eugenio Soverano, Mariano Doria, Eulogio Doria, Augustin Yson, Juan Fernandez, Hilario Manaoas, and Garciano Mislang, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears of record that a band of men armed with rifles, pistols, and bolos, seized in the nighttime a family of five persons, and taking their captives less than 400 yards away, killed them with bolos, and left their bodies lying dead upon the margin of a fish pond. One of the family, a woman, escaped after she had been threatened with violence by these accused, whom she had long known, plainly recognized, and saw them carry away her relatives—the deceased. Her testimony is confirmed by many witnesses in relation to the kidnaping, finding the dead bodies, and their burial. One witness, an ex-policeman, testified he followed the band, and from a short distance saw them deliver with bolos the fatal wounds whereof their victims died.

The motive for the murder—clearly brought out in the evidence—was the punishment of a family that had refused to pay taxes for the support of the insurgent forces. There being no reasonable doubt that these accused are guilty as charged, their sentences—approved by the department commander—are confirmed and will be duly executed. The Presidio de Manila is designated as the place of confinement, to which place the prisoners will be sent under proper guard.

In the foregoing case of Roberto Mendoza, native, it appears from the evidence that the accused was a "teniente" of a band of insurrectos under the leadership of one Lieut. Col. Bonifacio Morales; that the said Morales had caused Juan de Vera to be seized and delivered to him, and without accusation or form of trial had directed the accused to kill him. In obedience to this unlawful order the accused took the deceased, who was bound and helpless, into the fields, where he was made to sit down, and while the accused held his hands, "his assistant," Juan de la Cruz, held his head and with a knife cut his throat and thereby inflicted a wound from which the said Juan de Vera then and there died.

Officers and soldiers of the band of insurgents to which the accused belonged testify that he did this murder in the manner described, and say that the only reason for taking the life of this unoffending man was because he was a kinsman of Juan José, who was chief of police of Santa Maria under American authority.

The law absolves all officers and soldiers who disobey the unlawful orders of their superiors, and they fall under its condemnation if, in obedience to such unlawful orders, they take the life of any person. As an officer of insurgents the accused must be presumed to have had sufficient intelligence to have understood the reason, well known by his comrades, why he was called upon to take the life of the deceased, whom he well knew had done no wrong. It was the plain duty of the accused to refuse to act the part of a murderer.

In the foregoing case of Eusebio Rojas, native, a superior officer of the accused, a major of insurgents, testified that the accused had recently commanded one of three "groups;" that the men of each "group" were "distributed among three barrios;" that "they wore the ordinary dress of the country;" that "sometimes they would go armed for a specific purpose and at others they would hide their arms." There also appears of record a writing purporting to appoint the accused a "1st teniente of infantry," signed by one Alejandrino, and a translated copy of a general order issued by the said Alejandrino as commanding general, Central Luzon.

Sections 1 and 2 of this order read as follows:

"First. All who perform official duties or who have materially contributed to the establishment of the pretended American civil government in the territory within my command, if caught, will be punished from a fine not less than $100 up to the death penalty, by the most summary trial in accordance with the circumstances, and if committed by educated people the guilt will be considered increased. Second. The property of persons comprised in article 1 will be confiscated for the need of the Filipino army."

Given command of armed men and authorized as quoted to exercise summary power over the lives and property of his neighbors the accused, as is made unmistakably plain by the evidence, conceived it to be his duty to rob and murder the peaceful and law-abiding people living within his so-called military jurisdiction.

Going in ordinary dress and taking with him a few trusted followers—five or six at most—he secretly seized his unsuspecting neighbors, a man at a time, and taking them into the forest, he proceeded in two instances to bury them alive. The witnesses, some of whom were guilty participants and others who were compelled to be present and dig the graves of the waiting victims, relate the horrible details by which men in the full vigor of life were suffocated under the mass of earth thrown upon them.

Before the commission trying him the accused admitted that in obedience to orders he attacked a nonmilitary train which resulted in the death of a passenger, a native, and while denying his presence or responsibility for the murder of the men buried alive, concluded by saying: "All my actions have been in pursuance to the orders of my superior officers."

That, at his discretion, the accused were authorized by his superiors to take the property and lives of his neighbors the evidence plainly shows, but those who are responsible for the written authority under which he acted, by the terms of that authority, revealed themselves as banditti and as men who, being outside the pale of all law, seek to rule solely by the terror they inspire by their inhuman deeds. Being therefore without any authority, no so-called insurgent general or chief can issue a lawful order in these islands, and they and all who execute their commands to kill and murder must expect the most extreme penalties.

In the foregoing cases of Eugenio Fernandez and Juan Soriano, natives, it appears of record that these accused were leaders of armed bands of outlaws with which the late notorious bandit chief, Vincente Prado, ordered and directed so many acts of kidnapping, robbery, and murder of law-abiding men, women, and children that his name, and that of these accused and others of the trusted leaders of the said Prado, became a terror to the inhabitants in La Union and Pangasinan provinces.

That these accused were principal actors in these crimes and guilty as found by the commission trying them there is no reasonable doubt.

In the foregoing case of Ambrosio Loreto it appears from the record that the accused was a member of a band of outlaws that entered the pueblo of Unisan, and, first murdering the father-in-law and a nephew of Antonio Maxino, then proceeded to kidnap and carry away the family of said Maxino, consisting of his wife, a daughter of 14 years, and three sons, one a mere infant. The accused appeared to be in command of the band, and then and there proclaimed himself "captain" and "king." Three days after the kidnapping of the family he was again present, with members of his band, in a secluded place in the forest, where the helpless wife and children were murdered with clubs, with which the band beat out their brains, the accused, with a club in his hands, aiding in inflicting the fatal blows.

No motive other than robbery appears of record to explain this barbarous slaughter of men, women, and children, in which the accused, it is plainly evident, actively and willingly engaged.

In the foregoing case of Isabello del Rosario, native, it appears that the accused, while exercising his authority as chief of a band of so-called insurgents, summarily condemned to death by burial alive one Leoncio Torres. His reasons therefor were that decedent was reported to be a horse thief and that two women informed him that he had made inquiries of them regarding the location of the insurgent forces, from which it was inferred he was an American secret-service man.

Many eyewitnesses testify to the horrible details by which a strong man in unabated vigor of life was, under the orders and in the personal presence of the accused, with fiendish cruelty, suffocated by the mass of earth heaped upon his prostrate body, in the grave especially prepared for the purpose.

Upon the stand the accused admitted there was no form of trial of his victim; admitted the resistance and protests of the young girl he is charged with carnally knowing, and practically admitted his part in extorting 9,000 pesos from Florentino Pamintuan. He, however, opposes his bare denial to giving the order to kill Torres and his presence at the newly dug grave when decedent was buried alive, and claimed his subordinate, Eusebio Rojas, did all this unknown to him, and denied also that he persisted to the actual consummation of the rape of the maid. That, however, he did issue the order for and witness the burial alive of the deceased, and that with the aid of two of his soldiers he did consummate the rape, there is no doubt.

In the foregoing case of Glecerio Villandres, Jacinto Gabona, Victoriano Lastamoso, and Damaso Javelina, natives, the department commander, in approving the sentence, remarked as follows:

"From the record in this case it appears that Juan Crisostomo Benedicto, an unoffending, law-abiding citizen of the pueblo of Jaro, had left his home for the purpose of calling on some friends in the pueblo; that when he returned to his house and gave the usual alarm at the front door, this alarm was answered by his servant, Glecerio Villandres, who took the bicycle from his master's hand; who, following him inside of the house, was immediately assaulted by Jacinto Gabona and Victoriano Lastamoso with bolos, and that as soon at Glecerio Villandres could dispose of his bicycle he immediately joined in the attack upon his employer with a bolo that he had taken from the kitchen table, and the three of them then and there assassinated the deceased upon the threshold of his own house, the fatal blow having been given by his own 'muchacho;' and that all of these, before assaulting him, were or had been employed by the deceased or members of his household.

"It appears that the money, watch, and other jewelry upon the person of the deceased was left intact, and further that there was no reason for any animus in the breasts of any of these assassins for the killing of the deceased. It does appear, however, that the fourth accused, Damaso Javelina, was a member of an association known as 'Ducots,' and further that the object of this society was to assassinate certain persons designated by it who consciously or unconsciously became the subject of their edicts, and that previous to the assassination of the deceased, at a meeting of this society in the pueblo of Jaro, which meeting was attended by the chief of this society and by the accused, Damasco Javelina, it was decided that the deceased should be killed, and that thereafter this chief sent and caused to be delivered to Damaso Javelina, twenty dollars ($20) in Mexican money, and also a pistol loaded with five cartridges. That before the assassination twenty dollars ($20) in Mexican currency was actually turned over by this Damaso Javelina to the other three accused who actually assassinated the deceased."

The society of "Ducots" to which the accused Damaso Javelina belonged is known in other localities as "Mandoducats," and organized to kill so-called "American spies," extends to the assassination of all natives friendly to the Americans. Deciding the deceased to be one of these, his death was formally determined upon. Damaso Javelina was chosen as the agent to undertake his assassination and he corrupted, procured, and hired the domestic servants of deceased to consummate the deed.

A more treacherous crime it would be difficult to conceive. The instruments employed were those holding positions of confidence within the home circle of the victim, who was under the protection of and in the near presence of the American troops and hence oblivious to any apprehensions of danger. The audacity and base nature that actuated these accused brand them as the lowest order of criminals—those who kill for hire, and in this instance for so small a sum each that an honest man might win it with a day's toil.

With such men the laws of civilization can have no compromise; to all kinds and classes of banditti the warning is given that all persons who, like the accused, take human life for hire, the laws designed to secure life and property and to maintain justice between man and man, now in force in these islands, require that the price they receive for their bloody trade shall be the price by which they also under the law forfeit their own lives.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Luis Plana, was a captain or "Jefe principal" of a band of outlaws known as the "Sandatahans," the members of which were bound together by an oath to collect contributions for the insurgents and to kill all who did not obey the orders of its chiefs. In pursuance of the band's methods one Luis Flores, in August, 1900, at the barrio of Paratong, Santa Catalina, was delivered, bound, by Luis Plana, to the three accused, Lazaro Reg, Eulogio Rebodan, and Severino Reboldela, with orders to take out the victim to a spot near the sea and kill him. The order was executed by the three accused last named, each stabbing deceased with sabers and daggers, at the brink of a grave in an isolated spot selected for his interment, and in which grave the victim was immediately thereafter buried.

In the foregoing case of Ubaldo Leonardo, Julio Boras, Engratio Demanjog, Luciano Ramonal, Ermonjenis Mansa, and Potenciano Nery, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears of record that these accused, armed with guns and bolos, entered the pueblo of Misamis, and, seizing a policeman of that place, carried him away by force to the house of one of these accused, where they tied him to a post and brutally beat him with a gun. The band then took their victim out upon the highway a short distance from Misamis, where they inflicted several fatal bolo wounds upon his body and left it lying lifeless upon the road with a paper pinned to the breast bearing the inscription: "Countrymen, don't imitate me, for I am an Americanista and have talked with the Americans." The evidence of many witnesses, fully corroborated by one of these accused from the witness stand, leaves no reasonable doubt that, as principals, they are all guilty of murder. With respect to four of these accused the commission has found otherwise, but confirms against these the charge of "Abduction with intent to do bodily injury."

In the foregoing case of Teborcio Mabola, native, it appears from the record that the accused belonged to a band of men armed with bolos and clubs that secretly assembled within the territory occupied by American troops and, watching its opportunity, attacked a party of four native policemen, who had been sent by the presidente of San Fernando to obtain wood for the use of a detachment of said troops; that they killed one of the policemen outright, and pursued the three other men as they fled for their lives and inflicted upon one of them wounds in consequence of which he lost an arm.

The friendly services being rendered the American troops appear as the evident motive for this murder. Such savage and inhuman methods of unlawful partisan warfare fall under the condemnation of all law, and, under the laws of war and military government, all who so offend are subject to the penalty of death.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Augustin Miranda, was the leader of an armed band of ladrones, whose unlawful operations were carried on in the vicinity of Santa Ana, San Luis, and adjacent localities. On or about November 29, 1899, the band, led by accused, ambushed, shot, and boloed to death and robbed of their money two brothers, Adelardo Alfaro and Ricardo Alfaro, the accused personally firing one of the fatal shots. On the 3d of February, 1899, the accused led his band against the country house of one Pascual Tison, set it afire, looted its contents, and carried off into the fields three daughters of the owner, from whom they also robbed their earrings, diamonds, and rings. Three days later the accused and his band attacked the town house of Pascual Tison and thoroughly sacked it. In the latter part of October, 1899, accused and two armed followers, prompted by his inamorata, who kept a gambling house, carried off and cruelly shot one José Rivera, who was then boloed until dead by the companions of accused, and this for the sole reason that their victim was unable at that time to pay his gambling debt.

In the foregoing cases of Mariano Aragon, Prudencio Llanes, Nicasio Llanes, Mamerto Llanes, Tomas Asinan, Fermin Cortes, Placido Quiton, Castor Alcausen, Laureano Querubin, and Catalino Natividad, natives, it appears of record that Mariano Aragon and Prudencio Llanes were two of a triumvirate of chiefs of an oath-bound band of armed men, styling themselves "Sandatahans" and of which all of these accused were members; that they appointed a chief executioner, assistant executioners, a requisite number of grave diggers, and then, with set purpose, proceeded to assassinate all persons who manifested reluctance to join them or to contribute of their means to their support or to the support of the insurrectos in the hills, whom the leaders of the band claimed they were serving. They operated secretly at night, the leaders usually selecting their victims one at a time, and, having first secured, conducted them to a secret rendezvous on a sandy beach covered with very tall grass where, by timely notice, the grave diggers had dug the number of graves required and the chief executioner and his assistants had assembled for their appointed work.

Here, in the presence of the assembled band, men and women, bound and helpless, were, from time to time, placed upon the brinks of their opened graves, their bodies run through with swords and bolos, and then buried. The members of the band would then separate, each going to his own home, trusting to the rise and fall of the near-by waters to slowly hide the traces of their work. These hideous operations were continued with industrious persistency through two months or more until the lengthening row of graves reached, in the language of one of the witnesses, "about thirty, more or less."

Why a populous community of men should calmly submit to gradual and certain extermination at the hands of a few men banded together for secret assassination, possessing no lawful authority and weak in numbers, can only be explained by those who prefer a reign of terror to the reign of wise, merciful, and equal laws.

In the foregoing case of Gregorio Degala, Bonificio Deseo, and Doroteo Degala, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears from the evidence that these accused belonged to an armed band of robbers that forced an entrance into and robbed the house of Alipio Delfin, taking therefrom money, jewelry, and other valuables, forced the inmates to come out and down from the house, bound and maltreated the men and brutally assaulted the women.

In the foregoing case of Anselmo Morales, native, it appears that the accused was the leader of a small band of men armed with bolos and two rifles, one of which was carried by the accused. That he had made a requisition or demand of chickens, rice, and other supplies for his band upon the barrio of Soso, which, being refused, he later, with his followers, entered the place and killed two men and one woman, and that he then and there proclaimed his reason for murdering them to be the refusal of the people of the barrio to obey his orders and provide him with supplies. When captured, and on subsequent occasions, the accused freely admitted this to be true, and that the murders were committed in compliance with the orders of his insurgent superior officer. Eyewitnesses of the murder confirm his admissions. As it does not appear that he could not have secured the supplies he unlawfully demanded without resort to taking the lives of his law-abiding neighbors, some of whom were also, doubtless, blameless of even refusing his unlawful demands, there is no escape from the conclusion that he acted more from vindictive and malicious motives than a belief, however mistaken, of justifiable necessity.

In the foregoing case of Felix Medina it appears that the accused was one of a band of armed insurgents who entered within the lines of the United States forces at San Nicolas, Cavite Province, and lay in ambush for the approach of Severino de Guia, vice-presidente of Bacoor, who was returning in a carromata with his two young sons from the fiesta of San Nicolas. On the approach of the carromata accused and his companions sprang out, struck the coachman senseless, and led off as a prisoner Severino de Guia, followed by the two lads. Arriving at the barrio of Pomplona, Las Pinas, the accused, who was one of two leaders, from a distance of about two paces opened fire and shot deceased in the presence of his children, who were standing in his immediate proximity. The body was then flung into a pile of rocks and the murderers moved off.

SENTENCE.—And the Commission does therefore sentence him, Eugenio Inasuria, native, "to be hung by the neck until he is dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, two-thirds of the Commission concurring therein."

In the foregoing case of Eugenio Inasuria, native, the accused was one of six armed men, who in the daytime seized two men in a house, dragged them therefrom, and after securing such valuables as they could find took their victims into the fields and with rifles and war bolos killed them.

In the foregoing case of Rufino Zamudio, Gilio Alicante, Isidro de la Llagas, Higino Agabo, Tranquilino Santiago, Nicholas San Buenaventura, and Pedro San Juan, natives, it appears from the record that Rufino Zamudio had been an insurgent soldier, and, while residing at Cabusao, conceived the idea of styling himself a chief; that, aided and abetted by two or three Tagalog insurgents and a few confederates of the barrio, he caused notice to be served upon the people to assemble at a given place in order to be presented to one General Santos, who would punish them if they failed to obey. Men, women, and children obeyed the mandate, and, in coming together, the men were told by the said Zamudio that they were required to take an oath to resist the Americans to the death. After the oath had been administered and the men made to kiss and pass under crossed swords, they were formed in ranks and given orders to take certain persons to another place, there to be presented to General Santos. As the evidence shows, the use of the name of General Santos by the leaders of this band of assassins was but a cruel deception whereby they veiled their sinister design of introducing their intended victims, by death, to another world. Their victims were selected from the relations and friends of a native pilot on a steamboat engaged between Manila and Nueva Caceres. Upon the slender pretext that this pilot must be an Americanista, eleven persons, among them one aged woman and four children of tender age, were taken into the fields, on their way to be presented to the fictitious General Santos, and there brutally assaulted with clubs and bolos until left for dead. Three of the victims revived, two succeeded in reaching succor and safety, while the other, being betrayed in the house she had reached, was again seized by three men—one of whom was Higino Agabo, of the accused—and her almost lifeless body taken on a carabao cart to the fields again, since when she has not been seen.

In the foregoing case of Faustino Mago and Fortunato Abanlog, natives, it appears that the former was the leader and the latter a member of an armed band of outlaws, which on about December 11, 1899, sequestrated and murdered by stabbing with daggers one Santiago Ramos, suspected of being an American spy. The actual killing was consummated by Faustino Mago and Fortunato Abanlog, the latter acting under the orders of the former, though undoubtedly a willing member of the band of outlaws and participator in its general criminal operations, but in this particular crime it is apparently shown in the case for the prosecution that he participated under the direct order and immediate coercion of Mago, who threatened him with his gun. This circumstance must be considered in fixing the degree of crime.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Querino Biday, was one of a band of five armed outlaws, who seized and carried off from the sitio of Taririg, Camarines Sur, one Donicio Noqui, who was subsequently accused of being a Macabebe and American spy, and upon his denial, the accused plunged a dagger into his heart from the effects of which he died.

In the foregoing case of Pedro Mercado, Victoriano de O'Campo, Martin Gamboa, and Magno Simbulan, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears that in obedience to the orders of a local outlaw or guerrilla chief these accused, while following the usual avocations of peace, kidnapped a Macabebe because he was "working for the Americans," and, taking him beyond the sight of the passersby, stabbed him to the heart with a dagger. Armed followers of the chief stood by to witness the execution. As in many like cases where the temporarily impressed followers of the chiefs of banditti do murder, it is impracticable to define the degree of willing acquiescence or the extent of the duress under which they act. It is known that these chiefs hold over their followers the threat of death, which they are swift to execute upon the disobedient. Moved apparently by these considerations, the department commander, in approving the sentence, has recommended its commutation to life imprisonment in the cases of all these accused except one.

In the foregoing case of Juan Aganon, Cosme Salmos, Antonio Taguinaldo, Juan Pagaragan, Cecilio Manavis, and Fausto Manavis, it appears that these accused, prompted by the secret accusations of the Katipunans to the effect that their victim was an American spy, lured Esteban Versosa, chief of police of the pueblo of Pura, province of Tarlac, to the outskirts of the town on the pretext of necessity for visiting his guard, and there boloed him to death. The actual participation in this crime by all of these accused is fully established by direct evidence, and they offer no evidence, explanation, or statement to meet the proof.

In the foregoing case of Fructuoso Sembrano, native, it appears of record that the accused had taken the oath of allegiance to and the office of presidente local of the pueblo of Gerona, Tarlac, under the Government of the United States; that thereafter, in secret ways, he devoted his abilities to furthering the cause of the insurrection, until being suspected of treachery and criminal misdeeds, he fled to the hills and engaged in active warfare against the Government he had sworn to support.

For his fidelity to the insurgent cause he was rewarded with the office of civil and military governor of Pangasinan. In his new capacity as an insurgent chief, he issued instructions to his subordinates, from which the following extracts are taken:

"Also order all persons in your jurisdiction to employ great astuteness in trying to capture arms from the enemy, and if any of the enemy are in the habit of taking a walk, your people must try to kill him and take his arms. You will immediately advise me the name of the person who captured the arms, that I may advise our government. The money that may be found on the enemy must be given to the brother (Katipunan) who obeyed this order. Return this order and comply. November 14, 1900."

"MOUNT BINGBATO, September 9, 1900.

"To the chief of the town of Pura:

"By this present I nominate you chief of this town, and you may from this date order its affairs and inhabitants. You will follow strictly the following rules: 1. Make out an act signed by all the brotherhood, using their nicknames, that they will defend the cause of their mother country. 2. Cause all those to disappear who oppose this measure or who become traitors to our holy cause. 7. The town that does not revolt with us will be at once destroyed and the people punished accordingly. 10. All secret spies will be killed (translated 'murdered') or sent alive to this camp."

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, José Avila and Paulino Casio, natives, in company with a band of outlaws, entered the houses of one Juan Legaspi, at the pueblo Iriga, in the nighttime, actuated by no higher motive than robbery and degenerate cruelty and inhumanity, boloed to death five natives, including a child 3 years of age and a young girl 11; cut, wounded, and tortured three women, one small girl, and one man, with the intent to kill them.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Hermanagildo Viscara and Ramon Nicomedes, natives, were members and officials of a band of assassins whose purpose was to inspire the community in which it operated with obedience to its will through terror by secretly assassinating those coming within its displeasure. In pursuance of this purpose, it is shown that these two accused sequestrated and conveyed to an unoccupied house at Pozorrubio, Pangasinan, one Calistro Fernandez, and there killed him by choking and crushing in his skull with some cutting weapon. They then compelled natives to convey the body to an isolated spot, where the legs of the victim were cut off, the body doubled up and forced into a shallow hole, head foremost, and then covered with earth. The motive of the crime is found in the fact that deceased was too friendly to the Americans and had acted as a guide for them.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Pedro Abad Santos, native, was the adjutant, secretary, and adviser of General Hizon, the insurgent political military governor of Pampanga Province, having "command of everything" therein, and that the military authority of accused arose from this connection. It appears that this accused was present at the barrio of San Rafael during the month of May, 1900, together with two insurgent officers of the line, Lieut. Eusebio Rojas and Capt. Isabello del Rosario, the last being in command of the detachment of insurgent troops there stationed; that a native, Leoncio Torres, was brought a prisoner before these three officers, charged with being an American spy, and by them condemned to death by burying alive. The victim, with arms bound behind him, begged of this accused for mercy and was answered by a blow, which knocked him down, and an order to the soldiers to take him out and bury him, which was done.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Gregorio Decasin, was an active member of an armed band of outlaws that entered the pueblo of Malasiqui, Pangasinan, November 23, 1899, seized and bound the presidente of the town, the justice of the peace, and five cabezas or headmen, conveyed them to a point at the outskirts of the town, and there murdered them by shooting, stabbing, and cutting with guns, bayonets, and bolos. The motive was robbery and retaliation for friendliness on the part of the murdered men for the American Government.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Doroteo Orbino, Juan Seraloy, Domingo Seraloy, and Jose Tambalgui, natives, were members of a band of outlaws operating in the vicinity of Pozorrubio and terrorizing the inhabitants into submission to their rule by the assassination of various members of the community. Accused, Doroteo Orbino, was a captain; Jose Tambalgui, a lieutenant, and Juan Seraloy and Domingo Seraloy, so-called soldiers of this band.

These four accused, about March 10, 1900, sequestrated, killed, and beheaded with bolos, two natives, Vicente de la Cruz and Felisardo Pasag, accused of being "Americanistas," such charge being founded on the fact that these victims had been in the habit of supplying beef for the American garrison. After the killing these accused forced several of the natives to carry the bodies to an isolated spot and cast them into the mud on the banks of a stream, where they were subsequently found and identified. No denial of the deed is made by these accused, three of them simply resting their defense upon the statement that they were soldiers of accused, Doroteo Orbino, and that they acted under his orders through personal fear.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Benito Dorotan, native, attacked and killed with a dagger one Feliz Buenaventura, on the alleged ground that deceased was an "Americanista." It also appears that this accused in frequent prior declarations declared his intention of killing deceased and several other natives accused by him of being friendly to the Americans.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Benancio Cueto, alias Venancio Queto, alias Captain Benancio, was a reputed captain of insurgents and captured in a barricaded native house at Bay, Laguna Province, armed and accompanied by two of his followers. No evidence of his violation of the laws of war, as specified under the first charge, appears of record, and, indeed, two of the specifications under that charge do not state facts sufficient to constitute a crime. For these reasons the findings of the commission on the first charge and its specifications were properly disapproved by the department commander.

Under the additional charge of murder, it appears that the accused, together with an armed band of insurgents, shot to death, at his residence at Bay, Laguna Province, Domingo Punsalan, presidente of the pueblo, for no other apparent motive than the fact that his victim had accepted the office of presidente under the American Government.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Noverto Pré, was a lieutenant-colonel of insurgents, and that he personally killed by stabbing in the neck with a poniard one Claudio Orpilla, because the victim did not desire to join the insurgents. It also appears that the accused wantonly murdered two other natives December 2, 1900, because they were suspected of being spies of the Americans. All three murders were wantonly committed by the accused in person.

In the foregoing case of Augustin Botobara, native, it appears that the accused was one of a band of ununiformed men claiming to be insurgents, who lay in wait in a barrio of Barotoc for a police officer; that one of the band assailed this officer as he was entering the door of a house from the top of the steps leading thereto; that the blow felled deceased, his body falling to the ground, when the accused dispatched him with a bolo and afterwards superintended the burial of his body. The crime is one of a long series of like deliberately planned assassinations of men friendly to the American Government and in policy or purpose is so wanton and cruel that clemency can not be exercised in cases of those participating therein.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Pio Balugbug, native, voluntarily joined a band of armed outlaws operating in the province of Misamis, Mindanao, and on or about January 8, 1901, captured and murdered a native, Luciano Magdales, accused of being a spy for the Americans, and in conjunction with another outlaw stabbed him to death with daggers. The crime is fully proven and not denied by the accused, who, however, seeks to justify it on the plea that he was acting under orders of a superior. That superior denies that he gave orders for the death of the victim, but if he had it would constitute no defense in law. Men being banded together for the commission of crime are all principals in the execution thereof.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Eusabio Rabanal, was the leader of a band of outlaws; that he caused to be seized and bound one Guillermo Crisostomo, suspected of being an American sympathizer at Batac, Ilocos Norte, in February, 1900, and handing his dagger to a member of his band directed him to kill Crisostomo under penalty of death in case of refusal.

The killing was accordingly consummated in the presence of accused and under his direction.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Tedorico Cuyanan, was one of a band of armed insurgents which, on October 14, 1900, forcibly entered the house of Jacinto Salunga and Pedro Salunga, at San Juan, Mexico, Pampanga, bound them and buried them alive in an isolated spot in the vicinity, the alleged motive being that the victims were spies for the Americans.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Gregorio Ybasco and Agapito Tucay, were active and directing members of a band of armed outlaws, organized for robbery and assassination; that they seized, bound, and robbed eight peaceable natives at San Nicolas, Pangasinan, in December, 1899, conveyed them to an isolated spot on the banks of a river, where seven men were assassinated with guns and bolos, because suspected of being friendly to the Americans. The eighth prisoner escaped by slipping into the river, bound as he was, and, climbing to a log of wood, floating downstream. No doubt of the guilt of these accused arises from the evidence and no mitigating circumstance suggests clemency.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Francisco Celedonio, a commandant of guerrillas, with 20 followers, on December 20, 1899, entered the town of Cabugao, Ilocos Sur, then within the occupation of the United States troops and under United States government, seized and bound several inhabitants, including Basilio Noviega, presidente, and Benigno Sison; caused these last two to be bayoneted to death and affixed to their foreheads a paper bearing the inscription "Traidor de la Patria."

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Enfrasio de la Cruz, alias Clemente de la Cruz, was a controlling member of a band of armed outlaws that seized, bound, maltreated, and carried off as prisoners two natives, Leandro Fernandez and Roman Martin, near Camiling, Tarlac, October 21, 1900, then delivered them to a band of ladrones, who killed them for their friendliness to the Americans. Again, this accused and his band, impelled by like motives, on November 11, 1900, seized and bound one Hilario Antonio, held him prisoner for twenty-four hours and then murdered him with bolos.

In the foregoing case it appears of record that Egino Gamurot, one of the accused, was a corporal of police at Victoria, Tarlac, and by virtue of his authority over the other accused, Vicente Encarnacion, Cayetano Antonio, and Vicente Gabuni, who were also policemen, ordered them to assist him in arresting two natives, Simplicio and Angelino Daniel, which being accomplished they took their captives to the fields, where the accused Gamurot, without further assistance from the other accused, conducted the deceased to a still greater distance and when beyond observation killed them with a bolo. The motive for this murder is found in the accusation that the deceased had given information to the Americans regarding the location of an insurgent camp.

In the foregoing case it appears that the defendant, José Antienza, was associated with an armed band of outlaws, not a part of any recognized military organization, and that he, with others, at Capas, Tarlac, October 31, 1900, seized, bound, and conveyed to a newly prepared grave one Manuel Dantes, suspected of friendliness to the Americans. Here the accused personally shot Dantes through the head from behind while the latter was bound and helpless.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Felix Atienza, native, was a leader of an armed band of outlaws, directing its operations, in violation of the laws of war, against the peaceful inhabitants of the pueblo of Capas; that he ordered and caused to be consummated the murder with bolos of an unarmed and bound native, Civilio Lombay, at the brink of a newly-made grave near the sitio of Sampaloc, Tarlac, on the suspicion of the victim being a spy of the Americans; that, again, he similarly and for like motive, caused two Igorrotes to murder two natives, Eusebio Ramos and Clesento Ramos, and on another occasion he caused one Manuel Dantes to be bound, conveyed to the brink of a grave, and shot from behind by the brother of accused.

In the foregoing case it appears that accused, Francisco Dizon and Pedro Layug, in company of other armed outlaws, under the command of accused Francisco Dizon, and acting under his direct orders, carried one Juan Rojas, suspected of being friendly to the Americans, to an isolated spot and there killed him with a dagger.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Simplicio Alfonso and Juan de la Cruz, were insurgent lieutenants at Tepangbuhe, Concepcion, Tarlac; the former the senior and the latter the junior, that both of these accused ordered their soldiers to capture and kill one Esteban Carlos, suspected of being a spy of the Americans, and such order was duly executed, the accused, Juan de la Cruz, being present at its consummation.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Juan Barcena, in company of an armed band of outlaws, at the places and on or about the times alleged, seized, bound, and murdered, with bolos, a native, Fito Balisalisa, suspected of friendliness to the Americans; that he and his band shot to death with rifles another native, Pedro Arbilla, and that he personally shot and killed with a rifle a child of one Braulio Bustamente, because the latter was unable to meet the demand of accused for a contribution of rice.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Tomas Bacolor, Emeterio del Rosario, and Andres Rebillido, in the barrio of San Andres, pueblo of Victoria, Tarlac, about September, 1900, seized and conveyed to an isolated spot a native man, a woman, and a boy, and then and there murdered them with bolos, on the alleged suspicion that the victims were spies of the Americans.

In the foregoing case of Florentino Garbo, native, it appears that the accused was an ununiformed boloman, as were the men of arms-bearing age generally in Santa Cruz; that he was under the command of insurgent officers whenever called by them from his usual peaceful occupations to assist in criminal depredations upon the community. In this instance the deceased was a very lame man and had come from a neighboring barrio to that of Quinsabungen on a friendly visit. Here he was forcibly seized in the house of his entertainers, accused of being a spy, and without hearing or form of trial, in open day and and in the most public manner, hurried to the near-by forest and there killed and buried.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Francisco Peralta, was a leader of an armed band of men living within the lines of the United States forces. Wearing by day the ordinary native dress and seemingly following peaceful occupations, the band came together at night, or, in localities not immediately occupied by American troops, by day and night, for the purpose chiefly, it appears, of summarily killing those of their neighbors who were friendly to the American Government.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Deogracias Doria and Roque Doria, in company with an armed band of outlaws, seized, bound, and conveyed to an isolated spot on the banks of the Matabuey River four native policemen, three of whom they shot and boloed to death and threw into the river. The fourth was boloed, but not fatally, and also thrown into the river. Subsequently he escaped, and appears as a witness herein for the prosecution.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Aniceta Angeles, native, a leader of a band of insurgents, ordered and caused to be murdered with bayonets one Faustino Ressurrecion, a peaceful native of Namacpacan, Union Province, on the alleged suspicion that the victim acted as a spy of the Americans. No reasonable doubt as to the guilt of accused arises from the record, and his own admissions on the stand fully establish his criminal responsibility for the deed charged. The victim was in no sense a spy, was kidnaped within the American lines, and murdered without a trial or hearing.

In the foregoing case it appears that Tomas Torres and Fermin Directo, two of the accused, in company of other armed outlaws, sequestrated and conveyed to an isolated spot one Mariano Peralta, who was friendly to the Americans. There the victim was murdered by a blow in the head with a palma brava club and his throat cut with a knife, both of the said accused participating in the consummation of the crime. The accused Timoteo Viloria is not shown to have been connected with the crime.

In the foregoing case of Perfecto Flores, native, it appears by the evidence that the accused was one of a band of men wearing ordinary dress, who lay in wait for the two tailors who were working for the soldiers of Pasay cavalry barracks, and seizing them as they were going home in the evening from their day's work, killed deceased and took the other, Domingo Tancio, captive, in the manner and form as charged. It also appears from the documentary evidence filed in the case that these crimes were committed in compliance with orders received from insurgent chiefs. The sole case of offense appears to have grown out of the fact that their victims were earning a livelihood by taking service as tailors for the American soldiers. The wanton killing of a peaceful man the dullest intelligence can comprehend is not war, but must in truth be characterized as the most cowardly form of murder. Such murder disgraces any cause in the name of which it is done, and marks all who engage in it, from the chief giving the order to the follower who executes it, as assassins, dangerous to friend and foe alike, and rightly classes them under the laws of war as enemies of mankind. Upon all such offenders the best good of humanity demands that the law shall take its course.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Leoncio Macalaguin, Leoncio Tabordan, Ananias Abillanosa, Pascual Tabordan, and Laureano Palmadres, natives, in company of an armed band of robbers, entered the house of one Tomas Ragudo, first seized, bound, and hung up by a rope his son, then finding the father and mother, tied their elbows behind their backs and hung them to a rafter in their house. They then demanded money from Tomas Ragudo, and unsatisfied with the amount he yielded up, proceeded to wrap rags saturated with oil about his feet and legs and set them afire. From a half hour to two hours the torture was continued, accompanied with blows from butts of rifles, flats of bolos, and fists, and the young daughter of the victim was struck down by a blow from a bolo over the head. For five days the victim lingered in agony from the effects of his burns and then died.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Eulogio Alomia, alias Toyo, at the pueblo of Biñan, province of Laguna, P. I., about July 8, 1900, kidnapped from his house one Mateo Carabo, and thereafter killed him with a dagger. It further appears that accused was one of the official executioners appointed by and acting under the orders of Lieut. Col. Eustacio Castelltor, but the crime was not committed in the immediate presence of said Castelltor, and it does not appear that accused had not ample opportunity to avoid obedience to this illegal order and seek protection from the American authorities.

As illustrative of the methods pursued by his superior officers, the following quotation is taken from a written confession of the accused, made in the presence of witnesses, prior to his trial and admitted by him on his trial to be true and correct: "I carried a letter of authorization * * * to act as a special agent, which means authority to commit murder. Each time a murder was ordered, a letter was sent to one of (above named) four men, by one of the chiefs (naming them). Afterwards the letter was taken up and burned. * * * If a man did not pay his contribution to the insurgent co lector he was ordered to be killed." This confession is so in line with numberless well-established cases that its substantial truth may be accepted with little doubt.

In the foregoing cases it appears that these accused, Ciriaco Rivilleza and Mariano Belarmino, in company of a band of outlaws, laid in ambush for the approach of a patrol of three native policemen, of whom deceased was one, and on the approach of this patrol sprang out and captured deceased, Marcelo Gasal. A few days afterwards the body of deceased was found in a neighboring river, weighted with a heavy rock and containing many wounds, one through the heart and one in the neck.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Leon Obras, Tomas Oriente, Mateo Oballes, Gregorio Lopez, Severino Directo, and Geronimo Orine, under the leadership of the first named, repaired to the house of one Hugo Mendoza, at Balaoan, Union, in February, 1900, seized, bound, and conveyed said Mendoza to the fields, and there accused Obras killed him with a bolo, because the victim was suspected of friendliness to the Americans.

In the foregoing case it appears by the evidence that the accused, Lucas Claudio, was a lieutenant of insurgents living as an ordinary citizen in the environs of Manila at Pasay, and in a neighborhood noted for the treasonable and turbulent character of its residents; that his band of ununiformed followers on about the 3d day of October, 1900, lay in wait for two natives who were returning in the evening from their day's work as tailors for the American garrison of Pasay Barracks, and, seizing them, killed one upon the spot and took the other to the house of the accused, where under threats of death if he complained to the authorities or left the premises, he was practically deprived of his liberty and made to work at his trade for his captors for several months and until the band was broken up by the police force of Manila.

In the foregoing case it appears that these accused, Diego de Guzman and Feliciano Borja, in company of a band of outlaws, of which the former was leader, seized and carried away to the fields, near the barrio of San Nicolas, Nueva Ecija, the wife and daughter of the sergeant of police of San Isidro, and killed and murdered these two women by cutting and stabbing them with bolos.

It further appears by the evidence in the case of the accused, Diego de Guzman, that the dead bodies of two men, one a cousin and the other a coachman of the sergeant of police, were found lying dead with the bodies of the murdered women. From this fact the conclusion is forced upon the mind that these men were killed by violence and for the same motive which inspired the murder of the women, to wit, to inflict an appalling vengeance upon a man who had taken office under American authority.

SENTENCE.—And the commission does therefore sentence him, the said Wenceslao, alias Estanislao Rosales, "to be hung by the neck until he is dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may direct, all of the members concurring therein."

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Estanislao Rosales, about April 17, 1900, in company of an armed band of outlaws, seized and bound three native policemen who had been sent from Laoag to San Nicolas, Ilocos Norte, on duty, there took them before a priest to be confessed and then flinging them alive into a well, filled up the same with dirt, thus causing their death. Their acceptance of service under American rule is the apparent motive for their barbarous murder.

In the foregoing case of Francisco Braganza, native, it appears that this accused had been a lieutenant of police of San Fernando and recently appointed a major in the insurgent forces. That at Minalabag a party, by roll call, of 173 Spanish prisoners were delivered to him for the ostensible purpose of being conducted to a place of greater security from the approaching American troops. It appears that from high sources of authority among the insurgent chiefs the most stringent orders had been given to prevent their rescue by the Americans.

At the time the accused took charge of these prisoners they were footsore, weary, and half starved; their hurried marching and large number apparently overtaxing the available means of support which the presidentes of the pueblos through which they passed had at their ready disposal.

Apprehension of the sudden appearance of the American troops caused confusion and disorder among the guard and police which composed the escort, under the orders of the accused, who, on the 23d day of February, 1900, the morning following the day he assumed charge of the escort, proceeded to have the arms of his prisoners bound at the elbows with cords drawn across their backs, so as to render them comparatively helpless. This was the first act of unmistakable indignity imposed upon the prisoners, who, up to this time, had been treated with some kindness. Knowing the habits of the people in whose hands they were, to bind and make helpless one doomed to death, the prisoners must have readily interpreted its sinister meaning. The next act of the accused was to cause the prisoners to be searched for money and valuables and to appropriate the lion's share to himself. The prisoners were then told off in detachments of 10 men, more or less, with a suitable guard placed over each. They were then conducted to the rice fields, a short interval being preserved between the detachments. At a preconcerted signal, the blowing of a whistle by accused, the guards fell upon their victims and slaughtered them with daggers, bolos, clubs, and spears, the accused standing by, encouraging, directing, and urging on the barbarous assault.

Those of the victims who were strong enough, bound as they were, made a break for liberty, and accused ordered them pursued and killed. On the following morning it was reported to accused that thirty of the escaped prisoners had been recaptured at Lupi, whereupon he proceeded there, ordered them bound, conveyed to the woods, and again the scenes of the preceding day were enacted. Returning to Lupi, accused found another party of his recaptured victims, and these in turn, were bound and led to death.

In the foregoing case of Timoteo Dhalan, alias Doroteo del Rosario, it appears that the accused was a major of guerrillas of the so-called insurgent forces; that on the 30th day of October, 1900, one of his subordinates, First Lieut. Manuel Gonzales, successfully ambushed a detachment of the Thirty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers, taking five soldiers prisoners, and with the prisoners one Señor José Buencamino, presidente of San Miguel de Mayumo. The accused, having had report of the foregoing, sent orders to his subordinate, which appear by translated copies below:

"Señor First Lieut. Manuel Gonzales and Capt. Dionisio Santos:

"Inside of twelve hours you will report to me what has happened in the ambuscade that you have done; at what hour, in which place, how many they were, how many rifles captured, and also prisoners, and if José Buencamino, of San Miguel, was with them. With great care you will obey the following:

"First. Separate José Buencamino from the Americans, and with these Americans do as if you were to take them to the general; but when you reach the tall grass do with them what we are accustomed to do; but I strictly recommend to you not to let anyone know, even to our soldiers, but to those of much confidence and with the lips shut.

"Second. To José Buencamino do with him what you know the suffering of the reason in a hidden place, and take great care with the woman, so she may not escape.

"Third. Once you have done all these, give me a report of all that has happened in the ambuscade, so I may make the report to the general; what captains and officers were present, so that I may make the recommendations.

"God keep your life many years.

"The chief major of the guerrillas:

"TIMOTEO DHALAN.

"Now November 1, 1900."

Three days later the accused sent the following:

"Señor First Lieut. MANUEL GONZALES:

"I have received your communication for Captain Santos, and when you receive this you will obey, without excuse, the following:

"First. Once the prisoners are in the place where the enemy do not pass do with them what I have ordered; but no one must know, even many soldiers; only those who will do it; do not use bullets, but daggers. Buencamino must not know of this.

"Second. If Buencamino would request you anything, treat him well and that I will go there very soon; but you are responsible if he escapes. What you are going to do with the prisoners should be far from Buencamino, and he must not know.

"Third. Give to each of our soldiers undershirts.

"Fourth. I repeat you again that to hide Buencamino well, also our rifles, separate them from the places where the enemy pass, so that they may not be captured. Hereafter you should be more careful.

"You will receive five pesos for the soldiers.

"God keep your life many years.

"The chief major of the guerrillas.

"T. DHALAN.

"Now November 3, 1900.

"P. S.—What you should tell Buencamino is that the prisoners will be taken to the general; but do what I have ordered."

In the foregoing cases it appears that these accused, Pedro Atendido and Cornelio Largo, in company of and consorting with an armed band of tulisanes, killed with bolos, rifles, and daggers eleven members of the Echevarria family at Naro, Masbate, August 14, 1900, for the sole reason that the victims were Spaniards. Women and children were included in the killings, and the dead bodies were subsequently tied up in sacks and thrown into the river.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Juan Olivar, was the leader of a band of ladrones that made an attack upon the house of Teodoro Labrador, then presidente of Mina, Panay, captured him, his brother, wife, grandmother, godmother, small daughter, and a policeman. The grandmother, godmother, and daughter were shot to death in the vicinity of the capture, Labrador, his wife, and the policeman were conveyed to an isolated spot and killed with bolos, while the brother affected his escape. Incidentally the accused and his band robbed Labrador of 78 carabao, 1 cow, 800 pesos, 2 guns, and 1 revolver.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Ygnacio Siaotong, was an insurgent leader of volunteers operating against the American Government after having taken the oath of allegiance to that Government; that on September 15, 1900, at Barotac Nuevo, Panay, he forcibly seized a native woman suspected of friendliness to the Americans and caused his followers to convey her to an isolated spot in the fields, where a newly made grave had been prepared. Into this grave his victim was made to lie down and be suffocated with the earth filled in upon her.

In the foregoing case it appears that the accused, Luis Bernabe, an insurgent sergeant, in company of soldiers under his command, seized at Culoong, San José, Bulacan, about October 31, 1900, two natives suspected of friendliness to the Americans, conveyed them to an insurgent camp and there stabbed them to death.

In the foregoing case of Gabino Santa Inez, native, it appears from the evidence that the accused was a captain of insurgents; that in April, 1900, two muchachos, one a servant of an American presidente, were delivered to him as prisoners, and merely because they were suspected of being Americanistas he caused them to be first hung up until nearly dead and then dispatched them by shooting them with firearms.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Nasario Valle, a commissioner of the Katipunan Society at Ibung, Nueva Viscaya, compelled the inhabitants to take the oath of that organization, issued orders that all who should refuse to follow the dictates of the same should suffer death, and in pursuance of such orders did in fact cause to be killed in the following barbarous manner: Tiburcio Baltazar and Juan Oarang, by beating them to death; Eulalio Saridon, by burying him alive; and Raymunda Alejo and Federica Asuncion, native women, by burning at the stake.

In the foregoing case of Baltizar Saldivar it appears that the accused was an active member of an armed band of outlaws commanded by one Julio Roda, engaged in depredations, robberies, and assassinations in and near Jiminez, province of Misamis, which band was sworn to "war to the knife" against all friendly to the Americans; that he personally aided and participated in the murder of an unknown native at Macpan by stabbing and cutting him to death with knives and bolos, actuated by a suspicion that the victim was an American spy, and that he similarly and with like motive killed one Santiago Maglipac at San Vicente, pueblo of Oroquieta, Misamis.

In the foregoing case it appears that this accused, Roberto Sangalang, was one of a band of armed outlaws that went to the house of Tito Balisalesa, at Balanbag, P. I., in the nighttime, and, after calling him out, shot and boloed him to death, on the suspicion that he was an American spy, and that the accused personally struck and cut the victim with his bolo.

SENTENCE.—And the Commission does therefore sentence them, Simplicio Molina and Dionicio Tabay, each and both of them, "to be hung by the neck until dead, at such time and place as the reviewing authority may designate, two-thirds of the members of the Commission concurring therein." In the foregoing case it appears that these two accused, Simplicio Molina and Dionicio Tabay, at or near Santo Domingo, Ilocos Sur, in January, 1901, seized one Teodorico Gallardo, suspected of being an American spy, and while one held the victim the other stabbed him to death with a dagger.

In the foregoing case it appears that these five accused, José Santa Maria, Alberto de los Santos, Donato Ariones, Carlos Quinones, and Fulgencio de la Cruz, and other armed outlaws and participators in its crimes, seized, bound, and carried away from the barrio of Cabusao, Camarines Sur, five native men and four women, two of whom were mere children. Conveying them to isolated spots these accused, José Santa Maria, Donato Ariones, and Fulgencio de la Cruz, viciously assaulted them with bolos and clubs and with intent to kill, and did, in fact, kill Pedro Vicente, Euduviges Guerrera (a girl), Valerio Guerrera, Cabaltea, a man named Alejandro, and a woman, Aquilina, while the woman and girl, Euphemia Tortones and Maria Guerrera, were grievously wounded and left for dead where they fell. No other motive for this barbarous crime other than that of attempted intimidation of the community and enforced recognition of the authority of these accused as so-called insurgents and "defenders of their country" appears of record.

In the foregoing case of Silvestre Bollecer, Graciano Bolosanes, and Francisco Carlos, natives, who were jointly tried, it appears that a party of natives, men and women living in Alang Alang, went into the country in the near vicinity of said pueblo for the purpose of digging camotes and securing other means of leaving; that while engaged in loading their carabaos with the result of their labor, they were approached by a band of bolomen, of whom Silvestre Bollecer and Graciano Bolosanes were active and aggressive members; and first accusing these people of being Americanistas because they lived in Alang Alang under American authority and protection, made a murderous assault upon and killed four of them. They then seized and drove away seven carabaos belonging to their victims. For such wanton crime the laws, both of war and peace, fix the penalty of death.

In the foregoing case of Vicente Castanieto, Maximino Gumangan, Timoteo Carbonel, and Rufino Ofalla, natives, it appears from the evidence that these accused had been appointed representatives of one Valle, who had recently appeared in the province of Nueva Viscaya as a commissioner of the Katipunan society; that he claimed and exercised despotic powers over the people, and with the aid of his newly appointed officers, these accused, he proceeded to establish respect for his authority by committing the barbarous crimes of burning to death helpless women and murdering with savage cruelty two law-abiding men in the manner and form as charged.

This case is but an example of many others where "commissioners" have been sent forth by the Katipunan chiefs, which is but another form of designation of the chiefs of insurrection with instructions to terrorize peaceful communities into taking the oath of the Katipunan society and joining hands with the so-called guerrilla, but now degenerate, bands, whose chief occupation is robbery, enforced by murder and assassination of their own people. Patriotism long since ceased to be the guiding motive of these bands. The number of men and women who have been destroyed by their own countrymen under guise of making war upon the American forces now reaches high into the thousands, and the work of these cowardly assassins, now misnamed insurrectos, still goes on in a few districts where they profess to be making war against the United States, but where, in fact, they engage only in terrorizing the people into the surrender of enough property to enrich the leaders and support their ignorant and vicious followers.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, at the beginning of the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], he gave us notice that he would decline to yield to any interruption. This, of course, the Senator had a perfect right to do; but now, at the conclusion of his remarks, I may with propriety call the attention of the Senate to what I really said, and to which the Senator, by a partial quotation, undertook to make response.

I used this language, Mr. President, in some remarks which I had the honor to make and to which the Senator has made allusion:

I am loath to hold up to criticism the men who take their lives in their hands and go out and fight the battles of the Republic, who are willing to take upon themselves those responsibilities which may end only in death or in honor; I am unwilling, without conclusive proof of the fact, to presume that any one of the men who have gone out and have actually done battle in the Philippine Islands ever conceived this line of policy which has recently been carried out there.

Mr. President, the Senator quoted this language from some remarks which I made:

My God, Senators, will anyone rise and tell me when and where among the most barbaric peoples you ever read such an act of brutality as that? When was anything like that disclosed elsewhere upon the face of the earth?

And other language followed it, which was quoted by the Senator from Massachusetts. That language, Mr. President, had reference to a military order which I quoted from the official records laid before us by the Secretary of War, and from which we have this language:

In addition to this punishment, any presidente or cabeza discovered to be concealing or protecting the enemy or furnishing false information or guides may be impressed as guides themselves and may be marched on foot daily at the head of columns or detachments until they have had a drastic lesson.

These people were to be taken out and marched in front of the expedition on foot, until they had "a drastic lesson," and to receive the shots that might be aimed at the soldiers belonging to the expedition. I wondered if anything of that kind had ever happened in the annals of history. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is a historian; I do not profess to be. He has already convicted me of the fact that I am not a historian, and I plead guilty; but that Senator, who is so good a historian, failed to give an instance in history of the kind that is contemplated in this official order which I read to the Senate.

The Senator has called attention to other acts of atrocity and cruelty which have prevailed elsewhere in the world, but he has alluded to nothing of this kind, and nothing of this kind that I know of has ever been called to my attention. Of course, it may have escaped me, but it would not have escaped the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator quoted this language employed by me:

Mr. President, I do not believe that Bell himself ever conceived this iniquity; this outline of policy. Perhaps it may have been Chaffee, who received his education in savagery and in cruelty and in barbarity over in China, etc.

Following that is the language which I have already quoted:

I am loath to hold up to criticism the men who take their lives in their hands and go out and fight the battles of the Republic, who are willing to take upon themselves those responsibilities which may end only in death or in honor. I am unwilling, without conclusive proof of the fact, to presume that any one of the men who have gone out and have actually done battle in the Philippine Islands ever conceived this line of policy which has recently been carried out there.

But, Mr. President, here is a line of policy outlined by American officers in the Philippines in their orders to their subordinates to which I made allusion. It may be that these orders were necessary to the pacification of the Philippine Islands; it may be that our army in the islands under the command of Otis, under the command of MacArthur, and finally under the command of Chaffee, came to the conclusion that no other policy would be effectual for the subjugation or pacification of those people than the destruction of their homes and the extermination of the inhabitants.

That seems to be the conclusion at which these Army officers arrived. These instances of torture, of the infliction of the water cure in different parts of the islands, were frequent and of such common repute that it was well known throughout the archipelago that it was but a part of the general policy which it was deemed necessary to employ in order to accomplish the subjugation of those people and the pacification of those islands. That may be an arraignment of the Army of the United States; but I do not charge these cruelties to the Army of the United States.

The Senator from Massachusetts seeks in vain in this Senate to have us make an accusation which we do not make, namely, that the responsibility for these things rests upon the Army of the United States. The Senator would have better made an effort to follow this policy to its original source, and to have fixed the responsibility where it properly belongs. He has truly said that cruel torture has been inflicted upon American soldiers in the Philippine Islands. No one denies it. He admits that American soldiers have inflicted cruel torture upon the inhabitants of the islands, and no one can dispute it. He says the Army of the United States have been performing a duty which was incumbent upon them, and for which they are not responsible. I admit it. I then raised the query—and it was but a query—that possibly these orders emanated from Chaffee; but, Mr. President, I do not think Chaffee is responsible in any degree for these orders and for this line of policy which has been pursued.

I desire now and here to exonerate him and every other officer in the Philippine Islands. The Army of the United States and these officers have been the victims of that policy, and those Filipinos over there, whom we have been unable to protect against the assaults and cruelties of their former compatriots, their brethren and their friends—those American soldiers who, performing a thankless and unhonored task, have gone down to unhallowed graves; those officers, upon whom will ever rest the stain of the promulgation of the military orders to which I was compelled to make allusion in the remarks which I presented to the Senate, in order that the truth of history might be made manifest and that the iniquity of this policy might be disclosed to the American people, not for partisan ends—God forbid it—but for the sake of humanity and civilization and for the sake of the honor of my country.

I have deemed it proper to allude to these things, Mr. President. I shirk no responsibility for a single fact which I presented, and the Senate will note that the Senator from Massachusetts was enabled to allude to but two things stated by me in response to the speech which I had the honor to make. One was an inadvertence, an oversight upon an incident of history as to whether I meant Copernicus or Galileo, a lapsus linguæ, made in the course of extended remarks in the Senate, and the other an attempted misapplication of words which I employed in order, upon a fabrication, to base the charge that we on this side were assailing the Army of the United States.

No, Mr. President, we invited your attention in the inception of this business to the consequences which would ensue. The honored Senator sitting upon my right [Mr. BACON], all will remember, in January, 1899, alluded to the practice of cruelty in India, clearly foreboding what would ensue if that line of policy were pursued in the Philippine Islands. Ah, Mr. President, I do not lay these things at the door of Chaffee or of any soldier in the Philippine Islands. They are not there of their own choice. They are there performing a thankless task; they are there doing that which has been done by honored men elsewhere in the world.

I allude to Lord Elgin, an Englishman, a man of high character and good repute, a man whose career would disclose as many deeds of honor and of humanity as could possibly pertain to any of the men whom we have sent to the Philippine Islands, but who was sent as the agent for the execution of an iniquitous policy of aggression and subjugation into Asia, and as he surrounded the towns and cities which were to be destroyed in the execution of that policy he said, to use his own words: "I feel as if there is to be a fourth term added to the litany of misfortune. Hereafter it will be war, pestilence, famine, and Elgin." And in the Philippine Islands hereafter we, too, shall have a new litany, and it will be war, it will be pestilence, it will be cruelty—reciprocal, retaliatory cruelty upon a helpless people, not assailing us or our institutions, the victims of criminal aggression—all the result of a cruel and remorseless policy. That policy I lay at the door of the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators who have been foremost in its promotion.

Mr. President, I have deemed it proper to say so much; but there is one other thing that I ought, in justice, to say. The Senator from Massachusetts alluded to the circumstances, and detailed them, of the death of one O'Hearn, a soldier of the United States, one of the victims of this policy. He was tied to a tree, burned for four hours, hacked to pieces, and buried. How does the Senator from Massachusetts know that? Why, twelve Filipinos were seized, put into the custody of American soldiers, and information as to how this soldier of the United States came to his death was unascertainable.

This system which prevails over there, started about two years ago, was brought into application, and what was the result? Twelve men were thrown down and subjected to the water torture. They were called upon to confess that they had been instrumental in bringing about the death of O'Hearn. They were tortured one day, but the necessary information was not derived; they were tortued the second day, and then, being unable to endure the torture longer, those twelve men, each and every one of them, said, "For God's sake, we can not endure this torture longer. What do you want us to say?" The interpreter, listening attentively, said, "Confess the charge which has been made against you." "What was that charge?" "That you burned this man for four hours; that you hacked him to pieces." Thereupon these men did confess, and that is the sole basis upon which is built up this fabric of alleged cruelty perpetrated by Filipinos upon this American soldier.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. RAWLINS. I decline to yield at present. The Senator can read the history of that as disclosed in our testimony before the Philippine Committee.

I rose but for one purpose, and I want those upon the other side to understand our position. Whenever any act of cruelty and atrocity is perpetrated by whomsoever, whether by Filipino or by American, it is a disgrace to any who participate in it—a disgrace to the semicivilized people of the Philippine Islands, if you are pleased to call them such, but doubly a disgrace to the people of our country and our race who are supposed to set an example of civilization and humanity to the rest of mankind.

You may as well understand now as at any time that no plea that two wrongs make one right will divert us from our purpose, if we can accomplish it, to bring to light these iniquities. When they are brought to light it will be to one end, namely, to show that you can not go into the Tropics except you carry with you degradation, abasement, and turpitude, that good men, men of the highest character can not do that which is interdicted in the providence of the Almighty without being degraded, and those who go there and do these things, who have heretofore been honorable men, are but the victims of this, your policy. Stop it to-day and you may take the reins of the Government for the next fifty years, and I will cease to refer to it any more. Retrace your steps. Put this country back in the line of policy in accordance with the traditions of those who founded it, and you may have all the offices in this country from the highest to the lowest during all the years of my life, whatever they may be. I will return to my native heath and live in satisfaction to know that this Government, created for and by the people, to uphold the principles of liberty and dispense justice and humanity, is still going to live, and that the course of this Government is not going to be turned aside from the pathway which the fathers who started it intended it to follow.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senate may complete the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Philippine bill will be temporarily laid aside, and the Chair lays before the Senate the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in in the Senate in gross?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say a word or two about an amendment which was adopted in my absence where I think the majority of the committee were misled in adopting an amendment to the bill as it came in. I should like to state the point. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be treated as open.

Mr. ALLISON. It is open. If the Senator will allow me, it is the amendment of the Senate to the provision on page 60 of the bill, relating to the transportation of silver coin. The Senator from Massachusetts would like to have the amendment left open. I ask that all the other amendments may be concurred in, and then this will be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. Has the bill gone into the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. It makes no sort of difference. I merely wish to state once what I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, then, the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in. The question is on concurring in the amendment on page 60.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, Congress some years ago passed a measure providing for the transportation free of charge of silver coin from the Treasury. It was intended to promote, as far as possible, the use of silver, and it was provided that whenever silver coin was sent from the Treasury to any bank or business organization whatever it should be transported free of charge. Ever since there has been, I suppose, an annual appropriation to cover that expense. It was a part of the policy of the law to urge and press into circulation, as far as possible, the siver coinage of the country, which was losing its place, according to the judgment of a very large portion of the Senate.

Now, this year the House of Representatives put into the paragraph providing for that expense a provision that silver should be transported free "for general circulation," "under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall make." It is to be for the purpose of general circulation, not for any private speculation, and the Secretary of the Treasury is to make the proper regulations.

The purpose of that was to strike at this abuse. Some banks in some parts of the country make a charge for collecting checks. The banks in our part of the country in general will collect your check for nothing. You have a check on your domestic bank and you put it into a bank here, and that bank sends it to the bank where you have a deposit, and they pay it without any charge to you and generally are glad to do it. Some banks within a few years have established the practice of making a charge therefor, and there are some banks which make a good many thousand dollars a year income off such charges.

The banks in general in New England, all but 40 or 50—all the Rhode Island banks, and all the Massachusetts banks, and the largest part of the banks in Maine, although there are a few that hold out, making some five or six hundred as against 60—do this for nothing. It is as much for their interest as for the owner of the check that it should be done for nothing.

In order to avoid that charge, the bank to which the check is sent, to be forwarded for collection to the bank where the depositor has his deposit, instead of sending it by mail and having the bank which receives it send back a check, making no charge for it, sends it by an agent, which it has a perfect right to do. If I want to draw a check in Worcester, where I have a deposit, I go to the bank and they will pay it to me, but if I send it by an agent they have to pay it also across their counter. Otherwise they would be liable for damages.

The banks which do not want to have their customers submit to this extortion send the check by express, and the bank where the deposit is has to make payment, of course without charge, to the full amount of the check.

So they have hit on this device: They say if there comes under these circumstances a check for $10,000 or $5,000 or $1,000, they will pay it only in silver coin, silver dollars, I suppose, or whatever sized coins they choose. The express company has to carry back $10,000 or perhaps $20,000 or $5,000 in silver coin, or else they have to submit to the extortion. Those banks not only do that, but they make the Government of the United States send the silver to them at its own expense. So, if my honorable friend the Senator from Arkansas has a check on his home bank or against a deposit in New York, and he puts the check into a bank in Washington, the bank which tries to do this thing will either make him pay the exchange, or, if he gives the check to some agent to pass across its counter, it will pay him $10,000 in silver. His agent has to lug back the $10,000 in silver, or he has to send it by express at a cost of three or four dollars.

This the banks are able to do by requesting the United States Treasury first to send them that amount of silver free. Thus the banks make the Government pay three or four dollars in order that they may get this tax of 1 per cent or whatever they charge. They get the Treasury to send them the silver for nothing. Then they make the man who holds the check pay three or four dollars to have the money carried back to the place where he drew the check. There the silver is put on deposit, and eventually is sent back to the Treasury or subtreasury, and then the process is gone all over with again. That trick, for it is nothing but a poor, cheap trick, is played by abusing a provision which was made to get silver into general circulation as far as possible.

The House put in this clause. They maintain the policy that we shall send silver, for general circulation, at the Government's expense, into the remotest corners of the country, but they say that it is to be sent for general circulation only.

This use of the banks does not in the least help the circulation of silver. The silver merely goes in one mass into a bank, back again into another bank and into the subtreasury, and comes around and around again. The House say that it shall be for general circulation and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make the regulations.

That, I understand, is the performance, and the Senate committee, under some strange misapprehension, has struck out the House clause and left the old performance. I should like to ask my honorable friend the Senator from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if I am mistaken in any degree in what I have said; if everything I have said is not literally and absolutely true and the whole truth?

Mr. ALLISON. My colleague on the committee, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], or the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]——

Mr. HOAR. I guess the Senator from Vermont is president of or director in some bank which does it.

Mr. PROCTOR. No, sir; I have not a dollar of stock of, nor do I hold any office in, any bank.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has a bank close to him that does it.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is one close to all of us.

Mr. HOAR. That is the story. I leave it to the Senator from Iowa whether I am right.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the history of this matter is briefly this: There is in Boston a great money institution known as the Boston Clearing House, which is autocratic in banking matters in New England. All checks that come into Boston on any bank are sent to that institution, and by it sent to the bank on which drawn for collection. It is no new thing, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, but from time immemorial there has been a small charge by the country banks for transmitting its funds to Boston. It is a just charge. It is obliged to keep a deposit in Boston on which to draw such drafts, which deposit draws no interest, of course.

In my early recollection, which is more than half a century ago, it was a quarter of 1 per cent. Those were stage times, and there was better reason for it, but it has been reduced until now it is one-tenth of 1 per cent. That has been the custom, as I have said, from time immemorial.

Two years ago last January the Boston Clearing House issued its order that all checks of country banks must be paid at par in Boston; that is, they must remit by draft and pay it at par to the clearing house. The banks said that was an entirely new and unjust and arbitrary exaction, and resisted. Some seventy-odd banks in Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Connecticut resisted. Determined to enforce its edict, the clearing house adopted the plan of sending checks by express and demanding the money over the counter of the country bank. Of course the checks were good, and the banks paid over the counter, but if they had silver they paid in silver.

Mr. HOAR. Does that come out of the customer or out of the city bank?

Mr. HALE (to Mr. PROCTOR). Go on with your statement.

Mr. HOAR. I have a right to ask a question.

Mr. PROCTOR. The clearing house found that that process was a good deal more expensive than the one-tenth of 1 per cent, so they stopped it after a while.

But at this session they sent their agent to the House, and, unbeknown to the country banks, they got this provision put in which would stop the shipping of silver. The country banks were not represented. It was a surprise to them, and it was only when the matter was laid before the committee in the Senate that any attention was drawn to it. I submitted to the committee a letter from our State treasurer, who is president of one of our country banks, and the letter is printed in the hearings. Perhaps I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD. All we ask is to let the law remain just as it has been for years. It will cost the Government nothing. They never again will undertake, if the law remains as it is, to send their checks by express. But I can not answer for what necromacy they may try next. However, I think they will gracefully yield to what has been the custom, as I have said, from time immemorial—a very moderate charge.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question before he sits down? Is not the practice of charging 10 cents for collections entirely new within the last three years?

Mr. PROCTOR. Oh, no.

Mr. HOAR. I have myself been a bank director. It is absolutely new in general. It may have been done in some few cases. I think Senators have enough knowledge of the subject to know that this is a new practice.

Mr. PROCTOR. I was a director in a little country bank nearly fifty years ago.

Mr. HOAR. I thought so.

Mr. PROCTOR. Then the charge was a quarter of 1 per cent. It was gradually reduced, as I have said. For a few years I was president of a little bank, twenty years ago, and the charge had then been reduced to one-tenth of 1 per cent. I have reformed, and, as I have said, I am not now connected with any bank, but I know the custom.

Mr. HOAR. I do not doubt that my honorable friend has reformed, but I have noticed that some reformed persons get back to their old practices very easily on temptation. There is just one practical fact about this matter. If I have a deposit in a bank, I am entitled to have that bank pay me my money without any deduction, whether I go there myself with a check and put it across the counter or whether I send my agent.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to finish this proposition, and I will yield. The arrangement which these few banks, against about 600, are trying to keep up is this: I am entitled to a thousand dollars, and the bank has agreed to pay me. They have had the use of my money, without interest, perhaps for six months or a year. When I send a check by my agent, they say, "You shall pay out of it our charge for collection or we will pay it to you in silver." I have to take the thousand dollars in silver coin. Where do they get the silver? They get from the Treasury free the silver which I have to pay somebody, an express company, two or three dollars to take to the point where the check was drawn, or if I have sent my check from Washington to my agent in Rutland, Vt., I have to pay $5 to have the thousand dollars brought to me, including insurance and transportation charges.

How are the banks able to do it? They are able to do it by getting the silver sent to them by the Government for nothing from the exact place where it is brought back to me. They keep up that process around and around, under the shelter of a law which was intended to put silver into circulation. It does not put a dollar into circulation. On the contrary, if anything can make silver odious it would tend to do so and to hurt the circulation of silver. Now I will listen to my honorable friend, the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator from Massachusetts has a check for a thousand dollars on any one of these seventy-odd banks it will be paid at par over the counter to him or any agent whom he sends there.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.

Mr. PROCTOR. What they will not do is to depart willingly, or unless compelled to do so, from this custom, going back to time immemorial, of a slight charge for transporting the money to Boston to the clearing house.

Mr. HOAR. They do not have to transport it. They send all their other funds in a check on Boston by mail free. They have their funds in Boston, where the Senator says they do not get any interest, and they do not pay anything for the privilege of using the bank as a place of deposit for their funds, instead of having them in their vaults, and having this bank make all their accounts and exchanges. They do not have to pay anything.

This is not a question between the banks in the city and the banks in the country. It is a question solely of extorting money for doing that which other banks are glad to do without extorting from the customer, and they are doing it at the cost of the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PETTUS. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. HOAR. I hope it will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the words "for general circulation," and in line 20, to strike out "under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall make;" so as to read:

Transportation of silver coin: For transportation of silver coin, including fractional silver coin, by registered mail or otherwise, $100,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, silver coin when requested to do so.

Mr. HOAR. Let me say one word. The very amendment itself, the very thing they want to strike out, confesses their case. The House provision is that silver shall still continue to be transported at Government expense for general circulation, but they want to have it transported at Government expense where it is not for general circulation.

Mr. HALE. At first blush in this matter I thought the House proposition was right. I did not think it was right for the reason the Senator from Massachusetts thought it was when he started—that the bank charged on a check when presented at their counter. That was not the grievance that I thought was cured, because I knew enough about banking to know that was not so. It never was so. When the Senator stated with great circumstantiality that it was a grievous burden to the bank that when you presented a check they charged to you a percentage, he was all wrong about it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me; I did not say so.

Mr. HALE. I leave that to the apprehension of Senators. The Senator very quickly changed his ground when he found he was wrong; and nobody can do it more quickly than he.

The truth is all this came up just as the Senator from Vermont has said. I found out about it by correspondence with banks. The Boston Clearing House undertook to dragoon the country banks into doing this business in their way, and in order to dragoon them sent down their checks to be cashed by the banks at their counters.

Mr. COCKRELL. Through express?

Mr. HALE. Through express. It was never done before until within the last year or two. No city association of banks, with their immense power, tried to do that. They said, "We will break down the country banks on this proposition, and we will send the checks by express right to your banks." The average countryman has not lost his wit. He is about as bright, even, as the city bankers are supposed to be, where he is interested. The bright men in the country banks said, "Very well; if this association are going to dragoon us by sending their checks by express to be paid we will send them legal currency; we will send them silver." It operated at once.

The whole thing is ended. The Boston association are not trying to do this now. The moment that the bright countrymen in the banks resorted to this remedy and sent on silver they quit. They have quit and they will never try it again unless we agree to the House provision.

Mr. COCKRELL. And then they will.

Mr. HALE. It came up in the committee. The Senator asked if the committee did not act under misapprehension. It acted under apprehension, which is different from misapprehension. It found out just what there was to this trouble, and it naturally sympathized with the country banks against this performance of the city banks.

Now, as to almost all the banks in New England having yielded to this, I know from my correspondence that most of them were dragooned to back down. They were afraid of this great association in the city, and they declined.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. HALE. Yes; half a dozen.

Mr. HOAR. I will ask one first, and hear what the Senator says to it, and I will then see about the other five. I want to know if the Senator thinks it is not a legal obligation of a bank to pay my check by whatever instrumentality I want it when I present it at its counter.

Mr. HALE. That is just what I say; they have a right to do it.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. Then that is question No. 1. It is a legal obligation to pay that check without deduction. Next, have they a right, if I choose to present that check in the way I want to do it, to say, "Unless you take out a certain sum for us, we will pay you in silver, which is going to cost you a large sum to cart across the country to where you want it, and we get the Government to cart that silver to us for nothing?"

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly they have that right, and that is the only protection they have against this city association.

Mr. HOAR. I will now ask question No. 3. I have six that I can ask. What does the Senator mean by the only protection to a bank against complying with its precise, legal, just obligation to pay me my check when I present it by any other agency I choose at their counter?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator had been a director in one of these frugal country banks——

Mr. HOAR. I have been a great part of my life.

Mr. HALE. He would have known what the protection was, because the moment the association resorted to this expedient to break down the country banks, and they countered by sending it silver by express, it stopped. The banks in Maine say that they agreed to it because they were afraid of this Boston concern; they were under the shadow of the Boston concern, and they backed down; but I am very much obliged to the Senator from Vermont and the country banks that stood their ground and naturally fell back upon this resource. It is all right; the Government will not be burdened a cent if this remains as the Senate committee, after full deliberation, put it on the bill. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I want to say one word more. Of course there are a great many banks which would like to get two or three thousand dollars a year out of their customers for doing what by their contract they are bound to do for nothing. That is very likely. But can you say that it is a protection against wrong? The Senator from Maine might just as well say, if he owed you a thousand dollars, he was going to be protected against your asking for it when you wanted it by paying it all to you in silver. That is just what he is doing.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator sent it to me by express, he would have a right to have it sent me in silver.

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly. That strips the whole thing and comes to the point the Senator will have to come to with his clear head. If the Senator owes me a thousand dollars and I want it, he has a perfect right to pay me in legal-tender silver. Now, that being so, has he the further right at Ellsworth, Me., to go to the United States Government and say, "I am going to use legal-tender silver to pay Mr. HOAR to prevent his asking me to pay it down to him for nothing?"

Now, we are not interfering with these rights of the country banks the least in the world. We are only saying that the country banks shall not charge the United States three or four dollars expressage on every thousand, or whatever it is, to enable them to make two or three thousand dollars out of their customers every year for doing what the law requires them to do for nothing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, just one word. I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment proposed by the committee. It is right. A Boston clearing house undertook to dominate and dictate to the country banks, and they had the manhood and the courage to deal with them legally and justly, in my opinion. They sent their checks there to take the money from out of the banks, and they paid them in the current coin of the kingdom. They paid them in standard silver dollars, a full legal tender. It is not for the Senate to inquire where they got those dollars. They got them legally. They got them according to law. We want the law to remain just as it has been ever since we commenced the use of silver. There has been no harm heretofore from this provision of law; and that the Senate of the United States shall be called upon to modify the law, so as to enable the clearing-house institutions to oppress the country banks and make them yield to their terms, whatever they are, I think is asking a great deal, even for the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, there are some Senators on this side of the Chamber who have listened very attentively, but have not been able to catch very much that was said. Not only for myself, but for others, I should like to know from the chairman of the committee, or anyone else, just what will be the effect if the amendment of the committee is agreed to. What we want to know over here is what would be the difference. We have caught little scraps of the debate, but not very much of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would leave the existing law just as it has been ever since we commenced the use of silver. The Government transports silver wherever it is demanded.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. The provision of the House places it in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury to say, "You do not want this money for general circulation, and you shall not have it sent to you."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It makes it discretionary with him?

Mr. COCKRELL. It makes it discretionary with him to refuse or not refuse to allow the money to be transported. There has never been a complaint, from the enactment of the law down to the present time, except this one complaint made by the Boston Clearing House because of the country banks.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator before he sits down——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri this question: As I understand it, if the amendment of the committee is adopted the result will be that it is then taken out of the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, whereas if the amendment of the committee is not adopted it is left discretionary with the Secretary. Is that the situation?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Secretary of the Treasury never has refused; when applications were made for the transfer of silver it was done. There were great quantities transported at different times from one place to another.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand that.

Mr. COCKRELL. If this provision of the House for general circulation under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall make is put in the bill, then he can make just what regulations he chooses and determine whether it is for circulation or not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is solely in his discretion, then?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is solely in his discretion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Whereas the committee amendment takes it out of his discretion?

Mr. COCKRELL. It leaves it just as it has been all the time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God our Heavenly Father, surely Thou hast laid a heavy hand upon us; and oh, how forcibly are we reminded of the uncertainty of life. Our cup of sorrow already full, Thou hast touched another member of the Congressional family and borne his spirit to the realms beyond. Genial and kindly of disposition, buoyant of heart, he had won the affection of his colleagues and friends; and by industry, courage, and devotion to duty, their respect and confidence. He will be mourned and missed here and by a devoted constituency at home; and O God, be very near we pray Thee to the stricken wife and mourning children. Put Thy loving arms about them and give them sustaining grace, and help them to look forward with bright anticipations to that future where life is eternal; in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 6, 1902.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. HANSBROUGH, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

SANDY HOOK PROVING GROUNDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter addressed to the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, by Capt. E. B. Babbitt, commanding officer, Sandy Hook Proving Grounds, relative to an appropriation for the protection of the lower end of the Sandy Hook reservation from the inroads of the sea; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STATUE OF MARSHAL DE ROCHAMBEAU.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 189) making an additional appropriation for expenses of the dedication of the statue of Marshal de Rochambeau to be unveiled in the city of Washington, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. It is very important that the joint resolution should be passed immediately, as it is necessary to make arrangements for the dedication of the statue on the 24th of May. I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the additional sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution entitled a "Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France and to the families of Marshal de Rochambeau and Marquis de Lafayette an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the dedication of the monument of Marshal de Rochambeau to be unveiled in the city of Washington," approved March 21, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DESECRATION OF THE FLAG.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, on two or three occasions I have introduced bills to prevent the desecration of the national flag, and they were referred to appropriate committees. Other Senators, I think, have introduced similar bills. The bills are now before committees of this body. I am in receipt this morning of a petition signed by 341 ex-soldiers of the Union Army asking for action on this measure.

Mr. HOAR. What committee is the bill now before?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is before the Committee on Military Affairs. I will ask that the petition go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator will allow me to say in this connection that the bill is before the Committee on Military Affairs and is now receiving the consideration of a subcommittee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make a statement, as the Senator from North Dakota has made one.

I have very warmly favored the object of the petition which the Senator has presented. A bill came before the Committee on the Judiciary in the last Congress or the Congress before. It was recommended by myself, and certainly by other members of the committee, but in the discussions in the committee we found so many difficulties in regard to any particular plan proposed, which upon being suggested would appear to everyone, in getting exactly the legislation desired without impairing the reasonable and proper right of citizens to use the flag for public occasions, that we found ourselves unable to devise such a measure. We were not able to agree on such a bill which we could recommend to the Senate, and in the multitude of work before the committee it was put over. The bill has not come to our committee this year. I do not think, however, there has been any want of a full desire on the part of the committee to accomplish the end which my friend has in view. I think I personally favor the bill he presents, but I can not be quite sure about it. There is difficulty in dealing with the details of such a measure.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to say simply a word in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. By unanimous consent I desire to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota will proceed, in the absence of objection.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The first bill I introduced on the subject went to the Committee on the Judiciary. Later I received a request from a well-known patriotic organization of the country requesting that the bill be reintroduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. TERM OF OFFICE OF SENATORS IN HAWAII.

Mr. FORAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico to report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 4456) to apportion the term of office of seven senators elected at the first general election of the Territory of Hawaii, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. A similar bill has also been before the Committee on Territories, and I ask that the Committee on Territories be relieved from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13076) to apportion the term of senators elected at the first general election in the Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to make an inquiry. There were two of these bills introduced, one in the House and the other in the Senate. The House bill was passed with an amendment and sent to the Senate, and instead of being referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico it was referred to the Committee on Territories. The Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico were not aware of that reference of the House bill until after they had acted upon the Senate bill, but they had the House bill before them. The Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico determined to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill and did so, and I have just made the report.

Now, the bill as it passed the House is again before the Senate, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Territories, that committee having been relieved from its further consideration. I now ask that the House bill, from the further consideration of which the Committee on Territories has just been relieved, may be substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. And taken up and passed.

Mr. FORAKER. And that the same may be at once considered. There is no objection to the bill. It passed the House, I believe, without objection. All parties concerned are agreed upon the provisions of the House bill, and we have reported it as a substitute for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 13076) to apportion the term of office of senators elected at the first general election in the Territory of Hawaii, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the bill (S. 4456) to apportion the term of office of seven senators elected at the first general election of the Territory of Hawaii be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

HOWARD LODGE, NO. 13, I. O. O. F.

The bill (S. 92) for the relief of Howard Lodge, No. 13, I. O. O. F., of Gallatin, Tenn., was announced as first in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was read in full when heretofore under consideration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know that I wish to object seriously to the passage of this bill, but the report, as I remember it, does not carry the impression that there has been any very careful appraisement of the damages which this lodge is said to have sustained. I think that is perhaps the objection——

Mr. BATE. If the Senator will allow me to make an observation, I will state that through a mistake of the Senator who had the bill in charge the testimony in the case does not appear in the report; it has not been printed. But since that time the testimony has been brought here, and it is as convincing and clear as anything can be. Senators who heretofore objected to the passage of the bill have withdrawn their objections when I showed them the testimony.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. All I want to say is that when the report was read in the Senate it did not seem that there had been any careful examination of the matter or any careful appraisement of the damages. If the Senator from Tennessee has since furnished the information, that removes the objection which was in my mind.

Mr. BATE. I have done so.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BATE. I ask that the testimony in connection with the bill which has just been passed may be printed so that it may go to the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire the testimony to which he refers to be printed in the RECORD or as a document?

Mr. BATE. I desire to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The testimony referred to will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

Mr. BATE. It should have been printed before, but owing to an oversight it was not, and that has delayed the passage of the bill.

The testimony referred to is as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE, Sumner County, ss:

Came before me, George W. Boddie, notary public in and for said county and State, W. C. Blue, who made oath in due form of law that he is now 73 years of age; that he resided at Gallatin, Tenn., during the civil war; that he was then a member of Howard Lodge, No. 13, I. O. O. F., and that he was well acquainted with the property of said lodge destroyed by the Federal Army during the said war. He has had read over to him the report made to said lodge by a committee composed of C. E. Boddie, B. F. Allen, and J. T. Mills, and has read over the same himself and is familiar with the contents therein contained, and assisted the said committee in making up the said report, and knows that the facts stated therein are true and the valuation put upon said articles is reasonable.

The buildings and grounds were taken possession of by the Federal officials as a hospital, and were so used by them from November, 1862, to August 1, 1865. The privies and outbuildings were destroyed by order of said officials, and the material used in building small outhouses where smallpox patients were kept. Gallatin was a military post and occupied by the Federal armies from November, 1862, to the end of the war without any intermission. I here make copy of said report an exhibit to this my affidavit, marked "Exhibit A." I knew the signers of said report and also S. Hermans and T. C. Trimble and the two Wrights, who signed the said report and indorsed the same. They were all loyal men. Hermans was county judge; Trimble, agent of Freedman's Bureau, and G. B. Wright was postmaster. They also used the storehouses and lodge rooms as hospitals, and during the occupancy the property as set forth in Exhibit A was destroyed and damaged.

This property was taken by command of the Federal officers in command of the post here. The storehouse was a three-story brick house with two storehouses below on the first floor, and a public hall or hall used for public purposes on the second story, and a lodge room or rooms on the third story. I was warden of the lodge and had charge of the regalia and lodge property and knew value of said regalia and lodge property, and the value placed upon the same in said report "Exhibit A" is reasonable.

My business was a house carpenter and builder, and I know that the values placed upon the buildings damaged and destroyed is reasonable.

W. C. BLUE.

Sworn to and subscribed before me April 2, 1898.

[SEAL.] GEO. W. BODDIE, Notary Public.

J. T. MILLS,
Committee.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, Sumner County:

I, S. Hermans, judge of the county court of said county, do hereby certify that I am personally acquainted with C. E. Boddie, B. F. Allen, and J. T. Mills, the committee whose names appear to the foregoing assessment of damages of the property herein stated; that they are gentlemen of good character and standing and their statements are entitled to full credit; also, that I am acquainted with the circumstances and condition of the property as stated, and believe them true.

In witness I have herewith set my hand and fixed the seal of the county court this the 8th day of January, 1866.

[SEAL.] S. HERMANS, County Judge.

We fully concur with the statements of Judge Hermans, as we know the parties and are familiar with the facts as stated.

T. C. TRIMBLE, Superintendent F. M. B.
WILLIAM WRIGHT.
G. B. WRIGHT, Postmaster, F. M. B.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, Sumner County, ss:

Thomas H. King, being first duly sworn, states: I am 50 years of age; I was born and reared near Gallatin, Tenn., and have lived here all my life except two years. I was here in Gallatin during the war. I know the property belonging to Howard Lodge, No. 13, known as Howard Female Institute. It was fitted up as a female college and boarding school; the grounds elegantly laid off and planted in shrubbery and well set in grass, with suitable fence around them; there were two brick privies, a hothouse, a stable, and shed. The buildings and grounds were taken possession of by the Federals and used as a hospital from the time of Bragg's retreat from Kentucky till the close of the war. The outbuildings set forth above were entirely destroyed, and the materials used by the Federal Army in making fortifications and other purposes. When they left it or ceased to use it, in 1865, there was nothing left but the bare walls of the college building.

I knew the storehouse, hall, and lodge rooms belonging to the lodge. It was a three-story building, fitted up for storerooms below, a hall on the second story, and the third story was used for lodge rooms. The Federal officers took possession of this building also for hospital purposes and as a storehouse for hospital supplies and occupied it till the close of the war. I was in business in Gallatin during the war as a clerk.

Howard Female College was well furnished and equipped as a female college and boarding school, with all necessary apparatus and furniture, and all this was destroyed.

The town of Gallatin was a military post, with military commanders here from Bragg's retreat till the end of the war. The commanders were General Fry, Gen. E. A. Payne, Colonel Leib, Col. James Gilfillan and Colonel Frudenburg. There were over 2,000 Federals died in the various hospitals in Gallatin during the war.

THOS. H. KING.

[SEAL.] GEO. W. BODDIE, Notary Public.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, Sumner County, ss:

Came before me, George W. Boddie, notary public in and for said State and county, G. B. Wright, who, being first duly sworn, states: I am the G. B. Wright who signed the proof of loss or damage done to Howard Female College by the Federal troops from 1862 to 1865. I knew the committee making the said report; they were all men of judgment, experience, and integrity, and their statements are entitled to as much credit as the statements of any three men who ever lived in our community. Before the Federals took charge of the college property I lived on the adjoining place and knew the condition of the buildings and grounds; they were in first-rate condition.

The grounds were beautifully laid off and planted in flowers and shrubbery and well set in blue grass. The building was well furnished and equipped for a female college, both the school department and the boarding department. There were two brick privies, one hothouse, one stable and shed on the grounds when the Federal troops took possession of the property as a hospital. They destroyed and removed these, using the brick and lumber in the construction of fortifications, camps, and chimneys. There was a good fence around the grounds, in keeping with the character of the grounds and buildings, and this was all torn away. All the furniture was destroyed, papering and plastering torn off and defaced, and the entire premises badly damaged. The house was occupied by the Federals as a hospital from November, 1862, till some time in the summer of 1865.

Of the committee who made the report as to damages of the college and lodge property, C. E. Boddie is dead, B. F. Allen still lives here, and Mr. Mills lives in the North somewhere. He was a Northern man and a Union man during the war. Judge Hermans is dead, T. C. Trimble is dead, and William Wright is dead. They were all Union men. I was postmaster here for several years during and after the war. Mr. Trimble was superintendent of the Freedman's Bureau and Judge Hermans was county judge.

G. B. WRIGHT.

[SEAL.] GEO. W. BODDIE, Notary Public.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, Sumner County, ss:

Came before me, George W. Boddie, notary public in and for said county and State, W. F. Holder, who, being first duly sworn, states:

I am now 76 years of age; I live in Gallatin, and was living here before and during the war of the rebellion. I was and am still a member of Howard Lodge, No. 13, I. O. O. F. Howard Female Institute was the property of and conducted as a female college of a high grade by said lodge. I knew the property well; it was situated on East Main street and was the most beautiful property about the town. It was well laid off and planted in shrubbery and well set in blue grass. The building was a large brick building, well furnished for a female school of high grade and for a boarding school. The property was worth twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars. The Federals took possession of the property and used it for a hospital for some three years. They destroyed all the outhouses, all the furniture, the fencing and shrubbery and grass, leaving nothing but the shell of the building.

I knew the storehouse, hall, and lodge rooms belonging to the lodge, and which were occupied by the Federals as a hospital and supply store for hospital supplies. They occupied the same and used it for about the same length of time they did the college property. I have read over "Exhibit A" to W. C. Blue's affidavit, and am acquainted with the facts therein stated. I indorse the same with the valuations therein placed with the exception I think they are too low.

Howard Lodge has never derived any income from Howard Female Institute. The members of the lodge pay tuition and board and incidental fees just like the other patrons of the school, the exception that orphan children of deceased Odd Fellows receive their education free.

MRS. MARTHA E. WEST.

The bill (S. 136) for the relief of Mrs. Martha E. West was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,500 in full to Mrs. Martha E. West, of Stevensville, Mont., for mill property of her father, the late Mathew Wright, taken and appropriated by troops of the United States in 1865, in the Sioux Indian war of Minnesota.

Mr. SPOONER. That is a short bill and I ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary again read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JURORS' FEES IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, my attention was turned in another direction for a moment, and I wish to ask if Order of Business 1244, being the Senate bill 4769, has been passed over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was passed over without prejudice at the last call of the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered and acted upon at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4769) to fix the fees of jurors in the United States courts. It provides that the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States, shall be $3 a day instead of $2 a day as now provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. MOSBY.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5460) to refer the claim of John S. Mosby against the United States for the value of certain tobacco to the Court of Claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the claim of John S. Mosby for the value of 7,900 pounds, more or less, of tobacco mentioned in an official paper dated at Rocketts Landing, Richmond, Va., July 27, 1865, signed "W. H. D. Cochran, major, depot quartermaster," and purporting to give a "list of captured tobacco marked in the name of Col. J. S. Mosby, transferred to Col. J. S. Loomis, Treasury agent, June 7, 1865," be referred to the Court of Claims, with full jurisdiction to try and adjudicate the claim and render judgment against the United States in such sum as may be found just by said court, without the interposition in behalf of the Government of any bar arising from the existing statutes of limitations. Right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States is expressly reserved to the Government and to the claimant. But it is provided that any portions of the sum representing tobacco beneficially belonging to the father, sister, or other relatives of said Mosby shall be held in trust by him accordingly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. PERMELIA J. GETTY, ADMINISTRATRIX.

The bill (S. 576) for the relief of Mrs. P. J. Getty, administratrix, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $700 to Mrs. Permelia J. Getty, of Stearns County, Minn., for property of the late Jerome J. Getty, destroyed by troops of the United States in 1864, in the Sioux Indian war of Minnesota.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6 let the word "administratrix" be inserted after the name "Getty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title be amended so as to read "Mrs. Permelia J. Getty," in order that it may correspond with the text of the bill.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mrs. Permelia J. Getty, administratrix."

MICHAEL HAYES.

Mr. MARTIN. I should like to have the bill (H. R. 6847) to correct the record of Michael Hayes recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have some affidavits that were not before the committee which I should like to have them see. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BATE. There is an adverse report in the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an adverse report in the case. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANK F. FLOURNOY.

The bill (S. 1874) for the relief of Frank F. Flournoy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Frank F. Flournoy $77.60, in full of his claim for balance due him as United States deputy surveyor, for completing the survey of public lands in township 5 north, range 28 west, San Bernardino base and meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. SMITH AND D. M. WISDOM.

The bill (S. 111) for the relief of William J. Smith and D. M. Wisdom was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to release William J. Smith and D. M. Wisdom from all liability incident to the forfeiture and judgment upon a certain bond in the penal sum of $3,000 with said William J. Smith and D. M. Wisdom as sureties, conditioned that R. M. Thompson appear at the term of the United States circuit court for the western district of Tennessee, begun on the fourth Monday in October, 1885.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the report in the case be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MARTIN on the 24th ultimo, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 111) for the relief of W. J. Smith and D. M. Wisdom, beg leave to make the following report:

A duly certified copy of the records of the United States district court for the eastern division of the western district of Tennessee shows that at the April term, 1885, one Robert M. Thompson was convicted of violating section 5485 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; that after conviction the court allowed said Thompson his liberty upon his giving bond in the sum of $3,000 for appearance at the next term of the court for judgment and sentence; that on May 1, 1885, said bond was given by said Robert M. Thompson as principal and W. J. Smith and D. M. Wisdom as sureties; that for each succeeding term of said court said Thompson failed to appear in court, an alias capias was issued and returned unexecuted by the marshal for the reason that said Thompson could not be found in that district; that the matter was continued in said court from term to term until the April term, 1887, when a judgment was taken on said bond for $3,035.76, principal and costs; that on September 22, 1887, the marshal for said district returned that he could find no personal property in his district belonging to said defendants, but that he had levied upon the property described in the bill (S. 111) as the property of said Smith; that on February 18, 1888, the property was struck off and sold to the United States for $3,209.36, covering in full the principal, interest, and costs.

The affidavit of said Smith sets out that he expended a large sum of money in trying to apprehend said Thompson, and that he succeeded in 1888 in having him arrested; that in attempting to carry said Thompson back to Tennessee the detective brought said Thompson through the District of Columbia, where he was released upon a writ of habeas corpus, rearrested, and again released upon a similar writ.

Duly certified copies of the court records for the District of Columbia show that on June 4, 1888, said Thompson was released from custody upon the order of Justice M. V. Montgomery on the ground that the bond executed by said Thompson, Smith, and Wisdom was void, as there was no law by which bail could be taken for a convicted person to return to have judgment and sentence passed upon him; and that on June 9, 1888, said Thompson was again released from custody by order of Chief Justice E. F. Bingham, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, for the same reason.

From and after the Forty-eighth Congress bills similar to the ones dealt with in this report have been introduced in both Houses of Congress, but it does not appear that any action has been taken upon any of them except one favorable report was made to the House of Representatives. (House Report No. 1480, first session Fifty-second Congress.)

It appearing from the proof in this case that the said Smith has done everything in his power to return the said Thompson in accordance with the terms of the said bond, and that he was only prevented from doing so by the fact that two of the justices of the United States courts for the District of Columbia separately released said Thompson upon writs of habeas corpus, your committee is of the opinion that said Smith and Wisdom should be released from all liability incident to the forfeiture and judgment on said bond, and that said Smith should be restored to all his right, title, and interest in said property, and your committee earnestly recommend that the bill (S. 111) do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE.

The bill (S. 4408) to amend section 934 of an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the section so as to read as follows:

SEC. 934. Place of imprisonment.—When any person shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, the court may direct that such imprisonment shall be either in the workhouse or in the jail. When any person is sentenced for a term longer than six months and not longer than one year, such imprisonment shall be in the jail, and where the sentence is imprisonment for more than one year it shall be in the penitentiary. Cumulative sentences, except such sentences as may be imposed by the police court, aggregating more than one year shall be deemed one sentence for the purposes of the foregoing provision. When the punishment of an offense may be imprisonment for more than one year, the prosecution shall be in the supreme court of the District. When the maximum punishment is imprisonment for one year or less, the prosecution may be in the police court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LONGEVITY PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2341) to authorize the readjustment of the accounts of Army officers in certain cases, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator who reported the bill is not present. It came from the Committee on Claims, but I am sure the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] knows all about these longevity cases. I wish he would state what is involved in this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. WARREN. This is what is better known as the Army longevity-pay bill, and touches a subject which has been before Congress off and on, in and out, for a long time. It has been considered on the House side during the present session and favorably reported from committee; and it has also been favorably reported to the Senate from the Committee on Claims. It provides that the longevity accounts of officers shall go to the Court of Claims for adjustment.

Mr. ALLISON. Removing the statute of limitations?

Mr. WARREN. For the purpose of sending the cases to the Court of Claims, yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What does it involve—the question of longevity pay for all officers in the Army, no matter how long they may have been in the Army?

Mr. WARREN. No; only those remaining unsettled. It is a matter which was thought to have been provided for by law—in fact, has been provided for—but the Comptroller has not felt that he could pay them. Several cases have been sent down to the Court of Claims and have been adjudicated. I suppose that is the reason why those who seek relief ask that the remaining cases may go to the Court of Claims, rather than that we should legislate directly that the Department should pay the accounts. The Court of Claims and the Supreme Court have both decided favorably upon claims sent them, but the Comptroller still declines to pay the unadjudicated claims.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It seems to be a very important matter; the Calendar is not very full; we can get at the bill almost any morning, and I wish it might be passed over for the present.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think it is an important matter. It is true that it involves a good deal of money, but it is all legally and justly due, and I think the bill ought to be passed. I am entirely willing, however, that it shall remain on the Calendar without prejudice, to be taken up at some later time rather than have an objection take it back under Rule IX.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The bill (S. 2276) to fix the time of holding the circuit and district courts for the southern district of West Virginia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the time of holding the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of West Virgina shall be as follows:

At Huntington, the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday after the third Monday in September; at Bluefield, the first Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in October; at Charleston, the first Tuesday in June and the third Tuesday in November.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMUTATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 9037) to allow the commutation of homestead entries in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That homestead settlers upon the ceded portion of the Sioux Indian Reservation in South Dakota who made entry subsequent to March 3, 1889, shall be entitled to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to allow commutation of homestead entries in certain cases," approved January 26, 1901, and in commuting shall only be required to pay the price provided in the law under which original entry was made.

SEC. 2. That any person who, prior to the passage of an act entitled "An act providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers, and reserving the public lands for that purpose," approved May 17, 1900, having made a homestead entry and perfected the same and acquired title to the land by final entry by having paid the price provided in the law opening the land to settlement, and who would have been entitled to the provisions of the act before cited had final entry not been made prior to the passage of said act, may make another homestead entry of not exceeding 160 acres of any of the public lands in any State or Territory subject to homestead entry: Provided, That any person desiring to make another entry under this act will be required to make affidavit, to be transmitted with the other filing papers now required by law, giving the description of the tract formerly entered, date and number of entry, and name of the land office where made, or other sufficient data to admit of readily identifying it on the official records: And provided further, That said person has all the other proper qualifications of a homestead entryman: And provided also, That commutation under section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, or any amendment thereto, or any similar statute, shall not be permitted of an entry made under this act, excepting where the final proof, submitted on the former entry hereinbefore described, shows a residence upon the land covered thereby for the full period of five years, or such term of residence thereon as added to any properly credited military or naval service shall equal such period of five years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to allow the commutation of and second homestead entries in certain cases."

HEIRS OF WILLIAM TINDER, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 3209) for the relief of the heirs of William Tinder, deceased, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The bill has been adversely reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It might as well go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; let it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

ELISHA A. GOODWIN, EXECUTOR.

The bill (S. 1672) for the relief of Elisha A. Goodwin, executor of the estate of Alexander W. Goodwin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue duplicates to Elisha A. Goodwin, executor of the estate of Alexander W. Goodwin, late of Vanceboro, Me., in lieu of United States 4 per cent registered bonds, funded loan of 1907, acts of Congress approved July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, Nos. 71011 to 71018, inclusive, of the denomination of $100 each, amounting to $800, said bonds alleged to have been lost or stolen.

Also to issue to the said Elisha A. Goodwin duplicates in lieu of United States 4 per cent coupon bonds of the funded loan of 1907, acts of Congress approved July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, Nos. 148356 and 148357 of the denomination of $1,000 each; 56961 to 56966, inclusive, of the denomination of $500 each; 66681 and 66829, 168768 to 168787, inclusive, of the denomination of $100, amounting to $7,200: Provided, That the said Elisha A. Goodwin shall first file in the Treasury a bond in a penal sum equal to the amount of the missing registered bonds and the interest that would accrue thereon until the same shall become due or payable; and a bond in a penal sum equal to double the amount of the missing coupon bonds and the interest that would accrue thereon until the same shall become due or payable, with good and sufficient sureties to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with conditions to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim on account of the said lost or stolen bonds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (S. 3237) to grant jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of Southern Railway Lighter No. 10, her cargoes, etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move to insert at the end of the bill the words "and without contributory negligence on the part of the claimants."

The proviso is:

That no judgment shall be rendered against the Government unless it shall affirmatively appear from the evidence adduced that such collision was the result of negligence on the part of the United States or its agents.

I wish to add to it:

And without contributory negligence on the part of the claimants.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMPHIS-CHATTANOOGA RAILWAY.

The bill (H. R. 13288) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River in Marion County, Tenn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRISCILLA R. BURNS.

The bill (S. 4517) for the relief of Priscilla R. Burns was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over, retaining its place.

Mr. WARREN. What did I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to say? Does he ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that was the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

CIVIL APPOINTMENTS OF EX ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 3310) to amend section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the preference in civil appointments of ex-Army and Navy officers, was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment reported by the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service will be stated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I wish there might be some explanation of the bill. On the face of it the amendments change the nature and meaning of the bill as originally introduced. By the bill as introduced it was provided that these soldiers and sailors are to be preferred in appointments if they have the business capacity necessary. By an amendment of the committee they are only to be preferred if they possess equal qualifications with their competitors. It seems to me that that will practically bar them out entirely, for the reason that other competitors for these offices will be younger and more energetic, and the comparison will be made between the older and perhaps less efficient soldier and the younger and more efficient applicant. In every case that will be to the disadvantage of the soldier and the sailor, as it seems to me upon a cursory reading of the amendment.

As originally introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] the condition was that they should possess the necessary business capacity, not that they should be equal in that respect to any other person who might apply for the office. I wish there might be an explanation on the part of the Senator who reported the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I have not been able to hear anything the Senator from Connecticut has said. This is a bill which was prepared and introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and I suggest, if there is any objection to it, that it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF KLAMATH RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1988) to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to make an announcement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I wish to give notice that I shall address the Senate upon the pending bill at the conclusion of the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I shall not occupy more than a moment of the Senate's time to do at this first opportunity what I arose yesterday in the midst of the remarks of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to do, and that was to call his attention to an inaccuracy which I am bound to say was not intended before it had gone uncorrected in the RECORD.

During the course of the admirable and I may add the remarkable speech of the chairman of the Philippine Committee, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], he referred among other incidents to the incident recently testified to in our committee of the discovery of the death and the means of the death of Sergeant O'Hearn. The Senator from Utah, in the course of his earnest and I may even add his volcanic reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, also referred to it. It deserved attention, then, and I arose to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to it, and it deserves attention now, because it illustrates a curious coincidence of misstatement upon the part of Senators in opposition, which I trust will not characterize those statements in the future.

The Senator from Utah, after he had explained that his reference to Copernicus and Galileo was a lapsus linguæ, said:

> Mr. President, I have deemed it proper to say so much; but there is one other thing that I ought in justice to say. The Senator from Massachusetts alluded to the circumstances, and detailed them, of the death of one O'Hearn, a soldier of the United States, one of the victims of this policy. He was tied to a tree, burned for four hours, hacked to pieces, and buried. How does the Senator from Massachusetts know that? Why, twelve Filipinos were seized, put into the custody of American soldiers, and information as to how this soldier of the United States came to his death was unascertainable.

The Senator will remember that I did not interrupt him there, because thus far he might have found himself within the record, and the recent record, but he continued:

> This system which prevails over there, started about two years ago, was brought into application, and what was the result? Twelve men were thrown down and subjected to the water torture. They were called upon to confess that they had been instrumental in bringing about the death of O'Hearn. They were tortured one day, but the necessary information was not derived; they were tortured the second day, and then, being unable to endure the torture longer, those twelve men, each and every one of them, said, "For God's sake—

And this seems to be a favorite phrase of the Senator from Utah—

> we can not endure this torture longer. What do you want us to say?" The interpreter, listening attentively, said—

And mark the detail with which the Senator recounts this testimony—

> "Confess the charge which has been made against you." "What was that charge?" "That you burned this man for four hours; that you hacked him to pieces." Thereupon these men did confess, and that is the sole basis upon which is built up this fabric of alleged cruelty perpetrated by Filipinos upon this American soldier.
> The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?
> Mr. RAWLINS. I decline to yield at present. The Senator can read the history of that as disclosed in our testimony before the Philippine Committee

Mr. President, I did not arise to interrupt the Senator as a matter of discourtesy or as a matter of vexatious interference with his closely connected, logical order of argument. I arose merely that he should not again be the victim of that lapsus linguæ which made him say Copernicus instead of Galileo. But, Mr. President, upon reading the RECORD I found that I had heard aright and that the Senator had stated with a detail of particularity something that had occurred in the testimony before the committee which not only did not occur, but in which the testimony was directly the reverse, and that, too, in spite of the utmost attempts of skilled lawyers to get the witness to testify to what the Senator from Utah now says he did testify to.

Mr. President, the record was before me at the time; it was in recent mind of all of us; and I think it proper at this time, in order that the debate from this moment forward may be accurate, and also let us hope fair, that it should be laid before the Senate as it actually occurred.

I will therefore read the questions and answers which were put to this witness, and place them in parallel columns, with the report of that testimony as given yesterday by the Senator from Utah.

After the witness had testified to the water cure upon points which it will not illumine, although I will read it all if it is desired, this particular point to repeat, I for brevity read the following——

Mr. RAWLINS. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think I will take it in the order in which it comes. I read from page 1978. This is witness Hallock:

> By the CHAIRMAN:
> Q. Did you witness any other cases of water cure?
> A. No, sir.
> Q. These were the only cases that you saw?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. Did the natives confess that O'Hearn was burned before he was murdered?
> A. They confessed—perhaps I had better tell you the story of his capture and everything.
> Q. Yes; tell the whole story.
> A. O'Hearn, in company with two other soldiers from our company, was sent to Iloilo after the mail, I think, and when they arrived back within about 5 or 6 miles of the company, or where the company was stationed, they were ambushed by about 100 insurgents and two of them were captured. O'Hearn made a break to get away. This was on June 30, 1900. He made a break to get to the quarters, or at least we thought he did, and fell in, as we supposed, with friendly natives. They captured him and on the next day, July 1, he was tied to a tree at 7 o'clock in the morning and was tortured by cutting with bolos and by slow fire until 5 o'clock at night. So the natives confessed.
> Q. The natives confessed to that?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. When they applied the water cure to these natives in order to get their confession, did you know that he had been tortured before being killed?
> A. No, sir; we did not know anything about it.
> Q. Then the infliction of the torture was entirely a voluntary confession?
> Senator CULBERSON. He has not said it was voluntary.
> A. The confession was gotten from the natives by means of the water cure.
> By the CHAIRMAN:
> Q. But did they ask them whether he was burned or whether he was murdered?
> A. They asked him through the interpreter how they killed him.
> Q. And then they confessed to the statement which you have just made?
> A. Yes, sir.

Later on the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] took the witness up and attempted to elicit the account of this testimony which the Senator from Utah yesterday said was elicited, as follows:

> By Senator PATTERSON:
> Q. Do you know whether this man denied any knowledge of the missing soldier before they applied the water torture to him?
> A. I could not say, sir.
> Q. Were you present when the water torture was applied to the other twelve?
> A. I was present in most cases.
> Q. Do you know whether, before it was applied, they had denied any knowledge of the affair?
> A. I think they did deny it.
> Q. Were they given to understand what they were to confess to to avoid the water torture?
> A. Yes, sir.

Possibly the Senator from Utah based his statement upon that answer.

> Senator BEVERIDGE. Do you understand that question?
> Senator PATTERSON. I will keep on asking it, so that there will be no trouble.
> Senator BEVERIDGE. I understand your question and its purpose very well.
> Senator PATTERSON. No; you do not.
> Senator BEVERIDGE. Senator Lodge asked that same question in a direct way, and now you put this question in a way, as we all very well understand, to imply that what to confess was suggested to them.
> Senator PATTERSON. Wait until I get through.
> The CHAIRMAN. What is the question?
> The stenographer repeated the question, as follows: "Q. Were they given to understand what they were to confess to to avoid the water torture?"
> Senator PATTERSON. If you will wait I will ask another question that will settle all controversy.
> Senator BEVERIDGE. But when you ask a question like that I propose to exercise my duty as a member of this committee to object to it.
> Senator PATTERSON. I understand you will.

By Senator PATTERSON:

Q. What was it they were given to understand they were to confess to?
A. They were given the water cure and then asked questions through this interpreter what they knew about the killing of O'Hearn.
Q. Before the water cure was applied to them were they given to understand about the death of a soldier—that is, the soldier that was missing?
A. Before they were given the water cure?
Q. Yes.
A. The only way I know that they could know it would be by talking amongst themselves.
Q. What was the water cure applied to them for?
A. What was the water cure applied to them for?
Q. Yes.
A. To see what information they had in regard to the death of O'Hearn.
Q. Had they been told of the death of O'Hearn?
A. Not to my knowledge.

"Had they been told of the death of O'Hearn?" "Not to my knowledge." And that was the final answer which was elicited after the question had been put to him and the suggestion made to him that what they were to confess to had been suggested to them, and then they were tortured in order to make them admit that the confession was correct.

Mr. President, why should it have been suggested to them even if the witness had not denied it? O'Hearn was missing. They wanted to know where he was. They found a native whom they thought was implicated. For all they knew O'Hearn might have been a prisoner. They did apply a water cure, and the native told them O'Hearn had been tied to a tree, tortured by bolos, burned by a slow fire; and he then told of twelve other natives who had participated in the killing.

And yet, Mr. President, after that testimony in which Hallock says it had not been to his knowledge that any such thing was done as stating what those persons were to confess to, in another place he said the statement was made voluntarily; that they merely asked him what had become of O'Hearn and what they had done about it. The Senator from Utah gives the following account of what took place in this testimony:

And then, being unable to endure the torture longer, those twelve men, each and every one of them, said, "For God's sake, we can not endure this torture longer. What do you want us to say?" The interpreter, listening attentively, said, "Confess the charge which has been made against you." "What was that charge?" "That you burned this man for four hours; that you hacked him to pieces."

So, Mr. President, we see that if the Senator yesterday had permitted me to interrupt him it would have been merely to call attention to the fact that after a most careful and skillful cross-examination by Senators on the other side the witness had not testified to anything of the kind stated by the Senator from Utah, but had testified that they asked him what about O'Hearn, and that finally through this man they discovered what had become of him and where his bones rested, and the native made the statement without suggestion.

Mr. President, I deemed it necessary and perhaps useful for the general course of the debate——

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator from Indiana call attenbeen tion to the fact that, although these twelve men after they had subjected to the water cure and confessed, as the term is used, after the application to participating in the death of O'Hearn, they were sent to prison or put in the guardhouse and kept there for a period of from five to eight months; that the officers got together and held a consultation about the case, and yet none of those prisoners was ever brought to trial? There was no court-martial and no effort at any sort of investigation after the application of the water torture and the imprisonment.

It struck me, Mr. President, in connection with that, that if the identification of O'Hearn had been so complete, if the officers, under whose administration this torture occurred, believed that these men had been guilty of the crime, to extort the confession of which the torture was applied, there would have been a speedy court-martial and a speedy military execution of every one of them. Instead of that they were kept in prison from five to eight months, five of them were killed in an attempt to escape, and the rest of them escaped. There never was any trial.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I am not surprised that the Senator from Colorado, with his usual fertility of resource, should want to divert the course of the present discussion, which was that a lapsus linguæ, to put it mildly and kindly, had been made here, although the record was before the Senator who made it, and that it perhaps characterized the unintentional moderateness, I will not say inaccuracy of statement, that has distinguished every speech and every remark which has been made by the Senators in opposition. I am not, therefore, surprised to see the Senator from Colorado, with that tropical fruitfulness of resource which distinguishes him, attempt now to divert this controversy to another portion of this mass of testimony. But since he has done so, I am willing to take that up.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Gladly; with pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this, it strikes me, is the essence of this matter. Did the Senator from Indiana find it proven before his committee that American soldiers tortured men, if it be torture, by the water cure, to get out of them a confession that they had committed crime? Is that what they proved? Whether the Senator from Utah said "Copernicus," or "Galileo," I should like, as an American Senator, to know whether or no American soldiers tortured men until they confessed crimes?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is proved to my satisfaction—every Senator must speak for himself—that what is known as the water cure was administered in this dreadful case to ascertain what had become of O'Hearn; that it was thereby ascertained that O'Hearn had been ambushed, had been tied to a tree, had been hacked with bolos, burned with a slow fire, and, after being burned and charred, had been buried, and that our soldiers thereupon went to the spot, after they had been told of it, dug up those bones, identified them by the loss of a missing tooth, and from the fact that it was an American skeleton. That much, I think, is proved to my satisfaction; at least, there is no evidence to the contrary.

Mr. HOAR. Was it proved that this was done by any other evidence than the confession which was so extorted?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not that I know of.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator looked at me, and I inferred from that that he yielded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must insist on Senators who wish to interrupt other Senators first addressing the Chair.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well, Mr. President.

I suppose the Senator from Indiana will admit that, after the first confession and, as he states, the finding of the body, the remaining twelve Filipinos had the torture inflicted upon them to compel them to admit that they had participated in the offense?

I think he will further admit that the only evidence of the identification of O'Hearn was the fact that there was a tooth missing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do you deny the identification of O'Hearn?

Mr. PATTERSON. I am telling you what the facts are.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know, but by inference, from the facts, what is your opinion?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have not formed any opinion, nor do I care to form an opinion in regard to that. I simply know that, according to the clear and explicit testimony of the witnesses, the only means of identification of O'Hearn was the missing tooth. Then, further, the question may be asked, How did this Filipino know it was O'Hearn?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. One fact at a time; one argument at a time.

Mr. President, the remark of the Senator leads me to suggest that it only seems that he is interested in convicting some American soldier of some crime, and since he has spoken about the identification of O'Hearn, it affords me simply an illustration of how proof strong as Holy Writ can not convince the Senator from Colorado or those who follow in his wake when it is the American soldier they are attacking.

This incident of the identification of O'Hearn—while I do not think it is illuminative of this question, or that any of these things are illuminative of this great question or of the policy which is involved in it—is illuminative, Mr. President, of the fact that no matter how much evidence, how cumulative it may be, the Senator from Colorado and other Senators upon his side will not admit it so long as it refers to the American soldier.

Let us see the application of that. Our men did not know where O'Hearn was. He had been sent after the mail. It was known that he was returning with the mail sack. He was missing. A man was found who it was believed had been implicated in his taking off. Whether he was a prisoner, whether he was still alive, or whether he was in his grave nobody knew. So this water cure was inflicted. That is all past.

Now, let us see as to the identification of O'Hearn; how unwilling the Senator from Colorado is to accept, in the same, testimony that he would accept in a court of justice. First, O'Hearn was missing; second, those men who confessed that they had killed O'Hearn, and, mark you, burned him. We are now talking about identification. Our soldiers went to the spot where those men said O'Hearn's charred bones were buried. At that spot they found those bones thus charred. The best preserved bones, the bones most intact, were those of the head, in which there was a missing tooth. The bones were taken to headquarters; they were examined by our surgeon; there they were identified by him, and the most conspicuous single item of evidence was the missing tooth; and it was said the skeleton of this man was not that of a Filipino. If there is any succession of circumstances which would convict any man charged with murder before any American jury, I can not conceive of a stronger case than that, and yet the Senator from Colorado is not willing to admit that O'Hearn is even dead.

I take this much time merely to show the methods that are employed by some of the Senators upon the other side of this question and to show they are not convinced by the most overwhelming, cumulative, and undisputed testimony. That is the only use of that incident; and I am very much obliged to the Senator from Colorado for affording it to me.

Since the Senator from Colorado goes into another feature of this testimony, why does he not go into the whole of it? Why do not he and the Senators on the other side of this question go into the whole of the testimony? Why did you not repeat what every single witness, save one, said who testified to the water cure, that kindness, consideration, and gentleness have been the ordinary, usual, and habitual practice of our men toward the Filipino people who were working in peace, and more so as to those who were taken as prisoners of war and confined in our prisons?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; gladly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suppose the Senator from Indiana will also admit that this prisoner stated that from about the time when the application of the water cure was commenced there were but four Filipinos taken as prisoners during the entire period?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That witness so testified, Mr. President; but I ask the Senator whether it was not true of every prisoner which the witness had the opportunity of seeing, and I ask the Senator whether it was not proven by this record that this soldier testified that every prisoner he saw had the same treatment from our physicians, from our nurses, and in our hospitals that our own soldiers had? Is not that true?

Mr. PATTERSON. He stated that there was but one such Filipino of whom he had knowledge, and but four Filipinos had ever been taken prisoners up to the time the army commenced the application of the water cure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it true or not true that he stated that this wounded Filipino had the same treatment that our own soldiers had?

Mr. PATTERSON. He said this wounded Filipino was taken from the hospital to another hospital, and that was all the knowledge he had of him. He also stated, I am quite sure, that the prisoners were compelled to do the work—no one could find any fault with that—and that they were supplied with the ration which was most desired by them, and that was rice. That is the statement, but what then? When it came to his knowledge—which is quite significant—I asked him how many prisoners were taken from the time they commenced the application of the water cure, and he said: "Do you mean by my company or my command?" I said: "No; I mean by the entire command." He stopped, and evidently with care and precision recalled the number and said: "Four." He had knowledge of 1 wounded man and 4 prisoners from the time the application of the water cure commenced.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, when I rose it was merely to make correction of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. I had no idea that we should become involved in a debate here; and although the records at my desk are not complete, I do not know but that this is as good a time as any for pointing out some certain other unaccountable omissions with reference to the testimony before this committee by every Senator who has spoken upon that side of the question.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; but I hope the Senator will ask me a question and not make a speech.

Mr. PATTERSON. I simply want to suggest that the character of the reflections in which the Senator is indulging is not calculated to produce harmony in debate in the Chamber, impugning the motives of Senators in their course of proceeding. I have heard Senators corrected a number of times for a procedure of that kind, and heard the admission that the correction was always proper. The character of the remarks the Senator is making will do no good.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I for the first time agree with the Senator from Colorado that it is not wise or right to reflect upon the motives of Senators, nor do I do so now. On the contrary, when I began what I thought would be merely remarks of one or two minutes, I said that I exonerated even the Senator from Utah, and all the Senators, from having intentionally suppressed information, and yet the only note we have heard struck upon their side of the Chamber has been suppression, suppression, suppression, concealment, concealment, concealment.

Was that a reflection upon the motives of Senators upon the other side of the question? When Senators are confronted with the fact that they have merely omitted certain vital portions of the testimony taken before the Senate committee, when we do not use the harsh words "suppression" or "concealment," "purposed" and "intentional," the Senator from Colorado rises to read us upon this side of the Chamber a lecture. In whose mouths have the words "suppression" and "concealment" been found? Not in the mouths of Senators upon this side of the Chamber. What was my remark? That there had been omissions in your statements to the Senate of the testimony of these witnesses.

I had not intended to go into this matter to-day, and probably not at all, but some of the RECORDS are before me, and one of them contains the other speech made by the Senator from Utah, for whom personally I have the highest regard, as he knows. There was some testimony of witnesses referred to by him, but the testimony, which immediately followed, referring to the kindness of the Americans to the Filipino people and the Filipino prisoners received at our soldiers' hands, was not mentioned by him. I do not ask you why you did not mention it. I leave that to yourselves. You can answer the question. I merely note the fact.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; gladly.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I want to say, in order that my position in this matter may not be misunderstood, that the conduct of the American soldiers in the Philippines toward the natives was uniformly kind wherever it was permitted to be so; and further——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I interrupt the Senator right there?

Mr. CARMACK. In one moment, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

Mr. CARMACK. Further, where their conduct was otherwise, they were driven to it by the command of their superior officers. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] yesterday accounted for the cruelties perpetrated in the Philippines on the idea that the soldiers were inflamed with a passion for revenge; which was not true. The complaint on the part of their officers uniformly was that the feelings of the soldiers toward the Filipinos were too kindly; and they were constantly being driven by their officers into acts of cruelty which were abhorrent to their own nature.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I am delighted to hear, even at this late stage of the debate, an apology to the American soldiers from the Democratic side of the Chamber.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me, he has not heard any apology whatever, and he will not hear any from me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am sorry I misinterpreted the Senator.

Mr. CARMACK. I am sorry on the Senator's account.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator made at last a very handsome reference to the American soldiers and most eloquently referred to them. We all admire the talent of the Senator from Tennessee, but I have heard him refer to that same Army as being composed of vandals, as ravagers and murderers, or some such words. If those are not the words of the Senator, I will withdraw the remark and give the Senator an opportunity now to say whether or not the statement is correct.

Mr. CARMACK. It is not correct at all, Mr. President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Since the Senator is on the floor, will he remain on the floor a minute longer?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator now says that it is not the fault of the American soldier that the water cure was administered. We have got it removed at last from the soldiers to the officers; that it is due to orders of the officers. I ask the Senator whether he can name an officer, except in the first instance of the administration of the water cure, testified to before our committee (there have been many others testified to since) where one of the officers ordered it? On the contrary, I ask the Senator, in order to give him time to think, whether it is not true that the testimony of every witness except one has been that it was inflicted by the men themselves?

Mr. CARMACK. Does the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I do.

Mr. CARMACK. I was not speaking of any special order with reference to any special act. I was speaking of the general orders of Chaffee and Bell and Smith, in which orders—which I will hereafter present to the Senate—complaint was made that the feelings of the soldiers toward the natives were too friendly and too kindly and urging and demanding that they should cease to entertain those friendly feelings.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, we are tracing it down at last. First, it was the American soldier. He is exonerated. Thank you. Then it was his officers, under whose command he did these things. I remember the Senator's words well. When I asked him—and he was one of the most alert and attentive members of our committee—whether or not there was a single instance, except one, in which it appeared that an officer had ordered one of these water cures, he refers in a diaphanous way to the general orders of Chaffee and Bell.

Let us get the responsibility fixed. We heard an apology yesterday—beautiful, forcible, and most appropriate, though long delayed—by the Senator from Utah, as to General Chaffee and his record and his conduct. He was exonerated. That is No. 1. We hear to-day an exoneration of the American soldier from the Senator from Tennessee. That is a most proper exoneration; No. 2. Then I asked him, when he charged that these atrocities were traceable to the orders of our officers, whether there had been a single bit of testimony to that effect by any except one witness, and he said, "No." That is exoneration No. 3. Perhaps we can dispose of this attack upon the American Army to-day.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; gladly.

Mr. CARMACK. I will say to the Senator, if he wants further specifications, that Major Waller, in the first place——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now it is Waller.

Mr. CARMACK. Major Waller protested against the inhuman orders of General Smith, and the soldiers under Waller protested against the inhuman orders of Waller; and my information is that the court-martial of Waller came about through the protests and complaints of the soldiers under him of his cruel and inhuman conduct.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now you testify to your understanding.

Mr. CARMACK. My understanding comes from a newspaper published in Manila. Of course, Mr. President, there are a great many things going on there of which we can not now get direct testimony, because we can bring no witnesses from the Philippines.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ah!

Mr. CARMACK. We have to take the best testimony we can get. Here is a statement published in the Manila Times to the effect that the court-martial of Waller was brought about through the complaints and the protests of his soldiers against the brutal and inhuman conduct he had forced them to perpetrate. Waller himself declared that he protested against the brutal and inhuman order of Smith, and I have cited the order of General Chaffee, in which he complained that the officers and men were too friendly toward the Filipinos.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You stated that once before. I yielded; but not for a repetition. I will yield for a speech, but not for a repetition of a speech, because I want to get on.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator is repeating one now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I am not. I am following as best I can the changing positions of the other side. The Senator made an unfortunate remark when he said they had to get along with the best testimony they could. All I ask him is that he shall stick to the testimony; all I ask him is that he shall stick to the record; all I ask him is that he shall produce that record before the Senate and the American people complete and ungarbled.

I had no intention at this time to go into this portion of the debate, and I doubt whether I should at all, Mr. President; but I have heard attack after attack; I have heard references to witness after witness by Senators upon the Democratic side wherever it will reflect upon the American soldier or the American officer or the American general; and although that record is full of testimony as to the contrary, and as to the kindly care by our soldiers of the Filipinos, that the Filipinos had the same physicians as our American soldiers, that they had the same medicine as our American soldiers, that they had the same nurses as our American soldiers, I have not heard one word of that upon the Democratic side of the Chamber.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Indiana, I know, desires to deal fairly and justly with Senators on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly, and I always do so.

Mr. PATTERSON. Senators upon this side have paid as full and eloquent and as heartfelt eulogies to the American soldiers as have been uttered on the other side of the Chamber, and I do not want to say anything further upon that subject.

The Senator from Indiana, however, wants to know whether there was any instance but the one in which there was an order from an American officer to administer the water cure. My sole aim, I will say to the Senator, is to be correct. I want to say to the Senate, Mr. President, that in every instance in which the water cure was administered—sometimes to as many as 20 Filipinos, then again to 12, and sometimes to lesser numbers—in every instance an officer was in the immediate vicinity.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ah!

Mr. PATTERSON. One moment, now. "Ah!"

Mr. BEVERIDGE. "In the immediate vicinity" is what I said "ah" to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I know it was.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is as near as you can get an officer—"in the immediate vicinity."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] has the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE].

Mr. PATTERSON. In the immediate vicinity, when the water cure was applied all night, commencing early in the evening and running until broad daylight in the morning, the officer in command of the troops was sitting under the shade of a tree, within less than 100 yards from where the process was being conducted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Great heavens, Mr. President, sitting in the shade of a tree at night! [Laughter.] We have it at last, I am glad to say. In the courts, both Federal and State, if a lawyer who is confused presents some half a dozen theories upon which he desires to proceed no one knows better than the Senator from Colorado that the court requires him to elect the theory upon which he proposes to try his case.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just wait a moment. I want to get through with that officer sitting at night under the shade of a tree. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. Ah!

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I started out with the expectation of occupying the attention of the Senate for three or four minutes in a kindly way to call attention to what I said was an unintentional error of my friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. Immediately a diversion was required; and the Senator from Colorado proposed another subject of discussion. That was taken up, and then my friend the Senator from Tennessee took up another subject of discussion, and that was the American soldier. He exonerated him, and then he attacked the American officer. I then asked the Senator to name the American officer, to file his specifications, and he said it was not a subordinate officer, but it was Chaffee and Bell; and yet we had Chaffee yesterday exonerated by the Senator from Utah. Then comes again the Senator from Colorado to the rescue, and says, "Yes, there is more than one instance; there is a horrible and dramatic circumstance of water cure given all night long until broad daylight, and during the whole of it an American officer sat within a few yards under the shade of a tree." [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the important question——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That, Mr. President, illustrates the accuracy with which so acute a lawyer as my friend from Colorado, who looks sanely upon all other subjects, looks upon this. It is a question which seems to have created some queer and curious and unexplainable psychic state in the minds of Senators upon the Democratic side, and, at least, upon that theory we exonerate them.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Does the Senator from Indiana deny that the witnesses themselves, whom the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] yesterday extolled to the extent of his eloquence and ability, testified that they commenced administering the water cure and kept it up until the next morning, and then on the next day it was administered to 20 and more Filipinos, and that during that time the officer in command of the company or the battalion was within less than a hundred yards of the proceeding. Whether or not he was sitting under the shade of a tree, the important question is, Did or did not Mr. Flint, who, as I said before, the Senator from Massachusetts eulogized, state that the man in command of the battalion was in immediate proximity to the place and knew what was going on?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly, I admit it. Do you admit that it is not true, although it was claimed, that Major Geary, the officer, had ordered these things done?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh!

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh!

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. It was proved he had knowledge of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But your charge was, and you must stick to your statement——

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator charged that it was done under the orders of the officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One Senator at a time.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Indiana asked me a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now answer it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will. Mr. Flint swore that he did not hear the orders given, but he supposed——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ah!

Mr. PATTERSON. One moment. He supposed that the men were acting under the command of the man in charge, who had full knowledge of what was going on.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. "Supposed," Mr. President, is now what we have—supposition, shades of trees, and shades of everything else, but no definite charge.

Now, then, does not the Senator also know that Mr. Flint, his star witness, stated under examination that he himself approved what was going on?

Mr. PATTERSON. In substance, he did.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; in substance.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Since you have driven me into it, I must call attention to it. Since you will not specify any more than Major Gardener specifies, but since all your statements are vague and diaphanous, however beautiful rhetoric may make them, let us come down to what you gentlemen omit. What is the gist of this charge? It is the cruelty of American soldiers. That is it. You have produced instances, and they are not denied. I hope I may never see the day in the Senate when anything which is true will ever be purposely denied, whatever its effect, by the side to which I have the honor to belong. In the trial of the question of cruelty was it not proper, unless you were acting the part of attorney for a client, trying a cause one-sidedly, when presenting the case, to present both sides? If you produce an instance of the water cure, was it not also proper, honorable, and necessary that you should produce the testimony given by the very same witness of the uniform and universal kindness, care, and consideration unparalleled in the history of warfare shown by American officers and men to the natives. Did you do it?

Did the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], in his most remarkable and ingenious speech, do it? Did the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], who quoted the testimony of one of these witnesses, do it? And yet, Mr. President, every witness, except Mr. Riley (and I should have asked him if I had been conducting the examination on that subject that day) testified to these facts. I will repeat them to economize time and save the reading of the record, and will leave them to be challenged. Wherever a Filipino prisoner was taken, he received the same kind care and consideration that our own prisoners in the guardhouse received. Nay, more, that when any native was sick and wounded, he was taken to our hospitals. He was put upon our cots. He was attended by our physicians and surgeons. He was nursed by our nurses. He was ministered to by our medicine. He was fed with our food, and when it was not good enough, and he preferred the food to which he was habituated, we gave him that instead of ours.

It is also testified to by every witness who has testified to the water cure except one that this was the uniform and universal treatment which the Filipino prisoners received from American officers and men. I ask the Senator from Utah, who so ably leads this attack here, why he did not mention that when he was quoting the testimony of one of these witnesses? I ask all the Senators here why they have not mentioned that fact? Why is it that you have presented the instances of cruelty and refused to produce a single item of evidence of the unbroken current of kindness of American soldiers and officers to the Filipinos? Was it because that kindness was shown by American soldiers? Was it because it was not consistent with the exigency in which you find yourselves to tell the American people that the Filipinos have been treated with a uniform kindness and consideration which the whole history of war even in civilized countries can not parallel?

Since you are going to refer to the testimony in the trial of this cause, either admit that you are trying it in a partial manner; that you have taken a fee and a brief against the American soldier and the American authorities, or else produce all the testimony. I do not think the American people are going to be very greatly impressed by a case which produces a small part of the testimony against American soldiers and which refuses to produce the mass of testimony in their favor.

Mr. President, I will not take the time to read this record, because I have given the gist of it. At some time in the future I may. As I remarked two or three times already, I rose merely to correct my good friend the Senator from Utah in order that another one of his lapsus linguæ might not be perpetuated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

But, Mr. President, since the matter has come up we might as well get through with it. I admit that the Senators on the other side have not intentionally suppressed testimony. They have omitted to mention it. I admit that it has not been with the intention of presenting only one side of this case, and that the black side, to the American people. But I ask you to explain why you did not produce it all?

Mr. President, much may be allowed for partisan enthusiasm; much may be allowed for honest zeal even in a mistaken cause; much may be allowed for the heat of debate, and still more for the exigencies in which gentlemen sometimes find themselves in debate; but none of these, nor all these put together, ought to blind us to facts—facts not of rumor, but of record. What those facts mean, what their interpretation is, may be a matter of honest difference of opinion; but in the statement of those facts in the trial of your suit against the American soldier I beg you to be fair and accurate, even if, because of the political emergency in which you find yourselves, you are not willing to be fair in their interpretation.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I do not know that there is any occasion for an attempted response to the remarks which have been submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. He rose, he said, to put a statement made by me yesterday evening in parallel column with the testimony delivered by a witness before the Committee on the Philippines. He has put the testimony and the statement, according to his claim, in juxtaposition, and he admits that while he rose to make a correction, the statement which I made was in every particular accurate.

I stated in substance that O'Hearn, it was claimed, had come to his death by being burned for several hours and then cut to pieces and buried, and that the basis of the information to that effect was derived from witnesses speaking after and under and by reason of the application of the so-called water cure. The testimony already read by the Senator from Indiana from the record is a verification of every one of those statements. Let me repeat it.

O'Hearn disappeared. Captain Glenn, who was a judge-advocate upon General Hughes's staff, subjected a Filipino to the water torture. Thereupon the confession was obtained from him that the soldier O'Hearn had met with his death. The skeleton of the soldier was subsequently found. Captain Glenn reported also that 12 Filipinos, according to the statement of the man who had been subjected to the torture, had participated in the killing of O'Hearn. These 12 Filipinos were thereupon arrested and subjected to the torture for two days, when it is alleged they confessed that they had participated in that killing. The sole knowledge we possess in relation to this case is that the soldier disappeared; that a skeleton or remains, identified, or claimed to have been identified, as the remains of O'Hearn, were produced, and that the 12 Filipinos, as a result of the application of the water cure, confessed that they had participated in taking his life by means of burning and hacking to pieces in the manner which is described.

I do not undertake from memory to quote the exact phraseology of the testimony, but to give the substance of it, and the substance of it is that these men were induced to make these statements by the infliction of this torture, which the witness stated was carried on for two successive days.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] works himself into a fever heat. He is not guilty of any volcanic eruption. It scarcely rises to the dignity of an eruption. He repeats the imputation, which now is the only stock in trade of our friends, that we on this side are arraigning the American soldier; that we are responsible for all the facts which have been elicited by the Committee on the Philippines, a considerable majority of which committee is composed of members of the Republican party.

That committee, under the direction of the Senate, is pursuing an investigation into the conduct of affairs in the Philippine Islands. That may be conducted for partisan ends. If so, it is conducted by the majority for partisan ends. No witnesses have appeared before that committee except upon the direction of the committee itself. Every person who has been brought before it and who has testified has testified in answer to questions which have been propounded by the members of the committee and with the approval of the committee.

Mr. President, the American soldier and officer I have no doubt have treated with humanity persons who have become their prisoners of war. Nobody has contended otherwise. That is not a matter which has been made the subject of an accusation against anybody, and it has not therefore been necessary to make any inquiry into the subject. It has been charged through the newspapers and from various sources that the Army in the Philippines, or some part of the Army, have engaged in the practice of inflicting torture for the purpose of securing information. That was a thing so unheard of in our history that members on the other side of the Senate, as well as upon this side of the Chamber, deemed it a proper subject for investigation, and the committee has summoned witnesses in order that the truth of the matter might be ascertained.

Why waste the time of the committee in going into an inquiry about something which was not in dispute or which was not the subject of any charge? Nobody declared that prisoners of war in the custody of our Army were being starved to death or were being tortured simply because they were prisoners. And only the Senator from Indiana, of the majority, has deemed it worth the while to propound to witnesses questions relating to a matter which is entirely irrelevant, so far as this subject is concerned.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I infer, and I hope it is true, and therefore I ask the Senator whether he will now admit that it is established and not to be further discussed, that the treatment at the hands of American officers and men of Filipino people engaged in peaceable pursuits has been uniformly kind, considerate, and full of regard and care? Is that admitted or not?

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator by his question is now seeking to make a new diversion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I stated that in my few remarks.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator was talking about the treatment of prisoners of war in the custody of the American Army. The Senator now asks the question whether inhabitants who are not prisoners of war were uniformly treated with kindness by the American soldiery. That is another question—is a question concerning which there may be discussion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will permit me, that is a question which I think the Senator will not desire me to answer until there has been a fuller investigation, and I do not intend to be drawn into that controversy until we have had matters which justify a discussion of it. I could invite the attention of the Senator to official reports made by civil governors in different provinces in the Philippine Islands bearing upon that question which would be of tragic interest. But I do not care to go into it. I was simply endeavoring to speak with reference to the accusation which the Senator from Indiana deemed it necessary to make in this case against those of us who constitute the minority in the Philippine Committee and the minority in the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. RAWLINS. There is one other matter, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will not the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. RAWLINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I always yield to the Senator, and I always invite his questions. The Senator did not listen so carefully to my remarks as I had flattered myself he was doing, for I stated that it was the testimony of every witness who testified as to the fact except one, Mr. Riley, who was not questioned on that point, that the treatment which the Filipinos received at the hands of the American officers and men was universally kind and considerate, and that was true not only of the people, but of all prisoners taken in war.

I referred then to prisoners more at length, because it was a conspicuous illustration, and therefore it was pertinent, since the Senator was saying that our kindness to the Filipino prisoners was not pertinent to the discussion; and I ask him whether he admits now, in the course of this discussion, that the evidence shows, without an exception, that we have been kind, considerate, full of care and humane regard for the Filipino prisoners in our possession and for the Filipino people? I ask the question again.

Mr. RAWLINS. Since the Senator repeats the question in its enlarged import, I am going to answer it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish the Senator would.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will answer him upon the testimony which the Philippines Committee has taken. According to the uncontroverted testimony which has been taken by that committee we find that the American soldier under the direction of American officers have inflicted the water torture and other cruelties for the purpose of extorting information. We have found that when, by reason of such information, cities, towns, and barrios have been declared to contain or to harbor insurrectos or persons hostile to the United States the penalty which has followed the obtaining of such information has been the wiping out by fire and sword, if you may so speak, of such towns, villages, and cities.

We have had many cases of that kind testified to by witnesses. There was one this morning, where an officer in command of about 50 men led by a Filipino guide arrived at a barrio expecting to find there some insurrectos. Failing to find them, the guide was first whipped and then given the water torture until he could not stand upon his feet, and being unable to obtain any information, as, according to the statement of the witness, he had no information he could give, the commander of the squadron directed that the houses constituting the barrio should be burned to the ground. One of those houses was occupied by two women, one helpless and paralytic, unable to stand upon her feet, and when that order was given the other woman dragged her out as best she could, sufficiently far from the house so that she would not be consumed in the flames, and thereupon the torch was put to the building and it was burned to the ground, with all its contents with the exception perhaps of a little rice.

In another instance to which I have alluded towns containing as many as ten and twelve thousand inhabitants were under similar circumstances burned to the ground, and men, women, and children, the well and the sick, were turned out without shelter and without food.

In the report made from the province of Bohol, which will be found in our records, we find that upon that island 24 such barrios and such towns were swept from the face of the earth by fire; and we find there, too, a petition from a certain barrio, stating that the inhabitants of that barrio did not wish to suffer annihilation, but would be dutiful and obedient if they were committed to the authority of the United States.

Mr. President, there are many things which have not yet been disclosed. They are not the work of the soldier. They are not the work of subordinate commanders. They are the commands of the highest military authorities in the islands, and the Senator from Indiana will not lead me to depart from a strict and fair interpretation of the facts which have been developed thus far in this investigation by saying that the superior officers in the islands have not been the source through which the direction for these things has come. But here, here in Washington; here, the seat of power of this nation, here where policies are devised, and here where the responsibilities of government must rest, it must be here that you are to place that responsibility, if it is to be placed anywhere.

I was reluctant to believe, until recently, but that these things were sporadic, accidental, fortuitous, the manifestation of individual perversity and brutality; but as the facts have developed and the evidence has been disclosed step by step we have been forced to the inevitable conclusion that the general plan of campaign in the Philippine Islands was to become as drastic and severe as it could possibly be made, and that that was the only plan by which the pacification of the islands could be secured, and that, according to the opinion of those who were to carry into execution that plan, would be the most humane war. It was necessary to make of Samar a howling wilderness as an example to other provinces and other islands, that they would not dare raise their hands in insurrection or to the disturbance of the peace.

Mr. President, we may consider these men, not moved by malice or malevolence, sitting down and considering the question, "How shall peace come to the islands of this archipelago? If we have to proceed against these people (bent upon establishing their own freedom or independence or whatever their own conceptions may have been) according to the rules of civilized warfare, this insurrection will continue through the years." How many years it would be difficult to conceive.

Therefore to pacify the islands it was necessary to bring to every man, woman, and child the fact, inevitable and remorseless as it may be, that the failure in all respects to submit, as well in deed as in word, to the authority of the United States meant to suffer the inevitable consequences. There are people, I think, within the sound of my voice who know that, as to some of these islands, our troops appeared upon the borderland and issued their proclamation giving the people so many hours or so many days to come within a defined district, with the announcement that all those who failed so to come would suffer the penalty, such as is indicated by the order of Smith and its fulfillment by Waller—that is, their villages were swept away by fire and the lives of all indiscriminately taken. No vestige of food was permitted to remain upon which even a bird could live.

If the Senator from Indiana wants to know our position upon this question, we say, "There—there is the picture. There is your policy." The American soldier has treated the prisoner of war within his custody, so long as he remained in his custody, humanely, and has given him the necessary food, because in that condition he could no longer contribute to the insurrection. Mabini was taken as a prisoner and fairly treated, but they deemed it unsafe even to permit him, the ablest and most influential man, perhaps, next to Aguinaldo, in the island, to remain in Manila. In order that the indirect effect of his influence might be destroyed, they deported him to Guam.

Mr. President, this torture to gain information has been widespread and is imputed to have been practiced for two years everywhere by every commander in the islands to the full knowledge of those in authority there and those in authority here, because their attention has been called to it; and although there have been very many cases of soldiers arraigned and tried for various offenses, not one soldier, so far as the record has thus far disclosed, has been tried for the infliction of the torture known as the water cure.

Ah, Mr. President, it goes to the extreme. Sometimes it is the water cure, sometimes it is the revolver held at the head of the school-teacher, sometimes it is digging a hole and placing the Filipino in it and covering him to his neck with dirt, and then sprinkling sugar over his head to attract the voracious ants of the islands to torture him until he makes a declaration of the desired information. And when the information has been obtained in this way, inculpating whole cities or towns as having in some degree participated in the insurrection, based upon such information, elicited by such torture, the torch has been applied to the towns, and the habitations of men, women, and children have been swept from the face of the earth.

Ah, the Senator from Indiana says that we on this side are moved by partisan considerations. My friend from Indiana, I believe, has not lost all of the instincts of humanity. It may be that things like this—the slaughter of little children and helpless women, the punishment of the innocent in order that possibly no guilty man should escape—can not arouse him to any expression as if any of these things were not bringing some dishonor upon the glory of the American name.

Mr. President, I think that those of us who stand here and are willing to make these statements, based upon facts and the record, are not being exactly treated with that degree of respect which the cause which we espouse entitles us to. It seems strange, indeed, that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Indiana seek to spend their time in quibbles about Copernicus and Galileo. They may find flaws in my history, but they have never, so far, been able to dispute a fact or destroy the force of an argument.

Senators upon the other side, you who are true representatives of the spirit of American institutions, do not, I believe, feel in your hearts that we on this side are moved wholly by partisan or unworthy motives. If you think we are, let the American people be our judges. Let history pronounce upon our acts. Whatever our political fortune may be, I will be satisfied with it, only that in the end the American people remain true to its instincts of humanity and to the purpose to preserve the integrity and the honor and the glory of this country with all that it implies.

For a century and a half in the winning of the West, in the struggles which, step by step, we have moved from the Atlantic to the Pacific and encountered foes, savage and brutal in the highest degree, in what time in our history has anyone representing the authority of this Government ever dared to resort to the brutality which was supposed to be characteristic only of the darkest ages?

Mr. President, I have no apology to make for any statement or explanation which I have made. When I have gone through these facts, when I have seen these things developed, startling to every man moved by a sentiment of humanity, I confess that at times I have cried out, and cried out perhaps in extravagant language, which in cooler moments might not probably be uttered; but it has been the exclamation of an honest purpose and a sentiment of indignation aroused upon the establishment of facts which no one could have believed a year or two ago would have ever been brought into existence in the history of this Government.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I should not again intrude upon the time of the Senate but for the statement by the Senator from Utah that the testimony of the universal kindness of American soldiers and officers to Filipino prisoners and to the Filipino people as well was not relevant to this discussion. It seems to me that it is most highly relevant to this discussion, since the question is the treatment of those people by our soldiers and officers and the relations existing between them.

I noted with surprise, and I may say with concern, when I read the very able speech of my friend from Utah, that he did not state any of the testimony upon that side. I can not find it now, but the Senator can tell me if I am wrong when I say that I think he referred to the testimony of one Mr. Davis. Since the Senator said that it is not relevant, and since the Senator denied that there has been testimony here not only as to prisoners, but as to Filipino people in general, I will take a little time to read such of the record as I have on my desk, deferring to a future time for the rest of the record, and while it seems to concern my friend from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], as is perfectly natural, I assure him that it will not take long.

Mr. CARMACK. What did my friend from Indiana say?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Nothing but a very pleasant reference to the Senator from Tennessee. This is the examination of this man Davis:

Q. How long were you in the islands?
A. I was there from October 30, 1899, to March 4, 1902.
Q. During this time you were in active service in the suppression of the insurrection?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The place where you were, the American military authorities were actively engaged in establishing peace?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And conditions of war prevailed?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You were serving under General Hughes, were you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You know General Hughes?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. General Hughes, in his statement before the committee, testified as to the humanity and kindness shown by American soldiers and officers to Filipino prisoners. You have observed, have you, in your service Filipino prisoners in our possession?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You may state to the committee what the treatment was of American soldiers and officers as to kindness or otherwise.
A. Yes, sir; they received all kinds of kindness.
Q. When sick were they or were they not taken to our hospitals?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. By what physicians were they attended, if any?
A. I could not tell you.
Q. Was the food furnished Filipino prisoners abundant?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was there any hardships inflicted on them?
A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the general treatment of the Filipinos by the soldiers, as you observed it?
A. It was very good, as far as I know of, by the Twenty-sixth Regiment.

By Senator BEVERIDGE:

Q. Very good as far as you saw?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. This was true not only with reference to the Filipino prisoners, but with reference to the natives in general?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What instructions did you have, if any, from your superior officers concerning your kindness and deportment and consideration to the natives?
A. To treat them well.

In the statement of this man's testimony I ask the Senator from Utah why he did not refer to that most pertinent statement? This is not all. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] took it up in order to find out whether he would stick to the statement that his instructions were to treat the people at large kindly, generously, considerately.

Q. In answer to Senator BEVERIDGE, you said that the conduct of soldiers toward the natives was kind and considerate?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I do not suppose you mean by that that the water cure inflicted was pleasant and agreeable, did you?
A. No, sir.

By Senator BEVERIDGE:

Q. You meant, did you not, the general conduct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the everyday attitude and action of the soldiers toward the natives and prisoners?
A. Yes, sir.

Now, Mr. President, this is not all, but I shall not detain the Senate further this evening. I arose, as I explained in the first instance, only to correct a mistake which it seemed to me my duty to answer on the spot. The sum of it all is that if you are going to repeat some of the testimony of the witnesses, and not only repeat it, but dress it up in language of your own where it is against the American soldier, I beg of you in fairness to repeat such of their testimony as is in favor of the American soldiers, and in the current of whose testimony there is not a break.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, since we have had the O'Hearn incident elucidated, so far as the very limited testimony before the committee is capable of elucidating it, and now that my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has finished his remarkably eloquent and active effort, pitched on high and statesmanlike grounds and not for political purposes at all, intended to satisfy the country that every one on this side of the Chamber is engaged in assailing the honor of the American Army, and that he and his confrères on the Republican side are the sole and only defenders of the Army, I wish to say a few words pertinent to the bill now under consideration. I shall not follow the Senator from Indiana further than to express the hope that his brilliant effort will have the statesmanlike effect which it was designed to have in the State of Indiana.

I listened to the speech which the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] delivered yesterday, I will not say with pleasure, but with a weird kind of fascination. His recital of the bloody incidents in history, his portrayal of the brutalities practiced upon American soldiers by our future Filipino brothers, his admissions of the cruel reprisals practiced by American soldiers in return upon our future Filipino brothers, all pictured out with that literary finish of which he is a master, and with that historical accuracy on which he so justly prides himself, held me in my seat against my will, and enchained my mind as a bloody tragedy enacted before our eyes holds us spellbound with awe and horror. It was not until after he had concluded that the reflection came to my mind, how easy it would have been, with the aid of a little reason and common sense at the time the Spanish treaty was before us, to avoid the necessity for that horrid and bloody recital, and how certainly we would have avoided it if we had been able to project our minds forward to this year of grace 1902 and see that which the Senator portrayed to us so vividly.

My purpose in rising now is not to attempt to answer the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts. It could not be answered. It does not need any answer, because, barring a few unseemly flings at Democratic Senators and considering it apart from its spirit and purpose and tone, it was the best speech that has yet been delivered in this Chamber against the passage of the bill now under consideration. My purpose here and now is to supplement that speech in my feeble way, and to drive home, if I can, the one certain and inevitable conclusion which necessarily follows from the facts which he portrayed with so much vividness. That conclusion is that it is unwise and unjust and unpatriotic, in view of the facts which he has stated to the American Senate and the American people, to attempt to chain to ourselves and make a part of our permanent territories for all time to come the Philippine Archipelago. Yet, Mr. President, with the details set forth by the Senator from Massachusetts ringing in our ears and freezing our blood with horror, we are told that this bill is to be put through Congress under whip and spur, without a moment's surcease for consideration and for the gathering of additional facts on which to base intelligent consideration. Not even the testimony at hand which might be brought here and given to us before we are to vote upon this bill are we to be permitted to have, because it has only been two or three days since the Philippine Committee turned down the demand of the minority for the summoning here of witnesses whose testimony would have been of incalculable value to Senators in making up their minds concerning the wisdom of this measure.

We are told that we can not have Aguinaldo and Mabini here because they were insurgents, and yet General Bell wrote to our commissioners at Paris when they were formulating the Spanish treaty that Aguinaldo was an honest man and an able and an upright man; that he had the faculty of commanding the confidence of the people, and that he did command, more than any other man, the confidence of the Filipino people; and this refusal, based on the fact stated, was in the face of the fact that hundreds of insurgent officers who have surrendered and taken the oath are now in the employment of our civil government in the Philippine Islands, and in the face of the further fact, told to us by the dispatches some time after Aguinaldo was captured, that he and others of the prominent officers of the Philippine insurgent government had taken the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States. We ought to have their testimony here, because the Filipino side of this controversy has never been heard from beginning to end.

We are told that we can not have Howard W. Bray here because he is an Englishman, as if that militates against his truthfulness. Howard W. Bray lived in the islands for eighteen years before the outbreak of the Spanish war, and his letter, considered by our commissioners in Paris, stated with entire accuracy—with an accuracy almost amounting to prophecy—the result of attempting to take the Filipino Archipelago without the consent of the Filipino people.

We are told that for some reason—I do not know what—we can not have a couple of correspondents here to testify concerning that which they saw.

Mr. LODGE. Because, on inquiry, it was found that one was in Pekin and the other in South America. I have been since informed that the one who was supposed to be in South America is here, and it is the intention of the committee to call him.

Mr. TURNER. If Major Gardener can come here, leaving Manila on the 15th of May, in time to testify at this session of Congress, we can get these correspondents here, whether they are in Pekin or South America.

We are told that we can not have Major Gardener here until, within the sound discretion of the Secretary of War, he sees fit to permit him to come. That is the most remarkable proposition I ever heard. The several statements made by our friends upon the other side as the reason why we can not have Major Gardener here form the strongest proof, to my mind, that they do not want him to come, and do not propose that he shall come until after the present session of Congress shall have concluded. The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] said that we ought not to have him come because it would be necessary for us to go to the expense of a cablegram to bring him. That is the first idea which appears to have occurred to the other side. My distinguished friend the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] thought that the sending him a message to come here would be decorating him with some kind of an honor. He seemed to think that he had been a very swift witness and that we ought not to confer any honor upon him. But my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] brought the heaviest batteries to bear, as he always does, against the proposition to bring Major Gardener. He said, "My God, are you going to invade the province of the Executive Departments? Can you constitutionally do anything of that kind? Can you interfere with the operations of war?"

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. TURNER. I believe he did not say "My God;" I think I put that in myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. I will allow the Senator to withdraw that. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the objection I made to the resolution when it was first presented had no reference whatever to the question whether Major Gardener should be called or not, for I expected to vote for the resolution if properly amended to call him. But I will ask the Senator, for whom as a lawyer I have the profoundest admiration and respect, if he considered the objection I made to the resolution as it was introduced a sound or an unsound one. Does he think the Senate could pass a resolution directing the Secretary of War to order an officer to come from Manila here or to go anywhere? I did not object to a request of the President.

Mr. TURNER. In so far as there was an implication in the Senator's objection that the Congress of the United States could not bring any officer here at any time it pleased, no matter in what service he was engaged, I say that it was unsound. The idea that Congress, legislating for 80,000,000 people and dealing with the rights of 10,000,000 other people, can not bring here at any time any individual, without regard to the particular service in which he is engaged, is a proposition that does not meet with my assent. I do not believe there is anything in it.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator whether he thinks Congress could have brought General Thomas from the battle of Chickamauga to give testimony before a committee?

Mr. TURNER. I think Congress could have sent for General Thomas to come here at any time if it needed his testimony, and could have brought him here. I think it could have brought him from the field in the middle of the battle of Chickamauga if it had wanted to do so. The Congress did all through the civil war exercise that right through its Committee on the Conduct of the War, and so far as I know the proposition was never made at that time that Congress, in legislating and in securing the data upon which to legislate, could be hampered by the discretion of the President of the United States or the Secretary of War.

But now it has been discovered, as an additional reason for not bringing Major Gardener, that General Chaffee has ordered a court of inquiry to look into the matters reported about by him, and it is said we can not take him away from that. Mr. President, that court of inquiry was ordered by the Secretary of War for disciplinary purposes, as stated in the order. He wanted to discipline somebody, and it is said, "My God"—no; it was not said "My God" either [laughter], but it is said, "Are you going to take away this officer and interfere with this procedure in the Philippine Islands, brought in the interest of justice? Can that be done? And the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] rose in his seat and very gravely said if those were the facts it could not be done. The idea that Congress, legislating for the government of ten millions of people, is to be hampered in the securing of the information that it needs in order to reach an intelligent judgment by some little court of inquiry somewhere, held for disciplinary purposes, is the most remarkable proposition that I have ever heard stated in any legislative body. Must we adjourn Congress or postpone necessary legislation to give the Secretary of War an opportunity to discipline somebody?

This matter of obstruction placed in the way of ascertaining facts necessary to enable Congress to deal intelligently with the Philippine question satisfies my mind that a great change has come over the dreams of our Republican friends since the beginning of the present Congress. The attitude which they maintain to-day is very different from that which they took at the time the investigation of affairs in the Philippines was first entered on some months ago. That investigation was forced, if I remember aright, by the resolution of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], providing for the appointment of a select committee to proceed to the Philippine Islands and there investigate the condition of affairs in the islands, and particularly concerning the extent to which they had been pacified and the manner and method of their pacification. I well remember the aggrieved tone and manner of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] at this proposed invasion of the prerogative of his committee, and his confident assertion that his committee could meet and fulfill here in Washington every office which it was proposed that this special committee should perform in the Philippine Islands, and that it was ready and willing and anxious to summon here and examine every witness suggested by any Senator who it was thought could throw any light, even the most remote light, upon the affairs in those far-off islands. I wish to be respectful to my fellow Senators and to observe the rules of the Senate provided to secure orderly debate, but I shall feel constrained to believe and to declare, if the present method of the Philippine Committee be continued, and particularly if it continues to decline to summon witnesses who have peculiar means of knowledge, that its purpose is not to secure a full and fair investigation, but a one-sided and partial investigation; that it does not want the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, but has determined to strangle the truth, as our armies, under the compulsion of superior authority, are strangling liberty in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, I complain not alone at the tardy and dilatory tactics displayed by this committee and of its evident purpose to shut out, as far as it can, pertinent facts; but I complain that it has apparently failed to understand and appreciate the breadth and scope of the investigation which the present situation requires, and which the American people demand and have a right to expect at its hands. We are called upon to-day to take an irrevocable step in the development of our policy toward the Philippine Islands. We have never before been brought face to face with a proposition of that kind. Hitherto everything has been tentative and in the subjunctive mood. No one has ever undertaken to say what our permanent relations to the Philippine Islands should be. The proposition has been wait, wait for developments; wait until American authority has been established there, it has been said, and then trust the American people to deal justly and generously with the Filipinos in the spirit of our institutions and in accordance with our American traditions. But to-day we are asked to legislate in such a manner as to fix forever the status of those islands as a part of the territories of the United States, and a bill, called by courtesy a civil-government bill, is being pressed upon our consideration, and it is expected that we will enact it into law. It seems to me, before we take an irrevocable step of that kind, that there are many facts not now patent to Congress which we ought to know, and concerning which there ought to be a full and fair and honest investigation. Do the Filipino people as a whole want our rule? Are they satisfied to come into political union with us? Can we ever educate them up to a conception of Anglo-Saxon ideals of government and make them useful, happy, and contented citizens of the American Republic? Or have we, in the attempt to bring about that humanitarian and philanthropic object, entered upon a never-ending struggle, which will cost us so much in blood and treasure and demoralization that we ought, in justice to our own people, to abandon the struggle while we may still do so without too great a loss of prestige and reputation? That our institutions will make for the happiness and well being of any people who can understand and appreciate them no one on this side of the Chamber is disposed to deny; but do the Filipinos understand and appreciate them, or will they ever do so, and are they now, or will they ever be, well affected toward them and toward the American people? Or are they like the caged eagle which beats its wings and bruises its breast against the bars, but ever, so long as life lasts, remains wild and untamed? Mr. President, wild things, under the providence of God, have rights in the world; and it is cruel and impracticable to attempt to constrain them to an order of things which they can not understand and will not accept. If the Filipinos are to be placed in that category, if they love us not, and are determined to be not happy in union with us, it is not only cruel, but it is the very height of impracticable folly for us to attempt to constrain their will to our own desires in the premises.

Who knows anything certain upon these subjects? Nobody. We are in a state of profound darkness, with only an occasional ray of light straggling through, and that of such a character as to bring disquiet to our minds rather than assurance. Pride may bid us go forward in a preconceived course; greed and avarice may urge it, temporary political advantage may seem to make it desirable, but enlightened statesmanship and exalted patriotism demand light before shaping a final and irrevocable course.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator if we should pass this bill or any other bill in the same direction, to remain in force for twenty years or any indefinite length of time, Congress might not then allow the Filipinos to set up an independent government, if they felt so disposed and found that it was proper for them to do so? In other words, does this bill commit Congress to a policy to continue indefinitely, with no possibility of change, the present government in the Philippines? I understand that to be the argument of the Senator, and I want to know if his position is that if this bill is passed the thing is finally determined?

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I base my argument upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, that whenever civil government shall have been established in any one of our newly acquired possessions, then and thereby and from that moment it becomes a part of the territory of the United States for all purposes, and upon the proposition of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], which I heard him present here with great force some months ago, that territory having once been incorporated in that manner there was no constitutional power in the Government of the United States to part with it.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator indorse that doctrine?

Mr. TURNER. Which doctrine does the Senator mean?

Mr. STEWART. I mean the doctrine of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], as stated by the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER. It seems to me to have a great deal of force. I know that Senator to be one of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the country, and I am disposed to accept as sound the position which he took with reference to that matter.

Mr. STEWART. Then will the passage of this bill end discussion on the question of retaining the Philippines?

Mr. TURNER. Yes; it will end the discussion if these propositions be true; but at what a cost? I say that we have enough before us to justify us in demanding light before we take an irrevocable step of that kind; and I say that we do not have that light before us now; and that it does not appear that the Philippine Committee or the Senate of the United States proposes that we shall have that light before we are forced to vote upon this bill.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has made me very much in favor of this bill by his discussion, because I am in favor of retaining the Philippine Islands, and if we can end our troubles regarding them by the passage of this bill I shall be very anxious to vote for it.

Mr. TURNER. Do I understand that before I rose to speak the Senator from Nevada was opposed to the bill?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, if we had waited for light before our initial action in the Philippines we would now have no step to retrace. But we did not do so, and we have been stumbling ever since along a rough and stony road, without any visible ending in the direction whence we are traveling and with every finger board pointing in a contrary direction and saying to us, "Go back, go back." The leaders of the Filipino people begged us to hear them before we took the first step. But no; we were sufficient unto ourselves. The junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] gave the watchword and set the pace on this subject at the very outset, when, in the endeavor to stir the zeal of the flagging and to buoy up the spirits of the faint-hearted, he exclaimed: "Oh, for the faith and the courage of the fathers!" as if any government was ever conducted on faith and courage was of any value except in aid of the resolutions of prudence.

We went forward not only without light, but in the face of light. We would not hear the Filipinos. It was nothing that they had stood by our side as friends and allies in the war with Spain; it was nothing that we were dealing with them and their liberties and their country; it was nothing that they begged and implored us to listen to their entreaties and to give heed to their warnings. We were a great and mighty nation, and they weak and insignificant. We were a world power, and they insects in the dust to be crushed under our victorious chariot wheels, or to light on the hubs and revolve with their revolutions, as they might think best; but listen to their weak and puny voice we would not, because some of us thought it would be in derogation of our dignity as a great and powerful and mighty nation. This was sinning for the want of light.

But in our pride and arrogance we sinned in the face of light. For months before the ratification of the Spanish treaty, in the fall of 1898 and the spring of 1899, the Filipinos had maintained toward us a state of armed neutrality. They were careful not to resort to acts of hostility, because they could not believe, as many minds in this country could not believe, that without provocation we would turn and rend our friends and allies, and they continued to believe to the very last, in spite of the many cumulative evidences to the contrary, that we would ultimately withdraw our pretensions to their country. But they were careful to leave no doubt in the mind of any person that they were prepared to fight even our country, if necessary, in defense of their dearly bought and highly prized independence. The reports of our military officers, and particularly those of Merritt and Otis, to the President were full upon the subject. The letter of General Bell to our peace commissioners at Paris was also full upon the subject. Here is what Bell said to our peace commissioners—and it is well to recur to a little ancient history occasionally—General Bell said:

There is not a particle of doubt but what Aguinaldo and his leaders will resist any attempt of any government to reorganize a colonial government here. They are especially bitter toward the Spaniards, but equally determined not to submit any longer to being a colony of any other government. What they would like best of all would be a Filipino republic with an American protectorate, for none realize their inability more clearly than they to maintain a republic without protection of some stronger power. Though they would prefer protection from America, they would accept it from any government save the Spanish.

But, notwithstanding these warnings, we went forward. We were not only blind to that which was transpiring before our eyes, but we were deaf to that which was dinned into our ears. A magnificent vision of empire had arisen before us—we could not believe that it was a mirage—and it made us blind to the most significant happenings. The whisperings of ambition had entered into our minds, and they made us deaf to the most insistent warnings. I want to put this proposition to the Senate: If any Senator had conceived at the time the Spanish treaty was pending here that it would lead us into war with the Filipinos in the effort to establish our rule over their country, would that treaty have received a single affirmative vote in this Chamber?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Is not the Senator aware that war was raging and that a battle had occurred the day before the treaty was ratified? The newspapers were full of it that morning. War was actually going on when the treaty was ratified.

Mr. TURNER. We were informed of the fact that there had been a collision, but I presume that no Senator at that time imagined that the application of the Filipinos for a cessation of hostilities would be denied by the commander of the American forces—an application made, in the language of those leaders, for the purpose of permitting the Congress of the United States to determine concerning the fate of the islands.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Is not the Senator aware that he is on debatable ground all the time when he states what we propose to do or what we ought to do? Does the Senator not know that at the time the treaty was ratified war was existing and hostilities were going on?

Mr. TURNER. We did not know anything.

Mr. STEWART. We had knowledge of that at the time we ratified the treaty, but we were not advised that the Filipinos had made any advance toward peace at all. The fact is, war was going on, and that is a fact upon which we had to act when we ratified the treaty.

Mr. TURNER. We did not know anything then, and we do not know very much more now. That is my objection to the attempt to force this bill through Congress at this time without giving all the facts to it and to the American people. We did not know that that step of ours would lead to permanent and continuous war, and in that respect we sinned in the face of light, and then and thereby opened a Pandora's box of evils upon the country which should forever be a warning to us against hasty and illconsidered action. But we became involved in war. Then we were told that, since we had taken the Philippine Archipelago without the consent and against the wishes of the people of those islands, it was our duty to make our right good. And now we are told that we have made the right good, but that, I respectfully submit, depends upon more than the mere question of physical dominion. That depends upon more than the mere question of peace and order in the islands. Peace and order may be enforced upon any people by arms, if only the arms be strong enough and rigorous enough. But the answer to the question whether we ought, in justice, in fairness, and in good conscience, to remain in the archipelago is written in the minds and the hearts and the disposition of the people of those islands. That is where we ought to look for it; that is where we have scrupulously refrained from looking for it up to this time. Are the islands in truth pacified? Are they pacified outwardly as well as inwardly? If not, it is a great crime against the Filipino people, and it is a monumental crime against the American people for us to undertake to enforce our rule upon them. Next to the misery of those who suffer slavery is the the misery of those who inflict it. The sting is mutual; the bane, in the long run, equally harmful to both. And let no man say that it is impossible to inflict slavery under American rule. American rule without American constitutional limitations is as much slavery as would be the rule of Russia, or of Germany, or of England, or of Spain—just as much. Daniel Webster declared—and a greater philosophic truth was never declared by any man since government began—that no government imposed by a foreign power upon another people, no matter how just and how mild and equable it might be, could ever bring happiness to that people. If that be true, to constrain the Filipino people to our government against their will is to constrain them to misery and unhappiness, and therefore necessarily to constrain them to slavery.

Mr. President, because we misjudged conditions in the Philippines in the outset is no reason why we should continue to do so. One mistake does not necessarily call for another. Since we are still free to pursue any course that we may please in the Philippine Islands, we ought not to part with that freedom which we still preserve, not only for the protection of the Filipinos, but for the protection of our own people, until every possible source of light has been exhausted and the conscience and the judgment of Congress enlightened and informed to the fullest extent. We have never yet heard the Filipino side of this controversy. Why should we not hear it to-day before we act? We have never, in fact, heard the American side, which involves the truth as to the conditions now prevailing in the Philippine Islands, except from our returned officials. Why should we not call before us others who have equal knowledge upon the subject and who are free from the bias produced by the war and the strife which has been going on in that unhappy country?

The examination of a few private soldiers, of three general officers, and of one distinguished civilian is the sum and substance of the work done by this committee during the four or five months that it has been in session. Those soldiers have deposed to acts of cruelty and of barbarity which might be expected on the part of the soldiers of any nation in a warfare such as that which we have been compelled to carry on in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TURNER. With great pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does not the honorable Senator know when he refers to the small number of witnesses heard before our committee that most of the time in the examination of the general officers he mentions was taken up by the Senators of the minority with their examination of the witnesses, and that it is not due at all to any delay or even to any particular length of time consumed by the Senators composing the majority of the committee, most of the time having been occupied—nearly all of it, in fact—by the examination of witnesses by Senators who oppose the bill?

Mr. TURNER. I know but little about the testimony taken before the Philippine Committee. I have not read it in its full detail, but have contented myself with the summary published from day to day in the newspapers. I heard more of it to-day in the parts read by the Senator from Indiana than I ever heard before, and the thought struck me as he was reading that he himself appeared to be the chief impediment to the progress of the committee, because every time a question was asked my distinguished friend would get up or sit in his chair—I do not know which—and say, "Well, I do not think that is pertinent," or "You are trying to make this witness say something he does not intend," or something of that kind, and the colloquy would run through five or ten minutes of the time of the committee and the witness would not get an opportunity to answer until after the Senator had run all through the gamut of interruptions and objections.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If anything of the kind occurred, it does not appear in the testimony which I read. The testimony I read related to the bringing out of the other side, and the questions asked went directly to the point, all of them very brief, as to the general treatment of Filipino prisoners and people by our soldiers. So the statement which the Senator makes must be derived from some other source than the testimony read by me.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I simply wish to state for the information of the Senator from Washington and as a matter of history that the Senator from Indiana has been exceedingly pestiferous in the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I accept that from my very good friend, the Senator from Tennessee, as a decoration of distinction,

Mr. TURNER. I have stated the nature of the testimony of the private soldiers. The three distinguished general officers to whom I have referred—I do not want to do them an injustice; I have read nothing but the summary of their testimony in the newspapers—it seemed to me were spending the principal part of their time in flippant attempts to fence with the members of the committee, and so far as they did depose to anything, it was simply a résumé of the reports made by them when they were in command in the Philippine Islands. The distinguished civilian to whom I have referred, Governor Taft, impressed me as testifying fully and fairly and with appreciation of the gravity of the proceedings, but his testimony was of little value because of his late advent into the islands and because his tour of the islands, from which, chiefly, he drew his conclusions, was a triumphal progress, supported by the military power, following on the heels of its recent victorious achievements, and designed to gather up and conserve the fruits of those achievements. Of course, malcontents were kept out of his way, and, of course, there were those among the Filipinos, as among every other race on earth, mean enough and craven enough to gather up the crumbs which fell from the table of the conquering hero. And having been wined and dined and courted and feted and flattered, it was natural that Governor Taft should imagine that all was lovely and serene, and that the people were well disposed toward the power which he represented and for which he stood. I have no doubt that he was testifying to his honest convictions upon that subject before the Philippine Committee, but the echo of his voice had hardly died out in this Capitol before the world was startled with the news of the massacre at Balagiga, an act so brutal and ferocious, if you will, that it exhibited with the vividness of a lightning flash the energy of hate felt toward American rule by that people, who only three years ago welcomed the Americans to their country with tears of joy and with acclamations that they were the deliverers and the saviors of the Filipino people. Following on this massacre came the order of Chaffee to his subordinates to treat every Filipino as an enemy until he had conclusively proven a contrary status, and asserting in support of that order that hatred of American authority was the rule throughout the entire archipelago and loyalty was the exception. And this was followed by the reconcentration order of Bell, whereby American arms condoned the inhumanity and the cruelty of Weyler by a servile imitation of his methods and stultified all the high professions with which we took up arms to expel Spain from the Western Hemisphere. And this was followed, it now appears, by the order of Smith, to burn and slay and make Samar a howling wilderness and to spare no one above the age of 10 years.

Mr. President, history records many instances of cruelty and barbarity practiced in warfare. We shudder at the atrocious acts of the Huns when they overran ancient Rome, and the name of Attila, their leader, has become the synonym for all that is ferocious and bloodthirsty. He is known to history as the Scourge of God. But the Huns were barbarians and they practiced that to which they were accustomed. The world stands appalled at the record of cruelties practiced by the Duke of Alva in the Low Countries; but Alva fought in the name of religion, and religious zeal when aroused to the point of war has ever been merciless. Even liberty, when pushed to the wall, has had its votaries of blood. The French Revolution shook the world with its struggle and paralyzed mankind with its ferocity, and it left behind, to be added to the bloody roll of human scourges, the names of Robespierre, Marat, and Danton. But it remained for an American soldier, in the twentieth century, representing the highest type of civilization, in a quarrel having not a single element of religious strife, having for its professed object the accomplishment of benevolent and philanthropic purposes, to raise his name to a preeminence of bloody infamy which places it above the names of any of the scourges of humanity to whomI have referred. This monster in human form, in cold blood, devoted an entire province to extermination; the males over the age of ten years to slaughter, the females and younger children to the no less certain but the less merciful fate of starvation, because, bereft of their protectors, bereft of their homes, wandering with their young through a howling wilderness, what other fate than slow starvation was left for these stricken creatures and their unfortunate offspring?

Mr. President, when the Associated Press telegrams brought us the news of this order I refused to credit it. I said it was impossible that any American soldier could have issued such an order, and I confidently expected that the next wire from Manila would bring us an explicit contradiction. But, instead of that, we have had confirmation of it from day to day in the telegrams giving details of testimony offered before the court-martial for the purpose of justifying or at least extenuating it. I wish to read to the Senate the cablegram which brought us the news of this order. I have it before me. I read it to refresh the recollection of Senators.

MANILA, April 25.

The trial by court-martial of Gen. Jacob H. Smith on the charge of conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline began to-day. Gen. Loyd Wheaton presided. Col. Charles A. Woodruff, counsel for the defense, said he desired to simplify the proceedings. He was willing to admit that General Smith gave instructions to Major Waller to kill and burn and make Samar a howling wilderness; that he wanted everybody killed capable of bearing arms, and that he specified all over the age of 10 years, as the Samar boys of that age were fully as dangerous as their elders.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to ask for information whether there is any evidence that in the execution of that order any women or children were killed, and whether the ravages to which the Senator has referred in making that island a howling wilderness actually occurred?

Mr. TURNER. There is evidence that one American soldier, planting himself upon that order, directed his subordinates to take out 20 prisoners and shoot them to death because they declined to hunt roots for his command.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If I understand it, that was the marine command in the interior of the island, which has always been a howling wilderness, practically without any inhabitants at all.

Mr. TURNER. The Senator's understanding is different from mine. I understand that that occurred in Samar and that Waller planted himself upon this order——

Mr. DOLLIVER. But the testimony taken before the committee indicates——

Mr. TURNER. And that a court-martial has acquitted him upon the ground that he was justified by that order.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The testimony, if I have read it correctly, shows that the interior of the island across which Major Waller took a command of marines was an uninhabited country, which had never been penetrated even by the Spanish army throughout all the period of its occupation; and the testimony also seems to indicate that the exècution of the prisoners was upon another ground, personal to the command and not under the order at all.

Mr. TURNER. The officer killed those prisoners after he reached the seashore and in an inhabited town, not because of any threatened demonstration that they were making toward his command——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Were any towns in the island burned?

Mr. TURNER. But because some of the soldiers had reported to him that the prisoners had declined to hunt roots for the command when going through the howling wilderness.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Has the Senator any information that any town in Samar was burned?

Mr. TURNER. I have no doubt towns have been burned in Samar, but I have no information on the subject. I have no doubt they have been burned, because they have been burned in other provinces, where General Smith had no jurisdiction and where the officers did not even have the protection of his order.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Washington permit?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Iowa is mistaken as to the character of the island of Samar. The island of Samar was a populous island, and the Military Notes—I think that is the name of the publication—to be found in the War Department, estimates that the population was 280,000.

Mr. DOLLIVER. But, if I remember correctly, they were on the seaccast, and not in the interior, which is a mountain range.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is mistaken about that——

Mr. LODGE. That was the testimony of General Hughes, who was for three years in command there. He testified that the population was entirely in the seacoast towns—that the interior was a mountainous wilderness which had never been subdued or crossed by the Spanish troops. I do not know whether he knew anything about it.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to state anything as a fact, because I do not profess to have personal knowledge.

Mr. LODGE. Hughes did.

Mr. BACON. We have information, however, which sometimes gives us very decided impressions in the absence——

Mr. LODGE arose.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me for a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BACON. We sometimes have decided impressions gained from information which, while it does not amount to a matter of personal knowledge, at the same time is very convincing in its character, and I will state that I believe whenever there is an investigation made it will be found that there was a very active campaign in Samar prior to the time of what is known as the massacre in Samar, and that there had been prior to that time a very large loss of the population of that island as a consequence of the prosecution of the war.

It is a mistake, I am quite sure, to say that the population is or was limited to the seashore; and it is, I am quite sure, equally a mistake to say there had been no large number of towns in the interior of the island. I repeat that I do not wish to be understood as making that as an assertion upon my own knowledge, because I have none, nor do I wish to be understood as having any information other than that which any man gathers in general intercourse with those who profess to be informed. But upon that information I am myself convinced of the fact that Samar was far from being a wilderness and was a comparatively populous island. I am equally satisfied that it is now very far from being a populous island. I have no doubt that the testimony is as stated by the Senators as to what General Hughes said.

Mr. DOLLIVER. He had been there.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. And he says in his testimony:

> There is not a road across it. I had a road projected, and got it so that it could be used as a trail, but as a road it had not been finished when I left there. There was nothing but trails.

Mr. BACON. I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Washington, but I will state this if he will permit me: As the Senator from Iowa gives information from one officer, I will state that I have information from another officer, who possibly has had more actual experience in the interior of Samar than General Hughes had, to the effect that he had traversed it, and that he found the ruins of a great many cities and towns which had been destroyed; that he found very few people in the interior of the island; that he had seen by a military publication—I have forgotten its name—that, as I have already stated, the population was 280,000, and that in his opinion it would then amount to less than half of that number; that when he inquired of the people whom he found as to what had become of the people of Samar the reply to him was that a great many of them had died, and some of them had moved away.

I did not intend to interrupt the Senator from Washington to this extent, but I thought that the inquiry of the Senator from Iowa was based upon information which was in conflict at least with that which I had upon a matter as to which I do not profess to have personal knowledge.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would be the last Senator on this floor to question a statement of the Senator from Washington, as he well knows, but he made a statement concerning the killing of so-called prisoners which my vague recollection made me feel was inaccurate, so I came across and verified my recollection by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Those prisoners were killed by Major Waller because they were treacherous guides, and in killing them for that reason he was entirely within the laws of war, even between civilized nations. It was not under the order of General Smith, to burn and kill and make Samar a howling wilderness, but upon an entirely different ground in which he would have been justified, had the general order not been issued, under the general laws of war, as presented in the laws of war of the United States.

Mr. TURNER. We were told by the telegraphic dispatches announcing that Waller had been acquitted that he had pleaded the order of Smith in justification of his conduct, and that it had been accepted by the court-martial as sufficient. My recollection concerning the method and the manner of the killing of these prisoners by Waller is as vague as that of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator also remembers that one specification which he pleaded in defense of the charge against him was the specification which I have just named, to wit, the execution of treacherous guides under the general laws of war. That is the case as I understand it, and as I have compared it with the recollection of other Senators whose accuracy is well known and understood.

Mr. TURNER. I was going to say that my recollection is probably as vague as that of the Senator from Indiana. I think I remember, however, that the telegraphic dispatches informed us that these prisoners had been killed after the command of Waller had reached the seashore, and because he was informed by some of his men that some of the prisoners had been treacherous guides and had involved the command in the labyrinths in the wilderness of Samar, and that they had dug edible roots for themselves, but had declined to dig them for the command. Thereupon Waller, who was upon his cot, said to the sergeant in command, "Take these men out and shoot them;" and they were shot upon the seashore.

I do not know what are the rules of war concerning treacherous guides, but I do know that there is no rule of war, there can be no rule of war, which justifies a commander in saying to prisoners of war, "You shall become our guides; and if you will not, I propose to have you shot." I do not believe that any such transaction has occurred since civilized warfare became the rule and barbarous warfare the exception in the settlement of the quarrels of the world.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. I know the Senator has respect for judgments and for legal findings. The court-martial was composed, so far as the telegram shows, of excellent men. It found in favor of Major Waller. The statement, a little more fully given, was that of the ten guides who had volunteered to help this expedition from the mountains down to the sea on the other side, nine proved treacherous, and that one was faithful; that they would feed themselves by roots and herbs, when food was exhausted, and would not give it to the members of the expedition. And thereafter, when, after unheard-of suffering, the expedition was rescued, Waller, as commander, ordered the death of the treacherous guides.

I have just sent for the rules of war, Dr. Lieber's codification, adopted by the Government, and I know in there is the express statement that when guides in territory volunteer service and are treacherous, they are then war traitors and liable to the penalty of death. That is the rule of war announced by Lincoln and Stanton in 1863, and it was reannounced in 1898 by President McKinley without any of the disapproval of the world. That is the statement.

Mr. TURNER. I leave the Senator from Maryland to wrestle with Lieber and the rules of war. Waller was not acquitted on the ground that these prisoners had done anything which authorized their execution, but he was acquitted upon the ground that he was justified in following the barbarous and inhuman orders of General Smith. That is the ground upon which the Associated Press telegrams tell us he was acquitted.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator does not mean to misstate me. I perhaps was not clear. I know that the court decided in favor of Waller. I do not know the decision nor the grounds of it, but the presumption is in favor of the verdict and the judgment until we know more about it.

Mr. TURNER. Have I in anything I have said assailed the correctness of the judgment of the court-martial?

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the Senator has not.

Mr. TURNER. No, sir; I have not attempted to do so.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course I do not know, and none of us knows, what evidence was produced before the court-martial. But I remember a brief report, in the telegraphic dispatches, of the address made by the judge-advocate before the court-martial, in which he declared that the evidence showed plainly that these guides who were charged with treachery had been perfectly faithful and loyal, and that there was no evidence to substantiate that charge. Of course, that was simply his speech, an address made before the court-martial; it may not have had any foundation; but it does seem to indicate that there must have been considerable evidence to the contrary of the accusation or the judge-advocate could not have made such an argument.

Mr. TURNER. It is true that Waller planted himself upon this order of Smith, and it is probably true, although I am not prepared to speak with any degree of confidence upon that point, that the court-martial ought to have acquitted him upon that ground. But if I were an Army officer and were to receive an order of that kind no compulsion which any superior could bring upon me would induce me to do the cruel and inhuman deed which Waller did there upon the seashore. Those who refer to matters of this character in this Chamber and in the other Chamber are not assailing the honor of the American Army. They are sustaining the honor of the American Army, or attempting to do so. Dishonor will not come from any American citizen or any American Senator denouncing such cruel and bloodthirsty acts. It will come from attempts to sustain them, and I advise my friends upon the other side, who are claiming that this side of the Chamber is attempting to derogate from the honor of the Army to bear that fact in mind.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa were entirely mistaken when they suggested that Samar was only populated upon the seacoast or that General Hughes made any statement of that kind. I will read very briefly the statement of General Hughes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. PATTERSON. I read from page 553, at the commencement.

> I suggested to the governor, General MacArthur, that Samar be transferred to me, in order that I might initiate offensive movements against the insurrectos in that island. This was done. Operations began in May, and were still going on when I left there, and I think are still going on at the present time.
> These operations are exceedingly troublesome, not from the force required, but from the fact that there are no roads and that the rivers have to be used as roads, and everything going into the interior has to get there afloat. The bars over which you get into the rivers have about 5 feet of water on them at high tide, and we had very few steam launches that would pass such bars.

The result of it was that the movement had to be made with a good deal of care and a good deal of preparation to see that after you got your troops into the enemy's country you could keep them supplied.

Then again:

The island was nominally subjected to Spanish rule, but they occupied only a few towns along the coast, such as Calbayoc, Catbalogan, Laguan, and Guinan. But they had no possession of the island and could not and did not attempt to go into or visit the interior of the island.

Again:

It was perfecly quiet so long as they would let the fellows in the mountains do as they pleased, but they could not go in there without getting into trouble.

Then again:

While this was going on it became apparent that it would be necessary to occupy some of the posts on the south of the island, not that there was any force there, but the support for the insurgents in the mountains, their rice supply and their ammunition and different things were evidently being sent in by that route, and troops were sent down and occupied the main towns along that side of the island. The entire coast of the island of Samar, you might say, was then occupied by stations at various distances apart.

Then just one more quotation:

General HUGHES. I find in looking over the record of yesterday's proceedings that in the minds of some of the members of the committee there would seem to be a misunderstanding; that they think the only point at which the people of Samar collected was between the Hibitan and the Gandara. That is entirely a mistake. They were allowed to settle along the coast from Muao to La Granja; Lavezares; at the towns of Bobon, Catarman, Laguan, Palapay; on the east coast at Oraz, Borongan, Guiuan; on the southwest coast at Santa Rita, Villa Real, and Catbalogan, and in the interior at Oquendo, Blanco Aurora, Tiveran, and possibly one or two others.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, the suggestion of. the junior Senator from Iowa that Samar was already a howling wilderness appears to be very satisfactorily answered by the fact that Smith would not have ordered his subordinates to make a howling wilderness of what was already a howling wilderness.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It would seem that the general character of the route taken by Major Waller across that island would be indicated by the fact that his command was reduced to the extremity of living on the roots of the forest.

Mr. TURNER. Major Waller's command crossed the mountain from one side of Samar to the other. I assume from what little I have read about it that that part of the island is a dense wilderness, and that Waller's command became involved in great difficulty both in finding their way and in finding food; but that Samar is a populated island, that it was not entirely a howling wilderness at the outset would seem to be proven to the satisfaction of anybody except the Senator from Iowa by this remarkable order of Smith's.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will take but a moment to read the "instructions for the government of armies of the United States in the field:"

97. Guides, when it is clearly proved that they have misled intentionally, may be put to death.

I do not know Waller's case; I do not know the grounds of his judgment; but I have spoken of that rule, and I wanted to bring it to the attention of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. TURNER. To get back to the order of Smith, from which we appear to have digressed very considerably by this round of interruptions, I want to say that it is the most brutal, ferocious, and bloodthirsty act, in intent at least, of which history gives us any instance in war in the last three hundred years. Nothing comparable to it can be found anywhere in the modern history of the world. It is necessary to go back beyond the dark ages, to the age of positive and absolute barbarism, to find anything at all comparable to it. What a picture this order of Smith presents of the execution of that sacred trust devolved on us by Almighty God, of which we have heard so much from our pious statesmen and our political pietists. "Oh, you ungrateful Filipinos, why will you not accept the religion of our pulpits and the tax-burdened calico tendered you by our statesmen? Why compel us to kill and slay and burn and devastate in order that we may fulfill our God-given mission of uplifting you to the American standard? You perverse creatures, understand one thing: We are filled with so holy a zeal for your welfare, we feel the Almighty mandate lying on us so heavily that we propose to lift you up to our standard whether you wish it or not, and even though in doing so it becomes necessary to wipe you off the face of the earth, and to kill and burn and devastate until not a vestige of your race or your civilization is left for the eye of mankind to behold. We love you as a father loves his children; we yearn for your welfare with the bowels of compassion; but in the meantime let the slaughter and the burning go on that the great God, whose law we interpret and whose sacred will we follow, may snuff the incense of your blood and see a burnt offering in the smoke that rises from the smoldering ruins which mark what was once your homes."

I have another evidence of the remarkable state of peace and amity and love and good will which our generals and governors have been telling us prevail——

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator passes——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator passes to another point I should like to call his attention and that of other Senators to the map of Samar in the Philippine Islands in the official atlas of the Philippine Islands, issued by the director of the observatory at Manila, and published by our United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. It gives the names of the settlements and towns throughout the island, and the interior of Samar seems from this map to be quite populous. While there are a few spaces where there are no such towns, it compares quite favorably with Luzon in that respect.

Mr. TURNER. I am very much pleased to have the information which the Senator offers to the Senate. I have another piece of evidence which indicates very plainly and clearly the great degree of peace and amity and love and good will on the part of the Filipinos toward the Government and people of the United States of which our governors and generals have been telling the Senate through the medium of the Philippine Committee. This is a dispatch which I cut out of the Washington Star two or three days ago, and which I will read for the information of the Senate:

A dispatch from Manila yesterday says: The American chamber of commerce has passed a resolution indorsing the action of the United States army in the Philippines, in an endeavor to counteract what the members of the chamber believe to be the opinion prevailing in the United States that officers and soldiers have acted in violation of the rules of war. The preamble says the chamber is composed exclusively of American business men, who have been thrown into immediate contact with the prevailing conditions everywhere in the archipelago, and it was resolved that without the constant watchfulness and protection of the army in the Philippines no property or business interests would be safe, and that upon its influence depends the stability of the civil government. The resolution eulogizes General Chaffee, "whose earnest effort has sustained and assisted the civil authorities in the difficult task of the establishment of civil government," and praises "his good judgment and humanity, which have won him the admiration and affection of all loyal Americans in the islands."

These representations are made by the American business men of the city of Manila, who tell us that they are familiar with conditions everywhere through the archipelago, and that not only the business interests but the stability of the Government itself depends upon the constant watchfulness and the protecting care of the American Army. At the moment when this fairy story about the love and affection felt toward us by the people of the islands is being whispered into our ears, with Colonel This and General That and Governor Somebody Else assuring us that the people are devoted to our rule and anxious to realize its beneficent results, with the Secretary of War piling petitions upon our desks by the bushel basketful from the agonized communities in the Philippines who fear that their heartstrings will be rent by the withdrawal of our noble Army, this harsh and discordant voice comes to us across the waters from the American business men in the city of Manila, and it says to us, "Sustain and support the armies of the United States, because upon their constant watchfulness and their protecting care depend not only the business interests of this country, but the very life of civil government itself."

Does not this voice from Manila seem to require some further investigation than the Philippine Committee seem disposed to make concerning the present conditions in the islands? Those people fought Spain for three hundred years for liberty and independence. Never once during the entire time was she able to relax her vigilance or reduce her military establishment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. TURNER. One revolution followed the other with the certainty and the regularity of the seasons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With reference to the Senator's statement about our not at any time being able to reduce the number of our soldiery there, I ask him whether he has in mind the fact that Spain had at the time of the first outbreak immediately before our war with Spain and for a long time prior to that period only 1,500 Spanish soldiers in the islands?

Mr. TURNER. All I know is that they surrendered some 18,000 soldiers to us on the fall of Manila.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That, Mr. President, is precisely the fact. At the first outbreak of the insurrection, and for a long time prior thereto, Spain had in the islands altogether about 1,500 Spanish soldiers, with which she maintained all of the government that she cared to maintain, apparently. The 18,000 which she surrendered to us were sent there after the insurrection began, and were kept there under conditions of war. When conditions of peace prevailed, and they had prevailed for years before, Spain did not require a large armament there at all, but had only 1,500 men, of whom 700 were in Manila.

Mr. TURNER. Spain maintained all the time in the archipelago all the force that she could profitably employ. She never was able to profitably employ as many soldiers as we have had there, because in all of her history she never was able to do anything except to maintain her supremacy over a few of the seaports. The balance of the islands were in continual and continuous insurrection against her. As I said, revolutions followed one the other with the regularity and certainty of the seasons. The fighting was fierce and cruel, and the reprisals upon both sides were oriental in their cruelty. Can any man look with patience upon the prospect of such a condition of affairs following as the sequel of American rule in those islands? Can anyone look with patience upon any such a prospect as that? Yet have we not good reason to believe that if we go on and fasten our rule upon those islands so that it will be impossible for us consistently with our constitutional system to release them from our grasp, we are fastening upon ourselves, as Spain fastened on herself, three hundred years of insurrection and rebellion and war, with all of the horrid atrocities which oriental warfare requires both upon the part of the orientals and upon the part of those who war with them? Mr. President, the country wants light upon these questions. It wants further information. It wants to know whether permanent dominion in the Philippines is to mean perpetual war, and, if so, whether it is to be a war which shall cause the blood of civilized men to run cold with horror and loathing.

I received only the day before yesterday a letter from the city of Boston which gives something of an insight into the anxiety of the people of this country for a full investigation of these pertinent and pregnant questions. This letter inclosed a clipping from what the writer says is a Republican paper in the city of Boston. I wish to call the attention of the junior Senator from Massachusetts to what this Boston Republican newspaper says:

We are afraid that Senator LODGE does not "sense" the situation. He thinks it will not pay to summon the witnesses from the Philippines to come to Washington to tell what they know about the "kill all over 10 years old" policy which General Smith put into force in Samar. He says it will cost too much; that some of the witnesses will get here during the summer, anyway, and that others are Filipinos, and that we must not allow Filipinos to be witnesses.

The people of this country are in no mood for trifling. They are being taxed $150,000,000 a year to keep up this wretched exhibition in the Philippines, and now we are charged with atrocities which cause our clergymen and others who weigh their words to find no comparison since the days of Herod. We are humiliated and disgraced as never before in our history. We want the truth, and we want no delay about it. If necessary, spend $1,000,000 to get the witnesses here and give us all the facts. If, as suggested in the news to-day, these horrible orders came from the War Department and Smith and his crew were only obeying instructions, let us know that. The American people are thoroughly aroused, and want no blankets thrown over their heads. They want the truth, and they are going to have it. The man or men who try to get in the way will get hurt.

And why should they not have it? And why should anyone try to postpone or suppress the facts? No matter how bad they are, we want them; and if they are as represented, the people who are responsible must pay the penalty. But the great question is, What is the use of all this vast expenditure of money, this slaughter of Filipinos, this violation of the principle of self-government? Are any of us proud of this Philippines foray?

This is from the Boston Evening Record, of date May 1, 1902. I have a very interesting letter also, from the writer who inclosed this clipping to me. I do not mention his name, because it might be embarrassing to him should I do so; but in view of some parts of the speech of the junior Senator from Massachusetts, his letter is well worth reading.

I am satisfied that the people in Massachusetts at least are stirred to a greater degree than ever before since the civil war. The New England conscience has been reached. Inclosed you will find one or two cuttings which may not have come under your notice. The Boston Evening Record is a strong Republican paper.

It seems to me that one of the points to be presented to the country is the character of the Filipinos, so as to satisfy our people that they are not savages, but a Christian and a kindly people. Would it not be well to present such evidence to the committee? One of my friends, a young man of about 22 years of age, O. W. Woodbury, of Lynn, Mass., where I live, was a prisoner for nine months on the east coast of Luzon. He was wounded and captured at Baler, in Luzon, in April, 1899, being one of the party under command of Lieutenant Gilmore. He traveled the eastern coast of Luzon to the town of Bayombong, when he was rescued about Christmas of the same year. He is a young man of intelligence, of a good family, very reliable, and very loyal. I have his story in typewriting, which he has approved. I will send it to you if you desire it.

I may say that I have sent for it, and I shall take great pleasure in furnishing it to the distinguished chairman of the Philippine Committee when I receive it.

It is a story of kind treatment from the day he was captured to the day he was rescued. He and the other Americans with him were treated more like guests of the towns through which they passed than as prisoners.

Although the Spaniards at Baler had been shooting in cold blood every native that came in sight, no harsh treatment was given to them when they were captured and carried to Bayombong with the Americans. I have thought that perhaps Mr. Woodbury might be a good witness before the committee. He would not volunteer. He intends to leave Lynn very soon, having secured a position as a petty officer on board a merchant steamer to sail soon for Manila and other ports.

Desiring to do what I can to expose to the country the iniquities of our doings in the Philippine Islands, I write this letter to you.

Mr. President, this morning I saw in the Washington Post a telegram from this same town of Lynn; a most remarkable story. I rejected it at once when I read it as being absolutely incredible and beyond belief, just as I rejected the story about this monstrous order of Smith as being incredible and beyond belief. But I feel it my duty to bring it to the attention of the chairman of the Philippine Committee in order that he may investigate, if he cares to do so, into the facts alleged in this letter. It appears to have come to the Washington Post through a special correspondent in the city of Lynn, and it purports to tell of statements made by a clergyman in that city. I think it proper to call it to the attention of the Senator, in order that he may take such steps as his conscience may seem to require to investigate its truth or falsity. The story, briefly, is that a thousand Filipinos were captured by an American command, and, because of the difficulty of provisioning them, they were taken out in squads, made to dig their own graves, and then, standing in their graves, were shot down in cold blood. I say I can not credit this statement; but I ask that it may go into the RECORD as a part of my remarks, so that it may receive the consideration of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator kindly read it?

Mr. TURNER. I will read it.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the benefit of the name of the officer who sent it, if it appears on the face of the paper.

Mr. TURNER. The telegram is as follows:

[Special to The Washington Post.]

PRISONERS SHOT IN SQUADS—AMERICAN DECLARES 1,000 FILIPINOS WERE SLAIN NEAR SORSOGON—SENSATIONAL CHARGES CONTAINED IN LETTERS RECEIVED BY REV. W. H. WALKER, OF BOSTON, FROM SON AT THE FRONT.

LYNN, MASS., May 5, 1902.

"One thousand Filipino prisoners shot in platoons over the graves themselves had been forced to dig; a priest, who acted in the dual capacity of father confessor and general, hanged before the slaughter of the prisoners and within their sight."

Such are some of the charges made by J. Pennett Walker, a private in Company I, Sixteenth Infantry, now at Sorsogon, in the Philippines, in letters to his father, the Rev. W. H. Walker, D. D., of this city. He is a special instructor at the Gordon Missionary Training School, Boston. Private Walker enlisted at the outbreak of the Spanish war, and was commended for bravery at San Juan.

The Rev. Dr. Walker has more than a dozen letters. He refuses to make them public, however, as he says: "The story is too fearful. My boy has written to me as son to father, and in the face of the inquiry now going on I fear it might bring him into trouble with his superiors.

"He writes of a 'hyke' he went on with men under Lieutenant Burr. A 'hyke' is an expedition in search of rebels. He writes that the detachment went to Trosin, 18 miles from Sorsogon, and took possession of a bamboo church there. They had hardly settled themselves in the church when 300 insurgents attacked them, armed with bolos and daggers.

"The insurgents were routed and 2 captured. The prisoners told of the location of the insurgent army and agreed to act as guides. The entire command was ordered out, the insurgents taken by surprise, 300 of them killed and 1,000 taken prisoners, including a priest, who was their general and father confessor, 2 captains, and 4 lieutenants.

"This band proved to be a secret organization known as the Katyauman. The priest assured them that if by any chance a Yankee bullet did hit and kill them they would come to life again in three days. They were so convinced of the power of the charm that they did not fear any body of armed soldiers.

"The priest was called out to tell the insurgents that they had been duped. He refused to do so, although he was flogged, and, as an example, was strung up to a tree and allowed to remain there a week so that it could be seen he did not come to life at the end of three days. The Katyauman were so superstitious and such fanatics that the thought of liberating them could not be entertained. To keep them prisoners would necessitate the placing of soldiers on short rations if not starving them. There was nothing to do but to kill them. This was done by squads. Every morning three squads of 20 men each were sent out under guard.

"They were taken a mile or so inland, and then furnished picks and shovels and started to work. When they had dug a trench 5 feet deep they were told to stand up in it. The picks and shovels were taken away. A bullet for each man ended his agony, and he lay dead in the grave he had dug in this fashion. The entire 1,000 were put out of the way of harm. While these measures may seem exceedingly cruel to us," said the Rev. Dr. Walker, "my son tells me they are absolutely necessary for the preservation of the American soldiers."

It seems to me that this is so horrible and incredible, both as to the methods employed and the number of Filipinos who are said to have been slaughtered, that there is very grave question of its accuracy.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator kindly give me the date of that?

Mr. TURNER. It is dated May 5. It appears in the Washington Post of this morning.

Mr. LODGE. I mean the date when this action occurred.

Mr. TURNER. There is no date given to it.

Mr. McCOMAS. We should like to know the time and place of this occurrence.

Mr. TURNER. I wish to say again that I do not present this telegram with any great belief in its accuracy. I doubt that exceedingly. I do not believe that anything so atrocious could have been perpetrated by an American command, no matter how large or how small. But the telegram is certainly worthy of the consideration of the Senator from Massachusetts. It comes from his own State, and I present it for his consideration and for such investigation as he thinks it requires.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I shall be delighted to have the matter investigated. It seems to have been a military action of very considerable size, a battle of which we have never had any information. I should like, however, to read in connection with it the report of the civil governor of the province of Sorsogon, which is a pacified province.

PROVINCE OF SORSOGON, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Sorsogon, January 11, 1902.

SIR: In compliance with section 7, act No. 83, organizing provincial governments, I have the honor to make the following report:

Since the organization of the province of Sorsogon, April 30, 1901, there has occurred but one disturbance of any magnitude. This was the organization of the mountain people into a katipunan society to resist the Government. They were in the lower end of the province, led by ignorant and unprincipled men, who kept the movement alive as long as possible for their own personal gain. The military and constabulary, with the assistance of the more intelligent of the natives, were able to put an end to the disturbance within a few months, and the province is now apparently in a peaceful condition. During the trouble referred to above two natives in the employ of the Government were killed by the anting antings, and detachments of soldiers were twice attacked by bolomen, but they were in each case successfully repulsed with heavy loss to the natives and none to the soldiers.

Ysidro Gallanosa, presidente of the town of Santa Magdalena, was killed November 7, 1901, by a detachment of Company L, Fifteenth Infantry. He was a prisoner in the hands of the military, who report that he attempted to escape and was shot. Full report of this has been made.

Whether or not that statement refers to the same battle the Senator from Washington refers to I do not know. The date of that report, as I have stated, is January 11, 1902. Do I understand the soldier who wrote the letter which the Senator from Washington has read is in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. TURNER. So it is said.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be very happy to take steps to investigate that matter.

Mr. TURNER. I commend to the consideration of the junior Senator from Massachusetts another clipping from the Boston Evening Record of April 30, which I shall not read. It shows the great degree of unrest in the public mind in his State concerning these happenings in the Philippine Islands. The nature of the article is expressed by the following headlines:

Ringing words of Bishop Lawrence to be sent to the President—Convention so votes—Episcopalians go on record as the opponents of the "kill and burn" régime.

I also submit an article clipped from the Spokesman-Review, of Spokane, Wash., containing the narrative of a number of soldiers who lately returned from the Philippine Islands, stationed at Fort Wright, near the city of Spokane, concerning happenings in the Philippine Islands. I wish to have it inserted as a part of my remarks without reading. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines to the names of the soldiers disclosed in this article, as I think it would be exceedingly desirable to have them here as witnesses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the article will be inserted in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

SAW TORTURE OF FILIPINOS—FORT WRIGHT SOLDIERS TELL OF ATROCITIES BY LIEUTENANT BOLTON—"WATER CURE" WITH SHASTA WATER.

Stories of the "water cure" practiced by American soldiers in the Philippines are confirmed by soldiers of the Seventeenth Infantry who have just returned from Manila. Two companies, K and M, are stationed at Fort Wright. Almost without exception the returned soldiers confirm the press dispatches and give new details which came under their personal observation.

The scouting party under Lieutenant Bolton, of Company L, Seventeenth Infantry, was particularly bloodthirsty in its methods, according to the returned fighters. The "water cure" seems to have been an everyday incident in the career of Bolton and his men, and they added new and original tortures to it to extort facts from Filipinos who refused to give information such as Lieutenant Bolton wanted.

There are two soldiers now at Fort Wright who were with Bolton on his scouting trips. One of them is Private Hines, of Company K. The other is Rufus Wilson, of Company M. They were detached from regular service in the Philippines and were placed in the squad with which Bolton roamed over the islands in quest for arms and information.

TREATED MOST CRUELLY.

"Lieutenant Bolton certainly treated those natives most cruelly," said Private Hines yesterday. "I was with him on a scouting trip seventeen days in the northern part of Luzon. We would ransack the native towns in search of arms and information about the insurrectos. When Lieutenant Bolton got hold of a Filipino from whom he wanted to get information he showed him no mercy. I myself saw the water cure given three times on that trip. One time Bolton was not satisfied with giving the fellow ordinary water. He forced Shasta water down his throat. I wouldn't stand for such cruelty as that and I walked away. That Shasta water is vile stuff. It has a terrible taste, and it sickens a man dreadfully.

"Before I joined Lieutenant Bolton's scouting party, he got information from natives by hanging them to trees. I did not see that myself, however."

HORRORS OF THE WATER CURE.

"The water cure is a simple thing. The native was tied down flat on the ground, and his mouth is forced open with sticks or a string which is tied behind his head. Then water is poured down his throat through a bamboo tube, which is nearly always handy. The native must drink the stuff, and it is poured down him until he can hold no more. As much as about a gallon can be forced into a man in that way. Then the water is pumped out of him by stamping on his stomach or rolling him over. When he comes to, the native is always ready to talk.

"Lieutenant Bolton had only from six to a dozen men with him on his scouting trips, but he would go anywhere. When he came to a village where the insurrectos had been centered he would summon the presidente before him. He would demand information as to the whereabouts of the native troops, or would demand knowledge of hidden rifles. If the presidente was unwilling to talk he would get the water cure. In one place we got 30 rifles.

BOLTON A BRAVE MAN.

"Lieutenant Bolton was certainly a brave man. He spoke all the native languages and Spanish, and he was not afraid of anything. His men would go with him any place."

Private Rufus Wilson, of Company M, who was also with Bolton, refused to talk about the matter. "I don't know anything about the water cure," he said, doggedly, "and if I did I wouldn't tell my own brother, for it might get some officers who are friends of mine into trouble."

MANY FORMS OF TORTURE.

Almost every soldier seen at Fort Wright added his testimony as to the many forms of torture inflicted by the American soldiers upon Filipinos who refused to give up information. Most all the soldiers, however, would not permit their names to be used. They say that a common form of torture, which was particularly exquisite, consisted in interlacing a victim's fingers together. He would then be suspended by the fingers from the limb of a tree until ready to give up the information which his inquisitors demanded. The pain in that treatment is said to be something dreadful. It works like a thumbscrew applied to all the fingers at once.

HANGING TO EXTRACT CONFESSIONS.

The soldiers agree that another feature of the inquisition, as carried on by the scouts, consisted in hanging Filipinos by the neck to the nearest tree until the hapless victim would be almost dead. Then he would be let down and brought to life again. If he would tell what was wanted, the torture was suspended. Otherwise it would be carried forward with new features.

The prisoner was not released after coming out from the inquisition. He was held until a search by the soldiers was made in accordance with the information which he should give as to hidden arms or the hiding places of insurrectos. If no arms or hiding places were found in accordance with his statements he would be tortured afresh until he should give out information satisfactory to his inquisitors.

NO SURGEONS AT WATER CURE.

The water cure seems to have been given by the scouts whenever they wished, regardless of whether an officer supervised the operation. As to having a surgeon there to see that the treatment was not carried to a point where it would be fatal, the attendance of a surgeon seems to have been passed up as superfluous by the Bolton party.

The Shasta water, which Private Hines says was given under Lieutenant Bolton's orders, is a mineral water from Shasta Springs, California. It is peculiarly unpalatable and has strong medicinal effects.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I have but little more to say. I have felt very keenly the perfidy involved in our conduct toward the Filipinos after the close of the Spanish war, and I have not scrupled to express my feelings regarding it, both here and elsewhere. We invited that people to assist us in our war with Spain. We secured unopposed entry into their country by assuring them that we had come there for the purpose of assisting them in waging their warfare against Spain. When the war had been concluded—their war as well as ours—with their aid as well as ours—we made peace without giving them any voice therein, without even deigning to hear them; and we took their country as the spoil of war, although our officers told us that it meant war with them, and although we must have known, had we exercised reason and judgment, that it meant war with them.

A more perfidious betrayal of trust and confidence was never committed by any nation since the history of the world began. A more unjust war was never waged than that which has been waged against that people as a result of this act of perfidy. But I do not believe American officers and American soldiers are any more cruel and bloody-minded than the soldiers of any other nation would be under the same circumstances. A Smith or a Waller might come to the surface in the army of any nation. American soldiers are no better and no worse than those of any other civilized people, but we ought to have known, when we entered upon this warfare, that it would necessarily be conducted upon a lower plane than that which usually accompanies civilized warfare. The Anglo-Saxon looks with contempt on inferior races. He does not scruple to make terrible reprisals when put to it. The lust of blood infects him as it does all men whose trade it is to shed blood. The Filipinos are distinctly an inferior race to ours. Our soldiers so regard them and call them "niggers." Yet they have fought for liberty, and we knew that they would fight even us for liberty, unequal as the contest would be.

We had no right to force the fight on them. If gratitude for their assistance to us in our war was insufficient to deter us, we ought at least to have seen the nature of the conflict on which we were entering and to have drawn back before it was too late. But reckless men drove us on. The rage for innovation, the lust of dominion, the greed of conquest, "the pomp and circumstance of glorious war," to say nothing of the meaner and baser passions, prevailed over the dictates of sober judgment. The task of the patriot to-day should be to recall the country to the sway and dominion of sober judgment. Give us light that we may see, and, seeing, may judge. Give us light, my Republican friends. If you decline it is not because you can not, but because you will not. And, in view of the bloody stain which has appeared on the national ensign, if you will not, it is because you dare not. Yours may not be the ruthless hand that has dyed our flag in the innocent blood of old age and tender youth, but it can not be forgotten that yours is the power that armed that hand, and yours is the voice of folly that nerved it on to its desperate and its bloody work. You can not escape responsibility if you would, but you may do much to make atonement if you will. And the first step in that direction is to turn on the light that the people of the country may see the extent to which your folly has complicated us, and be enabled thereby to take the necessary steps to counteract the effects of that folly.

I say again, then, turn on the light, turn on the light.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] has referred to the Episcopal Diocesan Convention in Boston, and read from a Boston newspaper, I send to the desk a brief extract, which I ask to have read, from a Republican newspaper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Boston Journal, Thursday, May 1, 1902.]

BISHOP WILLIAM LAWRENCE.

The principal feature of yesterday's session of the seventeenth annual convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Massachusetts, which is being held in Trinity Chapel, was the annual address of Bishop Lawrence. Coming so close after the severe comment upon the National Administration made by Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks, rector of Emmanuel Church, last Sunday morning, especial significance attaches to it. The Bishop's closing utterances were these:

"Again, I express my confidence that, regardless of party issues and questions of political policy, the members of our National Administration, who are more intelligent as to the conditions than we, are just as alert as any citizen in the land to get at the facts, and in the spirit, not of revenge, but of justice, mete out punishment upon the offenders; such punishment as will convince the Filipinos, as well as the people of this country, that our work in those islands is not to degrade, but to uplift; not to kill, but to make alive.

"One mistake might be made under the pressure of an indignant people which would add disaster to shame; it would be the hasty and unjust punishment of men who had not been proved guilty. With witnesses and accused separated by an ocean and a continent justice can not be meted out in a day. We have, certainly I have, complete confidence in the justice, the humanity, and the courage of our President. Whether some of you have confidence in the other members of the Administration or not (I have) this President is the Administration. Patience, self-restraint, caution as to our accusation of men still on trial—these, it seems to me, are the qualities that we need just now and a strong support of the Administration in its efforts to redeem the fair name of this nation."

Mr. CARMACK. I want to know from whom that comes.

Mr. LODGE. That is from Bishop William Lawrence, the Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say something about this matter.

Mr. TURNER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOAR. I do not know who has the floor. Since the Senator sat down I do not know that it has been awarded to anybody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to say that Bishop Lawrence sent me his own statement on this subject, of which a part has been read. I think the whole statement will be interesting, and not merely the part quoted in the newspaper. I should like to supply that to-morrow to be put in the RECORD, or perhaps, if I can get it, I may put it in the RECORD to-night, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say, in connection with what has been said by the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], that he misunderstood the circumstances in regard to the ordering of this committee. It was no part of the resolution, or of the proposition when I introduced the resolution for an investigation, to ask the Senate to determine the question whether the committee should go to the Philippine Islands. There was nothing said in the resolution about that. I thought that should properly be dealt with later, after the committee knew what was necessary to be done.

I wish to say, because the matter has been much misunderstood by the country, and I have received reproachful articles from newspapers that I had abandoned a desire for an impartial committee, that when I introduced that resolution I said, before anything else had been said by anybody, the resolution having been read, that if the Committee on the Philippine Islands, of which my colleague [Mr. LODGE] was chairman, would undertake that duty, of course it ought to be consigned to them; that if it were made up by the Chair it ought to be made up of the prominent members of that committee. I added that no reasonable man would expect, of course, that the task of investigating the working of a political policy would be committed by a political body like the Senate to a committee which was antagonistic to that policy. It would be a thing unknown in parliamentary history.

When I had concluded the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] rose and said the minority of the Committee on the Philippines had been consulting together on the subject, and that they also desired that it should go to the Committee on the Philippines. My colleague then rose and said that his committee was willing to take it, and he thought it would be rather a slight on the committee if it were not committed to it. So the course which was taken, so far from my abandoning anything I have proposed, was the course approved by the entire Senate. I have no doubt myself that this investigation, which has disclosed so much already, is going to bring to the knowledge of the Senate and the American people the substantial facts in this case.

But I should like to be permitted to say, in all courtesy and kindness to the committee, that they are considering the destinies of 10,000,000 American subjects, as they call them and think they are, and they are considering whether certain proved cruelties or atrocities which have been committed toward that people, if not justified, have been provoked and extenuated and palliated by their conduct, and they have not so far heard one of them. Not a Filipino has been heard, although there are many of them whom our governors and generals say are able, intelligent, patriotic people. Although many of them are the authors of state papers, among the best state papers in all history, not one single Filipino so far has been heard to give his opinion as to the interests of his people or in defense of the terrible charges made against them.

This investigation is still on the threshold. It is in the hands of honorable men, humane American Senators, just and wise, and I am sure it is only necessary to call their attention to this fact to make it certain that that side will be fully heard before the investigation is over.

Mr. MCCOMAS obtained the floor.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 6, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, for life and all its rich and varied endowments, and we most fervently pray that we, as individuals, may use our life and the gifts which Thou hast bestowed upon us to the highest and noblest purposes that righteousness, peace, and love may prevail. With painstaking and industry help us to "work while it is yet day, for the night cometh when no man can work;" surely the angel of death, the reaper, has been busy among us. A third desk draped with the emblems of mourning tells us of another visit, leaving our hearts desolate; and oh, Heavenly Father, we most humbly pray that Thy comfort may come to the bereaved wife and all the friends who were near and dear to him. Help us, our Heavenly Father, to be impressed with these lessons, that our lives may be pure and ready when the summons comes to pass over the river; and Thine shall be the praise, in the name of Christ the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEATH OF HON. JOSHUA S. SALMON.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, it is with more than sadness, it is with shock and awe, that I have to announce to the House the death of the Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, news of which has just reached us. He died at his home in Boonton, N. J., this morning. At some future time request will be made of the House to appoint a day and time when we may pay our tribute to his character; to that modesty and purity, gentleness, kindness, and truth, which in his comparatively short service have made him as beloved by his fellows as he was respected for his absolute conscience, sturdiness, and earnestness of character. At present I beg to move the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey submits the following resolutions for the present consideration of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate, and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

R. 12702) to provide for the erection of a quartermaster's warehouse at Omaha, Nebr., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1920); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

I should like, if there be no objection, to have the bill printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 5676) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, as soon as the same can economically and conveniently be done, to cause to be excavated and constructed a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, and such as may be required for any changes in such tonnage or draft as may be reasonably anticipated, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean by such route as may be selected by him, having satisfied himself of the right of the United States to construct and protect such canal; and he shall cause to be constructed or improved such harbors at either entrance to such canal as he shall deem necessary.

SEC. 2. He shall have full authority to employ such agencies and to obtain such advice as he shall find necessary.

SEC. 3. He is authorized to guarantee to any foreign country or state the use of such canal and harbors, on such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or citizens thereof.

SEC. 4. He is further authorized to direct the Secretary of War to cause to be employed such engineering assistance from officers of the Army as the President shall think fit, and in general to require of the Secretary of War the performance of such duties in carrying this act into effect as he shall deem expedient.

SEC. 5. The sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated. And the sums required by any contract which may be entered into as aforesaid shall be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be hereafter made, on warrants to be drawn by the President of the United States, not to exceed in the aggregate $180,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution adopted by the Senate, of which this is an amplification, was passed only five days ago. I think some reasonable time should be allowed for an answer of that sort. I ask that the resolution may lie over.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2295.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, success in a war with Spain, forced upon a Republican Administration by the Democratic minority, gave us the Philippine Archipelago, called in the East "The Gem of the Orient."

Three years we have held and exercised sovereignty over those peoples. Sovereignty in law, sovereignty in fact, responsibility, and power. These powers must be exercised in the best and highest spirit for the good of those communities. These responsibilities must be met with wisdom and courage.

Our Supreme Court has said in the Diamond Rings case—that Spain ceded the archipelago. The treaty was ratified; Congress appropriated the money to pay Spain for them. The treaty-making power, the executive power, the legislative power, concurred in the completion of the transaction.

The Philippines thereby ceased, in the language of the treaty, "to be Spanish." Ceasing to be Spanish they ceased to be foreign country. They came under the complete and absolute sovereignty and dominion of the United States, and so became territory of the United States over which civil government could be established. * * * Their allegiance became due to the United States and they became entitled to its protection.

The court also decided that, although the Philippines ceased to be a foreign country and became a territory of the United States and domestic, yet that it was merely "appurtenant" territory and "not a part of the United States within the revenue clauses of the Constitution."

The minority have in a prolonged debate ignored all history, ignored the treaty some of them helped ratify, ignored the act of Congress paying for this cession of territory, ignored the acts of the Executive in carrying on government during three years over this territory of ours. They ignore the decision of the Supreme Court that the archipelago is our territory and domestic.

They hark back to the time before the war, and propose to undo the glorious and momentous work of the past four years; to denounce our treaty; to disgrace our Army and Navy; to throw away sovereignty and the twenty millions we paid for it; to undo the action of Congress; to defy the verdict of the people who reelected President McKinley; to reverse the Supreme Court in a series of its most important decisions; to scuttle amid the flouts and jeers of all the nations of the world.

The Democracy have lost skill and courage, the initiative quality. But I concede they are imitative. If by ill luck the Democracy should succeed Republicanism years hence and then take up the Philippine problem in our stead, they would go right in on our track, because no other plan would be safe or honorable; no other is now practicable; no other course is open to us, and they know it.

THE TEMPORARY PHILIPPINE TARIFF.

We have already by law affirmed the liberal tariff adopted by our Commission in the Philippines. The Spanish tariff put a low rate of duty on luxuries and a high rate on necessities.

The new tariff fixes a high rate for luxuries and a low rate for agricultural implements, for food stuffs and all the necessities of the poor. It also lowers our own tariff in favor of articles the growth and product of the archipelago coming into the United States. It turns over to the treasury of the Philippine Islands all money collected upon goods imported into our country from those islands. This substantial aid will help the civil government we are establishing in the archipelago. They need the revenue.

As peace extends over all the provinces civil government expenses increase. We decrease our Dingley tariff to help the Philippines and give them all we collect. We let them exact from us the same customs dues they charge other nations.

THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT BILL.

The pending bill provides a plan of temporary civil government in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, I have watched the RECORD for the last few days, and I have seen no discussion of this bill. I think one Senator began to seriously discuss the bill, but like all the rest of the gentlemen in this discussion on that side of the proposition he ran away and began to cry out against American soldiers and their cruelties. This bill has not been discussed, and it is worthy of the serious consideration of Senators.

It ratifies the action of President McKinley, the governor and vice-governor, and the four executive departments of government in the Philippine Islands, and provides for appointment of their successors. It confirms the judicial system already established. It declares that after the establishment of peace the President shall order a census of the Philippine Islands, such as may inform the President and Congress concerning the capacity, fitness, and readiness of the people of those islands, or particular islands, provinces, and municipalities for the establishment and maintenance among them of a permanent popular, representative government.

It requires the Philippine Commission, basing their recommendations upon such census and upon their observation of the operation of the local governments, to report whether or not all or certain of these islands are capable, fit, and ready for such government.

In the meantime the Commission are directed to extend municipal and provincial governments based upon popular representation, provided in the act, with the purpose of gradually extending to all municipalities and provinces whose inhabitants are capable, fit, or ready for such extension permanent popular, representative government.

It provides for the needs of commerce. It gives over to the Philippine government all the property and rights acquired by the United States under the Spanish treaty. It regulates the control and disposition of the public lands. It guards against the exploitation of forest and arable lands by speculators. It affords a system of mining laws most useful and fair. It offers a plan for extinguishing by purchase the title of the friars to their rich lands by equitable methods, just to the friars and to the Filipinos. It empowers the Philippine government to issue municipal bonds for public improvements and to secure the public health. It also permits the Philippine government to issue franchises under most careful restrictions and strict limitations in the public interest. It gives a coinage law to the Philippines suitable to the traditions and trade of the East. It establishes a division of insular affairs in our War Department.

Thus Congress proceeds to establish temporary civil administration to secure personal rights and civil liberty as we enjoy it, and for political government so fast and so far as communities and provinces may be fit, capable, and ready for the establishment and maintenance of popular representative government.

WE CAN NOT OCCIDENTALIZE THE ORIENT.

It is the highest wisdom to resist the temptation to go too fast. We must go slowly if we would educate these Malay races in self-government. Much that is opposed to Western instincts must be allowed to remain. We can not occidentalize the Orient in a day. To explode a republican government upon the Filipinos at once is to make matters worse for them and for us. We can not "hustle" the East. We dare not forget that after all the East is the East. If we would carry to them our institutions we must slowly prepare the way for the free institutions of the West and urge them gently along it. We must avoid too much sentimentality. Blunders are inevitable; therefore we must go slow. If we are blind to the force of oriental ideas in the Orient our failure is foredoomed. The Filipinos must develop along their own racial lines; we can not refashion them into oriental Americans.

Therefore Congress must proceed slowly, and this plan of temporary government is wise, humane, adequate.

Mr. President, without this temporary government we here propose, civil government is rapidly extending over the islands. Progress and prosperity follow in its wake.

THE SIDE ISSUE—CRUELTY OF WAR.

This beneficent work is obstructed by the minority on this floor. The minority seek to draw away the public mind from the dawning of peace in the archipelago. They shrink from discussion of the provisions of this bill, and for days denounce cruelties perpetrated by American soldiers in those islands. They do not denounce barbarities and savagery of the insurrectos and ladrones. Instead they indict our Army, the whole Army—gallant youths; sons of Union soldiers; sons of Confederate soldiers; our volunteer soldiers in arms; our fellow-Americans from the North and from the South.

Is it patriotic for American Senators to denationalize themselves for the sake of a partisan advantage? Is it patriotic to clutch at every charge against our countrymen in arms under the flag across the sea? To assume that Americans are guilty? To deny the justice of courts-martial? To denounce the judgments of the courts without hearing the facts or considering the law upon which these judgments are based? Senators can not gather any laurels from a patriotic people by a crusade against our whole Army. All humane men denounce the "water cure" inflicted by a few to extort confession of the murderers of their comrades.

THE ATTACK ON GENERAL FUNSTON.

The unexampled daring of the little Kansan, General Funston, has endeared him to all who love a brave man. Senators here attack him because he defends his comrades under the flag.

Against Senators who sit here in safety in tranquil seats of ease I array on Funston's side General Otis, his first commander in chief, who says:

The capture of Aguinaldo proves Funston a great scout. He and his officers and men risked their lives in the hands of the natives and their bravery as easily might have led them to death as to success.

Against these Senators I array that great soldier, General MacArthur, who telegraphed to Lawton:

By the splendid daring of Funston we made quite a remarkable passage of the Rio Grande.

I array Wheaton, who reports:

Upon consultation with Colonel Funston a point about nine hundred yards below the railroad bridge was selected as the place that he would endeavor to cross a part of his regiment. The enemy's intrenchments opposite this point were well screened by bamboo thickets.

Colonel Funston advanced to the river bank strong parties that kept up a fire of great volume. The effect of the heavy and continued fire was to drive part of the enemy's force from his works, and privates Edward White and W. B. Trembly, of Company B, Twentieth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, swam the river with a rope and fastened it to a stake on the enemy's intrenchments while yet occupied. Rafts were pulled over by means of this rope, Colonel Funston going over on the first raft.

When Colonel Funston had crossed forty-five officers and men, he attacked the enemy, turning him out of his works near the bridge. I then crossed the bridge with my staff.

Finally, against these Senators I invoke the name of that stainless soldier, humane statesman, and Christian hero, William McKinley, who placed on Funston's shoulders the stars he wears.

Retribution came quick. It came in the same hour when Senators who declared Funston no hero demanded that the common thief and highway robber, the brutal desperado, infamous with a hundred murders, Pio del Pilar, must be heard before the committee of the American Senate in the name of liberty and humanity.

Mr. President, it is true that a few of our soldiers have inflicted the water cure to extort arms, to develop treachery, or to discover the savages who have buried their comrades alive or burned them alive by slow fire. I denounce these instances and deplore them. The President's ringing words make sure he will punish the few and vindicate the Army. It is true that here and there villages have been set on fire. I deplore these acts.

Hear General Hughes state (Senate committee testimony, pp. 558–559) what sort of burning it is and what provoked such punishment:

General HUGHES. I do not know that we ever had a case of burning what you would call a town in this country, but probably a barrio or a sitio; probably a half a dozen houses, native shacks, where the insurrectos would go in and be concealed, and if they caught a detachment passing they would kill some of them.

And again I quote:

Senator DIETRICH. About what does one of these houses or shacks cost, and about how long does it take to build one?

General HUGHES. The cost, as sworn to by women on courts-martial and courts of inquiry, etc., is given as ranging between three and eight dollars.

Senator DIETRICH. Mexican?

General HUGHES. Mexican pesos.

Senator DIETRICH. That would be from $1.50 to $4 of our money?

General HUGHES. Yes, sir. I should not like to be certain as to the length of time it takes to build them. They probably could build them in about three days, but there is a question as to how long it takes to put on the nipa.

The cost of a shelter does not alter the character of the act, however. Guerrillas who conceal themselves in barrios and towns within our lines and fire upon our soldiers are, as international law says, as General MacArthur and General Hughes say, war rebels. Such burnings unhappily have often been inflicted in civilized warfare.

THE CRUELTY OF CIVILIZED WAR AT HOME.

When we condemn, let us remember that war is cruel. Let the country realize that every instance of cruelty urged here is an argument in favor of this civil government bill. Let us pass it that peace may displace military power.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEVERIDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. I just want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the Senator whether he feels absolutely certain that the army could be withdrawn from the Philippines with safety and the civil government left to itself?

Mr. MCCOMAS. That is a proper question and I will endeavor presently to answer it. I shall discuss it more fully later on. I will say now that I do not believe the whole army could safely be withdrawn, but I believe within four years 10,000 men, or, at most, 15,000 soldiers, or one and one-half soldiers to each thousand of the inhabitants, will be all that will be required in the Philippines, and the municipal police and provincial constabulary will supplement that force when we take the main army away. From 10,000 to 15,000 men will, I think, be all that will be necessary. Governor Taft says that he is safe in saying that 15,000 men will be the limit of the American army within four years.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does that include Mindanao?

Mr. MCCOMAS. Including Mindanao and all the other Philippine Islands.

Mr. TILLMAN. Governor Taft has made so many predictions and reports as to the pacification of the islands that we might be allowed, it seems to me, to doubt his judgment.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators must observe the rules of the Senate by first addressing the Chair and not carrying on colloquies of their own motion.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Governor Taft will be vindicated grandly by time in every proposition he has made in the volume of testimony here at my hand.

I said that war was cruel, and this one phrase, this one epigram, of General Sherman will be remembered, that "war is hell," and he said that after experience of unhappy war among civilized people. I will refer to such warfare upon both sides, and I desire to do it without rancor. God knows I have none in my heart. We are a united people; we are a people living together in amity as never before; and I shall refer to instances on both sides to show that amongst civilized people war is cruel, because I want the young generation who now find their Army indicted for cruelty in the Philippines to compare that with what was war among our own people, their fathers and their brothers. Then they can better measure the censure that is meted out by Senators of the minority to the Army of their day and of their generation.

In my youth, I recall how the Confederate General McCausland, followed by his cavalrymen, marched into the court-house in Hagerstown, where I lived, stood with clanking saber in the seat of justice, and demanded many thousands of dollars from the people, and extorted it by his brutal threat to lay the town in ashes.

In the city of Frederick, almost in sight of this Capitol, General Early demanded that the people of Frederick pay him $200,000 ransom within a few short hours, and they paid it to save their city from conflagration and their homes from plunder. The files of our Committee on Claims, as is well known by the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], sitting near me, afford an unheeded history of Early's barbarous cruelty. The same General McCausland rode into Pennsylvania and reduced to ashes the beautiful town of Chambersburg.

On the other hand, Sherman marched to the sea. I want to be fair to both sides. Sherman's march to the sea was lighted by the burning of bridges and hamlets. His gallant army was charged with the setting on fire of Columbia, S. C., though Sherman denied it and helped put out the fires. Senators talk here of cruelty, of orders issued in the Philippines, about having prisoners tortured to extort confessions from them, and talk of all the fiends of fiction and of fact, and of all the bad men and bloody monsters of cruelty that have been flung into this debate. The Senator from Utah was historically a little short on astronomers and a little long on war butchers the other day. I am trying to avoid any partisan remarks. I am talking about the cruelty of war. I am talking about General Sherman's proposition that war among civilized people is hell. I want to read the latter part of a dispatch to Secretary Stanton, and then I will read the name of the writer.

The success is brilliant, and you may rest assured that its effects will be of the greatest importance. There shall be no delay in following up the rebels. The rebels have been guilty of the most murderous and barbarous conduct in placing torpedoes within the abandoned works, near wells and springs, near flagstaffs, magazines, telegraph offices, in carpetbags, barrels of flour, etc. Fortunately we have not lost many men in this manner—some four or five killed and perhaps a dozen wounded. I shall make the prisoners remove them at their own peril.

GEO. B. MCCLELLAN, Major-General.

That was dated May 4, 1862. He was one of the most humane soldiers, an accomplished and charming gentleman, afterwards a Democratic candidate for the Presidency, and he stated that prisoners of war must go among the torpedoes and the explosives and risk their lives in taking them up lest other men be killed by those torpedoes thus arranged, and he did not hesitate. War at home was hell, Mr. President, even before the war had reached the stage of severe reprisals.

Again, I read another like it to sustain my thesis:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF THE MISSISSIPPI,
In the Field, Big Shanty, June 23, 1864.

Maj. Gen. J. B. STEEDMAN,
Commanding District of the Etowah, Chattanooga.

GENERAL: As the question may arise, and you have the right to the support of my authority, I now decide that the use of the torpedo is justifiable in war in advance of an army, so as to make his advance up a river or over a road more dangerous and difficult. But after the adversary has gained the country by fair warlike means, then the case entirely changes. The use of torpedoes in blowing up our cars and the road after they are in our possession is simply malicious. It can not alter the great problem, but simply makes trouble. Now, if torpedoes are found in the possession of an enemy to our rear, you may cause them to be put on the ground and tested by wagonloads of prisoners, or, if need be, citizens implicated in their use. In like manner, if a torpedo is suspected on any part of the road, order the point to be tested by a carload of prisoners, or citizens implicated, drawn by a long rope. Of course an enemy can not complain of his own traps.

I am, etc.,

W. T. SHERMAN,
Major-General, Commanding.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him there in the interest of history?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MCCOMAS. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has alluded to the matter of the burning of Columbia, S. C. It is well known that it was charged to two very eminent men, both of them men for whom all have the highest respect. General Sherman charged the burning upon Wade Hampton and Wade Hampton charged it upon General Sherman. There has been a very able and thorough investigation of that question within a few weeks by Mr. Rhodes, one of the most able and impartial of modern historians, a near kinsman of a member of this body, as is well known. He has satisfied all, I think, beyond any question whatever, that the burning of Columbia was accidental, coming from the fires which were set to cotton and other property to prevent it falling into the hands of the victors, a perfectly proper thing, started, perhaps, by some lawless characters connected with one army or the other, but that there was no responsibility for it upon either side or upon the part of anybody in command. I think that is as thoroughly demonstrated by this paper of Mr. Rhodes as any fact in history, and it will be accepted by both sides hereafter.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I hope that is true.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MCCOMAS. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I had hoped that the bitterness of our old civil strife would never be revived in this Chamber, or out of it, and I for one deprecate it, and I protest that it is not patriotic to interject into this debate any of these bitter reminiscences.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If the Senator from South Carolina desires to make any comment on or answer to my speech, I prefer that he should do so in his own time. I am not making, and I have said that I am not making here, an effort to stir up any such feeling. I have talked of the severity and brutality by one party and the other. I have read here letters from General Sherman, whose memory is dear to every American who admires great commanders and brave men. I have shown that General McClellan and General Sherman gave these orders. I have talked of the burning of towns upon each side. I have avoided that which would stir up strife. I am sustaining the proposition that war among civilized peoples is hell. It is always cruel. Now, I will proceed with several more instances. I read from General Grant's Memoirs (vol. 2, p. 331):

In the Shenandoah Valley Sheridan went to work with his command gathering in the crops, cattle, and everything in the upper part of the valley required by our troops, and especially taking what might be of use to the enemy. What he could not take away he destroyed, so that the enemy would not be invited to come back there.

That fair and beautiful valley was so desolated that the newspapers at the time said Sheridan had so devastated it that a crow must carry his provisions when he flew over that most fruitful soil.

Again says Grant (vol. 2, p. 138):

Forrest, however, went back rapidly and attacked the troops at Fort Pillow. * * * I will leave Forrest in his dispatches to tell what he did with them. "The river was dyed," he said, "with the blood of the slaughter for two hundred yards. The approximate loss was upward of five hundred killed, but few of the officers escaping. My loss was about twenty killed. It is hoped that these facts will demonstrate to the Northern people that negro soldiers can not cope with Southerners." Subsequently Forrest made a report in which he left out the part which shocks humanity to read.

Those cases happened in our war on the one side and the other. I will not suggest other instances because I do not desire to stir up feeling on one side or the other. I have advisedly instanced both sides of our war to show the cruelty of war among highly civilized people. As to many of the cruelties of war, which it has been suggested might be commented on here, I would not comment upon them because they were the acts of a few on the one side or the other, not sanctioned by the whole army of Confederates, not sanctioned by the whole Army of Federal soldiers, nor ordered by commanding officers. Such were the acts of a few people and the cruelty of the few, and are not to be used for the indictment of the many.

The North and the South are now united. The Senator will never find me trying to disunite them. The young men, sons of Confederates, and the young men, sons of Union soldiers, are now in the ranks yonder, from the Senator's State and from my State, and from other States in the Union, following the flag in the Philippines, touching shoulder in the line, are our own, thank God. Though our war is long past, that war was cruel, and it was waged between highly civilized people; and that is the point of my argument.

A united and grateful people love valor and would reward the heroic deeds of our soldiers in the Philippines. I know they will resent this monstrous attempt by a few Senators on this floor, upon evidence of the cruelty of a few of our soldiers, to indict and convict our whole Army, all its officers and men, of waging inhuman warfare in those islands. I observe I have not yet heard any Senator who wore the gray or wore the blue rise to rail at the American Army.

The Filipino barbarities are great. The information is here in a book, and the instances are many. I shall not read them, but they justify this summary of Secretary Root, who declares:

The war on the part of the Filipinos has been conducted with the barbarous cruelty common among uncivilized races and with general disregard of the rules of civilized warfare. They deliberately adopted the policy of killing all natives, however peaceful, who were friendly to our Government, and in literally thousands of instances these poor creatures, dependent upon our soldiers for protection, have been assassinated.

The Filipino troops have frequently fired upon our men from under protection of flags of truce, tortured to death American prisoners who have fallen into their hands, buried alive both Americans and friendly natives, and horribly mutilated the bodies of the American dead. That the soldiers fighting against such an enemy and with their own eyes witnessing such deeds should occasionally be regardless of their orders and retaliate by unjustifiable severities is not incredible. Such things happen in every war, even between two civilized nations, and they always will happen while war lasts. That such occurrences have been sanctioned or permitted is not true. A constant and effective pressure of prohibition, precept, and discipline has been maintained against them. That there has been any such practice is not true. * * * The war in the Philippines has been conducted by the American Army with scrupulous regard for the rules of civilized warfare, with careful and genuine consideration for the prisoner and the noncombatant, with self-restraint, and with humanity never surpassed, if ever equaled, in any conflict, worthy only of praise, and reflecting credit upon the American people.

LYNCHING IN TIME OF PEACE.

Let us not forget that in our prosperous land, blessed with peace, during sixteen years more than 2,500 lynchings have occurred and that 61 of the victims were women; that only one-fourth of these executions by mob were incited by the most fiendish crime which so strongly tempts men to inflict summary punishment without authority of law. Let us not forget that nearly a thousand of the victims were white men, Indians, Chinese, or Mexicans. Let us not forget that our soldiers who have been guilty have been or will be punished, while the thousands of citizens at home who have abetted this barbarous custom or shared in the horrible practice of lynching have not been and never will be punished.

Our Senate committee were charged to investigate the water torture of natives by the Macabebes. We found that this cruel practice had been pretty nearly stamped out by our armies. Bad as it is, it can not compare in barbarity with lynching or burning at the stake of citizens suspected of crime, in this land of the free, in States under the Constitution. Will the minority join us in a Congressional investigation of these crimes against humanity, these outbursts of anarchy, increasing at home? Let us, if we love liberty, wipe out from our civilization at home this foul blot. Then let us turn next to the far-off islands.

HUMANITY OF OUR ARMY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

President Schurman and his fellow commissioners say:

The commission is not willing to close this statement without paying just tribute to our sailors and soldiers. The presence of Admiral Dewey as a member of this body makes it unfitting to dwell on his personal achievements, but he joins with us in eulogy of his comrades. We were fortunate in witnessing some of the many brave deeds of our soldiers. All that skill, courage, and patient endurance can do has been done in the Philippines. We are aware that there are those who have seen fit to accuse our troops of desecrating churches, murdering prisoners, and committing unmentionable crimes. To those who derive satisfaction from seizing on isolated occurrences—regretable, indeed, but incident to every war—and making them the basis of sweeping accusations, this commission has nothing to say. Still less do we feel called upon to answer idle tales without foundation in fact. But for the satisfaction of those who have found it difficult to understand why the transporting of American citizens across the Pacific Ocean should change their nature, we are glad to express the belief that a war was never more humanely conducted. Insurgents wounded were repeatedly succored on the field by our men at the risk of their lives. Those who had a chance for life were taken to Manila and tenderly cared for in our hospitals. If churches were occupied, it was only as a military necessity, and frequently after their use as forts by the insurgents had made it necessary to train our artillery upon them. Prisoners were taken whenever opportunity offered, often only to be set at liberty after being disarmed and fed. Up to the time of our departure, although numerous spies had been captured, not a single Filipino had been executed. Such wrongs as were actually committed against the natives were likely to be brought to our attention, and in every case that we investigated we found a willingness on the part of those in authority to administer prompt justice.

The bravery and endurance of our army make an American proud of our citizen soldiery. What remains of war is the terrorism of guerrilla warfare. What remains, says Governor Taft—is a crime against civilization, because it subjects peoples desiring peace to privation and suffering; because it enlists ladrones and bandits to keep up a system of terrorism in town and country.

These guerrillas, says Governor Taft—are not fighting for independence nor pretending to fight for independence.

It is easy, though not patriotic, to decry our brothers and sons who have carried the flag to victory all over the archipelago and made peace again settle over that country, the peace that smiles and brings plenty. I believe these soldiers of ours deserve the tribute of Governor Taft, and I again read from his testimony:

I desire to say that it is my deliberate judgment that there never was a war conducted, whether against inferior races or others, in which there was more compassion and more restraint and more generosity, assuming that there was war at all, than there have been in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, that is a side issue in this debate. I turn now to the main question, the subject of this bill, a temporary civil government for the Philippine Islands.

The Schurman Philippine Commission justly concluded—that the nation can not withdraw from the Philippines. We are there and duty binds us to remain.

And again Mr. Schurman and Admiral Dewey and Mr. Worcester say that—the Filipinos are wholly unfit for independence, and if independence were given to them they could not maintain it.

General Otis, the former military governor, testifies (Senate committee testimony, p. 739) that our withdrawal would mean anarchy.

Senator BEVERIDGE. I will ask you, General, what your opinion is as to the condition that would result if the American authority were withdrawn and the islands were turned over to the natives.

General OTIS. It would be anarchy or a military despotism, and they all understand it. There is not a Filipino or anybody else over there who desires self-government. * * * Aguinaldo himself never wanted self-government without outside protection.

General MacArthur, his successor, says (Senate committee testimony, 1918–1919):

American withdrawal from the islands, therefore, would, in my opinion, result in permanent failure of republicanism in the East, and the devastation of the archipelago by internal and fratricidal war, which would continue indefinitely until suppressed by some external force. That such force would be applied there can be no doubt. * * * Chaos would result in the Philippine Islands if we left them.

And then, Senators, mark the further testimony of General MacArthur, an officer and a gentleman of the highest repute, who brings Aguinaldo to confess to him within a year, on July 3, 1901—that he was satisfied that it would be impossible at this stage of their evolution for his own people to establish a stable independent government.

AMERICAN ACHIEVEMENTS IN THE TROPICS.

President McKinley, the most humane of all rulers; Secretary Root, sagacious, resourceful, and one of the ablest war ministers in our history, have guided and directed our armies in war and our Civil Commission in peace.

President Roosevelt has zealously joined in this great work. The result is destined to be one of the proudest chapters in our history. President, Secretary, and Commission go on with their great work conscious that they hold a trust for a liberty-loving nation, and that they hold a mandate from humanity. Blind partisans abuse them here, pessimists decry their work, cynics sneer, impracticable idealists revile, and timid souls denounce them as untrue to liberty. I say these forceful, masterful men are the statesmen of whom our country should be most proud. Their great work shows that the descendants of the fathers have not lost their cunning in building free States.

In Washington and in the Philippines, with President McKinley's bill of rights in their hands and with peace in their hearts, these statesmen are doing more for liberty, regulated by law, than has ever before been achieved by civilized man in the Tropics.

President Roosevelt well says:

History may safely be challenged to show a single instance in which a masterful race such as ours, having been forced by the exigencies of war to take possession of an alien land, has behaved to its inhabitants with the disinterested zeal for their progress that our people have shown in the Philippines.

DECREASE OF OUR ARMY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The labors of Governor Taft and the Commission of Americans and Filipinos have been arduous; their achievements remarkable and inspiring. After we acquired sovereignty it was our duty, as the Supreme Court has said, to preserve order and suppress insurrection in territory of the United States. Our American soldiers have practically ended the war. Civil government now controls in all but the three provinces of Laguna, Batangas, and Samar.

I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that only the other day the news came that in Samar the insurrection had been ended. Insurrection remains only in two small provinces, and there is being rapidly reduced.

There are scarcely 2,000 Filipinos in arms to-day. Our army of 70,000 men in the archipelago has been reduced to 30,000. Very soon it will fall to 25,000. The Commission believe that after the remaining provinces have been pacified 15,000 troops will be a sufficient defense to the islands—scarcely one and one-half men to a thousand of the population.

GOVERNOR TAFT AND THE COMMISSION.

President McKinley's instructions to the Commission, who have studied and executed them, leads the Commission to declare that, having watched their operations in the development of the government in the Philippine Islands, this bill of rights constitutes one of the greatest State papers ever issued in operating as they were intended to operate and in bringing about a state of affairs that they intended to bring about, putting into the minds of the people a consciousness of the existence of power in the civil government and gradually placing more and more power in that government, which the instructions contemplated, and so had a marvelous effect in showing the Filipino people what our purpose was.

Mr. President, the men who are building up a civil government in more than a thousand islands of that archipelago, with its 120,000 square miles of land, with its 5,000,000 Christians, its 2,000,000 non-Christian tribes, its 1,000,000 Mohammedan Moros; the men who have framed a code of civil government and a municipal code; who have organized most all the provinces and a thousand towns into self-governing bodies so far and so fast as the people are ready and capable; who are fighting the pestilence among the cattle and beasts of burden; who are stamping out the plague in the cities and towns; who are rapidly reducing the death rate in Manila; who are penetrating the country with public roads through the swamps and over mountains; who have established courts of first instance in every province and an appellate court at Manila; who are now urging us to provide final appeal to our own Supreme Court out of tender regard for liberty, lives, and property of the Filipinos; who are cleaning and making Manila as healthful as Americans have made Habana; who have found time between framing codes and organizing governments in provinces to dig out a harbor at Manila for a fast-growing commerce, to provide sewers, to light the streets, and supply pure water, to send the lepers to a chosen island, to build great ice plants, and care for the sick and diseased in hospitals; these commissioners who are scattering public schools throughout the archipelago, where throngs of children are learning the language of their liberators—I repeat, these men are statesmen whom American Senators ought to be ashamed to decry; statesmen whom the world already admires.

What a splendid achievement it is that carries peace to eighty-four different tribes of men with varying superstitions and faiths and with a confusion of tongues; which is spreading provincial constabulary and establishing municipal police all over the archipelago.

I shall read from Governor Taft's testimony. Here is the spirit of his mission. Here is the spirit of this man who came home sick and who is now turning his face to the East once more, although not restored in health, that he may carry out the great work which he undertook when he accepted the commission of William McKinley to take peace and liberty, light and law to the Philippines. Sick, and sick seriously, he is going back to accomplish his work, and in what spirit? Not that of the doctrinaire, not of the reviler or the critic or the pessimist, but with an enthusiasm which is healthy among sterling men. He says in his testimony:

The thing the Filipino people need to-day is a stable government under the guidance of American control, teaching them what individual liberty is, training them to a knowledge of self-government, and when they have that the question of what relation shall then exist between the islands and this country may be settled between them and the United States. But to attempt to decide in advance that which is utterly impossible wisely to decide now is unreasonable. It is the duty of the United States to continue a government there which shall teach those people individual liberty, lift them up to a point of civilization of which I believe they are capable, and make them call the name of the United States blessed.

And yet that man in that work moved by that spirit is traduced on this floor by American Senators, and it is unworthy of them. He has been simply sharing the fortunes of other good men before him. So also persecuted they the saints.

Upon the Spanish laws, already the habeas corpus—that fundamental defense of personal rights and liberty—has been ingrafted. So far and so fast our system has been carried, yet with a wise self-restraint in applying modes of government utterly unsuited to the oriental mind.

Mr. President, the achievements and progress of our civil Government is the most striking advance of liberty the world has yet made in the Tropics, and the civil government which this Congress will extend to those inhabitants will carry with it the blessings of liberty, education, and free institutions.

THE MINORITY POLICY OF SCUTTLE.

All this the minority on this floor would abandon. Theirs is a policy of scuttle. They would steal away leaving the archipelago to anarchism or imperialism. The motto of the Senator from Utah, who introduced this substitute for the pending measure, is, "Let the Ishmaelite go"—a policy made more specific by the Senator from Mississippi, who adds: "Let him go to the devil." That is easy, but it is not statesmanship. It is not patriotic constructive statesmanship.

Men who in the Senate voted to ratify the treaty and in the House sanctioned it by a large appropriation ought not to shrink from their duty to go forward and assume the consequences of their act. We made war; we won it. We made a treaty; we must keep it. We took the sovereignty; we can not pass it over to eighty-four tribes in the islands. We can not surrender it to Japan or Germany. How, then, by the passage of this substitute, can we declare "the archipelago shall be foreign territory?"

The substitute would have us relinquish all claim of sovereignty. How could we relinquish sovereignty over the islands and still compel them to secure free trade between our ports and theirs? If we could, as Governor Taft has testified, under our treaty with Spain, all the trade of the world would go into their ports in Spanish or American ship bottoms and there would be no customs revenue in the Philippines to support any government there.

Respecting the proposition that the United States "shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a stable government," Governor Taft estifies:

I doubt if the people can establish a stable government. If it is to be with the aid of American contrivance and control, then the time taken must be indefinitely in the future—generations probably.

If it means that the agents of the insurrecto forces shall call together a number of delegates and go through the form of making a government, and when that government has its offices filled, at once the transfer of sovereignty shall take place, there would result after that—it might last six months, it might last a year—but there would result anarchy and interference with the rights of individuals, interference with the rights of vested interests in which foreign governments are concerned, which would require the United States at once to go back and begin over the work which it had been doing, and it would find itself where it was two years ago.

The promise to grant independence would drive out capital, discourage the sincere efforts of the educated Filipinos, who are with us to-day, in building up a stable government. If we would turn over the government to the Tagalogs it would lead to a division between them and the Visayans. Neither of these could govern the Moros.

In a word, Governor Taft testifies, and all wise men agree with him, our duty to the people and to foreign powers would compel us to go back again. Our protectorate would make us powerless, but could not divide our responsibility. As President McKinley said:

Neither Congress nor the Executive can establish a stable government in these islands except under our right of sovereignty, our authority, and our flag, and this we are doing.

What a transparent fraud is this substitute! We would never be justified in throwing these people back into anarchy, dictatorship, and revolution without hope of civil liberty.

President Roosevelt is right. "To leave the islands at this time would mean that they would fall into a welter of murderous anarchy." The minority can not deceive the American people by such shams. What folly to cry, "Let us establish a republic and sail away." What republic could long preserve concord between Christians, Mohammedans and pagans, the dwarf Negritos, the head-hunting Igorrotes, the Moros, the Sultan of Sulu and his datos, and the wild mountain tribes scattered in a thousand islands? Governor Taft testifies:

In the Cagayan Valley they speak a language which can not be understood by the Ilocanos across the mountains. The Ilocanos speak a language that can not be understood by a Pangasinan. The Pangasinans can not understand the Pampangans. The Pampangans and the Pangasinans fill up Tarlac, and in the north part of Tarlac they speak Pangasinan. In the south part they speak Pampangan. In Bulacan they speak Tagalog, and a Pampangan can not understand a person from Bulacan.

Coming down, part of Luzon is Tagalog, until you reach the lower part of the Camarines, where you strike another language, Bicol. That language is a very primitive language, and a man who speaks only Tagalog can not understand Bicol.

Here is a population 10 per cent partially educated, partially intelligent; 90 per cent grossly ignorant and superstitious, often savage.

Mr. TILLMAN. What good will we do them?

Mr. McCOMAS. In the long reach of time we will do them good and they will do us good, too.

I have listened to the able Senators of the minority in unsympathetic spirit questioning our fellow-American who is the governor of the Philippines. They have suggested that these Asiatics, used to four hundred years of Spanish institutions and laws, should have trial by jury and the use of grand juries. Senators are eager for dark-skinned juries in the Philippines who dare not advocate dark-skinned juries in their own States.

Governor Taft has told them that corruption is so embedded in ignorance that these methods are impossible and would be most dangerous to life and property. This is plain to the average mind.

Senators, read the splendid story of our civil government there—its work for peace, law, and liberty—and then read the questions of the able Senators who cross-examined Governor Taft; who gave him no generous praise, but questioned him about their suspicions and repeated them here upon the floor. You will exclaim, God help the people if such as these had gone there to put to work this impracticable substitute! The Lord be thanked that President McKinley, with characteristic foresight, chose better instruments to carry out a great work for free institutions in the Tropics, a work such as no nation ever equaled!

The minority, conscious that their substitute is impracticable and unstatesmanlike, do not dare discuss it. They abuse our soldiers, who are our brethren and our fellow-citizens. They decry the achievements of our civil government. They denounce as tyrants Governor Taft and the Commission there, strong men and true,

> Discerning to fulfill
> This labor, by slow prudence to make mild
> A rugged people, and thro' soft degrees
> Subdue them to the useful and the good.

HYPOCRISY—OUR FILIPINOS AT HOME.

The minority talk of the Declaration of Independence. They proclaim their love of liberty and call our government of the Filipinos a tyranny. These Senators can gather no fresh laurels here. They only echo Mr. Bryan's rhetoric and his ill-considered plan. The American people repudiated this programme and its chief apostle. Senators deceive only themselves when they profess to follow Abraham Lincoln. President McKinley said:

If our opponents would only practice as well as preach the doctrines of Abraham Lincoln, there would be no fear for the safety of our institutions.

The Republican party does not need to assert its devotion to the Declaration of Independence. That immortal instrument of the fathers remained unexecuted until the people, under the lead of the Republican party, in the awful clash of battle turned its promises into fulfillment. It wrote into the Constitution the amendments guaranteeing political equality to American citizenship, and it has never broken them nor counseled others into breaking them. It will not be guided in its conduct by one set of principles at home and another set in the new territory belonging to the United States.

Freedom is a rock upon which the Republican party was builded and now rests.

President McKinley, whose humane heart had breasted battle, not for slavery but for liberty, justly complained—

There is a strain of ill-concealed hypocrisy in the anxiety to extend the constitutional guaranties to the people of the Philippines, while their nullification is openly advocated at home.

Would that those Senators whose belated Democracy quotes Lincoln and the Declaration of Independence, who consume themselves with fear that our far-off islanders may not immediately have a republic, or, in the Tropics, be blanketed with the Constitution; would that these gentlemen might turn to their own States and their dark-skinned fellow-citizens. Crowning laurels will be theirs when they secure a government by the consent of the governed to their own Filipinos in their own States.

There will be more time to extend the Constitution to the Filipinos in the islands if they take all the time needed to undo that nullification of the Constitution whereby their Filipinos at home have been robbed of their suffrage and their citizenship.

Why are some so eager that all Filipinos in our islands have votes and elections before they know what a vote and what an election means? Why not first at home secure a free ballot and a fair count to those peaceful citizens, their own Filipinos, in the States where for years such have been denied both?

The Senator from Utah quotes Lincoln, and in tender solicitude over slavery and polygamy among Mohammedans in the Jolo Archipelago denounces us as tyrants because we will not let the Ishmaelites go. While we gradually wean the savage Moros from both practices on the other side of the globe, let the Senator remember that Lincoln called polygamy and slavery twin relics of barbarism, and let him join us in further effort to stamp out polygamy wherever it still disgraces the civilization of his own State.

The Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Mississippi with tearful voices cry out against the small percentage of voters we begin with in the early elections in the Philippines. We will extend the suffrage gradually until we finally develop a self-governing people in the archipelago. After one hundred and eleven years under the Constitution, what a mockery of a government of the people, by the people, are the governments in those two States. In the Presidential election of 1900 South Carolina cast only 3.8 per cent votes out of her total population; Mississippi cast only 3.8 per cent votes out of her total population.

In each of these States their home Filipinos have been gradually driven away from a part in governing; the whites grow indifferent. Soon, by this steady decrease, a larger percentage of the total population will be voting in the Philippines than in these two States.

And now after one hundred and eleven years of the Constitution having that condition they complain that we begin with 5 per cent of the Filipinos, as the junior Senator from Colorado stated, but it seems to me if we start with 5 per cent and after one hundred and eleven years we have gone back to 3.8 in the States of Mississippi and South Carolina, it is pretty good for a beginning in the Philippines. Senators, pass this bill, and in less than a decade there will be more Government by the consent of the governed in the prosperous, peaceful islands of the Philippines than there will then be, if the present conditions control, in Mississippi and South Carolina.

It is safe to predict that most of the votes for this substitute will come from States where consent of the governed is least practiced, where the Constitution is nullified more and more, while most of the votes for the pending bill will come from States where elections are free and fair and the Constitution is least violated. Never until the past three years was there such effrontery of hypocrisy. We behold Senators from the two States where there is less popular liberty than in any others shouting loudest for constitutional liberty on the other side of the globe.

Can such a motley army, until it restores constitutional liberty to dark-skinned citizens at home, make a mock crusade for liberty halfway around the globe? Let our white people lift up our dark-skinned citizens at home before we protect an Asiatic republic. If this hypocritical solicitude for the rights of 8,000,000 colored men yonder beget real solicitude for 10,000,000 colored citizens at home it could better be endured. Let Senators remove this beam in their own eyes, and then see clearly the motes in the eyes of their brothers.

SECESSION OF TERRITORY AN OBSOLETE DOCTRINE.

Our Supreme Court has decided that we can acquire territory by purchase or by conquest like other sovereign States. It is not our right or duty to surrender territory lawfully acquired when some of the people thereof demand its surrender that they may experiment with independence. It is a craven policy to surrender our lawful territory to people who will surely miss independence and bring upon themselves anarchy or despotism.

No nation not degenerate has ever done such thing. If the Filipinos upon an island have such inherent right to take our territory for such experiment, upon the demand of its inhabitants, each State at home, each Territory at home, has the right to demand independence. What, then, would become of our Union? What, then, would become of the Territories for future States? We endured a long and bloody civil war to determine whether or not this theory should stand.

In this century we will submit to no secession, to no surrender of our territory. The Administration of President Roosevelt will not haul down our flag in the Philippines.

There the Federal party, several hundred thousand strong, is teaching the Filipino people that to grant independence to the Philippines would be to hand over the islands to disorder and to anarchy, to destruction and to chaos.

Meantime this Administration will follow the path wherein President McKinley walked. It will not ignore the differences which make Orientals unfit for many of the institutions which are essential to the energetic races of the West. A commercial civilization and the Christian faith will steadily help us lift up the lazy and superstitious inhabitants of these tropical islands. This Administration will not be goaded by unthinking demagogues to introduce modes and maxims of government borrowed from our institutions, the long result of time but utterly unsuited to Orientals. We will advance steadily but cautiously, surely, to fit these peoples for and fit them to the free institutions of the Western World.

Modernized Japan has just erected a monument to Commodore Perry for opening that Oriental nation to the Western World. In the Philippines a grateful people will yet rear monuments to McKinley and his coadjutors in the coming time for carrying liberty to our antipodes.

Our flag over this roof comes down in Washington in the evening twilight. At the same hour our flag rises over Malacanan in Manila and salutes the dawn. In the stately procession of the hours somewhere over our territory our ensign forever flies in the light of day. And forever, all around the globe, as it floats over our soil, it will continue the symbol of light and hope, the symbol of liberty and law.

Mr. TILLMAN and Mr. BURTON rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON] gave notice that he would address the Senate at this hour to-day.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Kansas gave notice of a speech which he had prepared and which he can delay for a little while. If he does so, it will give me an opportunity to make a passing allusion to some things the Senator from Maryland has just said, which, I think, require an answer now.

Mr. BURTON. How long will it take?

Mr. TILLMAN. Not very long, because I do not propose to follow the Senator in all his meanderings. I simply want to touch on a few points.

Mr. BURTON. I will yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, Tom Hood in one of his satires has said:

> Of all the pride since Lucifer's attaint,
> The proudest swells the self-elected saint.

In listening to the complacent address of the Senator from Maryland, the ease with which he pooh-poohed the actions which curdle other men's blood, the aplomb, the vanity, if I may be pardoned the use of the word, with which he touches on this grave and serious question, I could not help being reminded of Hood's aphorism.

I do not propose, as I said to the Senator from Kansas, to go into any extensive discussion of this subject now. I had not intended or expected to discuss it at all, but there are some things which have been said which must be answered.

I have in my hand a letter which came to me in the mail this morning, and it is one of many which are continuing to come. The cloud of witnesses who will testify to the infamies which have been perpetrated upon the Filipinos is growing so as to almost darken the sky.

CONCORDIA, CLOUD COUNTY, KANS., May 5, 1902.

Hon. BENJAMIN TILLMAN.

DEAR SIR: Another witness of the inhuman outrages upon Filipinos has just been discovered by me. His name is George S. Anderson, of this city, a perfectly reliable young man. His regiment was the Thirty-second Volunteers and his Company I. Place of operations, Luzon.

He saw the "water cure" applied a "good many times." Not a "few," mind, but a "good many." He also saw them tied hands and feet and thrown into a line four and five deep and left until nearly dead and then dragged out. One poor wretch, after being taken out of the water scarcely able to move hand or foot, was run through by a soldier with his bayonet. The colonel of his regiment was L. A. Craig, and he seems to have been possessed of the "regulation order" of brutality. His captain's name was Frank M. Brumbold, and he seems to have been a most inhuman wretch.

I hope the investigation will not cease until the attempt to mislead the public by saying, "Oh, there was only a few isolated cases of brutality. The treatment generally of the Filipinos was humane." There should not have been one case.

Very truly, yours, J. M. HAGAMAN.

I hope the Senator from Maryland will do me the honor to remain in hearing. [To Mr. MCCOMAS, who arose as if going out.] This is only an incidental allusion to another witness who may or may not be summoned by the Committee on the Philippines, but from the leisurely way in which we are proceeding with that investigation and the difficulties which are thrown in the way of the minority of the committee to obtain certain witnesses it is the evident purpose of the majority here to force this legislation to a vote, if possible, before the light shall be fully turned on, knowing that if these infamies are proven conclusively, as we propose that they shall be, if given the opportunity, when the American people come to vote on this question next November there will no longer be a majority at both ends of this Capitol committed to this infamous policy.

They want the law; they want the statute; they want the fixed condition and the vested right that will grow up under this infamous proposition that is now on its passage in order that there can be no change until there is a revolution in both ends of this Capitol, as well as in the Presidency, and I am almost ready to promise you that so far as my own individual efforts may contribute to that end you shall not pass this bill until the light has been turned on and we have all the information which we seek to obtain.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIETRICH. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the bill provides for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and it certainly ought to have his support.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, please do not bring in all the old gags with which you are loaded. The bill does not provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver in the United States. It only grants that glorious privilege to your colonial possessions for the purpose of some banker or some other capitalist making some money, turning an honest penny.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator wish to be understood as serving notice on us that the other side will not permit us to act on this bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I only spoke of my own individual desire and wish. I have had no consultation with anyone as to any intention of delaying action on the bill, but I declare that it is the duty of this Senate not to pass any statute affecting the rights and property and liberties of the Filipinos until we have had full opportunity to let the American people determine whether they want this policy continued. That is what I proposed to say, and what I do say in unmistakable language.

I have another letter of a different kind, a most pathetic letter, which came to me some time ago. I will read only parts of it, for the reason that there is in it the natural complaint and sense of wrong and injury of a father who feels that some of his own people, members of this body and the other, have not dealt with him as they ought, and therefore I will not insert all of it:

BEARDSLEY, MINN., April 20, 1902.

The Hon. Senator TILLMAN:

Knowing you to be a man of integrity and honor, I take the privilege to urge you to use all honorable means to put a stop to this accursed war in the Philippine Islands. It is too late to save my poor boy, whose name is among those on the inclosed clipping from a Chicago paper.

He goes on and winds up as follows:

May God forgive them for all the tears and misery so many must go through on account of their unjust and unrighteous war.

Yours, very respectfully,

T. K. HUNDEBY,
Late Sergeant, Company K, Fifteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

The clipping which he sent me is as follows:

Violently insane—Terrible condition of soldiers who drank the Filipino "vino."

I will mention here that the old man said his son was a sober boy and did not drink any vino, had written to him about its effects, and he does not believe that that was the cause of his trouble.

CHICAGO, March 17, 1902.

A car of insane soldiers passed through yesterday. There were eighteen in number, and they are being sent from the Philippines to the soldiers' hospital at Washington.

Every one of the eighteen is violently and incurably insane. Their wild, haggard faces peered menacingly through the windows of their coach, their manacled hands wildly threatened the onlookers, and their fiendish shrieks and laughter echoed through the depot. Few of them were apparently diseased in body.

The affliction is due principally to indulgence in the Filipino "vino" and other harmful liquors sold in Manila, aggravated by the heat. The malady is of a violent and persistent nature and will not respond to any treatment that has yet been discovered.

As the train pulled into the station there was a sound as of a managerie approaching. The imprisoned men were chattering, snarling, moaning, and whining like wild beasts, and the noise was terrifying to the spectators.

Depot employees and trainmen who passed the car, not knowing of the presence of the maniacs, were greatly frightened when they heard a snarl of rage and then looked up into fiendish faces, which had their lips drawn back and teeth exposed.

The condition of the maniacs was pitiable in the extreme. All were absolutely mad and violent. Everyone of them wore leg irons and handcuffs, and some were in strait-jackets and bound to their seats in the car. Most of them are young men.

The guards state that sometimes for hours the men will be perfectly docile and will give no signs of insanity. They will play cards by the hour and chat among themselves. Suddenly something unusual will happen, an excitement arises and then bedlam breaks loose. It requires the combined force of the guards and of the one negro lunatic, who at present imagines himself to be a guard, to quell the disturbance. This negro is constantly on the watch for trouble, and takes a forceful part in it when it comes. His especial enemy is a large German, whom he watches like a hawk.

Among the patients in the car are Geo. Bowers, Company M, Twenty-second Infantry; George Taylor, Company M, Sixteenth Infantry; John Haley, Company F, Nineteenth Infantry; Thomas Petty, Company I, Twenty-fifth Infantry; Martin Spichler, Company D, Fifteenth Infantry; Samuel Steel, Company H, Nineteenth Infantry; George W. Hundeby, band, Sixteenth Infantry; Albert Rath, Troop L, Fifth Cavalry; P. I. Malone, hospital corps; W. B. Kerr, Company I, Twenty-second Infantry; Harry H. Wright, Company F, Fourth Coast Artillery.

I have here another clipping, sent me by another correspondent, from Omaha, Nebr., dated March 21, which reads:

A PATHETIC SIGHT—CARLOAD OF UNFORTUNATES CRAZED BY SERVICE IN PHILIPPINES.

OMAHA, March 21, 1902.

Quite a commotion was caused at the Union Station by the arrival of a carload of maniacs from the West.

They were United States soldiers gone insane in the service in the Philippines, and their condition was pitiful. All were absolutely mad and violent.

All wore leg irons and handcuffs, and some were in strait-jackets, being then bound to isolated parts of the car. There were 18 of those maniacs in all.

The guards and caretakers were a squad of Government soldiers stationed at the door of the car and at intervals along it with clubbed guns.

As the train pulled into the station there was a confused sound, as of a menagerie approaching. The imprisoned men were chattering, snarling, growling, moaning, roaring, and whining like so many wild beasts.

Each one seemed to imagine himself some representative of the animal kingdom, and the result was terrifying.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road took the men to the insane soldiers' hospital at Washington.

In connection with this question of the responsibility for the cruelties and infamies that have been perpetrated, some time ago I got a letter from a friend in Charleston, stating that a young man, recently discharged and returned home from the Philippine Islands about the time of this agitation in regard to the water cure and other cruelties was becoming current, or had sprung up here and elsewhere, knew a great many of these things, and a great deal about a good many incidents, and was speaking among his friends on the subject. I got his address and wrote to him, asking him what he knew and what he was willing to testify to. Some days ago I got a reply from him, and I will read it to you. He says:

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 26, 1902.

Senator B. R. TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: Your honored favor of the 18th instant to hand some days ago, and regret very much my tardiness in answering.

In regard to my appearing as a witness before the Committee on Philippines, beg to state that the officer with whom I was most connected is now dead, having committed suicide about six months ago, and as it would seem irreverent to speak of action of the dead, I do not care to testify. Under the circumstances I would ask that I be excused from this unpleasant duty.

Personally, I would consider it an honor to do anything I could for you, but ask that I be excused from the notoriety of appearing before the committee.

Yours, very respectfully, W. F. ADAIR, JR.,
41 Society Street East, Charleston, S. C.

Everyone who has any of the elements of a gentleman in him, or of a brave, true man, must respect this youth for his sensibility and sense of honor, which keeps him from smirching the name or the reputation of a man who has already gone to his account.

Mr. President, there are so many of these things coming from so many sources every day that it is not worth while for any Senator to longer pooh-pooh and sneer away, or attempt to sneer away, the fact that the American soldiers in the Philippines, from the South as well as from the North—because our sons have gone there under the flag like yours have—have begun to deal cruelly with those people, as the history of the human race from the time we have history shows that the white races have been cruel to all the colored races, that they are indifferent to their sufferings and their rights, and treat them with a malignity and sometimes with a cruelty that is simply fiendish.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] injected into this debate for the first time a discussion of a certain phase of the question that I shall briefly allude to and then dismiss, so far as I am concerned, and that is the hypocrisy of the Southern people and the representatives of the Southern people in standing here and demanding that you treat the Filipinos differently from the way in which we treat our Southern negroes. When you get ready, if you ever get ready, again to bring into this Chamber any substantive legislation looking to remedying the conditions in the South from your standpoint, or bringing about a change in those conditions, we will be prepared to make our case clear before the American people and defend the present situation and the causes which have brought it about.

I do not think it is either proper or wise to have this question brought in here in this way, just as I do not think it is wise or proper to inject into a discussion of the condition and the conduct of the war in the Philippines any comparison or allusion to our own unfortunate fratricidal strife forty years ago. I will simply call attention, however, to the fact that the Republican party, in its incipiency, back in the fifties, clamored for the "fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man," and declared that the Constitution was a covenant with death and a league with hell, or words to that effect. I do not know that I have got the exact quotation.

The agitation which grew up in that unfortunate era led to our civil war. Some five or six hundred thousand men—I do not know how many and it never will be known—offered their lives upon the altars of their country, each side contending for what it believed to be right.

The negro was the casus belli, or his status was, and that brought on the strife, and there is no use for anybody to deny it. The Southern people had a view of the strife, or the war, which they had inherited from their fathers, that their States had entered into the Union voluntarily; that it was a federation, which could be terminated when the conditions which led up to the Union were broken. I do not intend to go back into all this matter, but merely to give a general outline.

It is not worth while to defend secession here because secession failed; it is not worth while to revive these bitter memories of the blood which was shed and poured out freely by brave men on both sides, because it is not worth while for any man to dispute the fact that the Confederates were as patriotic and as true to duty, and their conception of their duty to their States and to themselves, as any man who ever wore the blue. No honest man, no brave man, no decent man disputes that. The war ended; the South was whipped or crushed. We were never whipped, but we wore ourselves out whipping you. [Laughter.]

The claim on the part of the North was, "Restore the Union; give us the Union;" and Alexander Stephens was told by Abraham Lincoln at the Hampton Roads conference to take a blank sheet of paper and write, "Save the Union;" and President Lincoln said, "Aleck, you fill out the balance, and I will agree to it."

The Union was restored; the Union was saved. Every Southern soldier knew when he surrendered at Appomattox and Salisbury that we would be a nation thenceforth. Every man, woman, and child in the South knew that slavery no longer existed. We had gone into that fight, we had cast our all into the balance and lost; but was there ever a hint of a purpose or of an intention that with the cessation of the war, with the restoration of the Union and the destruction of slavery, we would be called upon to submit to the rule and control of our former slaves? Never.

If you had dared at Appomattox or anywhere else to disclose your purpose—I do not know that it was anybody's purpose then—but if it had ever entered into the minds of the Southern soldiers that it was not only to restore the Union and destroy slavery and then put the ex-slaves in charge of the State governments and make them control our affairs, I tell you here there would have been a guerrilla warfare inaugurated throughout the swamps, the woodlands, and the mountains of the South that would have made it impossible that you should have won in the long run. The history of the struggle in South Africa, the history of Marion and Sumter in the Revolutionary strife, will bear out the observation which I make, that with the cessation of the war in 1865 the reason guerrilla warfare was never entered upon was because we believed you were true and honest in what you said, that you only wished to restore the Union and to destroy slavery.

But with the reconstruction period which followed—I am not going to talk about it at length; but when I think of it bitterness surges up; it comes up in such a volume of animosity and recollection of the degradation to which my people were subjected from 1868 to 1876 under the horde of carpetbaggers and thieves and scoundrels and ignorant negroes that I hardly know how to contain myself—but it suffices for me to say for the purposes I have in view right now that after we had seen our ex-slaves—poor, ignorant creatures—given the ballot—after we had seen the election held under the bayonet and with a numerical majority of 30,000 negroes inducted into the control of the State of South Carolina, and there being to-day 235,000 more negroes in my State than there are whites, and 300,000 more negroes in Mississippi than there are whites—you declared that a man 21 years of age, without regard to any other qualification, was fit to vote, and that the right to vote carried with it the right to govern where they were in the majority.

I could go back, and I have done so during the debate with my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], some two or three years ago, in which I came out boldly and, like a brave and true man, told you when we found we could not overcome this numerical majority by any fair and lawful means, that we simply asserted our manhood as Anglo-Saxons, and asserted it by whatever means we thought necessary, and we took possession of our State and defied you to protest against it or prevent it.

Grant had sent a regiment of ten companies of Union troops into my own county of Edgefield; sent there to repress the "rebels;" sent there to subject us to the government of those negroes and their carpetbag leaders. They were ordered to preserve order, to prevent us from terrorizing the negroes, to keep them from being kept from the polls, and to let them vote. They obeyed their orders as well as they could, but the result of the election was that, with a numerical majority of 2,000 more negroes who were 21 years of age, and who, under the dispensation of my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], were entitled to vote, and ought to be allowed to vote now—with ten companies of troops and 10,000,000 more back here to go down there if it was thought they were needed to keep us down, how did they come out in the struggle against white manhood and white brains? We only beat them 3,900 votes. [Laughter.] But we could have beaten them 6,900, or 9,900, or 99,000 if it had been necessary.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, I am amazed at their moderation—only 3,900!

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, that was all we needed. We only wanted enough to reestablish decent, honest government and white supremacy, and we did it. Where is the man in this Chamber, or out of it, who will say we did not do right? If there be one, let him hold up his hand and dare get up here and say so. We had to preserve our civilization, our homes, our lives, our wives, our children. Our everything was at stake, and we asserted our rights to live on the earth and to inhabit the land we had won from the Indian before the Revolution, and we had helped to win the Revolution itself. You could not help it then, and you can not help it now.

What is your attitude now? Do we any longer hear anything in behalf of the colored man in the South? You have got to whining around now and saying, "Oh, well, those people ought to have a free ballot and a fair count because the Constitution gives them the right, but we do not see how we are going to accomplish it; and, therefore, we reckon we will have to take your representation away." That would mean in good time the negroes would be turned over to our tender mercies.

Ah, it is so easy to sit off and not be brought face to face with a condition and theorize and sentimentalize about it; it is so easy to lay down a rule of conduct for some other white men in dealing with this question here at home, which you would not follow under the conditions which we have to face; it is so easy to say, before you undertake to establish a policy in the Philippines, "You had better clean before your own doors and give to the colored people of the South the right which the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments guaranteed to them."

I do not want to get into this race question too much; but what I want to ask you is, What has become of your love for the colored people? Where is your consistency about your "fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man" doctrine of forty years ago and of thirty years ago and of twenty years ago?

It is only about ten years, or something like that, when the force bill was endeavored to be passed through this body. It was passed through the other end of Congress and came in here and was only defeated by two or three votes. The purpose of that bill was to forever put the Southern whites under the heels of the negro majority, protected by national legislation and an army, if need be.

In dealing with Porto Rico, in order that a man should vote you required him to be able to read and write, and in dealing with Hawaii, what did you demand? That a man should be able to read and write before he could vote. Now, in the Philippines you want to emulate us of the South; you want to show your hands in dealing with those yellow people or negroes. You want to try your hands to see if you can not eclipse us. We have not had any water cures in the South on the negroes, but one Senator said the other day something about the sand cure. I say, from my knowledge of the situation, that when we get ready to put a negro's head in the sand, we put his body there, too. There is no need for any of this kind of cruelty, and we do not indulge in it. We are simply doing what you forced us to do to preserve our civilization and maintain that control of our affairs which is necessary to decent government and a government under which we can afford to live. You have veered clear around; you have boxed the compass and gone to the other side of it, and you deal with the colored races of the Orient differently from what you deal with them here.

You say that the negroes in the South are fit to govern themselves and fit to govern us if they have a majority, and yet you say the Filipinos are absolutely unfit to participate in government or have anything to do with it; they have got to be educated, and by what? By a military despotism such as you claim that Aguinaldo had established and would have maintained if we had recognized the Filipino people and left them to govern themselves in their own way and had kept out of the miserable mess of indulging in pseudo philanthropy, hypocrisy, infamy, and everything that degrades and disgraces the American people.

I want to call attention before I leave this matter to one fact, and that is that the Northern soldiers who marched South in 1861 believed they were doing their duty by their country; they believed that the slavery of the African was wrong, and they were ready to risk their lives in the issue that he should be emancipated and that the Union should be restored; but the Union soldier of that day and time, fighting the war which had come up, I might say, as an inheritance from our fathers, fighting because there had been a difference of opinion as to the construction of the Constitution, which could only be settled by war—that Union soldier would to-day scorn and spurn the doctrine of commercial expansion which makes you turn the flag into an emblem of tyranny and subjugation after having bought these people, against their protest, and after they had gone to war with Spain for their liberties before we went to war with Spain to release Cuba from its thraldom—those old people of both sides who fought the civil war were a better type of men than we are. Poverty has demoralized the South, and wealth has made you of the North rotten.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to ask if there is anything personal about the Senator's proposition? [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. "You" is a collective term, meant to embrace every man who approves of this infamous policy in the Philippines. [Laughter.]

But the point to which I wish to direct your attention is, that while the institution of slavery—thank God, I say, it is gone, because it enslaved the whites more than the blacks, and I would not restore it if I could do so simply to the extent of signing my name—but with the sentiment which prevailed all through the North in regard to this matter through the reading of Harriet Beecher Stowe's novel of Uncle Tom's Cabin and the oratory of Wendell Phillips and other abolitionists, you were all taught and educated to believe that the institution of slavery was one which involved a great deal of cruelty and fiendishness and crimes which are unspeakable.

I look back to my childhood on a slave plantation where there were a hundred slaves, and I remember nothing of that. There was an occasional whipping of some one because of laziness or some disobedience, but I recall nothing but kindness in the main, and an effort to give them good clothes, plenty of food, and to take care of them in sickness, and all that kind of thing.

But to prove, if proof be necessary, that your complaint of what was termed "slavery" was erroneous, I want to call your attention to one fact, which stands out like the Washington Monument upon the Mall, and that is, if it had been left to the ingenuity of Machiavelli and the devil in combination to set up and provide a condition which would enable the most horrible retributions and the most fearful revenge—with the absence of every man in the South from 16 to 60 years of age with Lee and Jackson, with the plantations left in the care of negro men, and the daughters and the wives and other loved ones of those absent Confederate soldiers perfectly helpless and at the mercy of 4,000,000 blacks, 1,000,000 of them men—there is not an instance on record of a solitary negro man having ever been guilty of a deed that in the least could be construed into any criminal purpose or act. There is not a rape, there is not a murder, there is nothing to reflect upon the condition of friendliness and of the love which existed between the master and the slaves which he held.

Now, with your new-fangled doctrine of the equality of man, not Jefferson's doctrine, because Jefferson was a slaveholder when he wrote the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution provided for slavery and protected it, but your new-fangled ideas as to the equality of man and the reconstruction acts, and your organization of the negroes by the Union League, by which every negro man swore on the Bible to vote the Republican ticket for the balance of his life because he had been freed from bondage by that party; with the inauguration of Republican government, so called, carpetbag government, and negro government in the States; with the indoctrination of the minds of those people—those poor Africans—with the idea that they were as good as the white people, or a little better, and that their former masters owed them something for their unrequited services through long years of servitude; with the impregnation of their minds and hearts with this feeling that the Southern whites had been cruel to them, had wronged them, and had dealt with them unjustly; that they were equal with the whites; that they were now in control; that they had every right that a white man had, and that they were being backed by a majority of the people of the country—by the United States Government and the United States Army, if necessary—what has grown out of this? What has come from your Pandora's box which you opened in 1868, with your reconstruction devilment and your doctrine that the negroes are as good as the white people?

There is not a day that we do not hear of some horrible crime being committed by one of these poor wretches; there is not a day that we do not read of white people who become enraged and lose their sense of civilization and everything else, and seizing him and doing him to death in a brutal and fiendish manner without trial or anything else. Why, even bleeding Kansas has her story of rape and a negro burned for it. I have known of two rapes, followed by murders, within the sight of the Dome of this Capitol since I have been here—white girls, somewhere in the suburbs of this city, robbed of that jewel which is the most precious possession of a woman's life, and then butchered to hide the crime. Throughout the South there is to-day an unnamed horror hanging over every household whose loved ones are left in isolation or segregation on the various farms and obliged to be there. No father leaves his home without the dread that when he returns he may find something horrible to meet him.

We have in the United States a problem which will give you scope for all the philanthropy and all the humanity and all the Christianity and all the elevating, humanizing, Christianizing forces of which you are capable, and yet you turn your backs on that and march to the East and seize ruthlessly and by torture and by infamies, villainies, and cruelties the habitations of the poor Filipinos. And you murder, you butcher, you shoot them in blood, you torture them, you do everything. You have eclipsed the South in your story of infamy under the United States flag in the Philippines. If you make up a catalogue we will not be able to equal it, although we are not trying, the Lord knows, in a century, and you have done it all in three years, and you have done it in the name of Christianity and humanity and liberty.

Well, I do not know what to do about it. I do not know what to tell you to do about it. I see no end to it. I can see only one thing—and in that you are obliged to sympathize with us—that, come what may, the Southern white men intend to govern their own country. We will not submit to negro domination under any conditions that you may prescribe. Now you have got it. The sooner you understand it fully and thoroughly, the better off this country will be.

You say we are hypocrites because we protest against your policy in the Philippines. It is because we realize that the body politic in the United States already has coursing in its veins the blood of 9,000,000 black people, and that is poison enough. We protest because we do not believe (as Southern Confederates we could not believe) that it is right to go into a country and desolate it with fire and war under a claim of sovereignty. I can see some justification for the war of 1865 to maintain the Union. I am catholic enough to grant that you did what you thought you ought to do, and if you will grant us that we did what we thought we ought to do to defend our homes, to resist invasion, to repel from our borders those who came there to take from us the rights of freemen, that is all I ask.

We are in the Union. We are not dissatisfied with our condition, although every day we see discrimination upon discrimination here, and realize that we are a conquered people, and that your purpose is to continue to treat us as such, and to squeeze from us every dollar you can get. We have paid, since the close of the civil strife, in pension burdens and in the payment of the public debt and interest at least two and a half billion dollars tribute, which has gone among you and has been spent to beautify and to broaden out and to lay deep the foundations of your prosperity.

Mr. CLAPP. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAPP. Have you ever figured out how much the South has received since the war in river and harbor appropriations?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; but it will not amount to a postage stamp compared to what the South has paid in pensions.

Mr. CLAPP. Figure it up.

Mr. TILLMAN. You had better figure it up. I make an assertion. Disprove it if you can. I defy you to do it.

But I must not impose upon the good nature and courtesy of my friend the Senator from Kansas. If Senators on the other side care to resume this discussion at some future day, on some bill where it will be germane; if they will content themselves now with defending the Philippine policy without undertaking to dress it off with a gloss of patriotism because Sherman did some devilment in 1864; if they will endeavor to show that their policy is for the best interests of the people, and if a majority say so, I will submit, but do not charge me with hypocrisy when I can see the hypocrite oozing out of you all over.

But do not let us discuss these questions. We want you to vindicate before the people your policy toward the Philippines, to exonerate the American Army from the stigma now resting upon it, and we propose to hold you to the issue. We will discuss the South; we will discuss the negro; we will discuss carpetbag government; we will discuss anything you want if you will bring in a bill affecting those questions, but we are not going to run off after foxes just now. We are after this Filipino coon, and we want his hide.

Now, I may some time marshal the evidence more fully, though I do not want to do it. I think that if Congress had the authority, sustained by the Supreme Court, to pass an act forbidding any member of either body ever injecting into debate any discussion of the civil war or the revival of any of those bitter feelings of the past, it would be a blessing to our country. We of the South are the sufferers. We are the men who were wronged, as I believe. You think you were justified. We are ready to let you think so. But to bring into a debate, on an entirely different proposition, as a vindication for the infamies being perpetrated over there, the fact that something of the kind was done forty years ago by white Americans against white Americans does not make it right. It is not patriotic. Two wrongs do not make a right anywhere, and you can not justify wrongdoing in the Philippines now upon the general proposition that "war is hell."

This is not war. It is slaughter. There has been no war in the Philippines since the first three or four months after Aguinaldo's army was dispersed and his capital taken. It has simply been a guerrilla warfare, oozing out from the people themselves. It has been simply an irresistible impulse on the part of those people. You expect to change human nature. You expect to alter the currents of the human heart. You expect to have these people, in servile and abject slavery, crawl around between the legs of your autocratic Commission or your military officers and submit absolutely, when you do not tell them what you propose to do finally. We have asked you to declare your ultimate purpose, to say whether or not these people may ever expect to have that modicum of self-government to which they are entitled and which your profession as the Republican party would make you hasten to give them if you had not changed and lost all recollection of the glorious past of the Republican party.

But the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], aiding the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] on a matter of history, to which I refer with sorrow, undertook to show that Columbia burned itself practically, or words to that effect; that it was an accident. I have only one witness present. As I said, I may bring others. I know this. After Sherman's army crossed the Savannah River into South Carolina from the column there marched on either side for 15 or 20 miles foraging parties or scouts, and there was very little left, after the army had passed, except the wells and the chimneys. They did not burn themselves. That was not accidental. I know that there are living in Columbia to-day scores of people who saw Union soldiers running from house to house applying the torch, and who will swear to it. It does me no good to bring this up, but I will produce this one witness. I have in my hand the Memoirs of Gen. William T. Sherman, written by himself, and from page 287 of volume 2 I read this:

> Many of the people thought that this fire was deliberately planned and executed. This is not true. It was accidental, and, in my judgment, began with the cotton which General Hampton's men had set fire to on leaving the city (whether by his orders or not is not material), which fire was partially subdued early in the day by our men; but, when night came, the high wind fanned it again into full blaze, carried it against the frame houses, which caught like tinder, and soon spread beyond our control.

Now, the city of Columbia is a city of homes. It was at that time a city of homes. In recent years manufacturing industries have sprung up in the suburbs. But the city as then constituted had wide streets. The houses had yards around them from a quarter to a half acre in extent; some of them an acre; and no wind that could rise in February, when the roofs were wet, could have spread this fire. Circumstantial evidence would refute the assertion. There was some correspondence and charges immediately afterwards in regard to how the fire originated, and General Sherman charged General Hampton with having burned it. Of course Hampton would not be expected to have burned the property of his own family, of his own kindred and friends in the neighborhood. But what does General Sherman himself say:

In my official report of this conflagration—

The document, which doubtless the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has near by, because he always has some ammunition ready; if not he, some other—

In my official report of this conflagration, I distinctly charged it to Gen. Wade Hampton, and confess I did so pointedly, to shake the faith of his people in him, for he was, in my opinion, a braggart, and professed to be the special champion of South Carolina.

Here you have the Lieutenant-General of the Army; a man whose memory you revere very highly, and to whom you are going to erect a monument; a man whose services in suppressing the rebellion, if you choose to call it such, every man acknowledges; whose military genius no one can dispute. And what does this paragon say? He confesses, over his own signature, that he had deliberately falsified the record and charged Hampton with doing it. Why? The war was over then and everybody knew it. It had frazzled out to a few dying leaps of the flames, and it disappeared in darkness, so far as the South was concerned, two months later, in April, when they marched through the center of the Confederacy, cutting it in two, and then marched up to Richmond. That was as evidently the end of the struggle as anything could be. Yet he deliberately undertook to smirch the record and fame of the opposing commander and to say he did it. Still men get up here and talk about the burning of Columbia—that it was done by accident or by Hampton.

Mr. President, it is better that we leave these old things alone. There is nothing to be gained by rehearsing them. We can revive, if it is the wish of the people on the other side, the dying embers of that struggle or the almost dead embers, because there is very little left but ashes. I know of no man in the South, except here and there an old unreconstructed rebel, you may term him, who bears any grudge. We are all one people. Our destinies are the same. All that the Southern people demand of you is to maintain the integrity of our institutions and to keep the flag untarnished by any star, pinned to it by a bayonet, which is not an equal star.

We abhor your scheme of subjugation of the Philippines. We abhor your hypocrisy in dealing with a colored race who alone must inhabit that archipelago, because nobody knows better than you do that there is no opportunity for any immigrant; that the conditions are inimical, and that our tenure there is only for the purpose of exploitation, the furnishing of a field for the investment of capital, the possible expansion of commerce by selling to those people, the use of Manila as a depot in the archipelago. We could have got that without spending one dollar. We could have had all we wanted in the way of commercial treaties with those people. We could have had their gratitude and love for all future ages. We could have warned off trespassers and spread the Monroe doctrine to the Pacific, as far as those islands are concerned, by saying to the world, "Hands off! These people have fallen to us as wards in chancery by reason of the war with Spain, and we propose to treat the Filipinos the same as we do the Cubans." But the inordinate greed of some, the desire of some men to get ungodly and indecent wealth, is at the bottom of this bill.

You had a tariff law here some time ago, urged and stressed and pushed with might and main through this Chamber under the plea of necessity when everybody knew there was no such necessity. There is no necessity now for this government bill which you are pushing here. It is simply for the purpose of obtaining what was denied by the amendment which we passed in the last hours of the last session forbidding the sale of public lands or the use of timber or the sale of mines.

The game here is simply to open the islands to the exploitation of those who are on the ground floor and have already mapped out their mines or their forests or their other holdings, which they will speedily obtain through this instrumentality as soon as you shall have passed the bill. And yet you stand here and you endeavor to bamboozle the American people into the belief that your purposes are holy and pure, and you sneer at us in the South because we say to you we have at home Filipinos, as my friend, the Senator from Maryland, calls them. Yes; we have Filipinos, and they are a lower type of men than your Filipinos.

You have entered upon the downward road which will lead this Republic to degradation and ruin. You have begun to educate our people in the use of the Army in governing other people, and you whine about the Southern people and their hypocrisy in dealing with the negroes and taunt us with the demand that we shall take care of our Filipinos before we interfere in your game of water torture, and of murder, and of other deviltries in the Philippine Islands. We are not going to do it.

We inherited the negroes. The present generation of white people in the South had nothing to do with their presence there. They did not have much to do with the war, in fact. Your fathers, you New Englanders—and all of you are New Englanders in one sense—imported these slaves and sold them to us, and then your consciences worried you until you freed them. You used to pray at nights over our infamies and wrongs to the poor black men. Let us quit this deviltry. Help us in the South to get rid of the incubus of negro domination hanging over us like the sword of Damocles. Let us colonize them. Let us do anything you please that will get them away and out from among us. They threaten our civilization.

They teach us inhuman acts when they themselves do inhuman acts. Lynch law will last as long as water runs down hill, if they continue to rape our wives and daughters, and you can not help it. I protest and I beg you to let this question drop with respect to the matter of comparison between the South and the North, because the odium is on you. You have gone out into the Pacific and bought these people against their protest. We of the South have the colored people among us because God Almighty placed them there before we were born.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have never heard a speech like that just delivered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. No; and you will never hear another one.

Mr. BURTON. I have heard of them. When I was a little child my father used to tell me about speeches of that kind, but I supposed we had passed away from that period.

I have been surprised at the seeming feeling exhibited by certain Senators upon the other side in the course of this debate. It is explained now somewhat. Evil to him who evil thinks. In other words, there is a plain, homely phrase that every man judges others by himself. The man who can stand in the United States Senate and defend slavery and boast of having established and maintained government by the shotgun, and even boast of committing murder, such a man, of course, is liable to misconstrue the benevolent purposes of Senators who are trying to carry the blessings of civilization to the Philippine Archipelago.

I observed one thing, however, while the Senator from South Carolina was talking, and I was right glad indeed to draw, I think, a proper inference from it, and that was that the audience he had was on this side and not on the other. It is a compliment to the wisdom and sagacity of Senators on the other side that they did not want to hear a speech of that kind.

Mr. President, is it not astonishing that a Senator in one breath can appeal to us to maintain the purity of the Government, to keep the flag unsullied, and in the next breath can boast of committing crimes against the Government too hideous to describe?

Mr. President, the pending bill proposes a further step toward the establishment of civil government in the Philippine Islands. It follows the line of policy that the Administration is pursuing and that President McKinley inaugurated, namely, the establishment of civil government for that of the military, and to give to the inhabitants of those islands local self-government just as fast as they are capable of exercising it. How long it will take to bring these people and the future inhabitants of that territory to the high plane of capable citizenship I can not tell, but so long as the Republican party directs the affairs of this Government the effort in that direction will be continuous and never ceasing until it is demonstrated that there is no hope of accomplishing this great work. The task may be an impossible one. We may fail, but if we do, it will be the first time that this country has ever failed in its onward progress in the path of civilization.

Whether we will permanently retain the islands or not is a question not for the present, but for the future.

The position of the opposition is that we should furl our flag, withdraw our troops, and turn over the Philippine Islands to the Filipino. They say it might be well to remain long enough to help the people establish some form of government, whatever form they might choose, but in the meantime it is our duty now to declare our policy to be that we intend so soon as such government is established to withdraw from the islands.

Notwithstanding the bill is for the purposes stated, its discussion so far, by the opposition, has related almost entirely to the operations of our Army in the islands. The demand on the part of the opposition that we pull down our flag and withdraw from the islands causes Senators quite naturally to sympathize with the insurgents.

In a discussion on the Philippine tariff bill a few weeks ago the senior Senator from Ohio propounded the question to the senior Senator from South Carolina as to which side he was on in the contest between our Army and the insurgents, and that Senator, with his characteristic candor, answered emphatically, "I am on the side of the Filipino."

That states the real issue between the contending parties on this floor. We are standing for the American soldier. You are for the insurgents.

In saying this it will not be understood that I am attacking the integrity or the patriotism of Senators. I concede to the opposition the same quality of patriotism and integrity that I claim for myself. But the real situation must not be misunderstood. We contend that our Army, in putting down insurrection in the Philippine Islands, is doing right. Senators on that side of the Chamber contend that it is doing wrong.

I have listened to attacks against our Army, our officers, and men, charging that we are carrying on a war of barbarism and cruelties unsurpassed in the history of the world. Generals Otis, MacArthur, Wheaton, Chaffee, Funston, and others have been assailed upon this floor, time and again, in most vituperative and intemperate language. Up to this hour I can not recall having heard a kind word dropped from the lips of any opposition Senator in favor of our soldiers who have been fighting in the Orient. All the cruelties and barbarism perpetrated by that semicivilized people on our soldiers has not been mentioned, but every act of retaliation or apparent brutality that has been charged or performed by any of our soldiers has been heralded to the world.

All the complaints have been against our soldiers, and no criticism whatever toward the insurgents for their many inhuman and indescribable brutalities.

The Senator from South Carolina a few moments ago read a letter from Concordia, Kans., which he would not have given to the public if he had spoken to my colleague. That is the kind and source of very much of the evidence you are seeking to use against our soldiers.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The name was signed to the communication, thereby giving evidence of sincerity, and my only purpose was to furnish the name of a returned soldier who would appear as a witness, I presume, if summoned. That was all.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; I understand the purpose of the Senator from South Carolina. It was for the same purpose that he told about a carload of maniac soldiers. He can go to his own insane asylum in South Carolina and find far more than a carload of insane people, if they should happen to be on cars. No one can hear insanity described without having a feeling of horror. There are insane people all over the country. If the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. If I had not received a letter from an old Union soldier calling attention to the fact that his own boy was among this list of unfortunates and asking me to exert myself to stop this horrid war, I would not have dragged it in here.

Mr. BURTON. Are you through?

Mr. TILLMAN. For the present.

Mr. BURTON. The purpose of the Senator from South Carolina was very apparent, I think, and he is certainly not prepared to deny it. It was for the purpose of giving color to the charges that not only the officers and men there, but, in the language of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], that Senators upon this side of the Chamber, the President, and the Secretary of War have inaugrated a policy of brutality and cruelty that is unsurpassed in the history of the world; and in order that the Senator may furnish something like a tangible piece of evidence to support this vagary he read letters from some persons nobody knows anything at all about. As it happens, I know one of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has got to the point exactly; the origin of the Filipino rebellion—if you choose, the insurrection over there. The infamy rests upon the head of the Senators who ratified the treaty.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am afraid the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will draw the rule on me that was incorporated here the other day, that I must not reflect upon Senators, but as he and I are about together on that proposition it may be that he will let me slide by this once.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that he withdraw his reflection as to Senators, and let his remarks apply to Mr. Bryan alone.

Mr. BURTON. As I said before, evil to him who evil thinks. A man who does not think well himself does not believe that anybody else can. A man who is not inspired by good motives certainly does not expect good motives from other people.

If I may be permitted to make a few quotations from the speech made by the Senator from Utah, I think it will fully explain the attitude of opposition Senators toward the insurgents and toward our soldiers.

After charging, as he does, that the war was wantonly begun by the American troops, he says:

> Mr. President, there are facts which cry out for utterance. There are things which demand revelation. Across the water there are more than 10,000,000 of suffering people silent and unheard, but whose souls doubtless cry out against wrongs, cruel, unspeakable, beyond the ken of mortal language to describe.

Here, then, is a champion of the insurgents upon the floor of the Senate. I quote further:

> We know now, although it has been repeatedly, time and time and time again, officially denied by the Secretary of War, that this war has embraced features of barbarism and cruelty and torture equal to any in the history of the most barbarous peoples in the blackest ages.

Continuing further the Senator says:

> Mr. President, the war was begun in the manner which I have pointed out. Those who came in conflict with the American troops were slaughtered. It finally developed that no wounded were left upon the field. I say no wounded because the official reports of the wounded among the Filipinos do not disclose any wounded to speak of. Whether the marksmanship of the American troops was so unerring that in every instance they struck the fatal spot—a theory which was propounded in the testimony of General MacArthur—I must leave the Senate or those interested in this question to determine.

The foregoing is a charge, if not direct, by innuendo at least, that General MacArthur and other officers in command have raised the black flag in their efforts to put down insurrection, and that the order of "no quarter" has been given by our officers, and obeyed by our soldiers.

I will give another quotation:

> First the war was waged against men in arms, and they were slaughtered. Next it became stiffer by waging it against men and women and little children.

Note the language:

> Next it became stiffer by the burning of villages and, irrespective of age, sex, or condition, sweeping the land of every vestige of shelter and of food. Next it became still stiffer, following precedents of the Dark Ages, when tyrants resorted to excruciating torture to compel information and inflict punishment against people struggling to be free; tortures devised under the supervision of a Torquemada and the Inquisition; tortures employed by a Philip the Second in the Netherlands; the water torture and other hideous tortures so infamous that modern language fails to furnish terms in which to adequately and properly characterize them were applied to the racking of the nerves of a sensitive people, loving justice, music, and the higher arts of civilization.
> But the Secretary of War has denied this, and General Funston, coming back from the midst of its very universal practice, said: "It is an atrocious lie," and proceeded to describe it in a manner which showed his familiarity with the practice as it prevailed in his presence. These denials have been so impudent that it has really been astonishing that they could be made in the face of the overwhelming testimony of the universal and systematic practice of these brutalities everywhere where our soldiers penetrated in the Philippine Islands.

The foregoing presents the charge, among other things, that we are waging war against women and little children. I have not read all the evidence taken by the committee, but what I have read and from information given me by members of that committee I risk nothing in saying that not one single syllable of testimony has been presented that even tends to show that any child or woman has been intentionally shot by our soldiers.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. CULBERSON. Did I understand the Senator to say that not an instance can be presented in which a child has been shot?

Mr. BURTON. Intentionally, I said.

Mr. CULBERSON. Do you deny that the sentries have shot children in the Philippines?

Mr. BURTON. I do not understand the question.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not exactly understand the Senator when he lays special stress on the word "intentionally."

Mr. BURTON. I am surprised that a lawyer does not understand the meaning of the word "intentionally." A person may be accidentally shot or he may be shot in a town that is being stormed. I am talking about a case where the shooting was intentional.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator allow me to read three or four sentences from the report of a civil governor of a province on that subject?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What governor?

Mr. CULBERSON. Governor Ross.

The companies were assembled——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. From what page of the record is the Senator reading?

Mr. CULBERSON. I read from page 476 of the hearings before the Committee on the Philippines.

> The companies were assembled, guards, patrols, and outposts established, and, notwithstanding that it soon developed that the alarm was a false one and that the local authorities assured the military officers that no danger existed and that the police were perfectly able to guard the town, the troops closed the roads leading out of town and stopped and examined people in the streets, with orders to fire upon all who failed to comply with an order to halt. Between 6 and 7 o'clock in the afternoon a native child, a girl of 9 years of age, while passing along one of the public streets, was ordered to halt by a sentinel, and, failing to stop, was shot and killed. This unfortunate occurrence brought forth a protest from the municipal authorities and a request that the practice of halting civilians in the streets be discontinued. No attention was paid to the request, and while at Daet recently I renewed the same on behalf of the municipal authorities, to the commanding officer, who at first appeared to be indignant that the people should object to the practice, but finally gave a qualified promise to remedy the matter. However, up to the time of my departure from Daet, four or five days after our conversation, the order still remained in force. I consider it my duty to protest in the strongest terms against this useless, annoying, and dangerous practice, and request that steps be taken to secure orders to put an end to it.

I have read from the annual report of the provincial governor of Ambos Camarines, dated January 14, 1902, at page 476 of the record before the Philippine Committee. The report is signed by James Ross, governor of the province, and directed to the civil governor of the Philippine Islands, and submitted to that committee by Governor Taft.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, as I stated, I had not read all the testimony, but I was assured by members of the committee that in no instance had any child or woman been intentionally shot. I am not prepared to dispute the statement that has been given by the Senator from Texas, and if any member of the committee can throw any light upon it at this time I have no objection at all to be interrupted now, or I should be glad to hear more about it after I have concluded my remarks. Whether this child was shot accidentally or not, in the nighttime, or whether the purpose of the soldier was to shoot down a little girl, I do not know.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. PATTERSON. There was laid upon the desks of the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War which embraces general and other orders made by different commanders of different grades touching the war in the Philippines. I wish to read two short orders, and at the same time to state——

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not understand what the Senator says he wants to do.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to read two short orders.

Mr. BURTON. No; I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator wants to ask me a question, all right, but I am not going to allow the Senator to interject a speech in my speech.

Mr. PATTERSON. But I am not interjecting any speech. It is on the subject of killing women and children—orders issued by the American commanders in the Philippine Islands upon that subject.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator has spoken about four hundred times on this question already, and he can speak after I get through. I decline to yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. I simply wanted to give a few authoritative——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator wants to ask a question I will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then, the Senator does not want——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is out of order.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Kansas did not decline to yield, as I understood him. He said if I wanted to ask a question he would yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Colorado for a question?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For a question?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I will ask the Senator this question: Does he care about hearing from Federal officers in the Philippines accounts of the killing of women and children?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I suppose I care as much about that as the Senator from Colorado. I am inclined to think I am about as humane as he is. He ought not to assume to have all the virtue on that side.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is not the question, Mr. President. I want to see——

Mr. BURTON. I have answered it in my own way.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I will submit.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, there is this to be noted as throwing light upon the few lines of the report read from Governor Ross by my friend the Senator from Texas. The very first person who was complaining of the occurrences which the Senator read about and who was engaged in preventing a continuance of them was the American civil governor. The very first person who was engaged in restoring peace and order and good will in place of the conditions, a sample of which the Senator read about, was the American governor whom he quotes. Further, the Senator from Texas, as has been the case, I regret to say, before, but I had hoped it would not be again, has omitted to read in this same report a most illuminating and agreeable paragraph concerning the progress of schools, of education, the improvement in the financial conditions, and the entire improvement of the civil conditions of the province.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator want to ask a question? What does the Senator desire?

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Kansas allowed the Senator from Indiana to make a speech within his speech. I presumed that he would allow me an observation or so in answer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, Mr. President; the Senator from Texas is wrong. The Senator from Kansas invited any member of the committee who could throw any light upon it or make any explanation to do so, and the report being at hand and I having noted that the Senator from Texas read of the past condition and omitted to read about the present condition which this very governor is establishing, I thought it was what the Senator from Kansas requested.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, if the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield this time to the Senator from Texas and see what he wants.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Kansas is very kind, and I appreciate his courtesy. The Senator from Kansas challenged this side of the Chamber to show a single instance in which a child had been murdered in the Philippines, and I simply accepted that challenge and presented a case. The Senator from Indiana, not answering that proposition, suggested something about education. I suggest, in reply, that life probably is more important to those people than even education.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I did not issue any challenge to that side of the Chamber. On the contrary, I said that I had not read all of the evidence here, but I had been advised by members of the committee that no instance of that kind could be given.

Now, Mr. President, the other day the Senator from Utah, in answer to the Senator from Massachusetts, for the first time tried to make it appear that his attack had not been against our soldiers; but in practicing the barbarities charged they were only carrying out the policy of warfare directed, as he said, by the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators upon this floor.

In view of that remarkable statement I direct special attention to the closing sentence of the foregoing quotation, wherein he says that testimony, overwhelming testimony, of the universal and systematic practice of these brutalities are shown everywhere where our soldiers penetrated in the Philippine Islands. Not only our officers, mark you, but our soldiers—soldiers mean officers and men as well—not only are isolated cases of brutality and isolated orders that are claimed to be brutal referred to, but the charge is that it was a universal and systematic practice everywhere where our soldiers penetrated to enact these brutalities.

And now the charge is that that infamous policy has been directed by Senators upon this floor, and that men like Generals Otis, MacArthur, Lawton, Chaffee, and others—indeed all of our officers—do not hesitate to carry out this inhuman and barbarous policy. Notwithstanding these officers are men of honor, heroes of the civil war, each having given over forty years of life in devotion to the country, still they are willing, according to the statements of the Senator from Utah, to carry out the barbarous and inhuman policy of the Senators upon this side of the Chamber and of the Administration, and to practice the cruelties and barbarities referred to.

I will do the Senator from Utah the credit to believe that he made these unjust, cruel, and false statements in the heat of passion, and that upon mature deliberation he will be willing to retract them.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, I should like him to be more specific and state the language I did employ in that speech. I will also ask him to state what he means when he refers to false statements made by me. If he will point out any false statement by me, I shall be only too glad to correct it, but if he fails to point out any false statement by me it is due that the Senator should make the apology.

Mr. BURTON. When the Senator says that a policy, a barbarous policy, black as that inaugurated by Torquemada and Philip the Second of Spain, black as the blackest that can be found in all the ages, was inaugurated by Senators on this floor, by President Roosevelt, by the Secretary of War—in short, by the Administration—when he makes statements of that kind, and when he goes further to say that men like Otis and Chaffee and MacArthur and Funston and the other heroes who have been putting down the insurrection over there are perfectly willing to carry out a policy of that kind, what language does he expect me to use in characterizing statements of that kind?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAWLINS. When a Senator rises upon this floor to respond to a statement of another Senator or an argument which another Senator has made, it is due to that Senator as well as due to the general courtesies of the Senate to make a reasonably fair statement of what that Senator said. If the Senator will permit me to reiterate what I did say, it was this: That for the cruelties which have been practiced in the islands the Army in the main was not responsible, but the policy upon which this Government had entered was responsible. I stated that it seemed to be impossible to pacify those islands, in the opinion of our military commanders over there, without resorting to the most drastic and severe methods of a military campaign, including the employment of torture for the purpose of obtaining information, and that those cruelties, if so necessary, as deemed by the military commanders, were but the consequence of the policy of this Government in attempting to subjugate and reduce to submission an unwilling and alien people.

I submit to any fair mind whether that statement bears any resemblance to that which has been made by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I will give another quotation from the speech delivered by the Senator from Utah. I have quoted correctly a whole page from the Senator's remarks, and have made my comments thereon, I now quote him further:

> Oh, my God! that is the logic upon which Chaffee based the brutal orders and instructions which he issued to his subordinate commanders. Did Chaffee, alone, unaided, in coldness, and in brutality and in savage and unrelenting disregard of every humane sentiment or possibility of human suffering, conceive this iniquitous scheme? Whence, from what diabolical source, was it derived? The American people ought to know. Is there any penalty beneath the sun adequate to be meted out to the merciless wretch who has thus brought such dishonor upon the American name and the American people?

These, sir, are the Senator's exact words.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. RAWLINS. Now, the Senator has quoted me correctly, and for those words I stand responsible.

Mr. BURTON. And for my comments upon them I stand responsible. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. CARMACK. Ah!

Mr. BURTON. Notwithstanding the demonstration in the corner by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

Since the Senator's explanation, day before yesterday, in which he disclaimed any intention to charge General Chaffee with these barbarities, and said that he was a victim of the vicious policy under which General Chaffee had orders to act, the diabolical source referred to in the quotation must be Senators upon this floor, and especially the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He is the merciless wretch, doubtless, that was in the Senator's mind. On the head of that Senator especially would he inflict the punishment, providing, of course, any adequate punishment for his heinous offenses could be found.

I could give many more like quotations from the speech of the Senator from Utah, delivered the other day in the Senate, and also from speeches made by other Senators on that side of the Chamber; but these are enough to warrant the statement I have heretofore made, that in the contest that is going on there the Senators on that side are standing with the insurgents.

In perfect accord with this general attack against our soldiers was the unwarranted and malevolent attacks that have been made against General Funston. If the Senate will indulge me, I want to call attention to the record of this distinguished officer, for General Funston, as the world knows, is a Kansan, a Jayhawker, if you please, or, in the language of the Senator from Tennessee, who imagined that he was indulging in sarcasm, "that Jayhawker brigadier from the wind-swept plains of Kansas, the renowned and immortal Funston."

The Senator, I think, before pronouncing his satirical diatribe against General Funston ought to have remembered that a few days before the Senator spoke General Funston had been cautioned by his Commander in Chief not to indulge in criticisms against members of this body. The Senator, in what I suppose he thought was withering sarcasm, ridiculed the idea that Funston was a hero. Is it the Senator's idea of a hero that he would attack an adversary who is manacled?

Talk about your heroes! Talk about your lions! In olden times a hero—a miltary lion or a forensic lion—would meet an antagonist upon even ground and with like weapons. In modern times a real hero, a real lion, is he who can vanquish a doughty warrior who wields the sword with a pyrotechnic display of sarcastic speech. General Funston has met his first defeat upon this uneven plane. When his lips are sealed by an official order, when he has been barred from newspaper columns and from the public forum, a giant warrior with new weapons stalks into the arena and proceeds to do him up in one brief round. Funston is annihilated with rhetorical shot, and is riddled with dum-dum bullets of poisoned sarcasm and suggestive simile. Here are two specimens, picked up from the field after the fray:

> Funston is the lion of the Philippines, and because it is the nature of a lion to do that way, he shakes his tawny mane and swings his tufted tail 10 feet in the air while terror deep hushes the wilderness as his awful roar goes forth upon the trembling and affrighted breeze.

And again:

> In his efforts to bestride the world like a Colossus he has put a strain upon his military trousers with results too shocking for modesty to contemplate or parliamentary language to mention. [Laughter.]

It is terrible to annihilate a man with such ammunition. The language is so chaste. It is far more cruel than the water cure of the Filipinos or the sand cure of Carolinas. Funston ought not to kick after such an onslaught; it ought not only to silence General Funston forever, but to destroy the Republican party in Kansas and to stampede the entire soldier vote into the Democratic camp.

Again, had the Senator been intimately acquainted with the history of Kansas he would have left out the term "Jayhawker" from his list of sarcastic anathemas. "Jayhawker" has long since ceased to be a word of opprobrium. It has grown to be a word of honor. The Kansas Jayhawker was a man who loved liberty and hated slavery. He was a man of the highest intelligence and of Spartan virtue. Two civilizations grew up in this country, commencing, as they did, with the foundation of the Government, and each growing in opulence and power in its westward march of empire, the one developing on the South of Mason and Dixon's line and the other upon the North. The one was symbolized by the whiplash, the auction block, and the bloodhound, and was nourished by the toil of the slave; the other was the product of the church, the schoolhouse, and the home, and was stimulated by free labor.

In the old days we called the one the "Missouri Red Leg" and the other the "Kansas Jayhawker."

In the late fifties these two civilizations, each with the strength of a giant, faced each other in a struggle for the Territory of Kansas. One said "It shall be a slave State," the other said "It shall be free." The days of compromise had gone by. The time had come when the house divided against itself could stand no longer. The Kansas Jayhawker and the Missouri Redleg began the great civil conflict which ended only at Appomattox.

The soil of Kansas drank the blood of the Jayhawker in a struggle between liberty and slavery long before our flag was fired on at Sumter, and his blood dedicated our Territory to liberty long before Abraham Lincoln published his famous proclation. It is said that the blood of the martyr is the seed of the church, and well may it be said that the blood of the Jayhawker was the seed of the proudest, greatest, and best of all our States. For, without boasting, I may be permitted to say that the growth of Kansas in material and moral worth, taking into account her age, population, and opportunity, has no parallel in this country.

I will not stop to speak in detail of that marvelous growth. I will not stop to recount her industries in agriculture, manufacturing, mining, railway building, and in every field of human enterprise. Suffice it to say that, in proportion to her population, Kansas is now producing and growing more of all that ministers to man's necessities and pleasures than any State in the Union. And her moral standard is the highest of all. I will not stop to speak of her churches, her happy homes, her institutions of learning, and her schoolhouses upon a thousand hills; but to give a single evidence of her moral worth, it may be learned by inquiry at the home office of any great insurance company in this country that the moral risk on insurance is higher in Kansas than anywhere else in the country. No more accurate barometer for measuring the morals of a people can be found than this. Why, sir, it is her motto that Kansas leads, but never follows.

Although Kansas really begun the war, it was the first of all the States to blot out all feeling engendered by that awful struggle. It took the Spanish-American war to thoroughly unite our people as a whole; but although Kansas contains more Union soldiers in proportion to her population than any other State, she was the first to extend the cordial hand of friendship and brotherly love to the Confederate soldier. I have a witness to what I say. Ask my distinguished colleague [Mr. HARRIS], who is an honored member of this body and highly respected by all Kansans regardless of party, and who years before the Spanish-American war was elected to the highest office in the gift of the people of our State—ask him and he will tell you that his having been in the Confederate Army was no hindrance to his political advancement.

The Kansas Jayhawker and the Kansas soldier—for they are one and the same—is the bravest and most generous of men. If I might be permitted to step aside for a moment, I can tell the Senator from Tennessee that, although the young and gallant Funston took no part in the civil war, he sprang from the loins of one of the original Jayhawkers whose daring as a soldier, whose ability as a statesman, and whose high character as a man makes the heroic acts of General Funston an imitation of his most worthy sire.

The Senator unwittingly but surely paid General Funston a compliment when he dubbed him "a Kansas Jayhawker."

Mr. President, in order that a better knowledge may be had of General Funston before he became so famous, I want to read the following letter, which fully explains itself:

NEW YORK, October 5, 1898.

The PRESIDENT, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am informed that Col. Frederick Funston, of the Twentieth Kansas Volunteers, has been recommended for promotion to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers.

I have had considerable personal observation of Mr. Funston while he was in my department of the Atchison system, before he went to the Cuban war, and it gives me great pleasure to join in the recommendation in his favor.

I will add also that I am able to say that the appointment would undoubtedly be a very popular one in Colonel Funston's own State, Kansas.

Respectfully,

ALDACE F. WALKER.

The writer of the foregoing letter was at that time the chairman of the board of directors of the Santa Fe Railway Company.

Mr. President, I want to direct attention to certain parts of the remarks made by the Senator from Tennessee. He said, speaking of General Funston:

He is the most valiant captain that ever marshaled a dictionary in battle array.

Again he said:

Funston is a hero officially acknowledged and proclaimed, and with all the rights, privileges, and immunities that go with the title. There have been heroes, sir, who were modest and unassuming. There have been heroes who were something more than licensed swaggerers and braggarts. But Funston is not of these.

I think that is sufficient for us to get the Senator's idea of Funston as a hero.

I want to present some further evidence on this subject. Young Funston went to Cuba on the filibustering steamer Dauntless in 1896 and joined the army of Maximo Gomez. I want to stop just here to say that General Gomez, in talking with Mr. Henry Allen, of my State, the present chairman of the board of charities and formerly the private secretary of Governor Stanley (quoting the exact language of Gomez), said: "Funston is the bravest white man I ever saw." That is the first witness that I present as to whether or not Funston is a hero.

In August of that year he was made captain and placed in command of the two Hotchkiss breech-loading field pieces that constituted his artillery, and was in command of these during the eleven days' unsuccessful attempt to take the town of Cascorra, which was garrisoned by a force of Spanish regulars. After Gomez left the province of Puerto Principe and marched to the westward he was assigned to the command of Calixto Garcia and placed second in command of his artillery, the first in command being Major Osgood. Garcia attacked Guaimaro October 17, 1896, and the second day Major Osgood was killed, and Funston succeeded to the command of the artillery. On the fall of the town, ten days later, Funston was promoted to major and took part from that time in numerous engagements in eastern Cuba, the number of pieces in the artillery rising from two to ten. He commanded the artillery in the unsuccessful attack on Jiguani, where the Cubans were disastrously defeated, and also had charge of the guns at Victoria de las Tunas, which town, with its large Spanish garrison and great stores of military supplies, fell into the hands of the Cubans after fifty-one hours of desperate fighting.

In August, 1897, for his gallant services in this action, he was made a lieutenant-colonel. After three months more of hard fighting, and after being badly wounded, he received permission from Garcia to return to the United States.

On the breaking out of the Spanish-American war, four months later, he was commissioned by Governor Leedy, of Kansas, as colonel of the Twentieth Kansas Volunteer Infantry. The regiment remained for five months in a camp of instruction at San Francisco, and on October 27, 1898, sailed for the Philippines, where it arrived on November 30 of that year. In every engagement in which the regiment participated, up to the time of his promotion to be brigadier-general in the Volunteer Army, Funston was in command. In the official report of Gen. Lloyd Wheaton the following extract will be found regarding the engagement at the Bagbag River on April 25, 1899:

Soon after I moved the armored train to the front and advanced several companies of infantry from both regiments to seize all places near the river from which an effective fire might be directed upon the enemy's entrenchments. The converging fire of the two brigades of the division and the artillery now began to shake the enemy. Colonel Funston, Twentieth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, with Lieut. C. M. Warner, First Sergt. Raymond Enston, and Sergt. C. P. Barshfield, of the same regiment, endeavored to rush across the railroad bridge. A span of the bridge being broken, Colonel Funston, Lieutenant Ball, and Sergeants Enston and Birshfield swam the river and drove the enemy out of the entrenchments near the bridge.

By the way, here is the statement with regard to the swimming of the Bagbag River, not made by General Funston, but made by that old hero of the great civil war, Gen. Loyd Wheaton.

Several days later the entire division was heavily engaged at Calumpit, attempting to cross the Rio Grande, where the insurgents, more than 4,000 strong, under General Luna, was making a determined stand. I quote from the report of General Wheaton, the incidents mentioned taking place under his own eyes.

A reconnoissance at night by Colonel Funston made it apparent that the enemy was entrenched in force at all points for a considerable distance down the river. The morning of the 27th I had a 3.2-inch gun brought to the brick house near the bridge and opened fire at short range upon the enemy's works. Upon consultation with Colonel Funston a point about 900 yards below the railroad bridge was selected as the place that he would endeavor to cross a part of his regiment. The enemy's entrenchments opposite this point were well screened by bamboo thickets, but I directed a fire from the brick house near the bridge to be kept up from the 3.2-inch gun and by two companies of infantry. Colonel Funston also advanced to the river bank strong parties that kept up a fire of great volume. The effect of the heavy and continued fire was to drive a part of the enemy's force from his works, and Privates Edward White and W. B. Trembley, of Company B, Twentieth Kansas, swam the river with a rope and fastened it to a stake on the enemy's entrenchments while yet occupied. Rafts were pulled over by means of this rope, Colonel Funston going over on the first raft. Our artillery had during this time kept up a heavy fire from position selected by Maj. Richard Young. Under direction of Lieutenant-Colonel Wallace a heavy and continuous fire was directed upon the enemy near the railroad bridge, the machine guns also being directed toward the same place. When Colonel Funston had crossed 45 officers and men, he attacked the enemy, turning him out of his works near the bridge.

Further on the report says:

I respectfully invite attention to the gallant conduct of Col. Frederick Funston, now brigadier-general of volunteers, during these operations.

That is the testimony of Gen. Lloyd Wheaton as to whether or not Funston is entitled to be called a hero. It will be remembered that this was one of the most important and decisive battles of the war, in which this detachment of 45 men, aided by the fire of other troops on the south bank of the river, charged and drove more than 4,000 well-armed insurgents from the most formidable intrenchments constructed by the Filipinos during the entire war.

The following extract is taken from the dispatch of General MacArthur to General Lawton, April 28:

Many thanks, dear Lawton, for your cordial greetings, which are heartily justified by the actual facts. By the splendid daring of Funston—

Does the Senator note the language? "By the splendid daring of Funston," with his sword, not with a dictionary—

under the skillful control of Wheaton, we made a remarkable passage to the Rio Grande yesterday, with very small loss, but which, in connection with two previous days' work, in which they lost very heavily, so impressed the insurgents that General Luna to-day sent his chief of staff with the information that the Filipino government had ordered a suspension of hostilities and wished to negotiate for peace.

For this conduct at Calumpit Funston was recommended for the promotion to the grade of brigadier-general of volunteers by Generals Otis, MacArthur, and Wheaton, the following being a verbatim copy of General Otis's dispatch:

MANILA, May 1, 1899.

The anniversary of the day on which Dewey fought his famous battle.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, Washington:

MacArthur strongly recommends Colonel Funston appointment brigadier-general for signal skill and gallantry crossing the Rio Grande, and most gallant service since commencement of war. I urge appointment. Funston able as a leader of men, and has earned recognition.

OTIS.

General Otis is another witness that I present here over against the statement of the Senator from Tennessee.

Then, as is well known, the promotion of Funston to the grade of brigadier-general immediately followed, the notification being contained in the following dispatch:

WASHINGTON, May 2, 1899.

OTIS, Manila:

The President directs me to inform you that he takes much pleasure in recognizing the gallant services of Colonel Funston by naming him brigadier-general of volunteers, as requested by you and MacArthur. Have him accept by cable.

CORBIN.

I present this witness, our martyred President, who bears emphatic testimony that Funston was a gallant soldier. President McKinley, on the recommendation of Generals Otis, MacArthur, and Wheaton, awarded the medal of honor to General Funston for this operation in crossing the Rio Grande and driving the insurgent forces from their intrenchments.

From time immemorial, from the time that George Washington commanded the Army of the Revolution down to this hour, it has been the policy of every administration to only award medals of honor to heroes.

I read the following from General Wheaton:

Recommends Col. F. Funston, Twentieth Kansas Infantry, United States Volunteers, for medal of honor.

Here is what General MacArthur says about the above recommendation:

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION
EIGHTH ARMY CORPS,
San Fernando, P. I., July 22, 1899.

Respectfully forwarded to the adjutant-general, Department of the Pacific and Eighth Army Corps, approved.

General Wheaton was an eyewitness of the events referred to within, and they transpired close by and under my immediate command, although not within my range of vision. General Funston's actions were unusual, outside the line of duty, and entirely voluntary, and were undertaken and carried through at imminent risk. The success attending these efforts was of incalculable importance, and the remote consequences of permanent advantage to the United States. It seems to me that every prerequisite condition has been fulfilled in this instance and that a medal of honor should be issued to General Funston without delay.

The proper commanding officer has been advised to prepare papers for medals for the soldiers who were engaged with General Funston in opening the way for the passage of the Rio Grande.

ARTHUR MACARTHUR,
Major-General, United States Volunteers, Commanding.

That is the language of the brave—of a hero about a hero—and I put it over against the petty snarlings of the Senator from Tennessee.

The following are a few selections from telegrams of congratulation from among hundreds received by General Funston upon his promotion:

MALATE, May 5.

To Brigadier-General FUNSTON:

Heartiest congratulations. No man in the Eighth Corps better deserved the star.

CHARLES KING, Brigadier-General.

Here is another witness—a hero sending a congratulatory dispatch to a hero.

MANILA, May 4.

General FUNSTON:

You know how I appreciate your promotion. Shake, if your wounded hand will permit.

BARRY.

Here is the adjutant-general of the Eighth Army Corps saying, "Shake, if your wounded hand will permit." Well, whether Funston is a hero or not, he was where the bullets were flying. "Shake, if your wounded hand, will permit"—an eloquent witness to the heroism of Funston.

Here is another dispatch:

SANTO TOMAS, May 5.

Brigadier-General FUNSTON:

I congratulate you on your promotion to be brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, a promotion gained by distinguished services to your country upon the battlefield.

WHEATON, Brigadier-General.

Wheaton says the services were on the battlefield; that they were services to his country, and that the services were distinguished. The Senator says Funston is a blatherskite brigadier. The following letter is from Colonel Devol, at that time chief transportation quartermaster of the Eighth Army Corps:

Nothing since the beginning of the war has given me greater pleasure than the cablegram this morning announcing your appointment as brigadier-general. The appointment is a credit to the Army, and I am sure the entire Eighth Army Corps will rejoice with them that the Administration has in this case recognized true merit.

C. A. DEVOL.

These testimonials are from Regular Army officers, not from volunteers; but they were extended to a volunteer who had been in the Army but a short time.

Funston commanded the Twentieth Kansas in the engagement at Santo Tomas, where he was wounded, his left hand being badly shattered. To show the appreciation of General Funston by his superiors I desire to read the following telegrams:

MANILA, May 11, 1899.

General LAWTON:

Would you like Funston assigned to your command? He is available.

BARRY.

Here is the answer:

IN THE FIELD, May 12, 1899.

Assignment of General Funston will please me very much.

LAWTON, Major-General.

Lawton did not want anybody assigned to his command, especially as a brigadier-general, who had not proven himself to be a hero. Over against the withering sarcasm of the Senator from Tennessee, I put the dispatch of the dead Lawton. It will be remembered that Lawton, in pathetic language, said if he was to be shot, he might as well be shot by one of his own soldiers as by a Filipino bullet, which was instigated by intemperate remarks made here in the United States.

Here is another telegram:

MANILA, May 12, 1899.

General LAWTON:

General Funston very anxious to go, but doctor forbids, as his wound is still troublesome, and it might become serious on exposure in the field.

BARRY.

Funston returned to duty two weeks after being wounded, and commanded his brigade, consisting of the Twentieth Kansas and the First Montana, for several weeks with his left arm in a sling, and in that wounded condition commanded his brigade in the engagement of San Fernando on May 24 and June 16. In July of that year he was compelled to return to Manila, and submitted to a severe surgical operation. On September 3 he was ordered to return to the United States to be mustered out of the service, but President McKinley, apprised of his splendid military record, decided, after a short stay in the United States, to return him to the Philippine Islands, where he went in December, 1899. He was assigned to the Third Brigade, Second Division of the Eighth Army Corps. In addition to his duty as the brigade commander he was military governor of the entire province of Nueva Ecija. His district was the section for the next two years of almost unremitting guerrilla warfare, all the inhabitants being Tagalos, and led by some of the most energetic and capable leaders in the insurgent service. In addition to his administrative duties as brigade commander he did a great deal of scouting in the field with small detachments of men, and during the year 1900 rode or marched more than 6,000 miles by actual count, and participated in 20 engagements. The records of these engagements can easily be found by reference to the official report of General MacArthur for the year 1900. Among these engagements was one at Papaya on June 4, 1900, when the insurgent force under Lacuna was defeated with very heavy loss.

The following telegram was received from General Wheaton on that occasion:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN LUZON.

General FUNSTON:

The department commander thanks you and the officers and men of your command engaged in the combat with insurgents yesterday for gallant conduct and for destruction of the enemy. Your conduct and that of officers will be the subject of dispatch to the major-general commanding the division.

By command Brigadier-General Wheaton.

ALVORD, Adjutant-General.

And the following was received from General MacArthur, commanding the division:

Please express to General Funston the thanks and warm appreciation of the division commander for the action of his command at Payao yesterday. Request General Funston to communicate the views of the division commander to all concerned, and to state that such prompt and vigorous action in the field is highly appreciated by the division commander.

By command of General MacArthur.

BARBER, Adjutant-General.

The capture of Aguinaldo in March, 1901, is recent, and the facts are well known. In this connection I desire to read what General MacArthur said about it. Before I read that I wish to present the other side. I wish to read what the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] said about it:

Funston achieved his title of hero by a violation of the rules of honorable warfare, by an act for which Aguinaldo would have been hanged in ten minutes if he had attempted it on an American officer.

That is what the Senator from Tennessee said about General Funston's acts. I wish to read from the evidence of General MacArthur, taken before the Committee on the Philippines. I read from page 1890:

Senator PATTERSON. You know that General Funston caused a letter purporting to be written by General Lacuna and purporting to be signed by General Lacuna, which was simply a forgery, to be sent to Aguinaldo, and Aguinaldo accepted that as genuine. You know that, do you not?

General MACARTHUR. I know that. I might as well say here that Funston is not responsible in any way for the methods which obtained in the capture of Aguinaldo. I am the responsible man in that respect, in every way and particular.

Senator PATTERSON. I will come to that later.

General MACARTHUR. I know that the letter was written. It was one of the deceptions which are only practiced in war, and whatever responsibility attaches thereto I take.

Again, the next day General MacArthur was before the committee. I read from page 1932:

Senator CULBERSON. One question in connection with what I asked yesterday. You stated yesterday that you were responsible for the methods pursued in the capture of Aguinaldo.

General MACARTHUR. Yes, sir.

I wonder why the Senators were making inquiry about that, anyway.

Senator CULBERSON. I want to ask you if you assumed the responsibility at the time it was done without conference with authorities at Washington, or communication with the authorities at Washington?

General MACARTHUR. Absolutely. They knew nothing of it.
Senator CULBERSON. The authorities here knew nothing of it?
General MACARTHUR. Nothing of it. They had an indirect knowledge to this extent—

I want to lay particular emphasis on what follows—

Funston was under orders for the United States. I cabled the Department that I was going to keep him in the islands for the particular purpose of capturing Aguinaldo.

I wonder if MacArthur wanted a hero to catch Aguinaldo? Of all the soldiers at his command, of all the officers in the archipelago, MacArthur, a soldier of forty-odd years standing, with an honorable record, of great ability, who knows a hero when he sees him, cabled the Department that he wanted to keep General Funston in the Philippine Islands for the express purpose of doing what he did do—capturing Aguinaldo. Here is what MacArthur says about it. I will send it to the desk to be read in order to give me a little rest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

In consideration of important immediate results, and in the light of remote consequences likely to arise therefrom, the capture of General Aguinaldo may be regarded as the most momentous single event of the year. As a military transaction it was unique, isolated, and complete in itself, the details of which will be found carefully described in the accompanying report of General Funston. Aguinaldo was delivered at Malacanan March 28, 1901, and remained there until April 20, 1901, pending cable discussion with the Department in respect of questions of policy and expediency growing out of the capture, the practical importance of which can not be overestimated.

In the first instance it absolutely dispelled the growing tendency to idealize his personality and to surround him with mythical legends of invincibilty, which millions of natives believed to be true, and which they also believed would ultimately insure the success of the rebellion. With a people so sensitive, impulsive, generous, and imaginative as the Filipinos, the mechanics of sentiment, when well appreciated and rightly applied, afford many powerful instruments of military and political control. Aguinaldo was the incarnation of the insurrection, and as such his death as an incident of combat would simply have translated and magnified the legend, and thereby have placed an ever-ready weapon in the hands of agitators, capable of being utilized at any time, as might be deemed expedient, for purposes of conspiracy and revolt. Accordingly, his capture alive by legitimate military methods, or his voluntary surrender as a result of intellectual convictions, became a prominent feature of the military administration of the islands. The activities in this behalf were necessarily of a confidential nature, and as such were not apparent at the time; but, as a matter of fact, in pursuance of this policy efforts to bring about successful action in either direction were in constant process of development and execution.

In February, 1901, such precise information reached these headquarters in respect of the location of Aguinaldo's camp as to suggest the expediency of an effort to capture the same by a stroke of hand. The conditions were propitious, all resources, including cooperation of the Navy, were abundant and the probabilities seemed to favor the success of a well-organized expedition under a discreet leader. The report upon which this belief was based was transmitted by General Funston through General Wheaton, and the necessary continuity of action indicated that these distinguished officers should control all subsequent arrangements. General Funston was selected to command the expedition in person, and he was requested to confer with General Wheaton as to the details of a plan of action. All the responsibility as to the methods employed must fall upon these headquarters, as the plan, which was evolved by the two generals, was submitted to and approved by the division commander, who simply added thereto most emphatic injunctions to the effect that Aguinoldo must be taken alive and delivered safely into his hands at the palace of Malacanan. All the personal distinction which naturally attached to successful execution must go to General Funston, who on this, as on former occasions, displayed so much fortitude, determination, good judgment, self-confidence, and self-control as to justify the expectation that his future career in conducting operations on a larger scale will be attended with like successful results.

The consequences which have arisen from the capture of Aguinaldo have justified every expectation in the premises. All subsequent surrenders have been more or less influenced and expedited thereby, and many of the most important events of this character must be attributed entirely thereto, notably so the surrender of Tinio, which was made in such good faith and was so complete in every particular as to insure absolute pacification throughout the entire first district of the Department of Northern Luzon, which at the time presented the most troublesome and perplexing military problem in all Luzon.

Mr. BURTON. That statement shows what General MacArthur thought about the capture of Aguinaldo and its importance. If General Funston had done nothing else in his whole military career, the amount of bloodshed that he saved and the amount of treasure that he saved to the country by reason of the capture of Aguinaldo would entitle him not only to be called a hero, but would give him right to the honor that he has received from the President. I do not give my own estimation of that, but I call special attention to what General MacArthur says about it.

The strong recommendations of Generals MacArthur and Wheaton that he be made brigadier-general in the Regular Army was acted on favorably by President McKinley, who sent the following dispatch:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 30, 1901.

The President directs me to express his high appreciation of the gallant conduct of General Funston and officers and men engaged with him in the Palma expedition. Secretary of War personally joins in this expression.

CORBIN.

During the time he commanded the brigade he had captured over 1,500 serviceable rifles and tens of thousands rounds of ammunition in the year 1900. Alejandro, who commanded the insurgents all through central Luzon, surrendered to him, and a few days later Sandico gave up, and on May 19, after several conferences, Lacuna surrendered at San Isidro with more than 300 men armed with rifles, and his district was completely pacified. During his entire service as district commander there was not a town burned by his troops within the limits of his district, nor was there a single unarmed native shot.

In all the criticisms that have been hurled against our soldiers from the other side of the Chamber, and especially because of the severe criticism that was made by the Senator from Tennessee, it is strange that no Senator on the other side is willing to give General Funston credit for the fact that not a single unarmed native was shot and that not a town was burned in all his command.

Upon the surrender of Lacuna General Wheaton, the department commander, sent him the following dispatch:

General FUNSTON, San Isidro:

I congratulate you upon the surrender of the enemy's forces under Lacuna, thus ending all armed resistance to the authority of the United States within the limits of this department. This splendid result has been largely due to your personal daring and ceaseless energy in the field.

WHEATON, Major-General.

Upon the departure of General Grant for the United States, his command, now called the fourth district of Northern Luzon, was increased by consolidation with the fifth district, and on the departure of Colonel Thompson, commanding the sixth district, that was also consolidated with his command, until he had under him at one time more than 7,000 white troops and 2,000 native.

A severe attack of appendicitis made it necessary for him to enter the hospital at Manila, where he underwent a surgical operation, and, after three months in the hospital, he was ordered to the United States, where, after submitting to a second severe operation, he was assigned to the Department of the Colorado, where he is now in command.

During his service in the Philippines he participated in 38 engagements with the enemy, and in 22 of those was in command of the troops engaged.

Mr. President, I have presented my witnesses who testify that General Funston is a hero, and I think the case is well made out. I do not think it necessary to present anything further, and yet there is another witness whom I do not want to introduce because of the rule of law that an attorney is supposed to vouch for the credibility of a witness that he offers. But the Senator wants him; he will not believe the comrades of General Funston; he will believe this man; therefore I will let the Senator offer him. He, too, will testify that General Funston is a hero. His name is Emilio Aguinaldo.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator from Kansas seems to be somewhat exhausted by his speech. I trust it will be agreeable to him to suspend and resume to-morrow at the end of the morning business.

Mr. BURTON. It will not take me very long to get through to-morrow, and I would a little prefer to do so, if it is agreeable all around.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent that it may be so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration Senate bill 3864.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator yield to me for just a minute or two?

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator to let me first get the bill up.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Before the bill is taken up, I wish to put into the RECORD some figures in regard to something said by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS].

Mr. HOAR. The bill will take, I think, but two or three minutes; but if the Senator desires, of course I will yield to him.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. By the courtesy of the Senator from Massachusetts, I will state that I can not understand how the per cent of the vote in the State of Mississippi as compared with the population can have anything to do with the discussion of the bill that was being discussed by the Senator from Maryland when he referred to it this morning. I do not understand how it can throw any light at all on that question. But, inasmuch as he has seen fit to refer to the State of Mississippi and to the vote of that State, I will do again what I did some days ago when I put in the RECORD, in answer to an attack that was made upon the election system in Mississippi, the number of registered voters in the State of Mississippi in 1896. That is the last year for which I have the registered vote of the State.

Our constitution requires that there shall be an enrollment by the assessors of the State of all the male inhabitants between the ages of 21 and 60, and they constitute what are called the polls of the State. The polls, in 1898, numbered 273,297. That was two years after 1896. The registered vote for 1896 was 125,571. There is no process by which you can make men vote, but that is the number of persons registered at that time.

The population of the State, as shown by the census of 1890, was 1,284,887. There were in 1899 an average attendance at the public schools, exclusive of the separate school districts, of 86,060 whites and 94,843 colored, and including the separate schools there was an average attendance of 98,379 whites and an average attendance of 102,447 colored.

I can not state, because there is no record, the exact amount of taxes that are paid by the whites and by the colored, but the general estimate in the State is that about 95 per cent of the taxes are paid by whites and about 5 per cent by colored.

It will be seen that upon a general average there is a larger number of colored children attending the public schools, which are the free schools, of the State than of white children.

Here is the qualification for registration as a voter and for the exercise of the elective franchise provided in the constitution of Mississippi, a constitution adopted in 1890. This constitution has been on more than one occasion in the Supreme Court of the United States and it has been approved. Section 241 of the constitution reads thus:

Every male inhabitant of this State, except idiots, insane persons, and Indians not taxed, who is a citizen of the United States, 21 years old and upward, who has resided in this State two years, and one year in the election district, or in the incorporated city or town in which he offers to vote, and who is duly registered as provided in this article, and who has never been convicted of bribery, burglary, theft, arson, obtaining money or goods under false pretenses, perjury, forgery, embezzlement, or bigamy, and who has paid, on or before the 1st day of February of the year in which he shall offer to vote, all taxes which may have been legally required of him, and which he has had an opportunity of paying, according to law, for the two preceding years, and who shall produce to the officers holding the election satisfactory evidence that he has paid said taxes, is declared to be a qualified elector; but any minister of the gospel in charge of an organized church shall be entitled to vote after six months' residence in the election district, if otherwise qualified.

Mr. President, I do not propose to be led into a discussion of the question which was being discussed when the Senator from Maryland made reference to elections in Mississippi or the election law. It is, in my judgment, irrelevant to the bill. I think the time has passed for the waving of the bloody shirt. I think the time has passed when invidious reflections should be made upon any State in the Union. I think every State in the Union is entitled to a courteous, respectful reference when a reference is made to it by a Senator in this Chamber.

I again put this matter in the RECORD. I hope it will not be necessary for me to refer to it again, not only in the debate on this bill, but on any other bill that comes before the Senate.

I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his kindness in yielding to me the floor.

MILITARY ORDERS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant, certain information relative to the orders of Gen. J. F. Bell on the subject of reconcentration, etc., and also copies of orders issued by Gen. Jacob H. Smith to Major Waller, pleaded by the latter before the recent court-martial, etc.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the letter of transmittal may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent, unless some one especially desires to hear it read, that the letter be printed in the RECORD. It seems to be a very long document.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. And as a separate document.

Mr. FORAKER. And as a document.

Mr. LODGE. Let the letter be printed in the RECORD, and it and the accompanying papers be printed as a Senate document, and be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be printed in the RECORD, and it and the accompanying papers be printed as a separate document, and will be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 7, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to reply to the following resolution of the Senate, dated May 1, 1902:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following information:

"First. Whether the orders of Brig. Gen. J. F. Bell, dated Batangas, December 8 and 9, 1901, on the subject of reconcentration, addressed to all station commanders, have been officially received by the War Department, and, if so, when they were received, by whom they were forwarded, whether they were issued by authority of the major-general commanding in the Philippines or were approved by him, and whether they have been approved or acquiesced in by the War Department.

"Second. A copy of the order or orders issued by Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith to Maj. L. W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, pleaded by the latter in defense before the recent court-martial which tried him at Manila, if the same were in writing, or the date and substance thereof if they were verbally given. Also (a) whether said order or orders were authorized or have been approved by the major-general commanding in the Philippines and, if so, when they were so approved; (b) when said order or orders were received by the War Department, if they have been received, or when it was first known to the War Department that such order or orders were issued, and (c) whether said order or orders have been revoked or countermanded, and, if so, when and by whom, giving the terms of the order of revocation."

First: Two orders by Brig. Gen. J. F. Bell, dated Batangas, December 8 and 9, 1901, addressed to all station commanders, copies of which are annexed hereto, were received by the War Department on the 17th day of January, 1902, from Maj. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, commanding the Division of the Philippines. At the same time the following order by General Bell, dated December 13, 1901, was received at the War Department:

BATANGAS, P. I., December 13, 1901.

To all Station Commanders:

The United States Government, disregarding many provocations to do otherwise, has for three years exercised an extraordinary forbearance and patiently adhered to a magnanimous and benevolent policy toward the inhabitants of the territory garrisoned by this brigade. Notwithstanding this fact, opposition to the Government has been persistently continued throughout this entire period by a majority of its inhabitants. The enemy, long realizing their inability to maintain themselves without the unanimous cooperation and support of the entire population, have, in order to keep up their useless struggle, established a reign of terror by resorting to atrocities and expedients which violate the well-known laws and usages of war, as announced in General Orders, No. 100, Adjutant-General's Office, 1863, approved and published by order of President Lincoln, for the government of the armies of the United States in the field.

First. They have accepted local offices from the Government and taken the oath of allegiance solely for the purpose of improving their opportunities and facilities for deceiving American officials and treacherously aiding and assisting the cause of the insurrection, in violation of section 26.

Second. They have with bolos and other weapons killed helpless prisoners and soldiers lying on the ground, wholly disabled by wounds which prevented their defending themselves in any way, in violation of sections 49, 56, 61, and 71.

Third. In order to confuse their identity and thereby be able the more safely to conduct their skulking operations they have adopted the uniform of our Army and native troops without any plain, striking, and uniform mark of distinction of their own, in violation of section 63.

Fourth. They have improvised and secreted in the vicinity of roads and trails rudely constructed infernal machines propelling poisoned arrows or darts, in violation of section 70, thus placing themselves beyond the pale of the laws and usages of war.

Fifth. Men and squads of men without commission, without being part or portion of the regularly organized hostile army, without sharing continuously in the war, but with intermittent returns to their homes and avocations, and with frequent assumption of the semblance of peaceful pursuits, divesting themselves of the character and appearance of soldiers, have committed hostilities by fighting and making raids of various kinds, after which, concealing their arms, they have returned, posing as peaceful citizens, and secretly lived in the same towns with garrisons of our own troops, in violation of section 82.

Sixth. Armed prowlers have stolen within the lines of our Army to cut telegraph wires and destroy bridges. Armed assassins, designated and controlled by the enemy, have come, disguised as peaceful citizens, into the very presence of our garrisons and have assassinated, in broad daylight in crowded market places, persons unlawfully condemned to death by the enemy for being friendly to or assisting the legitimately organized government—the fear, sympathy, or cooperation of the entire population effectually preventing our apprehension and punishment of the assassin. This in violation of section 84.

Seventh. The apparently pacific inhabitants of towns occupied by the American Army have treacherously risen in arms against it, in violation of section 85.

Eighth. A large percentage of the population, though owing allegiance to the American Government under the provisions of section 26, have acted as spies and war traitors, in violation of the provisions of sections 88, 90, and 92.

Ninth. A very great number of insurgent officials, soldiers, and other aiders and abettors of the insurrection, after voluntarily surrendering and after having been captured, have been pardoned and released from confinement upon taking the oath of allegiance or giving paroles, and have subsequently violated their oaths or paroles without scruple by again entering the service of the insurgent army or aiding or assisting the same, in violation of sections 26, 124, and 130.

Against but one of these flagrant violations of the laws of war, namely, murder, has the United States Government ever adjudged or executed the severe penalties authorized by the sections of the law above cited, in the vain hope that, by this exercise of forbearance and generosity, the people might be conciliated and become reconciled to and convinced of the benevolent purposes of the Government. Instead of having had the desired effect, however, this policy in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna has apparently failed to appeal to even the keenest and most appreciative intellects.

On the contrary, it has been interpreted by many as an evidence of weakness and fear, and puffed up by a childish and ignorant conceit over what they are pleased to consider successful resistance of our power, the people have become so arrogant that they look down upon our Government and scorn its kindliest efforts at pacification. We consequently find ourselves operating in a thoroughly occupied terrane against the entire population, united in a hopeless struggle, using, conniving at, or tolerating barbarous methods which almost reach the limit in outraging the laws and usages of legitimate warfare.

The reckless expedients adopted by the enemy, especially the policy of intimidation and assassination, leaves to the brigade commander no other means of protecting either the lives of his subordinates or those of peaceful or friendly citizens, or the interests of his Government against the repetition of barbarous outrage, except the enforcement of the penalties authorized by the above-cited laws of war, and he has reluctantly concluded it to be absolutely necessary to avail himself of the right of retaliation under the provisions of sections 59 and 148 whenever the duly and carefully ascertained conditions and circumstances warrant the same under the restrictions prescribed in section 28.

The brigade commander therefore announces, for the information of all concerned, that wherever prisoners or unarmed or defenseless Americans or natives friendly to the United States Government are murdered or assassinated for political reasons, and this fact can be established, it is his purpose to execute a prisoner of war under the authority contained in sections 59 and 148. This prisoner of war will be selected by lot from among the officers or prominent citizens held as prisoners of war, and will be chosen, when practicable, from those who belong to the town where the murder or assassination occurred.

It is also his purpose to severely punish, in the same or a lesser degree, the commission of other acts denounced by the aforementioned articles. In this connection the attention of all American officers is invited to the last paragraph of section 29 and to the provisions of section 134. Commanding officers are authorized to enforce the provisions of this latter section whenever they may deem it just and practicable.

J. F. BELL,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

The foregoing order and the orders mentioned in the resolution refer to and are based upon General Orders, No. 100, Adjutant-General's Office, 1863. That order was as follows:

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 100.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, April 24, 1863.

The following "Instructions for the government of armies of the United States in the field," prepared by Francis Lieber, LL. D., and revised by a board of officers, of which Maj. Gen. E. A. Hitchcock is president, having been approved by the President of the United States, he commands that they be published for the information of all concerned.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND, Assistant Adjutant-General.

The President who approved and commanded the publication of these instructions was Abraham Lincoln. A full copy of the instructions is annexed hereto.

The orders mentioned in the resolution and the above-quoted order of December 13, received at the same time, were in strict conformity both with the letter and the spirit of these instructions. The instructions themselves were a contribution to civilization of great and universally recognized value and authority. The distinguished publicist, Professor Bluntschli, of the University of Heidelberg, says of them:

"The Instructions for the Government of Armies in the United States in the Field were drawn up by Professor Francis Lieber at the instance of President Lincoln, and formed the first codification of the International Articles of War (Kriegsvolkerrecht). This was a deed of great moment in the history of international law and of civilization. Throughout this work also we see the stamp of Lieber's peculiar genius. His legal injunctions rest upon the foundation of moral precepts. The former are not always sharply distinguished from moral injunctions, but nevertheless, through a union with the same, are ennobled and exalted.

"Everywhere reigns in this body of law the spirit of humanity, which spirit recognizes as fellow-beings, with lawful rights, our very enemies, and which forbids our visiting upon them unnecessary injury, cruelty, or destruction. But at the same time our legislator remains fully aware that in time of war it is absolutely necessary to provide for the safety of armies and for the successful conduct of a campaign; that, to those engaged in it, the harshest measures and most reckless exactions can not be denied, and that tender-hearted sentimentality is here all the more out of place, because the greater the energy employed in carrying on the war the sooner will it be brought to an end and the normal condition of peace restored." * * *

Within the present month the War Department has received a report of the condition of the natives collected in the concentration camps provided for by General Bell's order of December 8, 1901, shown by an inspection made by Col. Arthur L. Wagner, of the Adjutant-General's Office, by which it appears that the natives collected in these camps were well fed, healthful, and contented. I annex a copy of the report hereto.

From the fact that the report was forwarded by General Chaffee with the following indorsements, I infer that the orders referred to in the resolution had that officer's approval:

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF NORTH PHILIPPINES, Manila, P. I., March 24, 1902.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army, Washington, D. C.

This report illustrates the conditions existing in the towns where the inhabitants have been assembled. This concentration was made for the purpose of protecting the natives from the guerrilla bands in the provinces of Laguna and Batangas.

After more than two years' occupation of these provinces it has been found impossible to exterminate these bands or capture their leaders, owing to the reign of terror which they exercised over the inhabitants. Their systematic assassination—sometimes by burying alive—of natives who refused to contribute to the support of the insurrection enabled them to wring a steady war revenue from people presumably enjoying the privileges of free government and the protection of the United States. This has now terminated; nearly all the arms in the hands of guerrillas have been captured or have been surrendered, and there is a prospect of an early termination of disturbed conditions in provinces under military control.

It is expected that within sixty days people assembled in the towns can be returned to their several places of former abode.

LLOYD WHEATON, Major-General, Commanding.

[Second indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF THE PHILIPPINES, Manila, P. I., March 25, 1902.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

It is useless for me to make an attempt to show the necessity for the course adopted in the Third and Sixth brigades, to put an end to the active insurrection existing there, in such a way that all persons will agree that right action has been taken; it is impossible, of course, for me to do this. I will state, however, that personal contact with the people, a knowledge of their methods and sentiments, a personal acquaintance with the terrain, and what may be done by an enemy as by troops are all essential to determine what should be done before condemning what has been done. It is also necessary that some other method be suggested and positive proof submitted that, had it been followed, more success correspondingly would have followed its adoption than has been secured by the present course.

I do not understand that the authority of the United States in these islands can be indefinitely disputed by armed forces without efforts to terminate the resistance to that authority. On the other hand, I understand that all means which are justified by the laws of war are to be applied in such form as will meet and defeat the method of warfare adopted by the enemy. If desperate in the last case, more desperate must be the attack to end it.

Every care has been taken that people required to remain under military surveillance shall not unduly suffer for food, shelter, or medical attendance, if needed.

ADNA R. CHAFFEE, Major-General, United States Army, Commanding.

The following is a statement made to the Commissary-General of Subsistence by the chief commissary of the Division of the Philippines, dated March 17, 1902:

"We are getting along very nicely in supplying rice to the natives who are concentrated in Batangas and Laguna provinces. Last week, in company with General Wheaton, I visited Binan, Calamba, Santo Tomas, Tanauan, and Lipa, and the way the concentration of the natives is carried out up there is a credit to the United States Army. Generals Wheaton and Bell both deserve a great deal of credit.

"Instead of being called 'camps of concentration' the proper name would be 'camps of instruction and sanitation.' The different barrios or little villages are gathered each barrio on a street or avenue by itself. Then these different avenues are separated by about 200 feet from their back yards, where they do their cooking, burn up the offal, etc. They have their fire brigades, armed with buckets of bamboo, about 6 or 8 feet long. These are grouped on racks every two or three hundred feet, and every house is required to keep two of these filled at night. The houses are about as comfortable as those they were required to vacate. They all have an abundance of food, either collected by themselves or furnished by the military authorities.

"The inhabitants are most respectful and very cheerful looking. They all have the appearance of being well fed. No indications of sullenness or discontent. Their herds are taken out to graze, and altogether I really think, outside of a military standpoint, the natives will be decidedly improved by virtue of having lived in these well-regulated camps of instruction and sanitation. The very poor are much better off in every way than they ever were before, and they are subject by the military to less tyranny than formerly by the headmen. From a military standpoint of course the concentration has been most valuable and has resulted in bringing in nearly every gun and every insurgent behind it who has not fled to the provinces of Cavite and Tabayas, which are under the control of the civil government."

The War Department saw no reason to doubt that the policy embodied in the above-mentioned orders was at once the most effective and the most humane which could possibly be followed, and so indeed it has proved. Within a comparatively few weeks after this policy was inaugurated the guerrilla warfare in Batangas and Laguna and the adjacent regions, with all its accompaniments of long-continued suffering, destruction, and assassination, has been ended, the authority of the United States has been asserted and acquiesced in, and the people who had been collected and protected in the camps of concentration have been permitted to return again to their homes and resume their customary pursuits in peace, as appears by the following dispatches:

The War Department has not disapproved or interfered in any way with the orders giving effect to this policy, but has aided in their enforcement by directing an increase of the food supply to the Philippines for the purpose of caring for the natives in the concentration camps.

Second. The Secretary of War has no knowledge of any order or orders issued by Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith to Maj. L. W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, pleaded by the latter in defense before the recent court-martial which tried him at Manila. No such order has been received by the War Department.

The Waller court-martial was convened at Manila on the 17th of last March, under an order dated March 5, by or under the authority of General Chaffee, upon facts ascertained by him not then known, as far as I am aware, in this country. The conclusion of the proceeding by the acquittal of the defendant was announced to the Department in a telegram from General Chaffee dated April 19, 1902. Immediately upon the conclusion of the trial General Chaffee was directed by cable to mail to the Department the record and proceedings, including all testimony and action taken. These have not been received, and in the ordinary course of affairs can not reach here before the 1st of June. In the meantime, upon reading in the public press a telegraphic statement of portions of Major Waller's testimony, the following instructions were given to General Chaffee by cable on the 15th of April, 1902:

"Press dispatches state upon the trial of Major Waller, of the Marine Corps, testimony was given by Waller, corroborated by other witnesses, that Gen. Jacob H. Smith instructed him to kill and burn; that the more he killed and burned the better pleased General Smith would be; that it was no time to take prisoners, and that when Major Waller asked General Smith to define the age limit for killing, he replied: 'Everything over 10.' If such testimony was given, and the fact can be established, you will place General Smith on trial by court-martial."

To this General Chaffee replied in a dispatch dated April 19, as follows:

"Waller testified incident substance as cabled by you regarding conversation had with General Smith. Captain Porter, marines, testified hearing conversation. Two other officers say Waller told them regarding it very soon after occurrence. Smith now on Buford, quarantined, sailing 20th, but as you direct will detain him bring trial. Of course he intended remarks to refer persons hostile to troops, not those friendly—any other inference will do him injustice."

All the written orders made by General Smith relating to the campaign in Samar received by the Department have been transmitted by the Department to the Senate Committee on the Philippines, and are printed in the report of the hearings before that committee. All of these orders are based upon and are in strict conformity with "Instructions for the government of armies of the United States in the field," contained in General Order No. 100, of 1863.

No order has been given and no action has been taken by the War Department regarding the campaign in Samar except the foregoing direction and the formal order convening the court-martial for the trial of General Smith, a copy of which is annexed hereto.

The success of the policy embodied in the written orders referred to appears by the following dispatches:

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
United States Senate.

STATUTES OF LIMITATIONS IN CERTAIN LAND CASES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for a duplicate copy of the bill (S. 4264) providing that the statutes of limitations of the several States shall apply as a defense to actions brought in any courts for the recovery of lands patented under the treaty of May 10, 1854, between the United States of America and the Shawnee tribe of Indians; and, by unanimous consent, the request was ordered to be complied with.

DIAMOND SHOAL LIGHT-HOUSE, CAPE HATTERAS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3864) to provide for the construction of a light-house and fog signal at Diamond Shoal, on the coast of North Carolina, at Cape Hatteras.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object to its consideration. I understand that it comes from the Committee on Commerce and that it involves no obligation on the part of the Government of the United States. I have not listened carefully to the reading of the bill. I wish to say that this enterprise has been tried twice before, and at least $100,000 have been expended on it. I know that at least two of the light-house boards have reported against such a measure. But I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make one observation by way of explanation to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. It is the Captain Eads case and the jetties over again in another way. This gentleman is a citizen of the State of Maine. He has been a large shipowner and the president of a steamship company. He is going to make this attempt to erect a light-house in the stormy waters off Cape Hatteras at his own cost, and he is not to have a dollar of pay until, I think, two years after the Light-House Board certifies that he has completed his work. He is very confident indeed of success. He is the author of several most important inventions in regard to commerce. Among other things, the cold-storage system, which is worth millions upon millions to the farming interests of this country, is his production.

Mr. ALLISON. But this is not cold storage.

Mr. HOAR. Let me make my statement, please.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The subject has had a full and thorough hearing before the Committee on Commerce, who have gone all over it carefully day after day, and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] made this report. The bill provides in substance that he may attempt, which he shall do at his own risk, this most important work. He was the president of the company that owned the Portland steamboat which was lost in Boston Harbor some three or four years ago in one of the most terrible storms which has occurred on that coast for a generation. If a light-house which he thought he could construct in Long Island Sound on the shoal had existed, that ship would have been saved. He proposed to do it there. But it was suggested by the Light-House Board that the conditions were such that the channel was constantly shifting, and it might be 2 or 3 miles off in four or five years from where it was then. Accordingly, he said, "This is so important I will take Cape Hatteras; I will take the worst place on the coast, and I will take the entire risk myself."

Now, unless Congress is going to say, "We will not have any advantage from the inventive genius and the capital of the country, when the experiment is made at their own risk," it seems to me we might adopt the conclusion of the Committee on Commerce. It has been submitted to the North Carolina Senators and Representatives, who will, of course, state for themselves their view about it.

I have no interest in it except that the great shipping men of Boston unanimously and in great numbers, representing, I suppose, millions upon millions of capital, have joined in the petition to allow this man, whom they know well personally, to undertake this enterprise. He is a man of mature years and apt to succeed in everything he undertakes, and is absolutely trustworthy in his judgment and discretion.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] who reported this bill I simply desire to state that the Committee on Commerce had it under consideration for many weeks. I am one of the number, and was somewhat of a doubting Thomas. I know the great risks there are, especially off Cape Hatteras, in a light-house or any kind of a structure standing.

However, this gentleman, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, is a thorough nautical man. He has been the inventor of many devices which have proven successful, although he has not profited financially by them; he has no money himself.

The bill after being considered by your committee was amended in several respects, so as to protect the Government's interest. We did not believe from our knowledge of the man who appeared before us that he would find capitalists who would be willing to advance him sufficient funds to successfully erect this structure, but he returned to Boston and after a week or more came back to this city and was willing to accept the bill under its conditions, which, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, fully protect the Government. This structure is to be completed according to the specifications named in the bill, and he is to receive nothing, I think, for two years, and then only a partial payment, and it is to be satisfactory to the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOAR. After the completion of the structure.

Mr. PERKINS. After the completion of it, and that is to be only a partial payment. It is to have a further test, to see if the structure can stand the storms and winds and the breaking of the waves at Cape Hatteras. I think, as the Senator from Massachusetts has well said, that in this case we may depart from the usual rule which has prevailed here, and it is the correct one, that light-houses and light-ships shall be constructed under the direction of the Light-House Board, and I believe we are justified in this instance in trying the experiment. Therefore I trust our friend from Iowa, who perhaps has not given the same thought and consideration to this subject-matter that your committee have, may waive his objection, as I believe the Government's interests are fully protected.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very sure that I have not given the same thought and consideration to this particular bill which the committee has done, and if I had I should probably agree with my friend from California, but I only know that once before, if not twice—I am sure that once before we put just such a contract as this into the sundry civil appropriation bill and appropriated a considerable sum of money, I think $500,000 instead of $250,000.

Mr. HOAR. This bill does not appropriate anything.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the suggestion of an appropriation. I mean to say that we authorized the expenditure to be made by the private citizen at a cost named by him. He undertook the work and put down at the expense of $100,000 a caisson which in a storm of a single night was blown away, and afterwards there was considerable suggestion of a claim for the amount expended because he had made this hazardous experiment.

Now, I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that the committee has guarded every avenue that leads toward the Treasury in a way that the Treasury will not be approached, and I should be glad to know that any American citizen has the genius and the courage and the inventive capacity to construct a light-house at the place indicated. The Government has now a light-ship there, and if a light-house can be substituted, of course it will be an advantage, if it can only be so substituted as to remain.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to detain the Senate, but there is one thing I should like to tell in this connection, which, perhaps, may interest some of our friends. I was in the House of Representatives upon the Committee on Railways and Canals. Captain Eads, the engineer, had built the great bridge at St. Louis, which, I will venture to say, though it was so great an achievement, was not to be compared with the achievement that this Captain Eells—curious resemblance in names—made in regard to the one single matter of cold storage. Captain Eells has done a benefit to this country which must be estimated by millions upon millions, and he is entitled to a little grace and favor as a mark of gratitude for that.

Captain Eads went before that committee in the House with his proposed jetty system. The committee sent for the Corps of Engineers, and every one of them except General Barnard, the president, pronounced Eads's proposal totally impracticable, and said it would not work; that the only way to open the mouth of the Mississippi was to have a canal, which was to be a long distance, I do not remember how long, perhaps 70 or 100 miles. The committee had a patient hearing of Captain Eads and met the next week to vote. They voted unanimously that they could not grant his bill against the opinion of the Board of Army Engineers. He came to the committee room and went away almost a heart-broken man with the disappointment of this great plan of his.

I followed him out of the committee room and asked him to go with me into another room. I said, "Captain Eads, I voted, as the rest of the committee did, against your bill. I thought it would be presumption in me to go against the judgment of the board of engineers; but if you are willing to take a bill upon the principle that you shall not have any money until you have accomplished something—that you will deepen the channel so much and have so much, and then deepen the channel so much and have so much more—I will see if that can not be carried."

Captain Eads said he would accept any condition that could be put upon him; and he accordingly came back with a bill, which I went over and perfected as well as I could. I went into the meeting of that committee the next time, moved a reconsideration, carried the reconsideration by 1 vote, and carried the bill by 1 vote with the aid of a friend of mine and a friend of my friend who sits on my left, Mr. McCrary, who was then a Representative from the State of Iowa and was the chairman of the committee at the time.

In four or five years from that time there were vessels drawing 28 feet of water, I think, entering the port of New Orleans by that channel. It is now, I believe, the opinion of business men that another pass is better. Captain Eads was obliged, on the order of the Light-House Board, to take a pass against his own judgment, the pass he did not think the best, and now it is proposed to substitute the other pass.

Perhaps this is a little garrulous and a little egotistical, but I take some pleasure in the reflection that this benefit to the great commercial port of the South was the result of the action of Massachusetts abolitionists, and it is a pleasant memory. I have Captain Eads's certificate giving a history of the transaction and a statement of those facts. Now, if we can do the same thing for Cape Hatteras we shall benefit the whole Union alike, and I think it is worth while to make the trial.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, when this bill came before the Commerce Committee I hardly thought it ought to pass, and I do not believe, as it was introduced, it would have received a majority of the votes of the Committee on Commerce. There were two or three reports from the Light-House Board against its passage. But the bill was amended in such a way that I do not see how the Government can have any trouble whatever if the bill shall pass. I think the second section of the bill saves the Government any possible trouble. It provides:

> That when the said light-house shall be placed in position, in accordance with the conditions herein specified, and ready to be lighted, the same shall be subject to the approval, on behalf of the Government of the United States, of the Secretary of War.

In other words, it provides that after the light-house is built the Secretary of War must first approve it and be satisfied that it is in accordance with the contract. The bill also provides, in the same section—

> That at the end of one year after the said light-house shall have been so approved the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to said Albert F. Eells, or his assigns or legal representatives, the sum of $300,000.

And it also provides that at the end of two years after said approval the balance shall be paid. In other words, as I understand the bill now, it simply provides that the light-house must be built, it must be completed, and it must be tested at least one year before a single cent is paid; and then, if it continues to stand the test, at the end of two years the balance is to be paid. If the light-house should prove to be a failure—and I should not be surprised if the work does prove to be a failure—there is one thing certain the Government of the United States will have nothing to pay for it. For that reason I am willing to give the bill my support, and for no other reason.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply rise to say a few words in connection with the pending bill and the project of Captain Eells. I have had during the pendency of this measure before the Committee on Commerce quite a number of conversations with Captain Eells concerning it. In those conversations I inquired particularly into Captain Eells's engineering skill, ability, and experience. He showed to me quite a number of indorsements from the most distinguished engineers in this country, which assured me of their entire confidence in his ability to build a light-house that would stand the storms of Hatteras.

I am satisfied myself that the scheme is entirely feasible; and the large number of petitions which have come to Congress—I have not enumerated them, but I should judge from the space they occupy in the RECORD that there must be at least 150 petitions which have been presented to the committee from various bodies, from various associations and business establishments—express confidence in this scheme of Captain Eells, That confidence is based, as I said before, upon the statement of engineers of national reputation, to whom the scheme has been submitted.

As has been said several times, the Government has undertaken to establish at that point a light-house, and at one time a contractor spent $100,000, and it was all lost. This is an entirely new device, a new design which Captain Eells proposes to put into construction there. My understanding from him is that this is to be in the character originally of a floating ship that is to be taken out into water 30 feet deep, and I believe there it is to be sunk securely down into the sand.

After this is done, after he has borne the expense—and the committee certainly said in this report that they are satisfied that the price which Captain Eells exacts is in itself reasonable, although he takes the entire risk—but after this is done, after he has assumed the entire risk—I say "he," but I do not mean that he is to furnish the money, for I understand he is not a man of means, but he has satisfied other gentlemen in this country, of ample and abundant capital, to the extent that they are willing to risk their money in this scheme—after that money has been thus hazarded he is not to receive a solitary cent, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] says, until that light-house has stood the test of a year, under the supervision and control, as I understand it, of the Light-House Board of this Government. At the end of the year, if the Light-House Board is of the opinion that it is secure and permanent, then they are to pay him one-half of the consideration money, and the balance is not to be paid him until the light-house has stood the test for another year; and at the end of the second year the entire amount is to be paid to him, $575,000.

Now, I say that these gentlemen, to whom Captain Eells has submitted his plans, who are to furnish the money, have enough confidence in the scheme and in Captain Eells to risk this amount of money, and the Government is not to lose a cent if he fails.

The Light-House Board does not approve or disapprove of the scheme. The Board expresses the opinion that a light-house there of this character is very desirable, but it refuses to express an opinion as to the feasibility of the scheme submitted by Captain Eells.

Mr. CLAY. The Light-House Board is against the scheme.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not understand the Light-House Board, from the extract from the letter published here, as having expressed an opinion against the feasibility of the scheme.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to know whether that is an accurate statement or not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can read to the Senator what the Board say about it. I have myself read it very hurriedly.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. There was a member of the Light-House Board who appeared before the Committee on Commerce, and my recollection is that that officer doubted the possibility of the success of this scheme, or whether any light-house at all could be constructed off Cape Hatteras that would stand. I do not know that the Light-House Board has any opposition to the project otherwise, save and except the general idea that all work of this kind should be done under the Government rather than by individuals.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Light-House Board, as a Board, considered this plan of Captain Eells?

Mr. BERRY. I think probably it has been submitted to them.

Mr. SPOONER. Have they as a Board rejected it?

Mr. BERRY. No, sir. In the first place, the Board had no right to reject it. It is a question for Congress as to whether or not the legislation is necessary.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Board made any recommendation in regard to it?

Mr. BERRY. I say that the gentleman who was before the committee said he did not believe it was practicable to construct this light-house, and I think that was perhaps the conclusion of the Board.

Mr. HOAR. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury is very brief. I have it here and will read it:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
> Washington, March 10, 1902.
> SIR: This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from your committee, dated February 14, 1902, inclosing for suggestions a copy of Senate bill No. 3864, providing for the construction of a light-house, with a fog signal, at Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina.
> The Department in reply begs to state, at the instance of the Light-House

Board, that without regard to the question of advisability or desirability of establishing a light-house and fog signal in this locality, the bill in question does not permit of competitive bids or plans, and therefore bars out the general engineering profession in connection with the matter.

The Board is of the opinion that works of this character should be open to competition in order to secure the best engineering talent and the best and most responsible contractors, and that regular contracts should be entered into in order that proper inspection of the plans, material, and construction can be provided.

The Light-House Board is also of opinion that no payment should be provided for until final acceptance of the work, after the contractor has maintained the light and fog-signal apparatus for one year at his own expense in strict compliance with light-house regulations, providing that the structure shall still be in good order and condition.

The contractor should furnish and equip the station complete in every particular, according to light-house requirements, with the exception of the lens apparatus to be furnished by the Light-House Establishment.

All this is required in the bill.

The Board finds itself unable to give an opinion in regard to the character of the structure proposed in the bill, either as to its stability or as to its suitability for light-house purposes, for the reason that the data concerning the foundation is too meager to permit of detailed analysis, while no details whatever are given concerning the superstructure. The Board is therefore unable to give a favorable recommendation on the bill in question.

This Department concurs with the Board in that opinion, and finds itself unable to recommend the passage of this bill.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

THE CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

The substance of this letter is that the Light-House Board do not indorse the scheme, and do not know enough about it to approve or disapprove it. The Board think that if the work is done by the Government, it should be on competition by engineers; and that whoever does it the Government should furnish the light-house lense, and the payment should not be made until two years, which is provided for in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, my statement a little while ago was based upon the last clause in the letter of Secretary Shaw, which the Senator from Massachusetts has just read. My statement was that the Light-House Board neither approved nor disapproved of the scheme, and did not express any opinion as to its feasibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce will be stated.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 8, before the name "Diamond Shoal," to insert "outer;" so as to read:

That Albert F. Eells, of Boston, Mass., be, and he is hereby, authorized, with such others as may be associated with him, to construct, in the manner and on the conditions herein specified, a substantial and sufficient light-house and fog signal, together with such auxiliary works as will be necessary to maintain the same permanently, at the outer Diamond Shoal, on the coast of North Carolina, at Cape Hatteras.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, to strike out the clause from line 4 to line 8, inclusive, as follows:

That no such construction, or means employed, shall hinder, delay, or materially interfere with the free navigation of the channel at said point; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make such regulations as will effectually protect said navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, line 13, before the word "feet," to strike out "ten," and insert "fifteen," and in line 17, before the word "feet," to strike out "fifteen," and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

That the foundation and base of said structure shall be sunken not less than 15 feet into the sea bottom, unless solid foundation shall be found nearer the surface, and shall be inclosed in a steel caisson, filled with masonry and concrete, extending from the bottom thereof to a height of not less than 20 feet above mean high tide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 20, after the word "tide," to insert:

and that part of the said structure filled with masonry and concrete and extending 20 feet above mean high tide shall not be less than 27½ feet in diameter at such height. Sufficient space shall be provided in said solid masonry above mean high tide for the storage of fresh water and other articles. Above said solid structure, beginning at a height of 20 feet above mean high tide, there shall be erected a circular steel structure, containing suitable apartments for living and storage rooms, and extending a height of not less than 20 feet, or as much more as may be necessary, and making a total height of not less than 40 feet in all above mean high tide, and which said circular steel structure shall be 27½ feet in diameter at the base and not less than 25 feet in diameter at the top; and the said superstructure for living apartments and storage room as above provided shall be fully equal in space and accommodations to the living apartments in the light station at Minots Rock, on the coast of Massachusetts.

There shall be erected above said circular steel structure, as aforesaid, a circular steel tower or mast of sufficient diameter to contain a spiral stairway, and which shall extend a sufficient height so that the light to be placed thereon shall be at least 200 feet above mean high tide, all to be substantially and securely constructed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 3, line 25, after the word "Treasury," to insert "upon demand, and when the said structure shall be sufficiently completed to place the same in position;" so as to make the clause read:

That the lens and equipment for the said light-house and fog signal shall be furnished by the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon demand, and when the said structure shall be sufficiently completed to place the same in position, without expense to said Eells or his associates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 4, line 6, after the word "signal," to strike out "before June 1, 1902," and insert "within sixty days after written request from the said Eells or his associates. During the progress of the construction of said light-house the same shall be inspected from time to time under the direction of the Secretary of War;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate a suitable and proper place for the construction of said proposed light-house and fog signal within sixty days after written request from the said Eells or his associates. During the progress of the construction of said light-house the same shall be inspected from time to time under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to said Albert F. Eells, or to his assigns or legal representatives, $150,000 when said light-house is placed in position in accordance with the conditions herein specified, and ready to be equipped and lighted; and an additional $150,000 when said light-house and fog signal are completed in accordance with the conditions herein specified; and $250,000 additional (making in all $550,000) at the expiration of one year after the date of the completion of said light-house and fog signal, provided the same shall have remained in a substantial and good condition during said period of one year.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That when the said light-house shall be placed in position, in accordance with the conditions herein specified, and ready to be lighted, the same shall be subject to the approval, on behalf of the Government of the United States, of the Secretary of War. That at the end of one year after the said light-house shall have been so approved that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to said Albert F. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MINORITY VIEWS—HORTON AGAINST BUTLER.

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Speaker, I have the minority views in the case of Horton against Butler. The time for filing the views was out on Monday, but the House was in session but a few moments on Monday and on Tuesday, and for that reason I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to file the views of the minority to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to file the views of the minority in the case, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horton against Butler.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the views of the minority will be filed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PROTECTION OF CITIES AND TOWNS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the House bill 53 for the purpose of concurring in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the following House bill, with Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 53) for the protection of cities and towns in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

With a Senate amendment, which was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That any incorporated city or town in the Indian Territory having a population of 2,000 or more is hereby authorized to issue bonds and borrow money thereon, to be used for the construction of sewers and waterworks and the building of schoolhouses; such bonds not to exceed an amount the interest on which at 5 per cent per annum would be liquidated by a tax of 5 mills upon the dollar of the valuation of the taxable property in such city or town, to be ascertained by the last assessment for purposes of taxation; that before such bonds shall be issued the same shall be authorized by a two-thirds majority of the qualified voters of such city or town voting at an election held for that purpose, notice of which shall be published for four consecutive weeks prior thereto in a newspaper of general circulation published in such municipality: Provided, That such bonds shall not be issued until it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the judge of the United States court for the judicial district in which such municipality is located, by petition of the mayor and council thereof, that all the requirements of this section have been complied with, who shall thereupon cause to be entered upon the minutes of his court a judgment or decree reciting the facts as he finds them to be: Provided, however, That before any election shall be held for the purposes herein named a census shall be taken and the population of said municipality ascertained by some suitable person, or persons, appointed for that purpose by the said judge of the district court, who shall make a sworn return to said judge showing the number of inhabitants thereof, and that the judgment or decree shall set forth the population and taxable wealth of the municipality, and said order or decree shall be printed on said bond and made a part thereof and shall be final and conclusive against said municipality in any litigation on said bonds.

"SEC. 2. That such bonds shall contain all necessary and usual provisions expressing the contract, shall be signed by the mayor and countersigned by the treasurer of such municipality, who shall keep a proper record of such bonds. Said bonds shall not bear a rate of interest exceeding 5 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and none of said bonds shall be sold at less than their par value.

"SEC. 3. That any municipality incurring any indebtedness for the purposes provided for in this act shall, by ordinance which shall be irrepealable, provide for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds as the same falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal thereof within twenty years from the date of contracting the same: Provided, That if any municipality shall have the authority under any special act to issue its bonds, the amount of the bonds issued under the special act shall be first deducted, and there shall only be issued under this act such additional bonds as shall not exceed the limit provided in this act."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman to what Territory this bill refers?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Indian Territory.

Mr. PAYNE. I see there is a general provision for issuing bonds. I could not observe where it is confined to by the reading.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It relates to the Indian Territory alone in its general provisions. The bill passed the House early in the session and went to the Senate and was there amended. The only difference in the House and Senate bill is this: The House bill provided that incorporated towns and cities of 1,000 inhabitants might have the right to issue these bonds under the rules prescribed in the bill. The Senate raised the limit to 2,000 inhabitants. That is the only change.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the limit as to the amount of bonds?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the amount of the limitation in the present bill is placed at 5 per cent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was taken, and the motion to concur was agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 5, 1902.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4872) to amend an act entitled, "An act governing the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895.

LOST BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House of Representatives a duplicate copy of the bill (S. 4264) providing that the statutes of limitation of the several States shall apply as a defense to action brought in any court for the recovery of lands patented under the treaty of May 10, 1854, between the United States of America and the Shawnee tribe of Indians, the same having been lost.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS OF THE LAC COURTE OREILLE RESERVATION, WIS.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10698.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10698) providing for allotments of lands in severalty to the Indians of the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin.

Be it enacted, etc., SECTION 1. That with the consent of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior, located on the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin, to be obtained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, the President may allot to each Indian now living and residing on said reservation and entitled to so reside, and who has not heretofore received an allotment not exceeding 80 acres of land, such allotments to be subject in all respects, except as to the age and condition of the allottee, to the provisions of the third article of the treaty with the Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi concluded September 30, 1854.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear. I think I will have to object unless some very good reason shall be given for this unanimous consent. It looks like a very important bill to take up at this hour.

Mr. BROWN. I will say for the information of the gentleman that this provides an additional allotment of land to the Indians of the Lac Courte Oreille and Lac du Flambeau reservations in the State of Wisconsin. There have been previous allotments on the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation to 702 Indians, covering 49,040 acres. The timber has been removed from the land which we propose to allot, and it is desired by the Indians interested; also by the agent in charge. It is also recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask how much land is involved in this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that there are about 20,000 acres in one reservation and about 30,000 in the other reservation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think that is too large a bill to consider under unanimous consent, and I will object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO IDAHO.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3800) to grant certain lands to the State of Idaho.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from New York.

That the clerk's office at Vinita shall also be the recorder's office for the northern district, except that the clerk's office at Miami shall continue to be the recording office for the Quapaw Indian Agency as now provided by law. The United States marshal of the present northern district shall be marshal of the western district, and there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a district attorney for said western district and a United States marshal for the northern district.

"The said officers shall be appointed and shall hold office for the period of four years, and shall receive the same salary and fees and discharge like duties as other similar officers in said Territory. The cases now pending in that part of the northern district which is hereby made the western district shall be tried the same as if brought in said western district. Terms of court shall continue to be held within the territory remaining in said northern district at the places now provided by law for the holding of courts therein, and in addition thereto at the towns of Sallisaw, Claremore, Howata, and Pryor Creek, in the Cherokee country. All laws now applicable to the existing judicial districts in the Indian Territory, and to attorneys, marshals, clerks, and their assistants or deputies therein, not inconsistent herewith, are hereby made applicable to the western district. In addition to the places now provided by law for holding courts in the southern and central districts, courts in the southern district shall also be held at Tishomingo and Ada, and in the central district at Durant. The United States judge for the central district of the Indian Territory, after the approval of this act, may appoint a constable for the commissioner located at Durant.

"To enable the Attorney-General to carry out the provisions of the act approved July 7, 1896, for the erection of three jails in the Indian Territory, and also to erect one additional United States jail in said Territory, $40,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended. And the Attorney-General is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be erected a United States jail at each of the three places already formally designated by him, namely, at Muscogee in the western district, at South McAlester in the central district, and at Ardmore in the southern district, and one additional United States jail at Vinita in the northern district, at a total cost not exceeding $100,000."

"That for the purpose of acquiring sites for United States jails as provided herein in the Indian Territory, there shall be appointed by the judge of the United States court in the district where such land is situated, on application of the United States by petition describing the land sought to be condemned, three disinterested referees, who shall determine the compensation and damage to be paid any owner, occupant, tribe, or nation by reason of the appropriation and condemnation of such land for the use and benefit of the United States for a jail at any of the places hereinbefore mentioned.

"Such referees, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall each take and subscribe before the clerk of the said United States court an oath that he will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his appointment, which oaths, duly certified, shall be returned with the award of the referees to the clerk of the court by which they were appointed. Before such referees shall proceed with the assessment of damages for any lands sought to be condemned under this act, ten days personal notice of said hearing shall be given to all persons interested, and service may be had upon each tribe or nation in which said land may be located by service upon the principal chief thereof, and in case personal service can not be had upon any person interested, twenty days' notice of the time when the same shall be condemned shall be given, by publication in some newspaper in general circulation nearest said property in the district where said land is situated.

"If the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to and shall make the award. Any party to the proceedings who is dissatisfied with the award of the referees shall have the right, within ten days after the filing of the award in the court by which said referees were appointed, to appeal by original petition to the United States court sitting at the place nearest and most convenient to the property sought to be taken, where the question of the damages occasioned by the taking of the land in controversy shall be tried de novo, and the judgment rendered by the court shall be final and conclusive. And upon the payment into court of the amount or amounts awarded as damages, fee simple title to said tract of land shall vest in the United States. If such appeal is not taken as hereinbefore set forth, the award shall be conclusive and final, and shall have the same force and effect as a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, and upon the payment of the sum or sums so found due into the court a fee simple title to said land shall vest in the United States.

"Each of said referees shall receive for his compensation the sum of $5 per day while actually engaged in the appraisement of the property and the hearing of any matter submitted to them under this act.

"That if any party or person other than the United States shall appeal from any award, and the judgment of the court does not award such appealing party or person more than the referees awarded, all costs occasioned by such appeal shall be paid by such appealing party or person. It shall be the duty of the United States court in each district to promptly hear and determine the rights of all parties if any appeal shall be taken under this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SHERMAN. My understanding is that the gentleman from Arkansas opposes but one of the one hundred and thirty-odd items in the bill, and so far as our side is concerned, it seems to me that we would not require a great deal of time. I would like to know if we can not agree with the gentleman upon some length of time for the discussion of the proposition.

Mr. LITTLE. I think we can get along with one hour on this side if I can be recognized in my own right.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is rather more time——

Mr. LITTLE. We may not use the whole of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest, then, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Arkansas be allowed an hour for his side and I be allowed an hour for this side, at the end of which time it shall be understood that the previous question is ordered, and sooner if debate closes before that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas have an hour and that the gentleman from New York have one hour, after which the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman from New York proceed at this time?

Mr. SHERMAN. I prefer that the gentleman from Arkansas should proceed, if he is willing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for one hour.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, while he states my position in part, does not state fully the position I occupy with reference to this report. While there are a number of propositions in this bill that do not meet my personal approval, yet amendment No. 65, referred to by the gentleman from New York, was the only amendment to which I did not feel under any circumstances I could give my approval, either directly or indirectly.

I realize, too, ordinarily the utter futility of attempting to defeat a full conference report in this House upon any general appropriation bill. I believed when in committee, and believe now, that this amendment No. 65 was of that character that this House itself ought to have the opportunity to pass upon that one question alone, without being put to the extremity of adopting or rejecting the full report. I urged, and I have hope now to that end, that this report may be voted down, so that the important question involved in amendment No. 65, put there by the Senate, may be disposed of by the House with the right of amendment and after due and proper consideration.

The amendment to which I object involves a proposition to open to settlement the Uintah Reservation, in the State of Utah. There has been since 1896, I believe, not only one, but two or three different efforts on the part of the Government to negotiate with these Indians with a view of opening the 2,000,000 acres of their reservation. Every effort on the part of the Government to open this reservation has been thwarted, in my opinion, by means that are not commendable to the parties who did it.

I believe the effort to secure mineral leases by various parties, culminating in the leases which will be so generously protected and cared for if this report is adopted, has been the direct cause of the failure to make satisfactory agreement with the Indians for the opening and settlement of this great reservation, so important to the State of Utah and the country.

We find that early in the nineties—in 1896 and on later—various applications had been made to the Department to secure leases for the working of minerals in the mineral part of this reservation, there being, I believe, from 600,000 to 700,000 acres classified as nonagricultural lands. These efforts have gone along step by step, counteracting every effort that the Government has made to make a decent, plain agreement with these Indians, if an agreement was necessary at the beginning, with the view of opening their reservation.

From time to time these efforts have been made and, as I state, have failed. One of these leases, made with what is known as the Raven Mining Company, has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior. A permit to negotiate a lease has been granted to the Florence Mining Company, but that lease has not been approved by the Secretary of the Interior so far as I know. I suppose, however, that he stands ready to approve it if this legislation fails.

The Florence Mining Company's proposed lease covers 640 acres of contiguous land. In other words, that company may string out its claim just as long, I understand, as the 640 acres can be extended under the form of general mineral claims—some 20 or 30 miles.

Then, as to the Raven Mining Company—the one whose lease has been approved—this bill provides that they shall have a preferential right to locate, not 50 mineral claims, not 75, but 100 mineral claims, in exclusion of everybody else; and that they have from now until September 30, 1903, in addition to the time they have already had, for prospecting and locating these claims.

The lease of the Raven Mining Company applies, as I understand, to asphaltum and kindred minerals. I have been trying to get a copy of that lease; have made application for it, but a copy has not been furnished me. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] whether he has a copy.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. LITTLE. I suppose somebody knows something about that lease, but I do not. I have not a copy of it; as I said, I have not been able to get a copy. I do not know who the organizers of the company are.

Mr. MADDOX. Do I understand one of these companies is authorized to locate 100 claims?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDOX. What is the reason for granting a privilege like that?

Mr. LITTLE. I will read the provision in a moment. They have a lease, ratified or approved some three years ago by the Secretary of the Interior, to operate on this reservation for mineral purposes in locating and operating asphaltum-gilsonite claims.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. The lease already approved by the Secretary of the Interior covers 134 claims. This bill reduces the number to 100.

Mr. LITTLE. Has the gentleman a copy of that lease? I have been unable to get it.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a statement of the Secretary of the Interior as to what it covers.

Mr. COWHERD. Could nobody get a lease except these parties?

Mr. LITTLE. No, sir; as I understand. If the gentleman will read the correspondence, etc., in Senate Document 154 he will be in a position to easily see how this company could get that lease. I believe that both these leases, when you track them from the time of the original application down to this time, will be found to involve officers of the Government, especially the local officers connected with this reservation.

Here is the provision of the amendment giving these extraordinary rights to these companies:

And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any mineral lease which has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or any permit heretofore issued by direction of the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with said Indians for a mineral lease; but any person or company having so obtained such approved mineral lease or such permit to negotiate with said Indians for a mineral lease on said reservation, pending such time and up to thirty days before said lands are restored to the public domain as aforesaid, shall have the preferential right to locate in lieu of this lease under the mining laws not to exceed 640 acres of contiguous mineral land, except the Raven Mining Company, which may locate in lieu of its lease 100 mining claims of the character of mineral mentioned in its lease.

That is the provision which, in my opinion, is carrying this bill through.

Mr. MADDOX. Are they allowed to locate those claims wherever they please?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, sir. This amendment, as it now stands, provides, if agreed to by the Indians, that this reservation shall be opened on the 30th of October, 1903, and these companies will have from now until that time, in addition to the time they have already had for the last three or four years, to prospect every foot of that country and cover over everything of mineral that they may find, unless there should be so much that they can not cover it all by stringing out these claims in the manner proposed to be authorized.

Mr. MADDOX. Can the gentleman account for the extreme partiality shown to this company?

Mr. LITTLE. I will endeavor to do so further on.

Mr. SHERMAN. Was it not understood before the conference committee that the Raven Company would be limited to the territory covered by their lease? That was my understanding.

Mr. LITTLE. It was not mine by any means. And this provision does not contain any such limitation.

Mr. LOUD. How could anything be definitely understood on the subject if the committee was not in possession of any information or any data? The chairman of the committee has said that he never saw the lease.

Mr. LITTLE. I have never seen it. My friend from Kansas says he has a statement of what it contains. I applied, through my friend from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], to the Secretary for the Raven lease.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Have you a copy of the letter from the Secretary of the Interior which was transmitted to the Senate? That contains a copy of the lease.

Mr. LITTLE. Document 154?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not remember the number of it.

Mr. LITTLE. It contains a copy of the Raven lease?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. I think not. It does of the Florence lease. Have you got a citation of it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I have not the reference to it. Now——

Mr. LITTLE. I might ask you some questions, directly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Permit me to ask one other question. You say you do not know what this lease contains?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The lease is on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LITTLE. I applied for a copy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would ask the gentleman why he has not examined it as a member of the conference committee?

Mr. LITTLE. Because I have no copy. I made application for it and have not been furnished with it. That is the reason.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have seen the lease in the Department.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not doubt it is there, so far as that is concerned. Now, I will get to the material part presently. The Florence Mining Company made its application for a permit to negotiate a lease in 1899. Later on it made another application, in 1901, for a permit to negotiate a lease. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to some correspondence which appears in the document that I have before me.

I want you to understand that one of the main objections to this character of lease is that I do not believe, notwithstanding the Department has held to the contrary, also the Assistant Attorney-General, that this particular reservation is covered by the law governing the lease of minerals.

I refer to the law of 1891, which says the Secretary may lease lands which have been bought and paid for by the Indians; but the construction has been the other way, and these applications for parties to lease from time to time have been held up until, as shown by the last application for permission, all the conflicting interests have been consolidated and united under the Florence Mining Company.

Now, the Florence Mining Company is one of considerable importance in its personnel. That company was organized in 1899. The officers of that company were Henry C. Payne, of Wisconsin, president; William L. Ward, vice-president; Benjamin B. Odell, treasurer; Leroy D. Thoman, secretary. Since the first organization—to wit, in 1900—Mr. Payne tendered his resignation as director, and Mr. Odell also has tendered his resignation as director, and the company has been reorganized in that way.

Now, with that intimation only, I desire to read from the addenda on page 13. It is as follows:

In September, 1896, an application was made by Mr. George F. Timms for a permit to negotiate a mining lease on the Uintah Reservation. Action on the application was deferred from time to time in deference to persistent efforts to induce the Indians to take individual allotments and cede a considerable portion of their land for public entry. No less than three commissions authorized by acts of Congress to negotiate a cession of part of these lands have failed.

Inspectors have been sent by the Department for like purpose, and they, too, have failed. In the last few years Congress has refused to make further appropriations to attempt negotiations for the cession of these lands, presumably because no headway was made by the former commissioners. This failure has not embarrassed the continued introduction of bills seeking that end, and it is possible that these bills have deterred the Department from earlier allowing negotiations for leases to be made.

Now, I read from page 33 of Senate Document No. 154 a more concise statement of how these matters have been managed than I can give myself, being a communication from one R. S. Collett, following the history of these matters:

And here is the story of the origin of these mineral leases: In 1897 one Dr. Hathenbrook was around here with samples of gold ore that were the finest I ever saw. He said they came from the reservation and was trying to get a permit to go on the reservation to prospect. At that time H. P. Myton was a commissioner assisting in the opening of the reservation, E. R. Harper was the secretary of this commission, and S. M. Miller was the surveyor for the same.

They saw these samples of gold, and while they were yet acting on the commission they began to plan for a "mineral lease" on the reservation. The result was, Myton was subsequently made agent and the others hoped to profit thereby.

A plan was formed, with Myton as chief assistant, to obtain this lease. J. H. Mease, post trader at Du Chesne, and John McAndrews, interpreter at Ouray, were taken in to help the matter along. The inclosed letters tell their own tale.

The same plan of action was to be pursued as is now being pursued, and here the hitch came. Mease and McAndrews claim they refused to try to influence the Indians in this way, so they were dropped out and others taken in. Mease, however, failed to burn his correspondence, as he was instructed, and McAndrews has a duplicate of the most of it.

Myton, Miller, and Harper are still in the lease. It was Harper whom Myton went to see at Denver before calling the council of Indians. And you will see by these letters that they joined forces with Timms and have nearly accomplished their object.

I also inclose you a copy of the then proposed lease, also furnished by Mr. Mease, and he informed me that this lease was drawn in the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the maps furnished from there also, and that while Mr. Ryan, who is still Acting Secretary in the Interior Department, was deeply interested in the lease, he was not alone by any means.

It was some time before Mr. Mease could be induced to give up the papers, and he assures us that Myton et al. think them destroyed. He is not vindictive toward Myton, but says he wishes to protect himself and not have the whole matter thrown onto him.

He has a large stock of these papers and telegrams, the latter mostly in cipher, and they are all at your disposal if you can do anything with them.

Mr. Sutherland, you can not know the manner in which these Indians are being fleeced and robbed and the manner in which this steal has been planned and executed. These papers are placed at your discretion; we hope you can use them. If you could get a thorough investigation of this agency affair you would be astonished at what would be revealed. And it seems to us that this should be had if an appeal had to be made to the President.

No newspaper talk will be made here of these papers. No one knows of them but the committee that has had this matter in hand. In the event you find them of no value you will kindly return them, that Mr. Mease may get them again. But I sincerely hope you may be able to put a stop to this leasing business and to have a measure passed looking to the early opening of the reservation.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, and assuring you of my warmest regards, I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, yours, R. S. COLLETT.

Now, I will read a short paragraph from a letter bearing date March 8, 1899, sent by Mr. Harper, the party mentioned a moment ago. After referring to the organization of the company, he says:

Several applications have been made for permits to go out to the reservation to secure a mineral lease. We are going to act upon a suggestion made us to-day, by one whose suggestions in such a matter are entitled to great respect, not to wait for any permit, but go right straight ahead and use all our efforts at once to secure a lease. All the applications now on file will be held up for the present and no permits will be issued.

I will write a letter to Myton telling him you are coming, and that at the suggestion of the proper authority no permit is necessary. Were permits issued to all who have applied you would find, probably, several persons on the ground with you trying to get the lease. In that event you would have to proceed boldly but cautiously, and keep a close watch on what the others are doing. Timmes is working from here through Dr. McDonald, the veterinary surgeon at the post. But you need not fear the doctor, as he will very soon be out of the way. It may be advisable to "lay low" until he gets his orders to leave and has gone away.

We have little fear that he can do us any damage, but he must be watched, and if he leaves within a few days, as now seems likely, it would be advisable to wait until he is out of the way. Thoman is the only man we think needs careful looking after. He, or the Raven Mining Company, has just paid in $1,000 for the Indians on the elaterite lease. This money has not been earned, but has been paid in as a bluff to catch the Indians, so as to get from them a new lease.

Thoman has also been trying to get Myton off the reservation so as to get a chance to treat with him and get him away from us if possible. They are desperate and will go to any length to detach Myton from his fidelity to us; however, Myton is fully aware of their intentions and will not be misled by any proposition they may make to him, realizing that our interests are mutual in every particular. As it looks now, however, I am very hopeful that you can get on the ground and go to work with the Indians without any interference from the other parties.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will you give the date of that letter?

Mr. LITTLE. March 8, 1899.

Mr. MADDOX. Who was the doctor? In whose service was he?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Who was Dr. McDonald?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not know. He was one of the post agents out on the reservation. The veterinary surgeon at the post.

Mr. COWHERD. Who was going to remove him?

Mr. LITTLE. Well, I do not know. All I can say is that these letters have been public for weeks, and if there has been any denial from any source on the face of the earth of any imputation that they have made directly in these letters, I have failed to hear of it from any source.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. These letters were sent in response to a Senate inquiry, were they not?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And they were all before the Senate committee?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And they were all before the Senate itself?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the Senate committee unanimously reported in favor of this amendment that you are now antagonizing, and the Senate unanimously passed it?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; and a good part of the Senate committee, together with the gentleman who is now addressing me, have denounced these leases in stronger terms than I can denounce them, because I have not the power of language to do so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am just as much opposed to the leasing system as ever.

Mr. LITTLE. If you are or if any other man is opposed to this system, now is the time to meet it and serve a rebuke to those who grant these leases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We are trying to get rid of them on this reservation.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; and I believe unless you vote with me you will never get rid of them, because I have no doubt, and neither have you, that the assent of these lessees is necessary in order to make any contract or agreement with the Indians upon that reservation, and I believe that you ought to be with me; that these parties who have been able to influence, to say the least, the local employees of the Government at that agency have been able to stay the purposes of the Government in opening up these reservations, and now by this amendment they are to be bought in by giving them all they demand.

Now, I will read the letter dated March 13, 1899, sent by the same Mr. Harper. He begins "My Dear Jim." Now, "My Dear Jim" has been a sort of lost entity to me for some time. It lies between two Jims. I will not charge particularly which one of the Jims it is, as I do not know. It begins "My Dear Jim," and is as follows:

MY DEAR JIM: I am informed that Timms, the man who claims to have a sure hold on the lease if he can secure a permit to go on the reservation, left here last night ostensibly to go West to look after some other business, but I am quite sure he expects to make a dive for the agency. He has been working through Dr. McDonald, and we concluded it best to have doctor given a "change of base" for his health. I wrote to Myton to wire me when doctor goes.

This man Timms has the prior claim for the right to go on the reservation, as his application has been in for a year or two. Hence it is embarrassing to the Department to turn him down, if he is a responsible party. However, it may be necessary for a permit to be given him first. In that case it will be necessary for us to "knock" him until he is out of the way; hence demonstrating that he can not get the lease. At the same time I am a little afraid of that, and prefer that Miller and you boys go ahead independent of permit and try and get the lease, provided you think that best; you are on the ground and know best.

If I find the Department gives Timms a permit I will try and have them grant the same to all applicants. In that case we will have to fight it out and take our chance.

Saturday I was appointed special allotting agent. From now on I will have nothing more to do with the lease matter, publicly. However, it may be found essential (?) that I should accompany Mr. Graves to the reservation to assist in determining which of the proposed ditches will be best for the dear Indians. Do you suppose I can judge that matter correctly?

As I understand the matter, nothing further can be done until Mr. Graves makes his report. Then the Secretary will grant the permit as he deems best. I do not know how soon Mr. Graves will go out there, but I presume it will be a month or six weeks before he gets there. In the meantime have the proper papers duly filed with the Land Department, etc., as I wrote you in my last.

Am just in receipt of the following wire from Judge Thoman, Chicago: "I carry a very important private letter to you; can you meet me in New York Wednesday? Answer quick." My reply will be that I can not meet him there. If important, come here. I am not running after that bluffer.

Sincerely,

HARPER.

Now, where Mr. Harper gets his authority to change men from pillar to post for their health when the application for great mineral leases are pending I will let the other gentlemen explain, if they can. It will be seen that Harper has been appointed a special allotting agent, and will have nothing more to do with the leases publicly. I do not know where the live wire that is sometimes used hides itself in these matters, but that these parties believed themselves in control seems certain.

Mr. LESTER. Who appointed him?

Mr. LITTLE. I read an extract from a letter of March 14 by this same "Dear Mr. Harper," addressed to "My Dear Mease." It is as follows:

Taking all these matters into consideration we came to the conclusion that the only thing to do is to hold back until the Timms crowd have had their chance and failed. Consequently, to-day I wired Appleman at Denver and asked if Miller had left; and if so, when. The reply just received is that "He left last night: can catch him at Price." Still, after consultation, we concluded it best to let him go on to the post, where he can confer with you, Myton, and McA., and be the better posted as to the manner of procedure.

Then when you get this wire from McKay that you are ready to take care of Timms—that is, head him off when he comes—and if you are ready and sure you can knock him out, and we will see that the permit is granted him at once, giving him thirty days to make the trial. Just as soon as he gets through, then a permit will be granted Miller and he can go ahead, thereby getting Timms & Co. out of the road and leaving the way open for us to make arrangements to get his, or, rather, Ryan's assistance here. It is our opinion that it will be best for Miller to be away while he is there, so that they can not make the claim that he interfered with their chances.

Miller might run over to Vernal or out to Salt Lake, under which and all circumstances all expenses will be met by the crowd. However, we leave the question of his staying on the ground to your judgment. Only do not forget that we must not put any officer in the hole by anything we may say or do. I know that it will look bad to have to put it off and take a second chance, but we must consider not only the matter of securing the lease but getting it approved; at the same time protect our good official friends. It occurs to me that you may wish to use the word "Timms" quite a little, so I have entered it in the cipher code, top of page 86, after word "Jaundice." Please make like entry in the code I sent you yesterday, so that in wiring the word "Jaundice" will mean "Timms."

I see that the White Rivers are getting ugly, and I presume that they will not be willing to talk lease to anyone until they are given some attention as to their Colorado land. It occurs to me that it might be a good idea to have a contract ready, with some good attorney, to present at the same meeting Miller expects to capture, and, by thus showing them that the Department is looking after that matter, get them in better spirits to consider and favorably act on our matter. Let me hear your opinion on that matter, and if you agree with me, will try and have it so arranged. There is no doubt but that Major Bryan will have the sanction of the Department to secure the contract, and if you think best, will have him send his contract on for action at that time.

As you have the cipher code, I guess you can pick out quite enough to at least mystify the operators and yet keep matters cleared up with us, and thereby keep in much better touch.

Address Col. N. McKay, and recognize all wires signed by him as the same as signed by me.

Sincerely,

HARPER.

Be sure and have a good conference over all these matters with Myton and McAndrews, so that no move is made without the clear understanding of all.

HARPER.

But I see my time is rapidly coming to a conclusion, and my colleague on the committee wants to be heard, and I can not pursue this evidence further.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All the letters are from Harper, and all are addressed to "Dear Jim."

Mr. LITTLE. That is "Dear Jim Mease," as I understand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no misunderstanding about that.

Mr. LITTLE. He seems to have been first taken in on the ground floor of this proposition, and when they kicked him out he fulfilled the old adage where certain characters fall out and fight and honest men get their dues. That is what I understand. Let us see what they are going to get under this conference report. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. LITTLE. Thank you.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information, and that is if he knows with reference to the Raven Mining Company, that is permitted under this amendment to locate a hundred mining claims, whether or not the Raven Mining Company has for the past three years been in possession of more than a hundred mining claims, and that they have invested more than $200,000, and from that investment they have not been able to make anything?

Mr. LITTLE. I supposed that my friend and the company's friends knew that the Raven Mining Company have practically been in possession of the mineral part of that reservation and that they have located their claims.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know another fact in reference to that; that they have expended more than $200,000, and that they have not received in return to exceed $30,000. In other words, the work on the mineral claims has been a complete failure.

Mr. LITTLE Now, my friend can use his own time in that line. You have stated that they have invested $200,000. Have you any official or detailed statement of what it is? They do not come and ask the right to reserve any particular mining claim, covering improvements, but under this provision they will have a hundred mining claims, and they have the right to locate them up to the time of the consummation of this agreement—the 30th of September, 1903.

My friend understands that. They do not have to hold the claims already located, but they can go on and string out this hundred mineral claims along any line that they see proper on the reservation and abandon those they now have. Not only that, but here is the Florence Mining Company. What has it invested? You can tell probably as well as I can. If you will read this correspondence you can probably see where some of it, at least, has been invested.

What vested rights have they? Why should the Florence Mining Company have the right to be on the reservation with any privilege there or right over miners and prospectors that want to go into that reservation with a view of locating mineral claims? These leases to the Raven Company and the Florence Mining Company, to which reference has been made, have but little equity behind them. I have been informed that the provision as to the one is the same as the other, and their leases are subject absolutely to the right of Congress to open these reservations at any time. Is that correct, I will ask the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know.

Mr. LITTLE. I think you stated that you had extracts from the lease.

Mr. CURTIS. No, sir; I did not state that I had extracts from the lease.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is correct. I have examined the lease.

Mr. LITTLE. I have already stated to the House the provisions in part, but will read them in full. They are as follows:

8. All rights are reserved to the United States and to the Indians on said reservation to make and accept allotments in severalty for the benefit of said Indians at any time in the future of such lands within the boundaries of this lease as may at any time be deemed by the Secretary of the Interior suitable for agricultural purposes.

9. This lease and all rights and privileges thereunder are made and accepted by the party of the second part, its successors or assigns, subject to existing law or laws, and any law or laws hereafter enacted pertaining to the said reservation.

10. In no event shall the United States or the Secretary of the Interior in his official or personal capacity be liable in damages or otherwise under the provisions of this lease in connection therewith.

11. No Member of or Delegate to Congress, officer, agent, or employee of the Government shall at any time be admitted to share in this lease or in any wise derive any benefit therefrom.

12. In the event of the extinguishment, with the consent of the Indians, to the Indian title to the lands covered by this lease, then and thereupon this lease and all rights thereunder shall terminate.

They went in there knowing this fact. They accepted this lease upon these expressed conditions, and if the Florence Mining Company has ever made any investment nobody has ever heard of it. I do not believe that the Uintah Reservation belongs to that class of reservations authorized to be leased under the act of 1891, because I think it belongs to the class of Executive-order reservations; but whether I am right or wrong, so long as these leases can be maintained there the result would be that these companies can use these privileges for the purpose of defeating the Government in its purpose to open up this land for public settlement.

I believe apart from the righteousness or unrighteousness of these two leases that this proposition ought to be rejected. Congress has the power to negotiate with these Indians, and if these companies interfere the Government ought to use its power and eject them; but it simply amounts, in my opinion, to this, that the Government of the United States is practically to-day held up by these leases, by the power of the Raven Mining Company and the power of the Florence Mining Company.

They say, in effect, to this Government: "Recognize our leases, give us these privileges at the expense of the rights of other people, and then you can get the consent of the Indians to open these lands. If you do not, you can not get it." I protest that it is wrong; I protest that the policy is venal in itself. It leads to corruption of the lower officials of the Government; it leads to the exercise of improper influence over the Indians; it makes mendicants of the Indians, and counteracts the efforts of the Government to make self-reliant citizens out of them.

The Government ought to open these mineral lands, and, if Congress thinks it right, the Indians should be paid for them; but when they are open, they ought to be open for the settlement of the honest prospectors and laborers of the country. They ought to be opened upon equal terms for all. We ought not by this manner of proceeding to permit these companies to go in and get the cream of the reservation; and then my friend from Utah, who is to defend them, is willing to stand up here and advocate that they are to have these on the ground of vested rights, because he hopes thereby to get the consent of the Indians to open the reservation.

It is an outrage upon the people of this great country. It is an outrage upon Congress. I believe it is due to the House that it should have the right to consider and dispose of the proposition in a legislative way. I did not consent to the report, and I would not do it. I could not approve of it in any particular, for I believe it is pernicious and wrong. I believe it thwarts the wise purpose of the Government to open these reservations to settlement, preserving the rights of the Indians whether these reservations are opened by agreement or by act of Congress.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to give my assent to this proposition. I could not do it. I do not believe if there was a proper investigation that this measure could go through. Resolutions have been introduced but no investigation has been made, but I believe there is enough now here before us to show a state of things that justify the House in rejecting this report. In so far as the local officers on the reservation are concerned, the agents and others, you will find that they have consolidated their interests.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this report may be rejected. I am willing to join any man on any proposition in this bill if thereby we can overthrow this report. It is due to the House that it be done. I believe that it is due to this legislative body that this report be rejected in order that this provision may be legislated upon properly. I urged that a partial report be made to the House for that purpose, but I did not succeed. Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining to the gentleman from Arkansas?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAY of New York). Twenty-three minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am quite as much opposed to the general system of leasing Indian lands as the gentleman from Arkansas. I believe it is a bad and vicious system. It has led to great abuses in the past and will lead to abuses in the future. But, Mr. Speaker, the proposition we have here is not to perpetuate leases but to get rid of some of them and open up one of the great Indian reservations of this country to settlement, so that in the future there shall be no more leases granted upon that reservation. We propose by this amendment pro tanto to get rid of the leasing system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are but two leases that are affected by this amendment. The language of the bill, it is true, is general. It provides that before the reservation is thrown open to settlement those persons who have permits or leases for mineral lands shall have the right to locate 640 acres, except the Raven Mining Company, which is given the right to locate 100 mining claims. As will be shown by the records and files in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, there are but two companies that are concerned—one is the Raven Mining Company and the other the Florence Mining Company.

I want to call the attention of the House, first of all, to the fact that almost since the day that this Congress opened the members of the Senate and House from the State of Utah have been devoting more or less time to this very question. It has been considered by the Senate committee. They have held session after session on this identical question. That committee has had before it every one of these letters which the gentleman has read, and many others which he has not read. They have made an exhaustive investigation of this subject.

Senator RAWLINS, a Democrat, is a member of that committee. He agreed to this conference report and this amendment. The other Senator from my State, a Republican, also agreed to it, and I have agreed to it myself. Every Representative from that State in Congress has agreed to it as being the very best thing to do under the circumstances. We have agreed to it with a full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances surrounding these leases. And if we are to be conceded honesty of purpose, it seems to me that our judgment ought to be quite as good as to what is best to be done in that State with this reservation as the judgment of the gentleman from Arkansas or gentlemen from any other State.

Mr. MCRAE. Does the gentleman from Utah advocate the passage of this amendment because he thinks it is right, or because he can not get anything more?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will answer the gentleman, and answer him fully, but I wish to do it in my own way. The Raven Mining Company has the largest concession, and I wish to discuss that first—to discuss its attitude and its relations toward this reservation and toward this amendment. The Raven Mining Company procured its lease about three years ago. I think the exact date is November 26, 1898. It is a lease covering the elaterite deposit on that reservation. It has no reference whatever to the precious minerals; it is confined simply to that one class of mineral.

Now, elaterite is a mineral belonging to the hydrocarbons, and thus far has produced comparatively little commercial profit. It is not like asphaltum. It can not be used for street paving. But this company has taken hold of this matter, and for these entire three years has been experimenting with this substance to find some way of dissolving it and making it commercially valuable and profitable. This company has spent thousands and thousands of dollars in that one direction—in making experiments.

I will give the House some figures later on as to what this company has done. In round figures, it has spent nearly $250,000 in the way of improvements upon the grounds, in the way of work upon the various mines, in the way of experiments, in the way of salaries of officials, and so on. It has spent this enormous sum of money in attempting to develop this mining industry under its lease. It has received in return, as shown by its books, less than $30,000; so that there has been an enormous expenditure of money and comparatively small return.

Now, this company took this lease in absolute good faith, so far as I am informed. I know nothing that could in any manner challenge the good faith of the Raven Mining Company. It procured its lease in the ordinary way. First, it had a permit from the Secretary of the Interior to go upon the reservation, to negotiate with the Indians, and to procure their consent to the lease. Later the company secured the signature of the Secretary of the Interior to a lease of all the elaterite lands on the reservation. Under that lease the company went into possession.

Now, whatever may be said by way of criticism on this policy of leasing the Indian lands; whatever may be said in reference to its legality—and I have a pretty positive opinion upon that subject, which I have heretofore expressed upon this floor—whatever may be said with respect to those matters, the Raven Mining Company has proceeded under the law as it has been interpreted by the Department and by the courts and is equitably entitled to protection. It is not to be held responsible because the Government has adopted a policy which my friend from Arkansas believes and I believe to be a bad and a vicious policy.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that the Raven Mining Company, under section 12 of their lease, will be estopped from claiming that they have any vested rights? That section reads as follows:

12. In the event of the extinguishment, with the consent of the Indians, to the Indian title to the lands covered by this lease, then and thereupon this lease and all rights thereunder shall terminate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no doubt about that provision being effective.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Now, is it not a fact that under that provision we are authorized to open up that Indian country?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then why not terminate such leases in pursuance of our authority to do so?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This company has taken possession of these lands in absolute good faith and has rights and equities that ought to be respected. I have been stating facts which go to sustain this position. The company has spent $250,000 there; it has erected its buildings upon the mines; it has spent vast sums of money in developing these mineral deposits; it has surveyed and located its claims; and I submit that if we are to throw open this reservation that company is entitled to some consideration; it has some equities in this matter, in view of all the circumstances.

Now, this company has been given the right to locate 100 mining claims. Some gentleman here, when that statement was made, seemed to think that was a great number of claims to permit this company to locate. These claims under the mineral-land laws can not exceed 20 acres. They are lode deposits and must be located under the quartz-mining laws of the United States, under which no claim can exceed 600 feet in width and 1,500 feet in length. They may be and, in many instances, probably will be much smaller, because the company will not care to locate and pay $5 per acre for barren, worthless land; and the mineral veins themselves can be covered and protected within narrower limits than 600 feet.

So that at the very extreme these claims could not exceed 20 acres each, which would be at the very outside 2,000 acres altogether. Now, as a matter of fact, they have located 134 claims, which would probably exceed this in acreage. We are cutting them down to an even 100 claims. They lose 34 anyhow. The gentleman says they may go upon the reservation and locate other claims than these they have already taken possession of. It is not likely that this company, having already located certain claims, having already spent large sums of money in developing those claims, having already excavations and buildings upon them, would go out into the reservation and take virgin ground.

They have been prospecting that reservation for three years; they have been all over it. Presumably they have located substantially every deposit of that character that they have been able to find since they have been there. We cut them down to this number, and it does seem to me that a mere statement of the fact, as far as this Raven Mining Company is concerned, shows that it is entitled to equitable consideration. This lease, if the reservation is not opened, would continue for something like seven years. During that seven years the company could probably get some return for this money that it has expended. If we throw open the reservations without giving them any rights at all, then we simply condemn them to this perpetual loss of over $200,000.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman would not object to an interruption, I would like to know something about the equities of the Florence Mining Company.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will discuss that in a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. How long do these leases continue?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are ten-year leases.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Does this bill undertake to prolong them in any way?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. It undertakes to give them the preferential right to go on the reservation and make locations. In other words, it gives them the right in advance of any other citizen to locate these claims under the mining law and purchase them from the Government. Of course they must pay the Government for the land at the rate of $5 an acre, and that $5 an acre goes into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It does not extend the period for which these leases are operative?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; it gives them this right——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would not the passage of this bill terminate these leases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have said two or three times it will terminate this lease in any event, but we give them this right in recognition of their equities there, in recognition of the fact that they have gone there in good faith and spent this enormous sum of money. Now, let me call the attention of the House to some figures on the subject, and I want to say to the House these figures are taken from the books of the company furnished to me by an officer of the company.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Raven Mining Company.

Up to January 1, 1902, they had expended $205,628.60 in the following manner:

Real estate	$11,405.29
Machinery at factory and mines	16,325.27
Warehouse, premiums, supplies, royalties, expense, salaries and labor at mines	47,009.35
Salaries and labor at factory	42,923.98
Freight, improvement, fuel, and teaming	23,448.44
Experiments and chemists	37,087.72
Expense	27,448.55
		$205,628.60

From January 1 to May 1, 1902, their expenses were $41,123.31, disbursed as follows:

Buildings	$5,000.00
Machinery	7,393.03
Freights	3,041.38
Mills	1,635.55
Development and labor at mines	4,044.90
Labor and salaries at factory	10,108.62
Freight, fuel, and expense	9,929.83
		41,123.31
Total		246,751.91

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will you give me the names of the officers or stockholders of that company?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can give you the names of some of them. Charles F. Pfister, of Milwaukee, I think, is president; at any rate he is a member of the company. John T. Beggs, who is the president of the railway and electric-lighting system of Milwaukee, is another. The Bigelows, of the First National Bank of Milwaukee, Cyrus H. McCormick, Capt. O. H. Morgan, Mr. W. S. Potwin, Mr. B. C. Chambers, George R. Sheldon, and Mr. Gilbert Tolman are gentlemen who are connected with this company. These are all I know of. There may be others.

Now, there is another phase of this matter that will apply to the Florence Mining Company as well as to this. Of course, when this reservation is open, the mineral lands are thrown open to entry and location under the mining laws of the United States. Any prospector has a right to go there and make a location; so that the Raven Mining Company, if it were not given this preferential right, would still have the right to go there and make locations if it could get there in advance of other locators.

It is to be presumed that this company, already being thoroughly familiar with the situation, already being upon the ground—and nobody else having the right to be on the ground, everybody else being excluded from the reservation until the actual day of its opening—by the exercise of superior diligence could probably make location of its claims; so that in all probability we are not giving them anything that they would not be able to get by the exercise of superior diligence for themselves.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not this give them two years in which to locate those claims on a certain reservation a great many miles square.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; it does not give them two years, as I remember it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It gives them until September 1, 1903.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It will be a very short time after the opening of the reservation has been provided for.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the ordinary prospector has sixty days only in which to pay his assessment work of $100? The ordinary individual—any prospector in the West—how long does he have to locate his claim in order to have it recorded and do his assessment work?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no provision in the laws of the United States fixing the time for recording a notice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Well, in your State?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That differs in different localities.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. About sixty to ninety days?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; it is not fixed at any definite time. In some of the districts the by-laws may provide for the record being made within thirty days, others within sixty, and so on.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you know of any longer than ninety?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can not call to mind any. But this is not a mining district.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why give these people so great an advantage over the individual miner?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, I have been standing here and trying to show for ten minutes why these gentlemen have equities there that the ordinary miner has not. These gentlemen are entitled to some consideration because they have spent this enormous sum of money without any return; they are entitled to some consideration because they have erected buildings that if somebody else is permitted to take the claims will pass away from them; they are entitled to more consideration than the stranger or adventurer who goes there.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any information as to the probable extent of those beds and as to whether these 100 claims would probably take the entire deposit?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have some information on that subject, and I am very glad that the gentleman called my attention to it. I intended to speak of it before I got through, but I will speak of it now. These deposits of elaterite are in comparatively small veins. The largest vein they have discovered there, as I am credibly informed, does not exceed 14 inches in width. Upon that vein they have been working, and it has narrowed down in places to 5 inches in width, and it may in further development pinch out entirely and nothing remain.

That is the largest, and from that the deposits go down until they have not even the thickness of an inch. They have attempted to make locations upon these with the hope that they may develop sometime. This particular substance, before it can be made of extensive commercial value, must be experimented upon still further. The company has laboratories at Chicago, and is employing chemists to find out what can be done with it. They are endeavoring to find out whether it is of any great commercial value.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is it not a fact that there are several processes already discovered for converting this material into a commercial product—some of them held by the Raven Company and some by other companies?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, there are some processes by which they make this material into a substance which they market; but as I am informed—I am only speaking from the best information I can get, and not speaking as an expert—they have not reached a point where the product can be made in such quantities as to pay for the cost of extraction and shipping it to the market. It costs an enormous sum of money to take the material to Chicago. In round figures it costs about $35 a ton to lay this material down in the city of Chicago, and only about 60 per cent of it is available when that is done.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is it possible to manipulate this lease by one company, which has also one process of manufacturing the commercial product, to the point of monopolizing that product, and destroying the value of the other man's commercial process?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know of any other than this.

Mr. SHERMAN. Are there not some of these same deposits on the Uncompahgre Reservation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are different. These are small deposits of elaterite. Those on the Uncompahgre are gilsonite, so called.

Now I submit, therefore, that this company is entitled to some consideration at our hands, because of what they have done there.

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman will permit me, have rights been granted to any other companies or individuals to go in there besides these two companies—the Raven Mining Company and the Florence Mining Company?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As to that I do not know.

Mr. COWHERD. What reason is there that these two companies should be given that right and it should be refused to others?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can only state that the Secretary of the Interior stated to me that everybody had equal opportunities—every man who showed ability to take care of a proposition of this kind, and who could satisfy the Secretary of the Interior of that fact, would be given the right to go there and negotiate with the Indians.

Mr. COWHERD. A great deal has been read here about their keeping other people out or not allowing them to go in there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A series of letters have been written by a man, a clerk, an understrapper of the Indian Department, an adventurer. I do not know who he was or anything about it, except as appears from the letters. A certain series of letters that he wrote to Mr. Myton have been read. He and some others were negotiating for a permit. Well, now, it is to be expected that there will be attempts to influence the officials, and there will be schemes and jobs upon the part of such men so long as this system of leasing Indian lands prevails.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is Myton still the Indian agent?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is still agent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He is one of the men?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is one, and this man Harper is another.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He is one of the men that urged these leases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That I can not answer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask if he is not one of the men acting in good faith, and who has vested rights that are not to be interferred with?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not believe Mr. Myton has any interest in the Raven Company. If he has any connection with the Florence Mining Company I do not know anything about it.

Now, so far as the Florence Mining Company is concerned, that company has obtained a permit to go out and negotiate a lease with the Indians. They have come back here and have reported to the Secretary of the Interior that they have negotiated with the Indians and have obtained their consent. If they are allowed to make their selections they will get 640 acres of land, which would give them 32 mining claims.

Now, as to these precious metals, I want to say further that I am more or less acquainted with this reservation, and I do not take any stock in these stories that they are going to find great metalliferous deposits out there. The gentleman from Arkansas has mentioned the prospecting that has been done out there by a man named Rhodes. I know something about these wild stories of the wonderful gold deposits claimed to exist there. Some years ago a man by the name of Rhodes claimed to have discovered gold in the reservation.

I have been told that Rhodes was a miner in California, and when he came to Utah in early days he brought some gold nuggets there, and that when he went out prospecting he went to where he had them cached, and on his return said that he had obtained them from the reservation. I have been told by men who have gone all over the reservation that in their judgment there was no gold or silver deposits upon the reservation of any consequence whatever. As to this I do not know, but I doubt the existence of any great deposits of the precious metals.

However that may be, the Florence Mining Company claim to have obtained the consent of the Indians to their lease, and undoubtedly upon the showing that has been made to the Secretary of the Interior, if this bill does not pass, he will approve the lease, and if he approves the lease the company would have 640 acres of land for ten years.

It seems to me, furthermore, that in view of the fact that they are already familiar with the situation there; in view of the fact that they have their agents who are more familiar with whatever there may be on the reservation than anybody else, they would be able to make their locations in advance of others whether we confer this right upon them or not; and therefore by conferring it we are not injuring any other person. They say they have spent a considerable amount of money in this enterprise—organizing their company, sending people out to negotiate with the Indians, going over the reservation, and work of that character—and if so, they are entitled to some consideration upon that account.

Now, it seems to me, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, that we are not by this means perpetuating the leasing system. We are getting rid of it so far as this reservation is concerned. Unless you adopt this amendment, then nobody knows how long it will be before this reservation can be opened. There are only about 800 Indians upon it. There are 2,000,000 acres of land, a large proportion of which is capable of cultivation.

It is one of the best-watered spots in the West. It is capable of supporting many thousands of people, and it seems to me it is nonsense for anybody to stand in the way of opening that enormous body of land to the settlement of the people, where homes may be built and farms created in the place of the wilderness and the solitude, for the mere sake of preventing these companies from purchasing this comparatively insignificant quantity of land.

Mr. LITTLE. Why has it not been done heretofore; because these companies have interfered?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It has been so charged. It has been said that people interested in getting leases have always stood in the way; that they induced the Indians not to consent to it. It is to be presumed that people who negotiate leases in the future may do the same thing, but this measure does enable us to get rid of that condition, open their reservation, and we may not be able to open it in any other way.

So far as I am concerned, so far as the Representatives from my State and the people of my State are concerned, they want to open these lands to settlement. They want farmers to come in; they want them to enter the land, to divert or utilize the streams, and to establish homes and communities. They are not paying much attention to the wild stories about great gold mines. They want to redeem and reclaim the country, and it seems to me we ought not to refuse to pass this bill, and thus condemn the land to the perpetual occupancy of eight or nine hundred Indians who will condemn it to uselessness and idleness.

They have granted leases to stock men upon it, and in the leases of the stock men there is the same provision that is in the mineral leases, that they shall terminate when the reservation is open. The stock men have made no improvements on the land—it would have been impracticable to do so—and so we have not included them in the operation of the bill.

The chairman of the committee calls my attention to another fact that I want to mention. It is true that some years ago, before these leases were granted at all, the Indians rejected an overture of a commission that was sent out with a view to getting their consent to open the reservation. But my judgment about it is that it is a fact that the people who have negotiated for these leases have since that time intensified their objection, and may do so in the future. This amendment gets rid of this stumbling-block in our way, and under its provisions I confidently believe we shall succeed in obtaining the consent of the Indians and the opening of the reservation.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy much time, but I want to indorse fully and completely the argument made by my colleague, Judge LITTLE, showing why this report should not be adopted. It has developed during this discussion that two corporations, by questionable methods and of doubtful legality, have secured leases for 2,640 acres of mineral lands in an Indian reservation, and this report confirms them.

Now, if that is true, the House owes it to itself to vote down this report and say to the conference committee that these companies can not secure this valuable privilege in this way. Time and time again we have refused to permit these gilsonite lands in the Uintah Reservation to pass into the hands of a monopoly. Repeatedly we have refused to even open it up under the general mineral laws, because it was believed in the judgment of the House to be too liberal for such mineral as had already been discovered. And yet here, after these repeated efforts to save this reservation from monopoly, it is now proposed to legalize leases that were issued contrary to law.

Now, I know nothing whatever of the value of the mineral rights on this reservation, but I do know that the House ought not to ratify leases in this way. By the very terms of the lease read it is provided that if this reservation should be opened the lessee should take nothing by reason of the leases. They can not then insist that they did not make the lease with the understanding that Congress had the power to declare this reservation open under the public-land laws or with any limitations it might see fit to make. The most that ought to be done is to open the reservation under the public-land laws and let these companies secure, with other citizens, whatever they can of the reservation, and so far as I am concerned, I have always opposed that purpose. Yet we are confronted with the proposition of confirming leases which the gentleman from Utah is unwilling to say were made by any authority whatever.

Why, sir, the testimony in the case shows that those who monopolized them had entered into a conspiracy to obtain them. They adopted a code by which they could communicate by letter or wire without being detected as to the propositions pending and the names connected with them. Yet we are asked here to adopt a conference report which has never been printed and which no member of the House, except the members of the committee of conference, knows anything whatever about—a report confirming leases that are not in the possession of any member of Congress—that have only been read by two or three members.

This is a reckless way to legislate, and one, Mr. Speaker, that may bring shame and disgrace upon the House. The proper course is for us to send back the report with instructions to eliminate from it the ratification of these leases. Let us leave them where we find them. If necessary, let us leave the reservation as it is. If it can not be opened honestly and fairly, without confirming these illegal leases, then leave it as it is.

The gentleman from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] promised to answer me whether he joined in reporting this proposition because he believed it right or because he could not do anything else; yet with ample time at his disposal he took his seat without any reference to my question. He knows as well as I do that this proposition is a bad one. He can not defend it upon any other ground than that there are influences behind it that will not enable him to do what ought to be done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I desire to submit only a few suggestions in addition to what I have already said. I find that the first application for this permit of the Florence Mining Company was dated March 15, 1899. In this application this company, through its president, Henry C. Payne, asks the privilege of negotiating a lease with these Indians and submits its reasons why such a lease should be granted. It is as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., March 15, 1899.

SIR: The Florence Mining Company, a corporation of the State of New Jersey, respectfully makes application for a permit to negotiate with the Uintah and White River Ute Indians for a mining lease on that part of the Uintah Reservation lying north of the Strawberry River, the said lease, if negotiated, to cover all of the minerals found in and upon that part of the said reservation.

Very truly, yours, THE FLORENCE MINING COMPANY,
By HENRY C. PAYNE, President.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

On October 10, 1901, it submitted another application for a permit to negotiate this lease. I will read an extract from a statement addressed to the Secretary of the Interior and signed by Joseph K. McCammon, attorney for Mr. Timms and others connected with this company:

In the meantime a considerable number of requests were made by other parties for authority to make mining leases on the Uintah Reservation. Believing that it would be to the convenience of the Department in respect of control and supervision, and knowing that it would be greatly to the interest and advantage of the Indians, all the applicants consolidated their interests, and on January 27, 1900, the Florence Mining Company, as now constituted, was organized. The said company was organized and incorporated for the sole purpose of operating a mining lease on the Uintah Reservation should one be obtained. It has, we are informed, no connection with or interest in any other mining company or any other mining lease, present or prospective.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say in conclusion, it is no pleasure to me to criticise or impugn any officer of the Government, high or low. But when it comes to such a proposition as is indicated by the saving clauses in this amendment in this attempt to open this reservation, I think it deserves the opposition of us all. I believe this proposition ought to have been brought before this House. I believe it was the duty of the conferees on the part of the House to do that, so that the action of the committee with reference to this particular subject might be debated, rejected, amended, or agreed to.

I would not under any ordinary circumstances ask the House to overturn a completed conference report. But in view of the one hundred and odd disagreements in this bill finally agreed to in conference and after reaching this extreme piece of legislation I did not believe it to be my duty toward the House or toward those whom I represent here to acquiesce in this report. Of course I do not care to criticise my colleagues on the committee, who acted upon their own judgment.

But, sir, I believe it my highest duty to insist upon the position I now take in asking my fellow-members to overturn this report and send the matter back to conference. This action need not delay the bill to any great extent; and it may be the means, it ought to be the means, of bringing this legislation absolutely within the control of the House, either by reported agreement or disagreement on this amendment by the conference committee, so that the House may act upon it separately.

The whole system, as indicated in this proposition, is wrong; it is absolutely pernicious to cover up these lands by leases of this character. It stands in the way of the settled and determined policy of the Government to open these reservations, reserving homes for the Indians and protecting their rights.

I have no doubt that the very fact of permitting these applications has stopped the opening of this reservation for six years; and now, if we confirm these two leases we in effect say that unless the rights claimed by the lessees are conceeded to them, although to grant those rights would fly in the face of those very permits and leases which provided that they should not stand in the way of opening these reservations by the consent of the Indians, we stand here simply, as I think, "held up" by these leases in the face of the provisions contained in them.

I can appreciate the position of the gentlemen from Utah, who bend everything to their anxiety to have this reservation opened. I know its importance to them and their State. I believe it right that the reservation should be opened. But I do not believe that we ought to submit to the provisions of this amendment by adopting this character of legislation at this time and in this way.

With this precedent established, we will meet its bad effects in every effort we may make in the future to open mineral reservations to settlement under the public-land laws of the country. Those seeking the special privileges of leasing these lands will stand in the way. They will influence the local agents of the Government in their interests, mislead and impose upon the Indians, and stand as a barrier to the humane policy of the Government in individualizing the Indian and leading him on toward individual and independent citizenship.

Therefore I have urged my opposition, and I shall leave it to my colleagues on the floor of this House to vote as they please about the matter. Now, Mr. Speaker, not desiring to use more time myself, I desire to yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] such time as may remain to me and he may want to use.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has ten minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to enter my protest against this kind of legislation.

Mr. GILBERT. What kind of legislation is it? There are a good many of us who do not quite understand.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is ingrafted on the bill under consideration—the Indian appropriation bill—an amendment which provides for leasing the Uinta River Indian lands in the State of Utah. These lands are supposed to contain valuable mineral deposits; in fact, it is known that there are valuable mineral deposits on this reservation. Leases have heretofore been granted by the Interior Department to two mining companies, the Florence Mining Company and the Raven Mining Company.

As we believe, political, if not corrupt, influences have been used in the Interior Department, through some means, we know not what, to secure these leases; but in the face of the leases we find a provision that they shall terminate when this land is opened for settlement. This amendment opens these lands for settlement and would terminate and set aside the leases held by the Raven and Florence mining companies and restore all mineral lands in the reservation to the public domain, so that individual miners and prospectors could locate their mineral claims thereon under the United States mining laws. This is exactly what I think should be done. But if this whole amendment becomes a law these mining companies will have the right, as I understand the reading of it, to hold the claims they have now for ten years. It gives an extension of ten years' time to these companies from the moment that this amendment becomes a law.

I protest against the passage of this bill for the reason that this is an entering wedge to a new policy to be inaugurated by our Government. Heretofore it has been the policy of this Government to turn over the minerals in the public lands to the discoverer or mining prospector under the mining laws of the United States. The man who goes to the West for the purpose of hunting valuable minerals has the right to locate one mining claim in his own name and he has from thirty to ninety days to locate it and to record it, and it then becomes his property; but if we embark in the policy indicated by this bill we will turn over about 50,000,000 acres of lands now in the Indian reservations of the United States to the Interior Department, so that that Department may create a new leasing bureau, to be known, I presume, as the mining leasing bureau.

If we have that leasing department or bureau created within the Interior Department, then it seems that men only who stand in with that Department can secure these leases. It will also be destructive of the rights of the mining prospector and of the individual miners of the entire country, because they will be debarred from going on these Indian reservations and locating claims. I therefore protest against this Indian mining bureau in the name of the honest, hard-working miners and prospectors of the whole country.

If Congress embarks in this dangerous policy of leasing Indian lands for minng purposes, it will compel the Government to employ agents and inspectors to collect from the lessees the royalty coming to the Indian tribes. In many cases this will cost the Government more than the royalties will amount to, so the Indians will get nothing. This mining bureau will be a hospital filled with broken-down politicians belonging to the party in power. The royalties will be payable to the Indian tribes as tribes, and thus perpetuate these tribes and prevent the breaking up of the tribal relations of the Indians, as should be done at once by the Government.

The money paid the tribes on these leases will only furnish the Indians money for an annual drunk and debauch, and will hinder indefinitely the present plan of the Government to individualize the Indians and make them self-supporting. This proposed leasing system will lead to scandals in the Interior Department, as it will encourage leading politicians of the party in power to use their political influence to secure these mining leases. Undue, if not corrupt, means have been used to secure the leases of the Raven and the Florence mining companies.

The following telegram from the secretary of state of New Jersey shows the names of the persons now forming the Florence and Raven mining companies. It is as follows, viz:

SIR: The Florence Mining Company, a corporation of the State of New Jersey, respectfully makes application for a permit to negotiate with the Uintah and White River Ute Indians for a mining lease on that part of the Uintah Reservation lying north of the Strawberry River, the said lease, if negotiated, to cover all of the minerals found in and upon that part of the said reservation.

Very truly, yours,

THE FLORENCE MINING COMPANY,
By HENRY C. PAYNE, President.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Thoman, on page 14 of Senate Document 154, shows that in addition to Mr. Payne's connection with these leases that Mr. James S. Clarkson, another office holder and shining light in the Republican party, was also using his political influence to secure a lease on some of these Indian lands. Mr. Thoman says that—

On the 18th day of December, 1897, the Indians granted to Hathenbruck & Rhoades, citizens of Utah, a mineral lease of these same lands. This lease was negotiated without the parties first obtaining a permit from the Department, and for this irregularity, as we are advised, Secretary Bliss refused to approve the same.

From time to time since the disapproval by the Secretary this lease has "bobbed up" for confirmation in the hands of different claimants, and on the 15th day of May, 1900, Hathenbruck & Rhoades assigned it to Reed Smoot and Hiram S. Young, of Provo, Utah, as trustees, for the benefit of a corporation to be formed under the laws of the State of Utah. A corporation was formed known as the Rhoades Mining and Milling Company, with a capital stock of $500,000.

The officers and directors of the company are Hiram B. Clawson, president; T. B. Beatty, vice-president; C. B. Rhoades, second vice-president; Hiram S. Young, treasurer; William Torten, secretary; and additional directors, James S. Clarkson, Reed Smoot, William H. Dodge, and James H. Mayle.

Among the propisions of the trustee agreement are the following:

That James S. Clarkson, Hiram B. Clawson, and T. B. Beatty procure the approval of said lease by the Secretary of the Interior; that on the approval of the said lease Reed Smoot and Hiram S. Young, trustees, convey the interests which they hold to the corporation; that the stock be divided among the several incorporators (hereinbefore named), less one-fifth, which is to be retained as treasury stock.

It would seem from this that some of the good people of Utah are not averse to leasehold estates on the Uintah Reservation.

Respectfully submitted.

LEROY D. THOMAN.

Mr. Speaker, I will read an editorial from the Salt Lake Herald, which shows why these Indian lands are coveted by these scheming politicians. It is as follows:

[Salt Lake Herald, December 30, 1901.]

FIND SOURCE OF RHODES'S WEALTH—HIDDEN MINE ON UINTAH RESERVATION IS DISCOVERED—INDIANS GIVE UP SECRET WHY EASTERN SYNDICATE DESIRES TO SECURE LEASE.

"Money rock," as the Indians call gold-bearing quartz, is the prize for which the seekers of a mineral lease on the Uintah Reservation are striving. Information came from the reservation country yesterday that at last the secret of Caleb Rhodes, of Price, as to the location of the rich gold deposits on the reservation had been discovered, and that the Florence Mining Company was in possession of the information.

The syndicate of Republican politicians and others, headed by Postmaster-General Henry C. Payne, has been secretive as to the real object of the quest. It has been given out that deposits of asphaltum and of copper were in view. Now it is stated beyond a doubt that the deposits of gold have been discovered, and that they are of great richness.

RHODES AND HIS GILD.

The story of Caleb Rhodes, the Price ranchman, is well known. For years he has slipped clandestinely to the reservation and has returned laden with gold. Sometimes he had brought in sacks of quartz which was plastered with gold. Sometimes he has broken the rock and washed out the metal, bringing in the native gold.

Too many people have seen the gold and the quartz to doubt its existence, and many a plot has been laid to learn the secret of whence it came. All have failed, however, until now.

The information from the reservation is that with the aid of some of the Indians the location of the gold deposits was learned, and that now the syndicate has the information. The lease calls for 640 acres of land, and if this is located all, or nearly all, on rich gold-bearing veins or deposits it is difficult to conceive the enormous amount of wealth which it represents.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Utah protested against the corrupt methods used in obtaining these leases, as is shown by the protest and letter which I will now read. The first is from R. S. Collett, of Vernal, Utah. This letter is found on page 30, and the protest on page 31 of the Senate Document No. 154:

VERNAL, UTAH, November 29, 1901.

DEAR SIR: We to-day inclose to each of our Utah Representatives at Washington a copy of the inclosed statements, as we wired you on the 27th instant we would do.

Since this paper was drawn up and signed by the city and county officials of Vernal and Unita County the following wire has been received by Senator Bennion and Senator KEARNS: "Send immediately all information obtainable, with affidavits. Matter will be held up till I hear from you."

Now, I wish to state to you, Mr. SUTHERLAND, that there was no white person present at this council except those personally interested in obtaining the lease, hence affidavits would have to come from the Indians, and these we will get if possible. But you can see it will take a little time and the consent of the Government.

At least six different Indians have made the following statements to as many different men, and part of the men, at least, if not all of them, will make affidavit to the fact, or will go on the stand in any court and testify to the fact and will produce, with the consent of the Government, the Indian who furnished the information.

First. That the council was not generally known of among the Indians and that representative Indians usually consulted in such matters were not aware of the council until after it was over. I might mention one of these Indians, in particular, was Charlie Chovaneau, chief of the White Rivers, and one of the most intelligent of them all.

Second. That Messrs. Timms and Henderson were spoken of to the council as being "Washington" men, which, in Indian parlance, means an official of the Government looking after the Indians' rights, when, in fact, these men were the ones who are trying to obtain the lease.

Third. That it was represented that if the lease was consummated the Indians would get their money on the same, whereas if they waited until Congress met action would be taken to open the reservation, and then they would get nothing for their lands, as had been the case with their Colorado lands, and the argument was made stronger by stating that the "Mormons" would be given the reservation lands. Thus were the Indians who were present induced to acquiesce in the scheme to lease. Now, we can get the affidavits of these men to whom the Indians have talked, or we can get the affidavits of the Indians themselves, if the agent will permit us, which is quite unlikely if he can prevent it.

The terms of the lease, if granted, would be an outrage. I am informed they only ask for 640 acres, but they want the privilege of making their selections in mining locations and to have two years in which to prospect before making the same. This would mean that after prospecting for two years they could then make about thirty mining locations on what they might find, while the Utah prospector dare not step onto the reservation. Should they find mineral in paying quantities, they could delay the opening of the reservation indefinitely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, if you will defeat this measure and secure the appointment of a commission of Western men, allowing Utah to have a good representation on the same, and if this commission will come here and treat with these Indians in honesty and fairness this reservation can be opened within one year.

The Indians are not opposed to selling their lands, but must be assured their money is safe and they will not be robbed out of it, as the White Rivers feel they have been done with their Colorado lands.

If you will kindly wire me on receipt of this whether the affidavits of these men with whom the Indians have talked will be sufficient, or whether you wish the affidavits of the Indians themselves, I shall appreciate it. In the meantime we will do what we can to get to the Indians themselves. Personally the signers of the statement inclosed are convinced that Major Myton is an interested party to this lease and that the Indians are telling the truth.

Very respectfully,

R. S. COLLETT.

Hon. GEORGE SUTHERLAND,
Washington, D. C.

VERNAL, UINTA COUNTY, UTAH, November 28, 1901.

DEAR SIR: In explanation of the telegram sent to you to-day, we wish to say that we are deeply interested in bringing about the opening to settlement of the Uintah Indian Reservation in such a way as to give to every citizen an equal chance to share the benefits thereof, and we view with apprehension any attempt to delay the opening or to give to a favored few any undue advantage over the general public.

We therefore take this means of bringing to your notice the following facts gathered from the Indians themselves:

Agent Myton went to Denver and met Mr. Timms and Mr. Henderson, with whom he returned to the agency, and on the following morning held a council with the Indians, evidently prearranged by the agent. In this council it was represented to the Indians that Congress would shortly assemble and that undoubtedly some action would be taken in the matter of opening the reservation; that their lands would be taken from them, and that they would receive no pay for them, even as had been the case with their Colorado lands already given up; that this lease was the only way by which such action of Congress could be forestalled, and that they must act quickly. Only by such argument was the consent of the Indians to the lease obtained.

Through long residence in the county and from close personal acquaintance with many of the leading Indians we are in a position to know that they are willing to dispose of the greater part of their lands whenever they can feel sure that they will receive pay for them, and especially when negotiations are opened by commissioners who are honestly desirous of accomplishing the opening of the reservation, and we desire to enter our earnest protest against the use of any such representations as were made at the council above mentioned.

We also oppose the execution of any lease or agreement that will delay the opening of the reservation, a matter of such vital moment to the people of our whole State, and especially to the citizens of this county.

Agent Myton and several Indians selected as being favorable to the scheme are already in Washington for the purpose of securing the sanction of the Government to the lease, and we therefore urge your immediate and energetic action in opposition to it; and we further assure you that the honest and faithful efforts of a commission, aided by an agent who will assist rather than oppose their efforts, appointed from this State and consisting of men familiar with the Indians and existing conditions, will be able to secure the consent of the Indians to the opening of the reservation and a consequent favorable settlement of this vexatious question.

Very respectfully, yours,

Harden Brennion, State senator; Ward E. Pack, United States commissioner; Peter Hanson, county clerk; W. H. Siddoway, county commissioner; Herbert Tyzvek, county assessor; R. C. Camp, Vernal city councilman; W. P. Vattharp, Vernal city councilman; S. M. Browne, mayor-elect, Vernal; Leslie Ashton, councilman, Utah; S. R. Bennion, councilman-elect; George A. Davis, county treasurer; J. H. Hardy, city recorder; J. H. Mease; R. S. Callett, postmaster, Vernal, Utah; George P. Billings, State representative; O. D. Allen, county commissioner.

Representative SUTHERLAND,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, I will now read a letter from Commissioner Peck and another from R. S. Collett, found on pages 32 and 33 of Senate Document No. 154, which show the connection between the Interior Department and these mining companies whose leases we are now about to ratify. Myton, Harper, and Miller all belonged to the Commission and represented the Government, and Myton has been rewarded for his cunning by being made the agent for these Indians, which position he now holds. These letters expose these men fully, and are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 13, 1902.

SIR: I transmit herewith for your information and use certain papers, consisting of letters, affidavits, etc., relative to the leasing of lands on the Uintah Indian Reservation for mineral purposes, filed with the Department by Hon. George Sutherland on the 11th instant.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

VERNAL, UTAH, January 1, 1901.

DEAR SIR: Your telegram to Mr. R. S. Collett, dated December 23, 1901, stating that the United States commissioner had been authorized to go upon the Uintah Reservation and obtain affidavits of Indians bearing upon the proposed mineral lease reached me at a time when it was impossible for me to go immediately. You were, however, notified of this by telegram.

On December 29 I went over to the reservation, and have spent considerable time among the Indians. However, I only succeeded in getting the four affidavits which I inclose. There are several reasons why I did not get more, among which I report the following: The Indians had been notified, or rather warned, through some person or persons at the White Rock Agency, that a "Mormon" commissioner was coming to the reservation to steal the Indians' talk and send it back to Washington; to look out for him and not talk to him.

I also found many Indians, among them being Sowick, the head chief of the White River Utes, who said that the facts set forth in these affidavits were true, and who also made other statements of the same nature on their own behalf. They would not, however, sign their names to any paper for the reason that they had been misled and tricked so many times they were afraid. They said other men had been to them before now, representing themselves to be authorized commissioners, and after getting the signatures the Indians had been cheated and robbed. For this reason many of them would make statements verbally, and even allow them to be drawn up in writing, but would not sign them because they were afraid it was another trick.

Another reason is that Agent Myton and the five Indians who went to Washington with him had returned to the reservation and were industriously spreading false reports. Mr. Myton arrived at White Rocks on Sunday evening, and on Monday held a council with a few of the Indians, practically the same who were in the former council. The vast majority, however, were not notified of either meeting. I personally saw those who were at this last meeting, and know that the number did not exceed 30. At this meeting Mr. Myton reaffirmed his former statements—that the two men who had been out to see them were representatives of the Government, and that Washington wanted the Indians to ratify the lease, so that the Mormons would not come in and get their lands away from them; that there were now 30 Mormons in Washington trying to get these lands, and if they did not ratify this lease they would not only lose their lands but that their annuity money would be taken away from them. He also told them that the Indian Commissioner had already given the lease, and that next summer there would be a mill put up on the reservation to grind up the rocks, get the gold out, and it would be given to the Indians. Many other stories of a similar nature were told to them and were vouched for by the five Indians who were taken to Washington.

Several of the Indians who were willing to make affidavit were away during my visit to the reservation.

Among all the Indians with whom I talked I found but one who favored the lease. The great majority are opposed to it and to the methods being employed to secure it.

The Indians are very suspicious, and consequently I found it very difficult to get them to understand the nature of my mission, although I had a good interpreter with me, one who is personally acquainted with nearly all the Indians on the reservation.

If more affidavits are desired, others of a similar import can be had at a later date, but, as I stated before, while a large number of the Indians will relate the facts herein set forth and many others of a similar nature, they are not willing to sign anything because of their fear of trickery.

I remain, respectfully, yours,

WARD E. PACK,
United States Commissioner, District of Utah.

Hon. GEORGE SUTHERLAND,
Washington, D. C.

VERNAL, UTAH, January 1, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: Your wire of December 23 was duly received, but unfortunately United States Commissioner Pack could not go to the reservation as soon as it was received, and Mr. Myton, getting home in the meantime, made it much harder for him to get the affidavits of the Indians, as he called them in council and told them the lease was already made; that this Mormon commissioner was coming to steal their talk and send it to Washington, and for them not to talk to him.

The Indians, however, all tell the same story, but the affidavits inclosed in Mr. Pack's report are from the only Indians who dare sign their names to the same; and while this is not as strong as we would like to have made it, we have another story to tell that I think will interest you.

While in Salt Lake Myton gave a News reporter an interview. The inclosed clipping is from the daily News of December 27. When Mr. Mease saw this he said he would show us who was trying to get this former lease, and he showed to Messrs. Browne, Hennion, and myself the inclosed correspondence. Now, we have not been making a personal fight on Myton, but we thought this too good to let go by, so we inclose you the originals, and have forwarded to Senator RAWLINS and Governor Wells a copy each and asked the Governor to call the attention of Senator KEARNS to the same.

And here is the story of the origin of these mineral leases: In 1897 one Dr. Hathenbrook was around here with samples of gold ore that were the finest I ever saw. He said they came from the reservation and was trying to get a permit to go on the reservation to prospect. At that time H. P. Myton was a commissioner assisting in the opening of the reservation, E. R. Harper was the secretary of this commission, and S. M. Miller was the surveyor for the same.

They saw these samples of gold, and while they were yet acting on the commission they began to plan for a "mineral lease" on the reservation. The result was Myton was subsequently made agent and the others hoped to profit thereby.

A plan was formed, with Myton as chief assistant, to obtain this lease. J. H. Mease, post trader at Du Chesne, and John McAndrews, interpreter at Ouray, were taken in to help the matter along. The inclosed letters tell their own tale.

The same plan of action was to be pursued as is now being pursued, and here the hitch came. Mease and McAndrews claim they refused to try to influence the Indians in this way, so they were dropped out and others taken in. Mease, however, failed to burn his correspondence as he was instructed, and McAndrews has a duplicate of the most of it.

Myton, Miller, and Harper are still in the lease. It was Harper whom Myton went to see at Denver before calling the council of Indians. And you will see by these letters that they joined forces with Timms and have nearly accomplished their object.

I also inclose you a copy of the then proposed lease, also furnished by Mr. Mease, and he informed me that this lease was drawn in the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the maps furnished from there also, and that while Mr. Ryan, who is still Acting Secretary in the Interior Department, was deeply interested in the lease, he was not alone by any means.

It was some time before Mr. Mease could be induced to give up the papers, and he assures us that Myton et al. think them destroyed. He is not vindictive toward Myton, but says he wishes to protect himself and not have the whole matter thrown onto him.

He has a large stock of these papers and telegrams, the latter mostly in cipher, and they are all at your disposal if you can do anything with them.

Mr. Sutherland, you can not know the manner in which these Indians are being fleeced and robbed and the manner in which this steal has been planned and executed. These papers are placed at your discretion; we hope you can use them. If you could get a thorough investigation of this agency affair you would be astonished at what would be revealed. And it seems to us that this should be had if an appeal had to be made to the President.

No newspaper talk will be made here of these papers. No one knows of them but the committee that has had this matter in hand. In the event you find them of no value you will kindly return them, that Mr. Mease may get them again. But I sincerely hope you may be able to put a stop to this leasing business and to have a measure passed looking to the early opening of the reservation.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, and assuring you of my warmest regards, I have the honor to be

Very respectfully, yours,

R. S. COLLETT.

Hon. GEORGE SUTHERLAND,

P. S.—Three hundred adult Indians on the reservation, and the Indians all agree that there were not to exceed 30 at the first council.

R. S. C.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate has amended this Indian appropriation bill, among other things, in a way to approve the leases held by the Raven Mining Company and the Florence Mining Company and other applications approved, on file in the Interior Department, for licenses to negotiable leases.

This amendment enacts legislation in an appropriation bill not germane to an appropriation bill under the rules of this House.

The greatest injustice is done by this amendment to the people at large of the United States, and especially the miners in the State of Utah.

The unfairness of the legislation, as it is attempted to be forced on this House, is that the Senate has had this matter before the Senate Indian Committee and are supposed to have considered it. They have had before them the letters, papers, and reports read by me upon which to base their action, none of which have been before the House committee. The Senate attempts to force the House to accept in a committee of conference a fraud upon the people at large and to give to the so-called mining companies rights that they do not possess by the terms of their leases.

Letters found on pages 473 and 474 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this session of Congress show that the parties who are now or who have been interested in these leases, who were in the companies in the beginning, were Henry C. Payne, now Postmaster-General; B. B. Odell, now governor of New York; L. D. Thomas, ex-Civil Service Commissioner, and George F. Timms, of Washington, said to be an attorney and promoter claiming special connection and favors from the Indian Department. In these letters there appears the names of E. B. Harper, of Akron, Ohio, ex-secretary of the Indian Commission and ex-member of Indian Commission; H. P. Myton, ex-member of Indian Commission and at present agent at Whiterocks Agency, Utah; J. H. Mease, Indian trader at Uintah Agency; Miller, merchant at Fort Duchesne; McDonald, veterinary surgeon at agency.

The newspaper clipping, Mr. Speaker, which I now read will further unfold the corrupt practices by which these leases were obtained. This clipping is from a reputable Utah paper.

[Copy of newspaper clipping. Friday, December 27.]

MYTON MAKES A STATEMENT—SAYS HE DID NOT GO TO WASHINGTON TO ADVOCATE MINERAL-LAND LEASE—VIEWS OF OUR CONGRESSMEN—POSITIONS OF SENATORS RAWLINS AND KEARNS AND REPRESENTATIVE SUTHERLAND—WHAT WILL BE DONE.

Maj. H. P. Myton, Indian agent at the Whiterocks Agency, arrived last night from Washington and is at the Knutsford Hotel. He says that he did not go to Washington purposely to advocate the lease of the mineral lands on the reservation, but went on instructions from the Indian Commissioner. The Major claimed that the conference at the national capital had been entirely friendly, newspaper reports to the contrary notwithstanding. He had made a full statement of the situation before the Secretary of the Interior, the Indian Commissioner, Attorney Vandeventer, and the three Congressional representatives from this State. Senator Rawlins objected from a legal standpoint. Mr. Sutherland's objection was that the Indians had not been properly notified, many not knowing anything about it. Senator Kearns did not think there was any particular hurry about the matter.

Major Myton said that the Secretary of the Interior had assured him that 1 square mile of the Uintah Reservation would be leased to the Florence Mining Company. Three weeks before the council was called in Washington the Major said he received a letter from the Department stating that authority had been given the Florence Mining Company to treat with the Indians of the Uintah Reservation. The Major said he immediately called a local council and explained that some white men would come and treat with them for the lease of the land. Such a meeting was subsequently held with 300 Indians present, and by the terms of the lease the Florence Mining Company will have two years in which to prospect and choose their 640 acres of land. This will give them 30 claims. Henry C. Payne was president of the company, but he is going into the President's Cabinet, and his place is taken by Mr. Pfister, of Milwaukee, and the secretary is L. D. Thoman, of Chicago. H. C. Henderson, of New York, and George F. Timms, of Washington, are also interested in the company.

Major Myton stated this morning his belief that the lease to the Florence Mining Company would prove the opening wedge to a further move in this line; only it was as the Indians told the Secretary of the Interior, that they preferred to experiment with the one lease at first, and if that worked all right, then they would be ready to lease more, and this would probably be done.

When asked what the source of all the opposition was at Washington, Major Myton said it was undoubtedly J. H. Mease, who had filed a claim for privilege to lease before the Major went to Washington. Mr. Mease called up the agency by telephone from his store while an Indian council was being held prior to the Major's going to Washington, and wanted to know about his claim, which he held should be considered or else there would be trouble. Major Myton replied that he knew nothing about Mr. Mease's application, and the conversation ended after further intimation from Mr. Mease that there would be trouble if his claim was ignored.

The Major did not hear anything of this claim in Washington, but understood that Mease has stirred up the governor and others to object to the lease proposition. However, this objection did not work. Major and Mrs. Myton left this afternoon for Price and Fort Duchesne. He dropped off at Price the Indians he took with him to Washington.

Mr. Speaker, I will close by reading the affidavit of some of these Indians, showing that these leases were obtained by fraud and collusion. They are found on pages 38 and 39 of Senate Document 154:

Affidavit of Francis La Rose, of Uintah Reservation.

Francis La Rose, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

I was present at the council meeting held at White Rocks on November 16, 1901. Agent Myton stated to the Indians that he had received a letter from Washington; that the two men, Timms and Henderson, were sent out from Washington by the Government and wanted the Indians to make this lease; that the Government sanctioned it. If the Indians did not make the lease, that the white men would come in and take their lands, but the lease of this land would prevent them from getting it.

There were only a few of the Indians in favor of the lease, and not more than twenty or thirty present.

When they were asked to sign the papers, that all but a few got up and went out and refused to sign it.

FRANCIS LA ROSE.

[SEAL.] WARD E. PACK,
United States Commissioner for District of Utah.

Deposition of "Captain" Wood (Indian) or "Bull of the Wood," ex-captain of Indian police, White Rocks, Uintah Reservation, Utah.

Captain Wood, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

I was present at the council of Indians held at White Rocks on November 16, 1901. Happened at White Rocks, and was told there was a meeting. Agent Myton asked me in. Was not summoned to council, but happened to be there, and was invited in.

There were about thirty persons at the council. Among them were Agent Myton and two white men, strangers. Agent Myton stated to the Indians that these two men were from Washington, sent out by the Government for the purpose of making a lease of a certain amount of mineral lands, "about four men's claims;" that they were not "land grabbers," but if the Indians would give them this lease, then that would stop the white men from coming in and getting their lands; if they did not make this lease, then their lands would be taken away from them and given to the white men.

Five Indians volunteered to go to Washington and see what Washington had to say about it. If Washington said it was all right, then they would come back and tell the Indians all about it before any papers would be signed. The Indians who went to Washington were not authorized to sign any papers, but another council was to be held with the Indians at White Rocks.

I don't want the lease made. Didn't want it from the first.

When the vote was taken on the matter of the lease only a few, 3 to 5, voted for it. All the rest were opposed to it and didn't want it.

Bull of the Wood, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that the contents of the above and foregoing affidavit have been read to him; that the same are true to the best of his knowledge and belief.

Affidavit of Joe White, or Little Joe (Indian), Uintah Reservation, Utah.

Little Joe, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

I was not notified of the council held at White Rocks on November 16, 1901.

I have been told by my boy, who was present, also by others, that these two men who came with Agent Myton to the council were Washington men sent out by the Government to make the lease. If they did not lease the land, then the white men would come in and get their lands away from them.

The Indians who went back to Washington were not chosen by the Indians, but were selected by Agent Myton. He picked them out himself, and refused to send men who were opposed to him, but wanted to go back and see what the Government had to say about it.

There were no representative tribe men in the council, only Tim Johnson. All the others were just picked up by Myton.

I am not willing to make lease of mineral or other lands to these men. All the Indians I have talked with are opposed to the lease.

Before these two men came out here Agent Myton told the Indians that he had got a letter from Washington that these two men were coming out here and that Washington wanted the Indians to give them the lease. He also told them that the Government knew these two men, and that they were good men with lots of money.

I understand English, and can speak it almost as well as my own language. I have heard read the contents of the foregoing affidavit, and the same are true, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Affidavit of J. M. Thomas and Joseph Timothy

STATE OF UTAH, County of Uinta, ss:

J. M. Thomas and Joseph Timothy, being first duly sworn, depose and say:

We accompanied and were present with Ward E. Pack, United States commissioner, on the Uintah Reservation, on December 29, 30, and 31.

We heard a number of the Indians say that the statements set forth in the affidavits of Bull of the Wood, Joseph White, Francis La Rose, and others were true; that they were present at the council held November 16, 1901, and heard these statements made by H. P. Myton, Indian agent.

They also related in our presence and hearing that Agent Myton had reported since his return from Washington that Government has already granted the lease, and if the Indians did not confirm it their lands would be taken away from them by the Mormons, of whom there were already 30 in Washington working to get their lands. Also that the two men who came out here were sent by the Government, and the Indians must grant them the lease or their lands would be taken from them and their annuity money be stopped.

They also said that there were only a few Indians present at the council held November 16, 1901, probably twenty or thirty, and that of these only a few, three to five, voted for the lease; that the rest were opposed to it. That Myton selected only those Indians whom he knew were favorable to the lease and rejected others who were not, but wanted to go back to Washington and see that the Indians were properly represented.

They further stated that the reason they were not willing to sign these statements was that they were afraid. They had been cheated and robbed so much and tricked into signing papers until they could not trust anyone.

We also know from our conversation with the Indians that nine-tenths of them are opposed to this lease. We are personally acquainted with nearly all of them, and for the past two months they have been talking to us about these matters.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the gentleman from Arkansas has exhausted his time.

The SPEAKER. He has six minutes remaining.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the gentleman does not intend to use it.

Mr. LITTLE. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], my colleague on the committee, seems to misapprehend, I judge from his remarks, the effect of this amendment. The gentleman from Texas assumes or states that this provision provides for leasing. It is precisely what this provision does not do, Mr. Speaker. Instead of providing for leases, it provides, with the prior consent of the Indians and after the allotment has been made to the Indians now there, for opening up the balance of the reservation under the land laws of the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, if I am wrong, will you just explain this language in the bill:

That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any mineral lease which has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or any permit heretofore issued by direction of the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with said Indians for a mineral lease; but any person or company having so obtained such approved mineral lease or such permit to negotiate with said Indians for a mineral lease on said reservation, pending such time and up to thirty days before said lands are restored to the public domain as aforesaid, shall have the preferential right to locate under the mining laws not to exceed 640 acres of contiguous mineral land, except the Raven Mining Company, which may locate 100 mining claims of the character of mineral mentioned in its lease; and the proceeds of the sale of the lands so restored to the public domain shall be applied, first, to the reimbursement of the United States for any moneys advanced to said Indians to carry into effect the foregoing provisions; and the remainder, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be used for the benefit of said Indians.

Let me ask you the question, If this fact here that you have a permit to lease—if that term "permit" does not give him the right to get a permit from the Indians, and then, after he has the permit from the Indians, to go and select his land?

Mr. SHERMAN. It permits just this, and if the gentleman had read the report he would have noticed that we do not recede from this amendment as it is; we recede from that amendment with an amendment which provides that in lieu of the lease which this Raven Company has, and that in lieu of the right to prospect under a lease which the other company has, they shall have these preferential rights to locate a certain amount of territory, both in lieu of the leases and of the permits they now have.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But if they obtain a permit to get a lease from the Indians, then can they not go ahead and make that lease?

Mr. SHERMAN. It refers to existing leases, but one of which is in existence, I am advised by the Secretary. It relates simply to a permit that had heretofore been granted to a concern called the Florence Mining Company, incorporated, I think, under the laws of New Jersey; it relates to their permit, under which they have negotiated a lease with these Indians and which lease is now pending in the Department awaiting the approval of the Secretary. It relates to that, and it relates to the lease of the Raven Mining Company, which has been approved, and under which they have been operating, as I understand it, for something like three years, and operating upon one hundred and some odd out of 134 claims, and this provision cuts them down from 134 to 100.

Now, it does not provide for leases at all. It does just the reverse. It stops leasing and it opens up this reservation under the land laws of the United States, and in that respect that is where the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] and I differ. I have heretofore—and I am inclined to think I have perhaps been in error about it—advocated the policy of leasing these lands; leasing, of course, under very stringent safeguards, and under the payment of royalties also properly safeguarded by the Secretary of the Interior, so that the proceeds of these leases should go to the support of the Indians, and to that extent relieve the United States of the burden of caring for them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will just permit me. What I want to suggest is this: The very fact that by this provision under these leases we give them this preferential right in order to hold their leases establishes a precedent in the House and in Congress that will operate in every solitary reservation throughout the country where these leases may be obtained and will confront us with the same conditions in the Uintah Reservation. They will first come in the form of obtaining consent of the Indians, and then they will get their permits and leases upon the reservation, and for that reason I object to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think where a lease has been granted—and but a few have been granted anywhere in the United States—where a lease has been granted and where acting in good faith, under the lease, the parties have invested large sums of money, invested, as in the case of the Raven Company, more than $300,000—where a case of that kind exists, whether it be the case under consideration or another, these parties should have their preferential rights. I think that is but just, fair, and equitable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me, I think the application for these leases will tend to stand in the way of negotiation with these Indians to open that reservation. It cuts off all competition or anything of that kind absolutely.

Mr. SHERMAN. The fact that the gentleman may be correct in that, I want to say frankly, has led somewhat to a modification of my views on this question in a half dozen years. But there is no way of meeting that difficulty which he assumes except by legislation with reference to leases. There are very few leases.

I only recall one or two other mineral leases anywhere in the United States. And where these leases exist it does seem to me that if the parties have acted in the utmost good faith—have invested several hundred thousand dollars, and the money is expended for the advancement of the community and the development of the country—that it would be unjust unless those people were allowed certain preferential rights that ought to be respected. Now, the gentleman from Arkansas believes in opening up all these reservations. He is desirous that these reservations should be opened up. My understanding of his objection to the pending provision is simply that in opening it the lessees are given rights which are preferential. I think those who have expended large sums of money ought to be given a preference over others.

There is where the gentleman from Arkansas and I part company. I differ with him. I think these people ought to be protected. I think they ought to have a preferential right when they have expended as much as $300,000 on the leased lands in developing them, in building railroads, in mining the mineral, paying the royalty, and building the factories for preparing the product for market. That is done for the development of the country. The right is given to go in there and locate on that territory, a right which would precede that of the gentleman from Arkansas and myself, or any other resident of the United States, who, under the provisions of this bill, has an absolute right to go after the 1st of October, 1903, and stake out a claim. The right is simply preferential as to time.

This company, notwithstanding they have spent a large sum of money in developing, notwithstanding they have paid thousands of dollars already in royalty to the Indians (which I understand the Raven Company has), must pay for the lands on which they locate precisely the same as any other company or any other individual in the United States who should locate; and all there is in this entire provision is, Is it fair, reasonable, just, and equitable to allow these men who have invested their money there to go in in advance of the general public and take lands upon practically the rights they have already obtained in good faith prior to the general public? That is all there is to it; and it does occur to me that it would be a very strange proceeding if this House, after knowing about that proposition, should vote down a conference report covering 125 items. It would seem to me very strange, indeed, where it involves only 2,640 acres out of 2,700,000 acres.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has not this question been before the House several times and been voted down?

Mr. SHERMAN. Never in this way. Whenever it has been before the House, as it was in the Fifty-fourth Congress, it was then upon the proposition to open up mineral lands under the mineral-land laws of the United States, which proposition I opposed because I believed in the theory of leases; but eventually I was defeated in that matter, in the closing days of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and because that provision which I opposed was in the bill then the President of the United States gave a pocket veto upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was it not also vetoed when the gentleman from Utah, Mr. King, was in Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. The time I have reference to was in the Fifty-fourth Congress. It has been up in other Congresses, but always on the proposition whether or not the land should be opened under the mineral-land laws, or whether the lease provisions should prevail. The lease provision is the law to-day. The law provides for leases, and that has been the form of the contest in the House in every case, and usually, I think without exception, the House has voted in favor of the very proposition covered by this amendment, except that the proposition never has had in it a provision to care for existing leases, because that condition has not heretofore existed when the matter was before the House.

Now, a word in reference to the letters which have been read or referred to. I am advised by the counsel for the Raven Mining Company, Judge Tolman, that these letters were not written by any person ever connected with his company, but were written by those who were attempting to prevent his company from obtaining the lease which they have obtained. They do indicate a questionable method; there is no doubt about that. They do indicate that the writers of these letters better be looked after. We do not differ about that; but they do not relate in any way to either of these companies covered by the provisions in this appropriation bill or in the amendment numbered 65.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are not these companies in there under leases obtained in that way?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am advised that the people who wrote those letters have never been in any way, shape, or manner connected with these companies, but have been in opposition to them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Raven Mining Company is mentioned in the bill, and was not that the company of which Mr. Payne was the first president?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; but Judge Tolman advises me that the writers of these letters, Harper and Mease, were never in any way, shape, or manner connected with these concerns, but worked in opposition to them. I give you the information as I got it. I know nothing about it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is all there is to it, and I do not care to detain the House longer. I think the report ought to be adopted, and I ask for a vote on the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LITTLE) there were 52 ayes and 51 noes.

Mr. LITTLE. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands tellers.

Mr. LITTLE. I think I might as well ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 82, answering "present" 21, not voting 149; as follows:

RELIEF OF ROBERT J. SPOTTSWOOD AND HEIRS OF WILLIAM C. M'CLELLAND.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement alone be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be omitted and that the statement only be read. Without objection, this course will be pursued. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned managers on the part of the House, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7018) for the relief of Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClelland, deceased, beg leave to submit in connection with their conference report the following statement:

This claim is for carrying a much larger amount of mail over route 38122, and also over the route from Fairplay to Leadville, than was expected to be carried or could reasonably be foretold at the time the contract was made for the performance of the service. The increase of mail was due to the unprecedented growth of the city of Leadville, Colo., in a few months, from a small mining camp of 200 inhabitants to a community of 15,000 persons, most of whom were men sending and receiving mail daily. The service was in the years 1878 and 1879. The House bill carried an appropriation of $10,000, but was amended in the Senate by striking out the words "ten thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "fifteen thousand seven hundred and thirty-one." The effect of the recommendation of the committee of conference of the two Houses is to increase the amount appropriated by the House from $10,000 to $12,500 in settlement of said claim.

JOSEPH V. GRAFF,
D. J. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7018) for the relief of Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClellan, deceased, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the words stricken out by the said amendment insert "twelve thousand five hundred."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH V. GRAFF,
D. J. FOSTER,
PETER J. OTEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

BOIES PENROSE,
H. C. LODGE,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard a moment on this.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. GRAFF. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, when this claim was brought up here the other day, not having received the consideration of the House, I took the opportunity to investigate the case, as the report does not seem to me to give the facts to the House. Claims of this character go pretty generally to the Post-Office Committee, although I am willing to admit that the Committee on Claims is entitled to claims, but it has been a custom for many years. Before I was a member of Congress there was a subcommittee of the Post-Office Committee, designated a subcommittee on claims. The Post-Office Committee deals with matters of this character.

Now, here is a case where one side has been heard, and that is the side of the claimant, and some years ago the Senate passed a bill for some $28,000. This year the House passed this bill for $10,000 on the claim that the increase of mail was so great that the claimant was entitled to something. I suppose that is the ultimate conclusion of the committee. Now, the statement was made, I see, in the discussion that this claim was so old that whatever evidence there may have been in the Post-Office Department was not accessible—that it was lost.

I took occasion to go to the Post-Office Department and found all there ever was to this case. This man never made any complaint about an increase of mail until more than nine months of his contract had elapsed, and that was when his contract was cut down the first time—that is, some 20 miles, I think, having been taken off it—and then on a sheet of note paper these contractors claimed that the mail had increased very materially by reason of the fact that they were making better time than schedule time into Leadville, and thereby secured mail that otherwise would have gone by some other route.

Now, then, one of the equities in this case is that they carried locked mail over another route. That is one of the equities urged. Now, permit me to say that these parties were not contractors over that route. I am willing to admit, however, that they may have been subcontractors, but they were not even subcontractors of record; and as subcontractors, admitting that they were, they had no claim against the Government of the United States. There are probably a hundred cases of this kind. I do not know but what there are 500 as old as this, and many of them have much stronger evidence than this case.

Now, while $12,500 is not a great amount of money, yet if Congress shall pass one case where there is not a scintilla of evidence in the Post-Office Department, and where there was no extra work done, then you must necessarily establish a precedent that those who have greater claims should be passed, too. I suppose the case has gone too far. I did not happen to be in the House at the time the case was called up, and probably if I had it would have passed just the same.

I see that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Moody) had some controversy with either the chairman of the committee or some member of it, and made the suggestion that he hoped this would not be accepted as a precedent, and I think the person questioned said, "Oh, no; it should not be accepted as a precedent." Yet, if it is passed, it must be accepted as a precedent. Now, then, this claim was passed once for $28,000, and if they are entitled to $28,000 they should have it; they should not have $12,500.

But I say to the gentleman and to this House that the Post-Office Department, the parties who should be communicated with in a case of this kind, have not and never have had any evidence in relation to the carrying of any large amount of mail here except this one letter, written on a sheet of note paper, nearly a year after this gentleman began his contract and during the period for which it is claimed the largest amount of his claim accrued—that is, $7,600, where you figure $15,731 was earned before he ever made any complaint—and then it was simply a suggestion that by reason of the fact that they were making better time than contract time that they were getting more mail.

Now, why did they make better time? Because there was opposition and they had to make better time. Another equity urged in this claim, although I see it is not contained in this report, is that they had a contract for carrying this mail for six days and they carried it for seven. Now, they asked to carry it for seven days. They run the stage seven days and they had to carry the whole mail anyway, and they wanted to accommodate the people or they wanted to cut Monday's mail and make two loads of it, and hence came to the Post-Office Department and asked that they might be permitted to carry this mail seven days.

That was another one of the equities urged when this claim was $28,000. I felt as the case was called to my attention that I could not permit this matter to pass without offering these suggestions. I do not believe this case should receive the assent of Congress. I will not deny that the men may have some equities, but the Post-Office Department never has been heard in this case. The gentleman's claim has been presented wholly on his own side, and the Government, which is interested, never yet has had the opportunity to appear in this case.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for five or ten minutes?

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman for ten minutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, the facts in connection with this case are plain and, it seems to me, ought to convince anyone that there are great equities in the case. It appears that there was a contract entered into by these parties with the Government to carry the mail from a town by the name of Morrison to Fairplay, and then another contract between Fairplay and Leadville. Whether that latter contract was directly with these parties or whether they were subcontractors is immaterial, because it is unquestioned that they carried the mail. At the time that contract was let Leadville was a place where there were 200 people living. The great carbonate discovery was made at that time, and in less than a year, much less than this contract provided for, say for almost all the time, this amount of mail jumped from 150 pounds a day to over 2,000 pounds.

Now, no one can contend that the contractor contemplated carrying mail of this size at the price he had taken it on an average of 150 pounds per day; and if that is correct, and the mail almost instantly increased from carrying the mail for 200 population to 15,000 population, it seems to me that no one can contend that there is not great equity in this bill.

Now, what is the amount? The Senate committee reported $28,500 as the proper amount to compensate these people. It passed in the Senate at that amount. When it came over to the House it was not considered. This bill has been introduced time and time again. At the last session of Congress it was reported by the House committee at $15,700. It has been passed by the Senate at $15,700. The House cut it down to $10,000. The Senate reported it at $15,700, and it passed the Senate at that. The conferees have now agreed that the amount should be divided, and that $12,500 should be the amount.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we take into consideration the amount of the cost of transporting goods at that time and transporting express matter at that time between these points and Leadville, it seems to me that no one could contend that this is an exorbitant amount that is allowed. The price of express matter was about 7½ cents. Now, 7½ cents a pound on 2,000 pounds would make the carrying of this mail $52,000 that these parties should get; and by reason of being compelled to carry this mail matter they were compelled to refuse express matter that they might have carried.

Mr. LOUD. They could put on another stage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I do not know as to that. They say they had to turn it over to other contractors, to other parties, without any right to have any compensation for the express matter; and if they had carried the express matter that would have resulted in their getting $52,000. Now, in equity it is fixed that the Government is to pay them $12,500. The gentleman from California has stated that one of the equities in this case is that they took their mail by another route, because it was a shorter route; but he does not tell the House that they were also compelled to carry the mail by the long route. There was at the time a desire on the part of the people of Leadville to get their mail in quick, and you make them get from the man who was the agent for the Colorado post-office department, to require them to carry like mail, only a portion of it, by a shorter route, and that route was from a point called the Western Pass.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman allow me? These parties do not appear as contractors over that route or as the agent of that route.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Nevertheless they carried the mail. They may have been subcontractors. It is the same thing. They never expected that the mails would be over 200 pounds, and consequently they have an equitable claim to it the same as they have in the matter of Leadville.

Mr. LOUD. But I say to the gentleman that they do not appear at all to have been the contractors. They may have been subcontractors.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is all.

Mr. LOUD. But their names do not appear.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the evidence shows that they carried the mail, and that the mail increased from 150 pounds to over 2,000 pounds a day, and that they were required to carry like mail by a shorter route. That is the evidence, plain, according to the evidence that has been submitted, and it seems to me——

Mr. LOUD. They were not required to carry the mail that way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They, by virtue of their special contract, were required to do so.

Mr. LOUD. They took another route entirely, and it has nothing to do with this.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; this is in liquidation of both claims. It says so in the bill itself. According to this, they were required to take the locked mail by one route—the shorter route—and at the same time take the heavy mail around by another route which was much longer, and consequently it required double the force, almost double the number of men, double the horses, double the coaches that were required to take the mail by the one route. It was for the accommodation of the people and at the instance and at the direction of General Adams, the superintendent of the Post-Office Department in Colorado.

Mr. GRAFF. What kind of roads did they travel over?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The crudest kind of mountain roads.

Mr. LOUD. Were they any worse than when they took the contract?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether they were or not. They took the contract on the supposition that the mail would be a hundred and fifty pounds a day instead of a mail being 2,000 pounds a day, and there is a good deal of difference between hauling a mail over rough mountain roads that weighs 150 pounds and when it weighs 2,000 pounds.

Now, if you compute this on another theory, if you take the amount of mail actually carried and compare it with the amount the Government was to pay on the theory that it was 150 pounds, then the contract would entitle these parties to $46,000 over one route alone. But the Government has allowed only $12,500.

Mr. PAYNE. Did they not carry fifteen times as many passengers on account of the growth of the travel?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know about that.

Mr. PAYNE. Have they made any proposition to divide up the profits on that with the Government to make the thing equitable all around?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The gentleman will find that this mail had to be carried by special wagons and coaches.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They could not carry 2,000 pounds of mail and carry passengers besides over these mountain roads. Two thousand pounds of mail matter would constitute a load of itself, and they could not carry many passengers besides.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill has been considered by a committee of the House, by a committee of the Senate, not alone at this session, but in a number of sessions, and the Senate has passed the bill repeatedly at higher figures than the amount that the conference committee agreed to; and in addition to that the House committee has approved by its own vote on a previous occasion a greater amount than the amount recommended by the conference. It seems to me, under these circumstances, that the conference report ought to be approved.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO AS STATES.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States. And pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between those who favor the bill and those opposed to the bill, and that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] control the time on the other side and that I be allowed to control the time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) known as the "statehood bill;" and pending that motion he asks unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between the two sides of the House, the time on the right to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], and the time on the left to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts if the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Massachusetts are not both on the same side of this question?

Mr. KNOX. I had already stated that the time should be equally divided between those who opposed and those who favored the bill.

The SPEAKER. That would follow without any request.

Mr. KNOX. I will agree to extend all the time desired to the gentleman from Ohio or any other gentleman he designates, and in the order that he designates.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the custom has always been, when there are two sides and the time is to be divided and controlled on the floor instead of by the Chair, that both sides should be represented in the control of the time.

Mr. KNOX. It is customary and usual that a part of the time be controlled on one side and part on the other, and I assure the gentleman that he shall lose no opportunity——

Mr. SHERMAN. Why not let the Chair control it? You fix no limit to debate.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, no.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why not leave it to the Chair, with the understanding that the time is to be equally divided?

Mr. KNOX. Gentleman on one side and the other desire to have an equal division in that regard; that as many shall speak upon that side of the House as upon this.

Mr. SHERMAN. I assume that would be followed as near as might be. On the Cuban bill, for instance, those against the bill occupied more time than those in favor of it, but the Chair divided it as nearly equal as he could, and I assume that course will be followed in this case.

Mr. KNOX. If we have an absolute agreement that it should be divided——

Mr. PAYNE. It is not usual to divide the time this way and farm it out on either side, unless there has been a time agreed upon as a limit to the debate, and I suggest that the gentleman let it go.

Mr. KNOX. I agree to the force of what gentlemen say. The complication arises from the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee is in favor of the bill and I am in favor of the bill, which makes it rather an unusual state of affairs.

Mr. PAYNE. Then it is all the more necessary that the Chairman should control the matter. I suggest to the gentleman to withdraw the proposition. I do not like to object; but if he insists, I shall be obliged to do so.

Mr. KNOX. Very well; I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill embracing acts to enable Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma to form constitutions and be admitted into the Union on an equality with the other States. The bill has the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Territories. If there was any doubt whatever in the minds of the committee—and I do not say that there was—upon the question of admitting any Territory, there was no doubt that if any one of the three Territories was entitled to admission they all were. There was no well-defined dividing line of principle or precedent upon the one side or the other. It could not be said that one Territory was entitled to admission and another was not.

Would you undertake to say that a Territory having 500,000 people was entitled to admission and a Territory having 200,000 was not? Then you would have to face the precedents of the past, admitting a majority of the Territories of this country with less population than 200,000. Would you say that a Territory having $60,000,000 of taxable wealth should be admitted and one having $30,000,000 should not? Then you would run counter to the precedents under which a majority of the Territories have been admitted with property of less value. Would you raise an issue in regard to the territorial extent of these communities? Then the decision would still be in favor of admitting all. From the evidence submitted it was impossible to say that the people of any one of these Territories so far excelled the people of any other, either morally or intellectually, that the one should be admitted and the others should not.

Then, in view of the declared policy of both of the great parties of this country, the Democratic and the Republican, that all these Territories were entitled to admission, the conclusion was irresistible that they were entitled to these enabling acts, and the committee accordingly reported the bill.

The three measures embraced in this bill are entirely separate. Although contained in one bill, which has been called an "omnibus bill," they do not run into each other or relate to one another in any way. They are, in fact, separate bills. They are similar to bills formerly passed by Congress for the creation of States from Territories. They are well founded upon past precedents; and while gentlemen may differ in opinion as to the propriety of admitting any or a part or all of these Territories, I do not think it will be found that the bill in itself is not well calculated to carry out the purpose desired, is not sufficient, with possibly slight verbal amendments, for the object in view, if it shall be the opinion of the House that it is just and reasonable at this time to admit these Territories.

The bill provides that the electors of each of these three Territories—those qualified to vote—may choose delegates to a convention. Oklahoma will have a convention of 75 delegates; Arizona a convention consisting of 36 delegates; New Mexico a convention consisting of 111. The house and council of Arizona have about 36 members. The representation in the other two Territories is enlarged, for no other reason that I could ascertain except to arrive at fair fractions in dividing the people of the Territories.

The qualification of electors is generally that they shall be citizens of the United States, 21 years of age, and residents for six months within the Territory, with the exception of Arizona, where a residence of one year is required. The convention is to be called in Oklahoma by a proclamation of the governor within sixty days after the passage of the act; in Arizona and New Mexico within thirty days. The conventions are to be respectively at the capitals of the various Territories. I should have said in passing that the apportionment for the election in Oklahoma is to be made by the governor, the secretary of the Territory, and the chief justice.

Each convention, when it has met, shall adopt the Constitution of the United States, and thereupon is authorized to form a State constitution, which shall contain the general provisions of our constitutions, including the broad guarantees of the rights of citizens—what is called the "Declaration of Rights."

The constitution is to be republican in form, making no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and, of course, is not to be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. These constitutions are to provide, first, toleration of religious sentiment. No inhabitant shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

The people also in this constitution disclaim forever all rights to the public lands lying in these Territories and the lands which have been set apart for the Indians. They still are to remain in control of Congress. Now, there is one special provision in regard to the constitution of Oklahoma to which I wish to direct the attention of the committee. It provides that the Territory of Oklahoma shall in its constitution by irrevocable ordinance express its consent that the Indian Territory, in whole or in part, may at any time be annexed to it and become a part of the State.

There is difference of opinion as to whether the Indian Territory should become a part of Oklahoma, and the power to decide that is in Congress, and this bill leaves it in Congress in the future, but compels Oklahoma in its constitution to consent to whatever act Congress may take in that matter. The convention, after adopting the constitution, provides by an ordinance for submitting that constitution to the people of the Territory. If the people of the Territory ratify it when submitted by a majority vote, then the result is transmitted to the President of the United States. If the constitution is found to conform to the provisions of the Federal Constitution, then he in proclamation announces the result and the Territory becomes a State.

It is also provided that this convention may enact that the Representatives in Congress and the State governments may be elected at the same time that the question of the ratification of the constitution is submitted to the people, but that the State government shall remain in abeyance until admission to the Union is finally declared. It is provided in the bill that Oklahoma shall have two Representatives until the next census or until Congress shall otherwise enact.

Arizona has one Representative until the next census and New Mexico one Representative until the next census or until Congress shall act. It also provides that after the State is admitted the legislature may meet and elect two United States Senators, and they, with the Representatives, shall be admitted, with all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives in Congress. The bill extends to these new States a part of the public lands for school purposes, for public buildings, and for internal improvements. The bill gives four sections to each State—16 and 36, 13 and 33.

New Mexico has already had two, so she takes two by the bill. The lands that are given to Oklahoma have been substantially those given by previous acts of Congress, and upon which it is unnecessary to comment. Ten per cent of the future sales of public lands in these Territories are given for school purposes. This is an increase of 5 per cent of the amount that has been given to Territories in the past, with the exception of Utah, but the committee felt they should be liberal with these three Territories in the matter of public lands and the school funds, and, with the exception of Utah, this is the first time that we have attempted to appropriate what are called desert lands in States that are admitted. The lands are not of the value, of course, of those of the States that possess richer soil.

In lieu of other general provisions for the support of schools which the general law provides the land is given here, naming the amount of acres that go to each State and limiting the purpose for which it is given. The courts are changed to conform to other courts in the States of the United States. Each one of the Territories is made a judicial and an internal-revenue district. A district court is created, with a judge at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and a marshal and clerk are provided, who are to be paid as they are now paid in the Territories.

Oklahoma is placed in the eighth judicial circuit, Arizona in the ninth, and New Mexico in the eighth judicial circuit. Provision is made for the preservation of the status of litigation and the succession of one line of courts to the other, so that the rights of all parties litigant will be preserved and amply carried out. These are the substantial provisions of the bill. When it comes to be read under the five-minute rule, if there are errors or faults they can be easily remedied.

I do not think it is necessary to take the time of this committee to urge the justice and the reasonableness of the claim of Oklahoma to be admitted to the Union. I believe that almost every gentleman on the floor would be quite willing and desirous to vote for the admission of Oklahoma. If Oklahoma needs any credential for admission to the Union, it is found in her brief history of only twelve years. You know what the Territory is. Its extent is about equal to Ohio. It has a mild and healthful climate; it has the rich prairie soil of Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas. It is more fortunate than her sister Territories of New Mexico and Arizona in having a sufficient rainfall. It is almost the paradise of the agriculturist, and one remarkable thing about it is that nearly all the land in Oklahoma is occupied.

There are but 4,400,000 acres left of all the lands now open to homestead law, and the homestead law has prevailed there in the occupation of land in the past. It is a Territory of homes, and idleness in Oklahoma does not exist from choice. Now, what population is there in this Territory? More than half a million people—people who have come from the States. Men who have gone to better their condition; men who do not seek the prizes of life without being willing to work for them. They are an educated people. The percentage of illiteracy in Oklahoma is 3 per cent, which compares very favorably with any other State or Territory or any other part of the United States.

They have been there, we may say, twelve years, and everybody knows what they have accomplished. They have created $60,000,000 of taxable wealth by the last census returns. They have established 50 cities and towns, containing every necessity and convenience of modern civilization. They have carried there a free press. More than 200 newspapers—daily, weekly, and monthly—are published there, some of them of a very high order of literary merit.

They have established there not only the free press, but they have established the free school, according to the American idea of school, that is represented first in the district school and that culminates in the normal school and university. They have one of the most excellent school systems in the country. They have about 2,500 district schools in Oklahoma and the same number of teachers there. It may truly be said, and is said, that there is not a home in Oklahoma but what is in convenient distance of a good common school. There are 114,000 school children. We have admitted Territories into the Union as States whose whole population did not equal the number of school children to-day in the Territory of Oklahoma.

In addition to this they have higher educational institutions. They have a university there, an agricultural and mechanical college, and two normal schools, and they have a normal university for colored students. In addition, they have in preparation one establishment for a normal school and a university preparatory school, and the buildings for these are already in process of construction. I wish to say here in passing, for the credit of people in Oklahoma, that their public buildings, their schoolhouses, are far in advance of those in many of our oldest communities. The attendance upon these higher institutions in Oklahoma was 1,887 students. In addition to all this, the Government has a number of Indian schools there which have been founded in the past.

They have the free church. The value of church property in Oklahoma is half a million dollars, and the church membership of Oklahoma is 65,000. The commerce of Oklahoma was very extensive last year; and they have the means of carrying on this commerce, as shown by the resources of the banks, $14,000,000; and deposits, $12,000,000. Now, we have in this Territory, a free press, free schools, and a free church; let us give them the free town hall, with a free polling place, where they can vote for their own rulers and their own lawmakers. [Loud applause.] Such is this Territory of Oklahoma; peerless among the Territorial Commonwealths. Its people will be proud of their place in the Union of States; but I believe the people of the nation will be proud when they look upon the new star upon the flag.

While all are substantially agreed as to Oklahoma, there is among members some difference of opinion as to New Mexico and Arizona, and in many respects New Mexico and Arizona may be considered together. New Mexico is the oldest of our Territories. It has been a Territory for more than fifty years. This applies also to Arizona, because Arizona was a county at one time of New Mexico, and was so for many years, Arizona being made a Territory in 1861.

The land which comprises these two Territories was taken from Mexico by conquest, and taken fifty years ago; and since that time the people of this Territory, including Arizona, have seen California admitted as a State; also Colorado and Utah, part of the same Territory, and they have been refused. It is not surprising that there is a feeling of disappointment and a feeling that they have been wronged, that they have been injured—perhaps not entirely just.

Now, we have some claim. I do not go to the full extent of saying that New Mexico was absolutely promised immediate admission into the Union as a State, but there is very much force in the claim that she was promised admission to the Union by the treaty of peace concluded February 2, 1848, known as the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. By that treaty it was provided that—

> Territory acquired by the Mexican war and under the treaty should be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time to be adjudged by Congress of the United States to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States according to the principles of the Constitution

Now, there is no definite time fixed when this most glowing and beneficent promise made to the people of New Mexico should be fulfilled, but I think that lawyers, and, indeed, all members of the House, would agree that it meant that they were going to be admitted early. At any rate it meant they were to be admitted in a reasonable time—not that they were going to be kept out indefinitely. There was no condition about this treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo that they were to remain a Territory for fifty years. If there had been I do not believe it would have been signed.

Neither do I find in this treaty any provision that they should be admitted as a Territory when a majority of the people are Whigs, Democrats, Republicans, or Know-nothings. We find nothing of that kind in the treaty that was made with these people.

Mr. GROSVENOR. With what people?

Mr. KNOX. Not with the people; the treaty was made with Mexico, but the promise was made to these people.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not understand it so.

Mr. KNOX. I am afraid the gentleman is not listening.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, yes; I am listening.

Mr. KNOX. It was the territory acquired by the war which was covered by the treaty. If we made the promise, let us keep it, and if we did not make it, we are not bound to keep it. That is all there is to that.

Now, since that time, the people of New Mexico have been to Congress over and over again for admission as a State. They felt that they were entitled to be admitted at the same time California was, which you all remember came in at once, without any Territorial government at all, practically. At that time they formed a State constitution; they elected Senators and elected Representatives fifty years ago and sent them to Washington, supposing they were to march in, in all the panoply of a great United States Senator and perhaps the somewhat lesser panoply of a member of the House of Representatives, and be received.

They were disappointed and went home. Since that time they have formed three State constitutions in New Mexico for the purpose of being admitted as a State. Every one of these constitutions will compare favorably with the constitution of any State in the Union to-day. It shows the character of the people, and what laws they would form if you gave them a chance. When they had the chance themselves they formed the most admirable constitution, which shows that they will do it again if we will let them have the privilege that they seek here.

In addition to showing that, it shows that the people of New Mexico want to come into the United States. That is something. If there is a class of people in this great country that want to become a part and parcel of the Union of States, and it is settled that some time or other they are to be a part and parcel, that that is their destiny, that to me is a good reason why the privilege should be granted to them. It shows also that when we do admit them they will take an interest and pride in becoming the equals of the other States.

But suppose we leave out all questions of equity and look at New Mexico as it is for a moment. It is vast in size. It contains about 122,000 square miles. It is as large as the Kingdom of Great Britain, Ireland, and Wales. It is a land of sunshine, good climate, and cloudless skies. Its misfortune is, as well as the misfortune of Arizona, that so much of the Territory is arid land. But it possesses a vast amount of the finest land. They have great grazing lands in New Mexico. Their shipments of cattle at the present time are very large, and New Mexico also is a great sheep-producing and great wool-producing country.

I think it is the greatest in the United States, even exceeding the great wool products of the State from which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] comes. I have some gratification in that, because they made this great increase after we had given them the schedule of the Dingley bill that my friend from Ohio had some slight hand in making.

New Mexico, while it is arid, has a large number of fine streams. The valley of the Rio Grande, the Canadian, the Pecos, the San Juan, and the Gila rivers are broad and fertile domains in themselves—great states in themselves, the valleys of those rivers.

New Mexico is rich in minerals, rich in the precious metals, but the chief mineral wealth of New Mexico is in coal. She has almost boundless resources in the possession of fine coal, which is one of the surest foundations of future prosperity that any Territory can possess—the great power upon which we must depend for years, and, so far as human foresight can see, for centuries to come.

I am not going to read any extracts from reports, but I wish to say just a word in regard to mineral deposits. The coal and coke industry in that Territory gives employment to 2,000 persons. The coal output for the last fiscal year was 1,217,530 tons, valued at the mines at $1,606,000.

The coke production is 42,732 tons. According to official statistics, the percentage of increase of the coal production of New Mexico is greater than the percentage of the whole of the United States or of Colorado or of the great coal State of my friend from Wyoming. There can be no doubt that from now on the coal output of New Mexico will increase rapidly. For this year arrangements have been made or are being made to develop large coal fields heretofore untouched, and in less than a decade New Mexico will surpass Colorado, Wyoming, or any other Western State as a coal producer.

A very significant fact in regard to New Mexico is the impetus that seems to have been given in the last few years to business. There has been a steady growth, as is indicated among other ways, by railroad construction. The railroads are very quick to take advantage of prospective rapid development They examine very carefully at the present time—I will not say they always did, with reference to future development—before they build railroads extensively. There are more than 700 miles of railways now in construction in New Mexico, and the prospect is good for 1,000 miles being added during the present year.

A word about the people of New Mexico. There has been a great deal of talk about those people—about their being Spaniards and Mexicans and "greasers"—people who do not come up to the American standard, who have lain without progress for a great many years. Such is not the fact. As nearly as I can ascertain from the statistics and from the other information obtainable, not over two-fifths of the people of New Mexico are of Spanish or Mexican descent.

The number of people in that Territory was given by the last census at 195,000, but the claim is made by the governor, upon very good reasons, that the population there is much larger; that the census was taken at an unfavorable time of the year, and that the precincts which the census enumerators had to traverse were so enormous in comparison with those usually allotted to enumerators that it was impossible for an accurate census to be taken. In some cases a single precinct was as large as the State of Rhode Island.

Of these people the best information is that about two-fifths are of Spanish or Mexican descent. But you must consider that any Spaniard in New Mexico, unless he be an immigrant, under 55 years of age, must have been born under our flag, is a native American, and is entitled to be designated by some other name than a Spaniard or a Mexican or a "greaser." The immigration into New Mexico from Mexico has not been worth considering. The persons constituting this Spanish population are permanent settlers. They do not possess even the same weakness which our own pioneers had of going forward to a place, staying a little while, and then, when they heard of something better farther on, moving forward. They are conservative; they are loyal; they are patient.

The people of New Mexico have always been patriotic. They sent their soldiers to the field in the war of the rebellion. They furnished some 6,000 men. I think they furnished all the troops that were used to defend New Mexico when it was invaded. There are to-day in New Mexico 1,200 pensioners; men who enlisted from that Territory to serve the cause of the Union; pensioners on account of wounds or disability incurred in that service for the Union. They are good enough for me to sit with as companions, whether in the House of Representatives or anywhere else. [Applause.]

New Mexico furnished her full quota of men for the Spanish war. Her membership in the Rough Riders, which our President commanded, was, I think, larger—I know it was larger per capita—than that of any other State or Territory in the Union. The soldiers they sent to the Spanish war, in all regiments and all branches of the service, were more numerous per capita than those of any other State or Territory of the Union. This is a proud record for the people of that Territory; and I am willing to take them by the hand and admit them here and bid them God speed in going forward with this great nation. [Loud applause.]

They are a cultivated and intelligent people. The immigration into New Mexico in recent years from the Western States has been large. During last year alone there were 7,000 homesteaders who settled in the Territory of New Mexico, and all these entered at a single land office. Hear what the governor of the Territory says:

> The great increase in the number and extent of land entries in the Santa Fe land district during the past fiscal year is an indication that New Mexico is rapidly settling up and that a day is approaching when desirable Government land will be very scarce. During the fiscal year, in this, one of the four land districts of the Territory, 349,189.54 acres were disposed of. At that rate it will be readily seen that it will not take many years before every available acre in the counties of Bernalillo, Colfax, Guadalupe, McKinley, Mora, Rio Arriba, San Juan, San Miguel, Santa Fe, Taos, Socorro, and Valencia, which comprise the Santa Fe land district, will have passed out of the ownership of the United States.

They have an excellent school system. I have heard considerable talk about the schools of New Mexico. I have heard it said by members of the House that they have schools in which Spanish is the language taught, and that that is decidedly objectionable. Generally speaking, that statement is not correct. They have a very excellent school system. It is the district school system of New England and the rest of the United States.

The governor is at the head of the educational board. The only provision in reference to the Spanish language that I can find in their school law is that in certain rural districts where the Spanish language is spoken the teacher who goes there shall be qualified to teach in both languages. And in looking over the list of school books that are authorized to be used in New Mexico I found but two that were in the Spanish language, and those were elementary readers. There are 800 schools in New Mexico. Of these I think there are only 50 where the Spanish language is taught at all.

I have heard it said that the public records in New Mexico were in the Spanish language. That is not so. They are all in the English language, and the only exception that I can find is that in some remote quarters where the Spanish language is spoken, in some outlying districts, if a man wishes to deed his property, where the man to whom he sells is a Spaniard, the deed is made in the Spanish language and when it is received at the recorder's office it is recorded in the Spanish language; but when there is a certified copy asked for to be used in court or in any proceeding, it is accompanied by an English translation.

They have in New Mexico the higher institutions of learning, the university, the College of Mechanics and Arts. The number of school children in New Mexico is 53,000. In this Territory, which the census gives as having a population of 195,000, the school children number 53,000, of whom 47,700 are enrolled as scholars, with an average daily attendance of 31,000, 90 per cent of the whole being enrolled on school rosters, and 60 per cent in actual daily attendance.

But I wish to call the attention of the committee to another fact in regard to the schools in New Mexico. The legislature of New Mexico voted to tax the people 3 mills on a dollar for the support of the schools in that Territory. That is a larger per capita tax for the support of schools than any State or Territory has ever imposed upon its citizens. If there has been illiteracy in New Mexico, and I agree that there has been, this shows clearly that the people are determined and have made provision for its remedy.

Consider New Mexico previous to 1850. It was an outlying province of Spain and Mexico, entirely neglected. The first census taken showed that the illiteracy in New Mexico was 85 per cent. That was in 1870, and the next time it had gone down to 65 per cent. In the census of 1890 it had gone down to 44 per per cent, and although the returns of the last census are not published yet, I find from inquiry at the Census Office that the illiteracy has dropped to about 20 per cent, just as it was predicted by the governor of New Mexico that it would appear to have done. It shows the advances that they are making in New Mexico.

I will not detain the House to read any figures on this subject. We have in Arizona the same excellent school system. We have fine school buildings; we have compulsory education; we have everything that promises advancement in the future. The resources of railroad building in Arizona equal those in New Mexico. Any fair consideration of the facts, any fair consideration of what we have done in the past with the Territories, will, I think and I hope, convince any man that these people are entitled to admission to the Union of States.

Here we have almost a million people asking Congress for admission to the Union. Why should they not be admitted? They have the population, they have the resources, they have the means for supporting State governments that the Territories have had in the past. I ask my friends here if it is not true that the real reason asserted why these million people should be kept out from the Union is because these Territories will have two Senators each when admitted as States. Is that the fault of the people? If it be a fault, is it not that of our system of government? The Constitution providing for two Senators for each State was in existence when the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo was made, and the United States must have had it in view when they promised these people that they should be incorporated into the Union of States.

We talk about the disproportion. Is there any greater disproportion than there is between Delaware and Pennsylvania, between Vermont and New York, between New Jersey and Illinois? Will not the same disproportion always exist under our Constitution? It is not the fault of the people, and we can not remedy it. We must simply pass upon the rights of these people as they are.

But there is another reason given that does not impress me quite so strongly. Some one objects to the admission of one of these Territories because the two Senators that are likely to be elected will probably belong to the opposite political party from the objector.

Now, I do not place much consequence upon that sort of argument. If that is true, if political considerations are to control in the admission of the Territories, then the proposition is this, is it not, that these Territories must remain Territories until both branches of Congress have a majority of the same political party, and the political complexion of the Territories accords with that political majority in the two Houses?

Now, when will that occur? Will it be after the lapse of another fifty years, while these people shall have remained in Territorial bondage, or will it be never, and will they always remain as they are? I enter my protest against the claim that political considerations should control in the admission of Territories. [Applause.] It is simply saying that the rights of the citizen shall depend upon what he believes and thinks upon great public questions; and when this great nation undertakes to persecute for opinion's sake, then the knell of its doom will sound, and ought to sound.

Now, what other reason is there, besides the political reason, why these people should be kept from admission to the Union? I have found none; I have heard none. The question has been asked, What benefit would the people of these Territories receive from admission into the Union? How much better off are they going to be? What advantage is there in becoming other than what they are? They have a legislature, they have laws, and courts for their enforcement. What advantage is it going to be to them? The advantage is in the first place practical, and in the next place it is sentimental.

The practical advantage is this: Under the law as it is now any law of a Territorial legislature may be unmade by Congress, and the unreasonable provision of the general Territorial law, I think, is that no time is fixed within which Congress may disapprove of a Territorial enactment. It is not provided that they shall disapprove of it in a definite time or within a reasonable time, but it may be disapproved ten, twenty, or thirty years after it is passed, so that any rights obtained under a Territorial law are always liable to be overthrown.

It is never settled that the law of the Territorial legislature shall remain. And this is not a mere general statement. The evidence was conclusive that that is the opinion in the financial centers of the world—in New York, in London, in Berlin, and everywhere where securities are examined. Capitalists will not invest in a Territory. They want a State law, and the reason is because of the power which Congress has to unmake the Territorial law.

The other reason, of course, is sentimental. It is the desire for home rule which is implanted in the breast of the American citizen. There is no home rule under Territorial law. The governor, the secretary, the treasurer, the judges are appointed by a President who perhaps never saw the Territory. The men who govern come as strangers. The citizen has no voice. The dearest right which the American possesses, the right to have a voice in selecting his rulers and those who make the laws, is absent from the inhabitant of the Territory.

And, as a Republican, I am glad that the great party to which I belong has taken this view and proclaimed it in the last great convention of the party in 1900, in the platform which was adopted and upon which we stood when we elected our martyred President. The Republicans in convention declared in so many words: "We favor home rule for the Territories." Oh, I am proud of the Republican party for making that declaration. Did the declaration mean that they were in favor of home rule as it exists at present in the Territories?

There would be no sense in the declaration, because nobody attacked the rule as it existed or intended or proposed to change it. It meant what it said. We, as a party, favor home rule in the Territories, but that resolution went further. It named the Territories under consideration, and declared, "We are in favor of the early admission of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico." I have been a Republican since I came to man's estate, and I am proud that I belong to that party now, because I believe its principles are the best calculated to serve the interests of the people.

On the brightest pages of its history are inscribed its fidelity to promises, its faithful discharge of its pledges to the people. Was that platform under which we fought our last glorious campaign a true and honest platform, or was it a deceitful and a lying platform? Let the answer to that question be given when the roll call is completed upon this bill which we submit to the committee. [Loud applause.]

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I shall offer as a substitute for the first section of the pending bill the following. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the first section and insert the following:

"That the inhabitants of all that part of the United States now constituting the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, namely, that section of country bounded on the north by the States of Colorado and Kansas, on the east by the States of Arkansas and Missouri, on the south by the State of Texas, and on the west by the State of Texas and the Territory of New Mexico, may become the State of Oklahoma, as hereinafter provided: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair any right now pertaining to any Indian tribe or tribes in said Territory under the laws, agreements, or treaties of the United States, or to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulations or to make any law respecting said Indians or their lands which it would have been competent to make or enact if this act had not been passed, and the constitutional convention hereinafter provided for shall by ordinance irrevocably express the consent of the State of Oklahoma that Congress shall retain complete jurisdiction over all lands that belong to any Indian tribes until the same has been allotted in severalty and becomes subject to taxation."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I also have here the following resolutions, which were adopted by the single-statehood convention held in Oklahoma City on the 4th of last February, in which some of the reasons for my amendment are set out:

Single-statehood resolutions of the Oklahoma City Commercial Club.

To the Oklahoma City Commercial Club:

Your committee on State and national legislation beg leave to submit the following resolution:

Be it resolved, That we regard the question of statehood as of overwhelming importance to the people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory; not only to those now living, but all unborn generations. Whether statehood shall come this year or the next, or the next, we regard as of infinitesimal importance when compared with the question whether we shall have one or two States. We favor the creation of only one State out of both Territories for the following reasons:

First. When combined as one State its area as compared with the other Western States would be small. The area in square miles of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi are as follows:

Oklahoma, 39,000; Indian Territory, 31,400; the aggregate area, 70,400.

Minnesota	83,365
Arkansas	53,850
Missouri	69,415
Iowa	56,025
North Dakota, about	75,000
South Dakota, about	75,000
Nebraska	77,510
Kansas	82,080
Texas	265,780
New Mexico	122,580
Arizona	113,020

Colorado	103,925
Utah	84,970
Idaho	84,800
Montana	146,080
Washington	69,180
Oregon	96,030
California	61,562

It will thus be seen that of the 18 States named 14 have a larger area than that of the 2 Territories combined; Missouri and Washington about the same, and Arkansas and Iowa a few square miles less, so that the 2 Territories combined have an area of 25,171 square miles less than the average of the Western States. Oklahoma alone has an area of 56,571 square miles less than the average; the Indian Territory has an area 64,171 square miles less than the average. If combined, the 2 Territories will only make a fair-sized State. If divided, they will both be pigmies.

Second. To impose upon this small area the burden of supporting two separate and distinct State governments would render taxation oppressive. As one State the cost of maintaining the State government and institutions would be very little more than the cost of maintaining each of the separate State governments.

Third. In our judgment it is the desire of not less than 90 per cent of the taxpayers that we should have single statehood.

Fourth. The geographical situation is such as to make nature herself an eloquent spokesman in favor of single statehood. This entire area was originally embraced within the boundaries of the Indian Territory. Oklahoma has been carved piecemeal out of the Indian Territory. Upon the map she now has the appearance of sitting in the lap of the Indian Territory. The two are wedged together; they have the same railroad systems; they have a homogeneous population. The mere geography of the country argues for single statehood.

Fifth. The resources of the two Territories cry aloud for union. Oklahoma is almost wholly agricultural. The great wealth of the Indian Territory is in her mines and forests. With the product of the farm, the forest, and the mine allied in a common cause of building up one State, immediate success and immense achievements are sure to follow.

Sixth. It has always been the contemplation of Congress that this entire area should be one State. Section 1 of the organic act, being the act of May 2, 1890, after describing by crooked and devious lines the boundaries of Oklahoma, contains the following provisions:

"Any other lands within the Indian Territory not embraced within these boundaries shall hereafter become a part of the Territory of Oklahoma whenever the Indian nation or tribe owning said lands shall signify to the President of the United States, in legal manner, its assent that such lands shall so become a part of said Territory of Oklahoma, and the President shall thereupon make proclamation to that effect."

Seventh. We favor single statehood because we believe that with the natural resources of the two Territories combined we can erect a commonwealth which will be a pride to the Union, a source of gratification and of prosperity to ourselves, and a rich heritage to our posterity.

Be it further resolved, That it is our desire that Congress, in legislating upon this subject, should be fair toward the people of the Indian Territory. We think they are entitled to a voice in the location of all public institutions, in the formation and adoption of our organic law, and in the initial steps leading up to the union.

We do most earnestly, presistently, and respectfully petition Congress to heed the wishes of the people of the two Territories on this question; to legislate not for the present but for the vast and unlimited future; to ignore party lines.

We do most strenuously protest against being made the toys of politicians or the tool of any political party. We say it is not a question of politics, but a question of business, of taxation, of the future. We are absolutely indifferent to the possible political complexion of the single State, but regardless of political considerations, we wish that legislation which will best subserve the cause of the people of these two Territories.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of this club have 500 copies of these resolutions printed, and that from that number he shall furnish a copy to each member of the Senate and of the House of Representatives.

Respectfully submitted.

C. B. AMES, Chairman,
R. E. CAMPBELL,
FRANK WELLS,
Committee on State and National Legislation.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, in proposing this amendment, which provides for single statehood for Oklahoma and the Indian Territories, I do not wish to be understood as insisting that from the standpoint of population that Oklahoma alone could not meet the test heretofore applied to the new States, but I object to leaving the Indian Territory, with nearly as many people and just as great possibilities, unorganized and unprovided for.

The plea for statehood for Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico is an argument against a Territorial government for the Indian Territory. This bill as reported concedes that one State may eventually be formed out of these Territories. By reason of their size, shape, history, and location they should be together, but on equal and fair terms to the Indian Territory. Is it fair to permit Oklahoma to organize a State government, locate the capital and all the State institutions, elect Senators, and then annex the Indian Territory to her? That is one idea put forward in this bill. The other is that there will be ultimately two States. These propositions are inconsistent. I insist that we should determine which we will adopt before we surrender jurisdiction over Oklahoma. I am opposed to putting the Indian Territory with Oklahoma unless it is done when the State is organized, and I am uncompromisingly opposed to the proposition to attach this afterwards, as is provided in section three.

The Committee on the Territories has not provided for the Indian Territory upon the erroneous idea that the people there are not capable of self-government and not ready for statehood. Without disparaging the patriotism, intelligence, thrift, pluck, and industry of the good people of Oklahoma, for whom I have nothing but praise and good will, and that I have always endeavored to help, I assert that the people of Indian Territory are just as patriotic, just as intelligent, and just as enterprising as they are. Both have substantially the same character of people. The Indian Territory has but few more Indians than Oklahoma and only 6,371 less of population. It has nearly 500 more miles of railroad than Oklahoma and 40 more incorporated towns.

Then why should she remain a political orphan, unrepresented and disfranchised while statehood is accorded the other Territories? I want to say that I have no feeling of unkindness against the Indians, and no prejudice in favor of the white people who reside in the Indian country. I have spent all my life in the Congressional district adjoining the Choctaw Nation, and I know something of its history, character, progress, growth, and of the needs of the present population. For them I demand the same treatment as the other Territories.

I do not hesitate to say that they have both among the whites and Indians as high types of manhood and as good an average of virtue and intelligence as can be found in any sparsely settled Western community where the advantages of schools have not been better. There are, of course, bad men among them, but all of the bad characters do not reside there. The lack of local government and for a long time perfect security from arrest made the country a favorite resort for criminals and rascals who fled from justice in the States, and the great wonder is that there are so few of such characters there now.

While I have assailed with all my power and now condemn as a disgrace to our Federal system the form of government under which the white Indian squaw men for so long a time utilized the common property of the tribes for their personal profit, the methods by which the Indian officeholders and police perpetuated themselves in office by frightening the uneducated members of the tribes, I do not intend to assail them personally or as a race. They have taken advantage of the conditions that existed to get power and make money. Those conditions were the result of the Indian form of tribal government, and no complete relief can ever come until that gives way to an American State and the lands are distributed among the members of the tribes. I am glad to say that something is being done toward making allotments, but it can be proceeded with as well if not better with statehood than without it.

I contend for a government for that country which will rest upon American manhood suffrage, not on tribal affiliation. Congress can not change the disposition of those who rule the Indians, but it can substitute for their tribal governments an American State and thereby better secure to each member of the tribes his share of the property which by law and of right belongs to him or her, inalienable, if necessary, for a period of years. We should, in addition to this, give the male inhabitants the ballot to protect this property and as soon as possible fix its permanent status and not leave their future uncertain, as this bill leaves it.

I admit the Indian tribes own their lands in common, and I want them to get the full value of it. I would not knowingly be a party to any legislation that would destroy or lessen the value of their common inheritance or diminish the personal interest of the individual members of the tribes in it. I believe that statehood will advance the value of their property, and I insist that they have no right to continue within the jurisdiction of the United States their tribal governments, which are destructive of the homestead idea, contrary to the genius and spirit of our institutions, violative of the fundamental principle of equality upon which our Constitution rests, a standing disgrace to the Government we represent, and of no value to them.

The settlement of the Indians in this country was for the purpose of separating them from the whites. Then the Indian country was remote from white settlement. Now it is surrounded by States containing an active, aggressive, enterprising population, whose future, to a great extent, depends upon a different form of government for the Indian country. Then there were no full-blood whites in the Territory; now there are but few full-blood Indians.

Then the residents were members of the tribes; now there are five white citizens for every Indian. Then the Indians had but few houses and lived principally by the chase; now many of them have magnificent residences and cultivate their lands or have it done by their tenants. Then they had no schools except those furnished by the Government; now they have a good system of public Indian schools, with high schools and colleges, for the children of their tribes, for which they spend annually nearly $500,000.

Then there were no churches except missions; now they have in every town and community comfortable churches, representing the different Christian denominations. Then they had no charitable institutions; now they have homes for the old and decrepit, asylums for the insane, and institutions for the maintenance and education of orphans. Then there were no newspapers; now there are over 50. Then there were no towns; now there are 90 incorporated towns, containing from 200 to 6,000 population, with improvements worth over $10,000,000. Then the coal and other mines had not been discovered; now they are admitted to be the richest in the West and are practically inexhaustible.

Then there was not a mile of railroad; now there are 1,322 miles in operation and many more in contemplation. Then but few whites had intermarried with the Indians; now there is scarcely a family to be found among them without a preponderance of white blood. Then the country was used and ruled by the Indians to whom it was patented; now a large part of all the farms, mines, and towns are operated by whites and mixed breeds who have become members of the tribes by marriage and the manipulations of Indian councils.

I think the courageous, patriotic, just, and manly thing to do is to give the citizens of the Indian Territory an equal show with Oklahoma in forming the constitution under which they must live, and now is the accepted time to do this. They had in 1900 391,960 citizens as good as those in Oklahoma, with a Territory only a little smaller in size than that of Oklahoma. It would then be but simple justice to let them start in their statehood life together and on equal terms. That would be just to the Indian, who could safely count on his white neighbor to protect him against Oklahoma domination, which could not be prevented if the bill passes as reported and the Indian Territory should later be added. If she can not be attached now, then the Indian Territory should have separate statehood, and I am surprised that the committee has not provided for one or the other in this bill.

Oklahoma is beyond the Indian Territory, and is not as fertile, and is not as susceptible of containing as dense a population as the Indian country. Indeed its population is not as dense now. Oklahoma has only ten persons to the square mile, while the Indian Territory has twelve.

The Federal officers and those who control the Indian governments are, of course, opposed to single statehood, and they have probably told the committee that it is not desired; but I know the people want it. There is but little question that the great body of Indians want their lands in severalty, and if we could get at them in the quiet of their humble homes and wigwams they would tell us that they prefer American citizenship and statehood to tribal or even Territorial government.

In thus briefly presenting the views I entertain touching the conditions in the Indian Territory I have endeavored to be fair, and I ask the House to consider them and the necessity for immediate action in the same spirit. I think it is the duty of Congress to see that the flag of the United States, and it alone, shall float over every part of our common country; that the Indian tribal governments shall be promptly and completely abolished; that these absurd, undemocratic, unrepublican, un-American, antiquated ideas of a common inheritance be forever uprooted.

Before the world's fair to celebrate the Jefferson purchase is held, let us wipe out all the Territorial governments within the limits of that great purchase by providing for the Indian Territory with the others named in this bill. Let us now settle for a while, if not forever, the number of States that shall constitute the American Union.

An objection is sometimes urged by some of our Western friends to single statehood, because they want two States for political reasons. They would rather have two small States with four Senators to offset the influence of some of the small Eastern States in the United States than one great State, such as both these Territories would make with only two Senators.

But Mr. Chairman, that is not good statesmanship. It is not best for the people who live there. It is not best for those who are to come after them. I appeal to Congress to lay aside all partisan feeling and all thought of political advantage and legislate for the best interest of all the people of the Union, by making one great, big, independent State, rich enough in resources and large enough in territory to maintain a State government without burdening her people with exorbitant taxes, and one that will be able to educate her children.

The politics of the West is too uncertain to control in forming these States. They will likely support the party that offers the largest freedom for her people and greatest hope of progress. No one can tell what political party will control them, whether organized as one or two States; but without regard to whether it is to be Democratic or Republican, let us admit them as one great State and leave her to fix her party allegiance afterwards. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Chairman, it becomes my pleasant duty at this time to present to this House on behalf of New Mexico her claims to admission into the Union of the United States and to go briefly over her history in this regard.

This effort of New Mexico to come in as a State of this Union is, following the number of Congresses, the twenty-first time that it has made such an effort. And the bill now before the House is the forty-sixth bill that appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in which New Mexico has made an effort to enter the Union. A similar case does not exist with reference to any Territory of this country. A similar example of national neglect has not occurred in all the history of this nation.

In 1846 General Kearny, who had distinguished himself with the United States Army during the Mexican war, went out West, through Kansas and down into New Mexico, and on the 18th of August in that year, without shedding a drop of blood, he raised "the banner of the free" over grand old Santa Fe, and the people came into this Union expecting that the promises then made by General Kearny would be kept. At that time he made a promise to the people of the Territory that the Government of the United States would establish there a government similar to that which existed in other parts of the nation. The people took him at his word, believed what he said, and came voluntarily into this Union. The promise was in this language:

It is the wish and intention of the United States to provide for New Mexico a free government, with the least possible delay, similar to those in the United States. * * *

Two years later, at the close of the war, when the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was being negotiated between the two nations, the Mexican Government, at the instigation of the people of New Mexico, introduced into that treaty the provision to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] a few moments ago called attention—a provision that those people should be incorporated at the proper time (to be judged of by Congress) into the Union of States. It is as follows:

ARTICLE IX OF TREATY OF GUADALUPE HIDALGO.

Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

It may well be argued that that is not an absolute promise as to specific time. But any one can see that, as the gentleman from Massachusetts said, it meant a reasonable time; and to show that the people then and there believed that it meant within a year or two, or three or four years at most, it may be stated that California in 1850, while still under a system of military government, after the discovery of gold there, adopted a constitution, elected two United States Senators and a Representative and sent them on here to Congress, and they were received and the State admitted.

New Mexico then believed she had equal rights with California, because the ground upon which New Mexico rests, the area out of which she was carved, was acquired at the same time and by the same treaty from the Republic of Mexico. New Mexico, profiting by California's example—in fact, inaugurating her action at the same time California did—also elected two United States Senators, after adopting a constitution, and elected a Representative, and sent the three over the plains here to Washington.

Pending the passage of her Senators and Representative across the plains, Congress passed the organic act of the Territory creating the Territory of New Mexico as such. Congress kept the Representative as a Delegate, and sent the Senators home. That was the first effort of New Mexico to come into this Union. She believed then she had a treaty right to come in; her people so understood it. The matter then remained in abeyance, and the people went on about their business. History shows, however—and, oh, what irony there sometimes is in fate—that the constitution then adopted by New Mexico—ten years before the war—was considered too far advanced, because it prohibited slavery. Twenty-seven years later New Mexico was kept out of the Union because it was said—and the fact might have been charged, as it could have been, to the neglect of Congress in the meantime—that the people of New Mexico were too ignorant to come in.

In 1865 and up to 1872 in about every Congress New Mexico made an additional effort to get into this Union under the promise in the treaty by which the ground was ceded to the United States. In the meantime, as always occurs, the ceding country, the Republic of Mexico, had lost all interest in the ceded country, and left the people ceded to the honesty of the nation that received them. From 1874 to 1876, when the present Senator ELKINS had the honor to represent the Territory of New Mexico as Delegate, a bill for its admission into this Union, after elaborate debate, passed both Houses of Congress, but failed in conference in the closing days of that session. That, as you all know, was twenty-seven years ago.

So, for fifty-five—yes, fifty-six—years, on the 18th day of August next, New Mexico has been a part of the public domain of the United States, and its people have been denied the rights of full-fledged American citizens. In every Congress since, with very few exceptions, the Territory has been here pleading at your door for what she contends is her right divine, for what she contends is her right by virtue of the principles announced in the immortal Declaration of Independence, and every time she has been turned back without a better reason being given than the mere refusal of her demands.

The present bill, as I said, is the forty-sixth, and I sincerely hope that not only will it be the last bill for her admission as a State of this Union, but that it will also coincide with the star her admission will add to the flag—that she will be the forty-sixth State by virtue of the act of justice we expect you will do when this bill comes up for a vote. For reasons that it would, in my very limited time, take too long to detail; for reasons that are as groundless as are all prejudices, New Mexico was stricken out of the act that admitted the Dakotas in 1889, Wyoming and the other States in 1890, and was refused admission when the last Territory of all (Utah) was admitted in 1896.

The people of New Mexico at a convention held irrespective of political affiliation at the city of Albuquerque last October expressed themselves with reference to the refusal of Congress through more than half a century to admit them to their rights as citizens of the United States in language that, I am sorry to say, is considered slightly ancient in verbiage, but which the people of New Mexico think is just as potent to-day as ever for recording and conveying to the mind the meaning of the principles of the immortal instrument itself. These reasons are stated, and I will take occasion to read the copy I have here, because it sets forth in somewhat coherent language the position of every Territory that is denied its rights in this Union. It is as follows:

We, the people of the Territory of New Mexico, in mass convention assembled at Albuquerque on this 15th day of October, A. D. 1901, in order to enlarge our liberties, secure a closer connection with the American Union, form a more perfect and lasting government, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for our common interests, promote our general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do hereby declare:

That since the organization of the Territory of New Mexico, we have cheerfully yielded obedience to all the laws of the United States, and freely and fully recognized the right of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory; and

That we now disclaim any purpose of disloyal action, but here renew our fealty to the Constitution of the United States, and in justification of these proceedings call to mind the right of the people to peacefully assemble and by petition present their grievances to Congress; and we therefore state:

That when in the course of human events it becomes necessary for the people of a Territory to make an effort peacefully and legally to dissolve the temporary and inadequate political bonds which have connected them with the nation and to assume among the sovereign States of the Union the separate, independent, and equal station to which our treaty and inherent rights, as well as the laws of nature and of nature's God, entitle us, a decent respect for the opinions of the people of all the existing sovereign States requires that we should set forth the causes which impel us to the action; and in that behalf we most respectfully here state that:

We hold these truths to be self-evident: That all men are created entitled to equal rights; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable attributes; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

Therefore, because of, and for the reasons hereinafter enumerated, we declare that we have been kept entirely too long in a subordinate condition, and that we are now thoroughly fitted to assume and support a higher form of government; and appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world as to the rectitude of our intentions and the justice of our cause, we do now, in the name of and by the authority of the good people of the Territory, solemnly publish and declare that New Mexico of right ought to be a free and independent State of the Union.

And we therefore respectfully demand that the Congress of the United States pass, at the earliest moment possible, an enabling act, whereby our people may form a constitution and State government, and be admitted to the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for cause of such demand we here state:

That we have an inherent right to such admission by virtue of the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence.

That such form of government was guaranteed to us within a reasonable time by the solemn declaration of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, more than fifty-three years ago.

That both of the great political parties of the nation, in addition to having done so many times previously, faithfully promised us, in their last platforms, that New Mexico should be admitted as a State of the Union without delay.

That our people are ready and anxious for such admission, both of the local great political parties having made demands to that effect in their last Territorial platforms, and our last legislative assembly having adopted and certified to Congress a strong memorial in that behalf, and which said memorial we now here reaffirm. And further, we ask admission because:

A Territorial form of government is intolerable to a free people; it is an incongruity under American institutions, and should be maintained only so long as is absolutely necessary to prepare its people for the higher form, and because—

It is taxation without representation, for while Congress professes to give us representation in the House of Representatives, we are denied a vote therein, and that is the only real element of representation, and as to the Senate, we are remitted to the beggarly methods of the lobbyist.

It is a denial of the right of the people to take part in the affairs of their country, in the formation of its policies, or the election of its representatives or its Chief Magistrate.

A Territory is no part of the United States in the national sense. It has been held that the Constitution of the United States does not, of its own force, extend over it, and it follows that we receive the protection of the great charter only by grace of an act of Congress; that it can be taken away as freely as it was extended over us, and that therefore our status is such that it is probable that our children are ineligible to the Presidency of the land they love, because of not being "natural-born" citizens of the United States; that, in fine our status is such that we could be ceded away by Congress in settlement of a war or for a mere money price at the whim of Congress to some foreign nation.

Congress, by the organization of the Territory, invited settlement and occupancy of the frontier, and by implication guaranteed to its people protection to life and property and enfranchisement as soon as they were fitted for a higher form of government, yet history shows that every effort of our people to obtain their rights has met but with disappointment. Nor is this all, but in addition we are harassed and burdened to an intolerable degree, and we here show to the fair-minded people of the sovereign States what Congress has put upon us:

It has given us a system of courts not only inherently wrong, but wholly inadequate, and while refusing to do so itself prevents us from changing their jurisdiction to meet our needs.

It has arbitrarily fixed the time when our legislature shall meet and adjourn, and denied us authority to call an extra session thereof, no matter how great the need therefor may be.

It has reserved the right to invalidate any law which our legislature may pass, thereby destroying the full faith and credit which our laws ought to command, thus rendering it impossible to command capital for the development of our resources.

It has ever turned a deaf ear to all our prayers for relief, from the many burdens and inequalities under which we suffer, and yet has bound us hand and foot by preventing us from aiding public improvements that would tend to the development of our industries and the progress of our country, and has stifled our progress by preventing us from offering our mining properties for sale in foreign markets, thus and in many other ways putting upon us an embargo not borne by citizens of the States, and while imposing upon us with the iron hand of supreme authority all the obligations and burdens of citizenship has withheld the corresponding blessings and benefits.

In addition to giving away princely portions of the public domain that should be our patrimony, it has exempted scores of thousands of dollars worth of property from taxation, thus forcing upon us a gross inequality of citizenship.

It has withheld from us our proper dowry of public land for the support of our schools, and as to that which it has given us has placed so many restrictions around it as that it is rendered of much less benefit than it otherwise would be.

It refused for nearly half a century to settle our land titles, thus retarding our progress, and now refuses to appropriate sufficient money to prosecute public surveys, and segregate land grants from the public domain, thus rendering it possible for millions upon millions of acres of land to escape taxation and render the burden of the actual taxpayer much greater.

It refused for a third of a century to give our people proper protection against hostile Indians, during which time hundreds upon hundreds of our people were murdered and their property stolen and destroyed by such depredators, and now refuses to properly adjust or appropriate money to pay for the mere property thus lost.

It has ever refused to make any appropriation of money for the education of our people, although it took them by conquest in the first instance, and they spoke a foreign language and needed such aid, but instead turned all the money arising from the revenue laws which were strictly enforced against them, and all the money arising from sales of public land in the Territory into the national treasury, so that the Territory while suffering under almost insufferable burdens and neglect actually became a source of revenue to the nation, and when we tried to remedy this by repeated demands for adequate laws and admission to the Union, were met with a denial and chided with our ignorance.

It has made no appropriations for the establishment of any proper postal facilities among us or the erection of any public buildings, but obliges us to resort to taxation of ourselves for the latter and to do without the former save after all States are supplied.

It has recently threatened and is still threatening us with ruinous national legislation as to the waters in our streams and in our catchment areas, which legislation is for the benefit of and very favorable to the citizens of the Republic of Mexico, while it will forever paralyze our Territory and all its industries, and this even though we are by more than a century the prior appropriators of such waters, and even though the nation to be favored has no right or claim whatever, either in law, equity, or by treaty, in or to any of such waters.

It gives us no voice in the selection of a large part of the officials that govern us, most of them being sent in from the States in violation of the national platforms, and many of them being wholly incapable for the positions they hold, and who but harass the people by their superofficious offensiveness, while on the contrary no citizen of a Territory is ever appointed to any office in the nation outside the limits of the Territory, save as soldiers in time of war.

And all these things were done, conditions permitted to exist, and burdens put upon us in spite of our unceasing and earnest protest against the same, until now more than fifty-five years have passed since the flag of our nation was raised at Santa Fe, and in spite of the same, and of others too numerous to mention, we have arrived at our present advanced condition and always remained loyal to the flag.

We therefore demand admission to the Union, because we have shown our right to it:

By remaining patient and true to the nation for fifty-three years while suffering all the disadvantages above set out and because:

We sent more soldiers to the defense of the nation in the civil and Spanish-American wars than any other State or Territory per capita.

We demand admission because the Territory is now better than ever in its history fitted to assume such higher form of government; in that

It holds the first place in the nation as a sheep-producing and wool-growing section, and is well up toward first place in the number of cattle it raises.

Because the mineral, timber, and agricultural interests of the Territory are vast in extent, and are being developed in a phenomenal manner. Railroads are being built, plants erected, and industries of different kinds are being established everywhere within our domain, the area of the Territory being larger than all of the New England States and the State of New York combined.

We ask admission because we now have a population of upward of 330,000 people, the census to the contrary notwithstanding, as shown by our having registered about 60,000 voters at the last general election, and because since the census was taken about 40,000 immigrants have come among us and settled, and

Because we possess about $300,000,000 worth of property that will be subject to taxation for the support of a State government, and the amount we require being small, we will be the lowest-taxed sovereign State in the nation.

Because we have made more educational progress in the last dozen years than any other part of the nation without exception, and have now more money per capita invested in public buildings and in public and other educational institutions than any other part of the country whatsoever, and because we spend, and there is spent among us, more money per capita for education than in any State or other Territory in the nation.

Our public buildings being a fine capitol building, a university, a science hall, a normal university, several fine normal schools, a school of mines, an agricultural college and experiment station, a deaf and dumb asylum, an asylum for the insane, a penitentiary, several fine hospitals, and many other minor institutions; and because:

We have within our boundaries 15 cities and towns that are modern, up-to-date places in every respect, and far in advance of places of three and four times the population in the Eastern States, and this without disparaging in any manner the dozens of other towns and villages within our borders, and all of which cities, and most of which towns and villages have the finest kind of buildings in which to maintain and do maintain therein as fine a system of free public schools as can be found anywhere in the nation; and further we make this demand because:

The Territory supports, per capita, more daily newspapers and more newspapers that take the press dispatches and more newspapers and other publications generally than any State or other Territory without exception; and because:

The Territory in proportion to population supports and has within its borders more banks, national and Territorial, showing a larger ratio of deposits to capital stock, than any State or other Territory; and

Because the people of the Territory are a conservative, patriotic, and law-abiding people, more than 90 per cent of them being born American citizens, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, although they have been disfranchised for more than half a century; and because:

The position of a Territory since the recent "insular decisions" of the Supreme Court of the United States is more than ever pitiable and intolerable, and because—

In more than twelve Congresses of the United States the fitness of our people for a State government has been fully investigated and bills passed in one House or both for our admission, all of which failed to become laws through one mishap or another, until now more than half a century has passed, and we have advanced to our present splendid condition materially all through our own unaided efforts, and in spite of the neglect of Congress and the nation and the burdens that have been put upon us.

Wherefore, having endured all these things through all these years, supported the flag and the Constitution in two wars, we most respectfully appeal to the sense of justice and righteousness of the Congress, and pray that it will not permit a government of our people, for our people, and by our people to perish from our hopes, but that, under God, it will grant us a new lease of freedom by granting us statehood.

Mr. Chairman, that is an appeal from the people of New Mexico, made on October 15, 1901, in which, in brief, is recited the reasons for their demands and the present condition of the Territory. Should New Mexico be admitted at this time; and if not, why not? What is the objection that is advanced on this side of the House to its admission? I have not yet had the advantage of hearing what the objections can be. If it is a political one, I contend that New Mexico has the political qualifications, but I also contend that the man who places the rights of American citizens on a partisan basis is unworthy himself to enjoy the blessings of American citizenship. [Applause.]

Has any precedent been set for the admission of New Mexico at this time with its present population? Let me call your attention to the fact that during the federation that existed for a short time previous to the adoption of our present Constitution—that is, previous to 1779—the Continental Congress, when legislating with reference to the territory northwest of the Ohio River, passed an ordinance providing that whenever any part of said territory had a population of 60,000 people it should, as of course, be entitled to be admitted into the Union. There is also preserved in the State Department, in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson, a copy of an ordinance for the government of the western territory, dated 1784, which reads as follows:

That whensoever any of the said States shall have, of free inhabitants, as many as shall then be in any one of the least numerous of the thirteen original States, such State shall be admitted by its delegates into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the said original States.

In a speech delivered by Hon. S. S. Cox, of New York, in this House on January 15, 1889, referring to the subject of the admission of States in President Buchanan's time, he said:

In the admission of States in those early days of Buchanan's Administration, out of all that Red Sea of trouble, we got some little good, because at the end of this struggle we agreed to a certain rule and that rule was that a population equal to the ratio represented by a member of Congress should always be sufficient for the admission of a State, and that was entered of record and a joint resolution passed to give effect to it.

Now, with reference to the States that have been admitted, it may be profitable at this time to refresh the recollection of members of the House briefly—only a line with reference to each—to recall to you the order in which they have been admitted and the amount of population they possessed at the time of admission.

Kentucky was the first State of the Union after the original thirteen to apply for admission, but Vermont, carved out of the State of New York, got in first by the accident of Congress taking up its bill first. So it comes first in the order of admission.

The order and time of the admission of States was as follows:

Fourteenth State, Vermont, which was carved out of the State of New York, was admitted to the Union in 1791, with a population of 85,425.

Fifteenth State, Kentucky, although it applied to come in as the fourteenth State, by an accident Vermont's enabling act passed first, and the State, which had been carved out of Virginia, was admitted February 4, 1791, with a population of 73,677.

Sixteenth State, Tennessee, which had existed some time as a Territory, came into the Union in 1796, with a population somewhere between 35,691 and 66,000.

Seventeenth State, Ohio, came into the Union in 1802 and adopted a constitution before it was admitted. All the detail work of its admission was not finished until February, 1803. Its population was 45,365 in 1800.

Eighteenth State, Louisiana, the first State admitted out of the Louisiana purchase, was admitted April 12, 1812, with a population of 76,556.

Nineteenth State, Indiana, carved out of the Northwest Territory, tried to come in in 1810, but did not succeed until the latter part of 1816. Its population in 1810 was 24,520. The State had no general school law until about 1822. It had a population in 1820 of 147,178.

Twentieth State, Mississippi, which was carved out of Georgia, was admitted December, 1817; in 1810 it had a population of 40,352 and in 1820 75,448.

Twenty-first State, Illinois, was admitted in 1818; its population in 1810 was 12,282 and in 1820 55,211.

Twenty-second State, Alabama, was admitted in 1819; its population in 1820 was 127,901.

Twenty-third State, Maine, which was carved out of Massachusetts, was admitted March 15, 1820, with a population of 298,335.

Twenty-fourth State, Missouri, a part of the Louisiana purchase, was admitted August 10, 1821, with a population of 66,586. This State was admitted after one of the hardest fights over the slave question that had ever taken place in the nation up to that time. The Missouri Compromise, with the line of 36° 30′ as the northern limit of slavery, became the burning question in those days.

Twenty-fifth State, Arkansas, was admitted to the Union in 1836, with a population of 52,240. Its population four years later, in 1840, was 97,574. This State argued that because it was a part of the Louisiana purchase no enabling act was necessary to entitle it to come into the Union.

Twenty-sixth State, Michigan, was admitted in 1837. Its population in 1830 was 31,639 and in 1840 212,267. Michigan was organized as a Territory in 1805. It applied for admission in 1832, and though its enabling act passed several times, refused to come into the Union under the boundaries fixed. This trouble lasted for five years.

Twenty-seventh State, Florida, was admitted in 1845. In 1840 its population was 29,000; in 1850 87,445. It made several efforts for admission from 1839 on.

Twenty-eighth State, Texas, was admitted in 1845 by an act of Congress. In 1850 its population was 212,592. It gained its independence from Mexico in 1835–1837. First act of Congress admitting it was rejected. Slavery question cut a big figure.

Twenty-ninth State, Iowa, carved out of Louisiana purchase, was admitted in 1846. Its population in 1850 was 192,214. This jurisdiction was a part of Michigan in 1834; a part of Wisconsin in 1836; was organized as a Territory in 1838. Its boundaries were fixed in 1845.

Thirtieth State, Wisconsin, was admitted in 1848 with a population of 305,391, or, at least, it had that population in 1850, although it had but 30,945 in 1840.

Thirty-first State, California, was admitted as a free State in 1850, with a population of 92,597, and without ever having passed through a Territorial form of government.

Thirty-second State, Minnesota, was admitted in 1858. It had a population in 1850 of 6,077, and in 1860, two years after its admission, 172,023.

Thirty-third State, Oregon, was admitted in 1859; its population a year later was 52,465. In the admission of this State one of the hardest fights was made by Hon. G. A. GROW, who is still spared as an honored member of this House.

Thirty-fourth State, Kansas, was admitted in 1860, after one of the greatest fights in history. It was first admitted by Congress in 1858, with slavery conditions that it would not accept. Its population was 107,206.

Thirty-fifth State, West Virginia, was admitted June 19, 1863, by a proclamation of the President. Its population in 1870 was 442,014.

Thirty-sixth State, Nevada, was admitted October 13, 1864, by a proclamation of the President. It was created a Territory in 1862. Its population in 1860 was 6,857, and in 1870, 42,491.

Thirty-seventh State, Nebraska, was admitted in March, 1867; its population in 1860 was 28,841; in 1870, 122,993. This State had a fight from 1864 on in every Congress, and its enabling act passed twice in 1867 over the President's veto.

Thirty-eighth State, Colorado, was admitted in 1876; its population in 1870 was 39,864; in 1875, 175,000; in 1880, 194,397. This State was organized as a Territory in 1861. It failed of admission in 1863; refused it in 1864; accepted it in 1865, but its bill was vetoed. Its bill was vetoed again in 1868. but it won out in 1875, and came in in 1876 under the terms of the act.

Thirty-ninth State, North Dakota, was admitted in 1889, with a population of 182,719.

Fortieth State, South Dakota, was admitted in 1889, with population of 328,808.

Forty-first State, Montana, was admitted in 1889, with population of 132,159.

Forty-second State, Washington, was admitted in 1889, with population of 349,390.

New Mexico was dropped out of this bill. It was an omnibus bill in 1889. This was the biggest area ever admitted.

Forty-third State, Idaho, admitted in 1890; population 82,385. This State was admitted after it had adopted its constitution.

Forty-fourth State, Wyoming, was admitted in 1890, with population of 60,705, after it had adopted a constitution.

Forty-fifth State, Utah, was finally admitted in 1896 after many previous efforts; its population was 207,905.

Mr. Chairman, that presents to the House the precedents for the admission of Territories of this Union. And apart from the inherent right of the American people to enjoy equal rights in all parts of this nation when they are fitted to do so, apart from the inherent right that they possess by virtue of the principles of the Declaration of Independence, we submit that to keep these three Territories of New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Arizona out longer would be but adding an outrage to the many things they have been forced to endure. What can be the arguments that reasonable-minded men will advance against admission? What can their constituents say to them for doing so? If they vote for this bill can they be charged with having done wrong? Is not this a unanimous report from a committee that was adverse when it started in to consider the question?

Have we not the right to enjoy the privileges of American citizens? It may not be well for the mere Territories to criticise the action of this Government, but, as children do in the family, we feel that we have a right to complain; that we have no superiors in the family of this nation. We do say that when you turn over the revenues of the Filipinos and the Porto Ricans to themselves and demand that the revenues raised in the Territories of Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona be turned into the National Treasury that you deprive these people of moneys that should be used for their own education and betterment; and when thereafter you charge them with ignorance we say, indeed, that it is an unfair proposition.

It begins to look as if the people of the older Territories had no privileges save to do the work, fight the battles, and pay the freight of this great nation.

The three Territories mentioned in this bill sent two-thirds of the President's regiment to free the Cubans, and, led by him, they did as much fighting as any soldiers there on that occasion. On the 20th instant, in pursuance of the promise of this great and philanthropic nation, Cuba is to raise her own free flag over her own children, while New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma are still to remain Territories.

Now, is it reasonable that these people should be kept in this condition of tutelage? What have they ever done to deserve it? Who will it be, if they are admitted, that can rightfully challenge your action in admitting them to the Union? If you can show me a spot on the flag, show when the country has ever been injured, show me where we have taken one step backward by reason of admitting any State, I care not how small, to this Union—whoever will show me that will show me a piece of history that I have not yet learned of in all my reading.

In 1890 the census of this great country was 62,000,000 and something. In 1900 it was 76,000,000, or thereabouts, an increase of 14,000,000 of people. With that increase of population to start from, with 76,000,000 of people with an Anglo-Saxon civilization, in 1910 we will have 94,000,000 people in the nation, or an increase of 18,000,000. Now, if we are going to have an increase of 18,000,000 of people in the ten years from 1900 to 1910 in this nation, where are those people going to?

Let us sensibly admit that every State of the Union will grow; that every city in the Union will grow; that every place in the Union will grow, and yet will it not be conceded that a large percentage of the population of the cities in the extreme Eastern States, in consequence of their large numbers and overpopulation, will go West, in which the trend of the Empire still is, or where will they go? Will they not go in the direction of the line of least resistance, as they always do? Will they not go to the place where there is the most unappropriated public domain, as is the case now in these two Territories of New Mexico and Arizona that you say have too sparse a population for admission? It will be to New Mexico and Arizona they will go, because those two Territories not only have vast amounts of the most productive land in the world, but also have immense stretches of public domain, not the kind of land that is found in Oklahoma and eastern Kansas, but still susceptible of cultivation and on which people can live and thrive.

If we get between the years 1900 and 1910 one-half million people in New Mexico from that trend of western travel, we will then, as we contend, have a million of people in that great area. So where will the mistake be found of admitting us into the Union? New Mexico has an area of 122,510 square miles, or nearly 80,000,000 of acres. Between twenty-five and thirty millions out of these 80,000,000 acres are taken up in land grants, railroad land grants, Spanish land grants, reservations, etc., leaving about 55,000,000 acres of unappropriated public domain, the largest, I believe, in any section of the nation subject to entry and homestead, that can be taken up by citizens.

Now, I wish to submit, is it not reasonable to suppose that we will go on and progress? Further, let me here state, let no man take the census for any purpose of statistics with reference to New Mexico. I know whereof I speak. The last census, for any statistical purposes as to New Mexico, is absolutely worthless, and it is so admitted to be by the Director. You will ask, Why is that so? It is so for this reason: Three cents a piece was paid for the enumeration of the people. That sort of a law was a good thing for the enumerators in the cities, where you could take five or six wards and enumerate the people and make five or six dollars a day. But the man who would have to travel the country down in New Mexico and enumerate the people there would have to pay from seven to ten dollars a day for a team to get around and do that work, and he only got $5 a day and no per capita allowance at all. What was the consequence? It was never done.

In spite of the fact that the census of 1900 only gives us 195,310 people, we registered within a few hundred of 60,000 voters at last election, and with an area as large as the State of New York, the New England States, and New Jersey combined, I say it is an utter physical impossibility to register more than three-fourths of the voters we really have. Our governor shows in this report that our population at the time the census was taken was about 300,000 people, excluding Indians, and I know it has increased from 30,000 to 60,000 people since, owing to the building of new railroads and the starting of vast industrial enterprises.

Why, in the great Territory of New Mexico, Mr. Chairman, we have perhaps 15,000 people all the time out on the ranges, away from the post-offices and away from communication, herding our vast flocks of sheep. We have ten or twelve thousand people out looking after our cattle. We have perhaps twelve to fifteen thousand prospectors out in the hills nearly all the time, searching for minerals, away out, miles from anywhere. All these people and thousands of others are not enumerated; you can not enumerate them; the enumerators could not find them. The census enumerator does not go after them. What is the consequence? They do not get into the enumeration, and so New Mexico is without her proper quota of inhabitants in the present census record, and everybody takes it as true who does not understand the facts. Our school children alone, as shown by this year's enrollment, just received by me, number nearly 70,000.

I assume, Mr. Chairman, that many gentlemen who are to be heard from will say everything that can be said with reference to the admission of these States. Let me say for Oklahoma—God bless the fair land—she is a splendid community and as well fitted for statehood as any State in this Union, with half a million people and almost every quarter section of her land occupied; and we of New Mexico, with over 330,000 patriotic, worthy, and intelligent American citizens, are we not also entitled to our rights after all these years? It has been said with reference to us that we are Spanish, and they use the term "greasers" as to some of our people. I utterly and absolutely repudiate that slurring term with reference to the good, great, patient, worthy, and patriotic people of New Mexico.

We have no such people there. Every man less than 56 years of age is a born citizen of these United States, although he is without a State, and entitled to all the rights of an American citizen. Let me cite an example: Any jack-legged foreigner, coming here from any foreign country, in five years is entitled to enjoy all the rights of citizenship in any State of the Union, and yet on mere petty political grounds you try to keep a million of American citizens in these Territories from the enjoyment of their rights.

I hope no gentleman on this floor is so small and so narrow in his ideas of the rights of American citizens as to put them upon a partisan basis and deny one jot or tittle of what a person is entitled to by reason of the fact that he may belong to this political party or to that one. I say to my fellow-Republicans on this side of the House that had you done justice, had you placed the Delegates in this Congress in the position that they ought to be placed in before their constituents, you would, as to Oklahoma and New Mexico, have made this a party caucus measure, and carried it through as it ought to have been carried through in both Houses of Congress by a unanimous vote.

If the Republicanism that has lasted a half a century in New Mexico does not satisfy your partisan desires, what will? If the Republicanism in Oklahoma, save as to one term during the last twelve years of its existence, does not satisfy you, what will? You leave it to the other side of the House, God bless them, to rise above partisanship in a matter like this, with the politics two to one against them. [Laughter on the Republican side.] They say to a man, We will vote for statehood for all these Territories. Every man on the floor will repudiate his political platform for the last generation, be he Republican or Democrat, if he votes in opposition to this bill.

How are you going to get away from that? It is in your platforms. But apart from all that, we have begged long and fervently for a recognition of our just rights. We have done everything that people can do to satisfy the Congress of our fitness. We have endured this tutelage, oh, so long. We now demand it as a unit, without reference to the political views, and ask that every gentleman on this floor vote for the bill and make it unanimous.

I could keep on for hours citing from speech after speech that has appeared in the RECORD, article after article that has appeared in our own press, I could recite speech after speech delivered on the stump all through New Mexico in the campaign, advocating this measure. There are 330,000 people in New Mexico, notwithstanding the census; there are 175,000 people in Arizona, notwithstanding the census; there are half a million in Oklahoma, the census to the contrary notwithstanding, who are watching the action of this Congress to see whether or not the rights of the people will be granted.

I am as good a Republican as anybody, and I believe in keeping the pledges of the Government. You wasted one-half of the time of the present session of this Congress in the consideration of how you will benefit the Cuban people. Our people are left for half a century without any attention being paid to them. Are American rights not as great as those of Cuba? We make no objection to what you are doing for Cuba. It would not be effective if we did. We are willing to help you carry out your pledges to them, if you made any, but do not forget your pledges to us also. We helped you to free them. We shed our blood for their freedom as well as you.

That is the sort of people that we have in the great Territory of New Mexico; and we ask that this Congress, in considering this proposition, consider it in that broad patriotic spirit that ought to animate any gentleman when considering any question of this importance. We appeal to you as the guardians of our welfare. We appeal to you as the only channel through which our rights can come. We appeal to you as men who are endowed with sufficient charity, if you will, to grant that for which we have so long prayed; and we sincerely hope that the vote on this bill will be unanimous. It is a just measure, and no man was ever chided or could be justly chided for doing that which is eternally right.

And after all it is the people that constitute a State. Let me quote a few lines on that subject:

What constitutes a State?
Not high-raised battlements or labored mound,
Thick wall or moated gate,
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crowned,
Not bays and broad-armed ports,
Where laughing at the storm rich navies ride;
Not starred and spangled courts,
Where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride.
No! Men, high-minded men,
With powers as far above dull brutes endued,
In forest, brake, or glen,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude;
Men who their duties know,
But know their rights, and knowing dare maintain,
* * * * *
These constitute a State.

The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of papers on the files of various offices of that Department, and in buildings under the control of that Department belonging to the United States, and in rented buildings, which are not needed in the transaction of public business and which have no permanent value or historical interest. The Chair suggests that only the letter of transmittal be printed, and that it, together with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Destruction of Useless Papers in the Several Executive Departments, and that they be ordered to lie on the table.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was the only Senator who expressed any opposition of those who spoke, and the bill went over, at his request, that he might examine it. He suggests, and with my entire approbation, that the third section, containing in three lines an appropriation of $575,000, be stricken out. If that be stricken out, I understand that he has no further objection to the bill. CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2295.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have at some length given the military record of General Funston. We have seen the estimation in which he was held by Gomez and Garcia in Cuba, winning the confidence and friendship of those intrepid heroes. We have seen how he took a raw regiment of volunteers and in a few months made of them veterans, a regiment that under his inspiring leadership justly won more glory than any regiment in the entire Spanish-American war. We have seen the high estimation in which he was held by those gallant veterans of the civil war, Generals Otis, MacArthur, Wheaton, and the lamented Lawton, and as a fitting reward for his distinguished services at last in the capture of the insurgent chieftain, Aguinaldo, on the recommendation of his superiors, McKinley, in the month of March, 1901, made him a brigadier-general in the Regular Army. Of nearly 300,000 volunteers in the Spanish-American war, General Funston is the only one that attained that high rank who had not seen service in the civil war.

Mr. President, in this splendid age of materialism I can understand how it is that some people treat lightly the course of the young man who puts aside all offers and opportunities that present themselves to make money, to acquire property, to gain wealth, and devotes his life to something that, on reflection, we all know is worth more than gold. It will be a sad day for the country if we should lose sight of the high ideals that have ever inspired us as a people. It will be a sad day when it becomes popular for the lip to curl at the acts of our heroes. It will be a sad day when the dominating influence that controls us will be money. The heroic in our national life must be the inspiration that will keep us going onward and upward in the path of true greatness.

And now, in the face of his magnificent record, what is it that has caused the Senator from Tennessee to ridicule Funston as a hero? What has he done to excite the wrath of the Senator? It was known by the Senator, it was known by all the Senators on that side, that President McKinley had made General Funston a brigadier-general in the Regular Army. But before his commission could be made permanent under the law it was necessary that his appointment should be confirmed by the Senate. Months elapsed before the Senate convened. On the 5th day of last December President Roosevelt sent General Funston's name to the Senate. It was referred to the Military Committee of this body, and on the 18th day of that month he was unanimously confirmed.

What, then, I ask again, has caused this virulent and malevolent attack on the part of the Senator from Tennessee? I infer from his remarks that, among other things, it was because of the way in which he captured Aguinaldo. The Senator says Funston achieved his title of hero by a violation of the rules of honorable warfare, by an act for which Aguinaldo would have been hanged in ten minutes if he had attempted it on an American officer. But General MacArthur says that Funston's plan, and it was his plan, was submitted to Generals Wheaton and MacArthur and was approved by them both, and MacArthur assumes entire responsibility for directing General Funston to carry out his plan in the way he did.

But if the Senator had any criticisms to offer against the way in which Aguinaldo was captured, why did he not offer them when General Funston's name was before the Senate for confirmation? It will not do to say that he was ignorant of all the facts, because by reference to the report of General Funston, filed here last summer in the War Office, every detail of the plan in the capture of Aguinaldo was given, even to the description of the dress and uniform worn by the Macabebes that accompanied him, the detailed account of the letters that he had captured, and the forged letters that were written to deceive Aguinaldo. The press throughout the country published, his report, and particularly that part of it that told of the deceptions. Every detail was published far and wide as to how General Funston captured the insurgent chieftain.

I ask again, What has Funston done that has excited the wrath of the great military chieftain from Tennessee, that he dares to put his judgment over against the judgment of the intrepid Lawton, the courageous MacArthur, and the brave Wheaton? How would the Senator have had Funston to proceed, anyway, in the capture of Aguinaldo? What, sir, would you have had him done; write a letter to Aguinaldo and tell him he was coming to get him? Be candid, won't you, please, Senator? Be as candid as the Senator from South Carolina was when he answered the Senator from Ohio.

Was it not because he did capture Aguinaldo that you hate Funston? Was it not because he has put down insurrection in the Philippine Islands that you have your feeling against him? Was it not because he did render service to his country, great service against the insurgents, that you oppose him?

The Senator may stand for the insurgents. I prefer to stand for Funston and his comrades. Senators on that side seem to want to make this a political issue in the coming campaign. I am not commissioned to speak for the Republican party, but I will speak for myself, and I dare speak for Kansas, when I tell them that we accept their gage of battle. Go before the people of this country maligning and slandering the American soldiers if you dare. Make that the issue in the coming contest, and we will meet you on the hustings at every turn, and you will learn whether or not the American people will stand by their soldiers and what will become of the party that maligns and slanders them.

But I imagine the Senator from Tennessee would never have exhibited his feeling in this Chamber in the way he has against General Funston but for the speech that he made before the Lotus Club in New York. And now if the Senate will bear with me for a few moments I want to examine that speech and see what it was that General Funston said that has so kindled the wrath of Senators. I quote from General Funston's speech:

To talk about the Philippines and about the war over there is not in all respects agreeable, but I am glad of the opportunity to lay before such a company a few facts. It may aid some of you who have been misled by stories of various kinds to believe that the Army in the Philippines has been doing as well as it possibly could, and it may enable others of you to be prouder than ever of the patience and fortitude and humanity which have distinguished the course of the Army and Navy in the Philippines from the beginning of the war down to the present time. [Applause.]

Ah, I can see now at the very beginning of that speech what it is that has excited the opposition of the Senators. I notice that statement was received with applause. Of course I take it there were no Democrats present. I read further:

When the city of Manila was surrendered to the Navy under Admiral Dewey [cheers] and to to the Army under General Merritt there were in the city some hundreds of Spanish families—men, women, and children—and a great many thousands of Spanish soldiers who were prisoners of war in the hands of our troops.

In the eyes of the world these people, absolutely unarmed and helpless, were dependent entirely upon us for protection. In addition to these there were many European residents; there were German and British merchants with their families, proprietors of banks, commercial houses, warehouses, and railroads representing millions upon millions of dollars worth of property.

To have turned these helpless Spaniards and others over to the mercy of the uncontrollable mob which constituted the army of Aguinaldo would have been a positive crime. The Bulgarian and Armenian massacres would have been repeated on a larger scale, and the whole thing would have constituted the blackest page in American history—a thing we could not have blotted out in a thousand years of repentence. [Applause.]

I am inclined to think, whether the Senator agrees with me or not, that the American people will approve that.

Next he tells us about the kind of men who constituted our army in the Philippines.

I wish to say to you something, however, about the class of officers and men who are serving in the Philippines, and about some of those magnificent men who have lost their lives there.

One would think, from reading the remarks of Senators upon the other side, that we did not have any magnificent men over there.

Of course there are all sorts of men in our Army, Regular and Volunteer, good, bad, and indifferent; but I believe it is a pretty safe guess to say that 95 per cent of the men who constitute our Army are a brave and humane lot of men, who are a credit to the service. [Long applause.]

The other 5 per cent of the men are the kind that write letters to the newspapers at home and tell big stories, and I think it can be taken for granted that the class of men—the men who spread this information that is so prevalent here in the States regarding the Philippine Islands—I say that they are the class of men who have ornamented the inside of a guardhouse more often than they have distinguished themselves in the field. [Applause.]

That is told in language that appears to be true. I submit it to the careful consideration of Senators upon the other side. I think it is a statement of this kind that has so aroused the Senator from Tennessee. It was calling specific attention to the 5 per cent of the soldiers who ornament the inside of the guardhouse and who have been used as tools by the opposition to slander and defame the entire Army that so irritated the Senator. It is not only because Funston is a fighter that they hate him, but he tells the truth, and that hurts the champions of Aguinaldo even worse. I see now why the Senator complained of the General's tongue. And now Funston tells us why the hostilities continue so long:

And now I am going to say something which I hope you gentlemen will will not criticise. I am going to say it just as mildly as I can, but we who have seen our men killed, who have seen our men die of typhoid fever, die of dysentery in the hospitals, and who have buried them in the hundreds of nameless graves in the Philippine Islands, feel bitterly about this subject. All of those men who have fallen since the month of January, 1900, have died not because the Filipinos really had much heart in fighting against us, but because they were kept up by a lot of misinformed and misguided people here in the United States. [Applause and cries of "That is right!"]

It is perfectly proper for us to have all sorts of opinions about the advisability of holding the Philippine Islands—as to whether they are worth anything to us or whether they are a burden to us—we are perfectly justified in having as many opinions about them as there are islands in the Philippines. But for heaven's sake let us keep those opinions to ourselves until the sovereignty of the United States has been established over every square inch of those islands, and then let us get together and pull hair and fight the thing out among ourselves. [Cheers and prolonged applause.]

That is the kind of patriotic advice that the Senator from Tennessee would do well to take. I begin to understand now why it is that General Funston is so disliked by him. I want to quote, however, a little further:

I have been told by a number of insurgent officers of high rank, after their surrender or after their capture, that they were kept up solely after January, 1900, by the hope that the people of the United States would compel the Government to withdraw from the islands. I was told that without any hesitation whatever by even so reserved a man as Aguinaldo himself. I was told that by the notorious Alejandrino, by Luna, by Pablo Tecson. None of these men made any secret of it at all.

I know the Senator from Tennessee the other day volunteered the remark that he did not believe General Funston told the truth. My answer to that is that a brave man will not tell a lie.

When General Funston says that Aguinaldo and the other insurgent chieftains told him that they kept up the fight after January in 1900 because of the hope that the people of the United States would compel the withdrawal of the troops from the islands, I believe that he told the truth. But I quote further:

I hope I may be allowed to combat another impression that is altogether too prevalent in the United States; that is, that the insurgent leaders in the Philippines are of a very high type of men, patriots fighting for the good of their country, and all that sort of thing, and that they are to be compared with the men who won the independence of the United States more than a hundred years ago.

You will remember to have heard in the last campaign much talk about Aguinaldo being the George Washington of the Philippine Islands.

I shall in a few moments—

Says General Funston—

give you a few samples of some of these patriots over there, and allow you to make your own comparisons.

About the ablest military leader of the insurgents was Antonio Luna, who was a brave man, a good officer, accomplished; and as to the capability to handle troops in the field he probably would come up almost to the officers of our own Army. This man on account of his personal courage was gaining such prestige with the insurgents that Aguinaldo ordered him to be assassinated, which was done at the town of Planan, the man being shot down in cold blood by the sentries on guard at Aguinaldo's door when he stated to the sentry on duty that he wanted to see Aguinaldo. I talked with the late lamented dictator himself on that subject and asked him about it. He said:

"Why, yes; I had him killed simply because if I had not he would have been dictator in my place."

Can you imagine George Washington doing such a thing as that? [Cheers.]

The Senator from Tennessee is a master of satire, but I do not think in any of his diatribe against General Funston he said a more cutting thing than the General said right there, and the great merit of the statement over and above the Senator's is it is true, and the American people will believe it. I read further, and since we have had so much about the brutalities of our soldiers, perhaps it is well for us to see what Funston says about the brutalities of the insurgents:

In the town of San Isidro, where I commanded for a year and a half, was a family of the name of Baya, a Filipino family. The father had been an opponent always of rebellion. He was a large landowner and had a considerable family. He had five or six sons, among them the youngest boy, a chap of about 10 years. This boy had gone to school for a couple of years in Manila, but during the war had returned to his home. He came over quite often to visit me and talk with me. He spoke Spanish and was thinking of studying English. Consequently he got hold of a grammar and was working away at the English language, and he came to me half a dozen times to get some aid when he would get all tangled up on some of our beautiful words.

This boy was suspected finally of being a spy because he came over to my headquarters a few times. One day a little over a year ago his father sent him just outside the town to see if the crops on his land were ready to cut. It was considered perfectly safe to allow the boy to go out there; but the insurgent chief Tagunta had ordered this boy captured at all hazards, not only because he was suspected of being a spy, but also because his father had refused to pay taxes to the insurgent government and would recognize no government but that of the United States.

This poor helpless boy, who was innocent of being a spy as anyone possibly could be, and who, in fact, had never discussed any phase of the war with me at all, was taken by these murderers, tied to a stake, and flogged to death. They flogged him for three hours, until he fell dead.

Can you imagine Israel Putnam doing a thing of that kind? [Cheers.]

A few days later the same chief who had the boy flogged and who had been unable to collect any taxes in the town made a raid in the town with a number of guerrillas. He made the raid and burned about 300 houses and killed more than 15 people without any just cause or provocation whatever, in order to compel them to pay taxes to the alleged insurgent government. We had been hunting him fully a year, and lay for him for many a week, and I am glad to say that the next time I had command of a detachment that got him, and now he is with the angels. [Laughter and applause.]

It would be impossible to exaggerate the number of crimes that have been committed by the insurgent leaders—crimes against their own people—the assassination of Filipinos, not only those who were suspected of being in sympathy with the Americans, but people who had refused to pay insurgent taxes, men against whom there was no suspician whatever. The number would run not only up into the hundreds, but even up into the thousands.

There is not a town in the Philippine Islands in which men have not been assassinated by the orders of these men, and there is not a single chief, from Aguinaldo down to the lowest leader of a band of guerrillas, who could not be put on trial and convicted of murder before any jury in the United States—downright, deliberate, cold-blooded murder.

Aguinaldo himself, tried in any court in the world, could be convicted of the murder of Luna, and there is not one who could not be convicted of the assassination of men, women, and children.

I believe it is safe to say that there has never been a war in this world where the people have shown such patience and such humanity as have the United States troops in the Philippine Islands. [Cheers.] With very rare exceptions all the men executed have been executed after fair trial before a military commission. They had counsel to defend them where the case has gone before the commanding general for review. Of course, there have been exceptions, but probably not more than a dozen altogether, where men caught red-handed in the commission of a crime have been summarily executed. But that is done in every war; it was done in our own civil war; it has been done in every war that the world ever saw. But these cases have been very rare.

I do not want to say anything brutal, but, as I say, the Army feels bitterly about this business. I have no quarrel with the man who thinks that we should not at first have taken the Philippine Islands. I have no quarrel with the man who thinks a whole lot of things, but who does not say too much about it now, but all those men who have been writing and talking about this thing and keeping this warfare alive, and in the field to-day—I say that I would rather see any one of these men hanged—hanged for treason, hanged for giving aid and comfort to the enemy—than see the humblest soldier in the United States Army lying dead on the field of battle. [Applause and cheers.]

Now, that is severe language; perhaps it was an indiscreet statement to make; but who does not recognize the feeling of the soldier when he recounts the hardships of himself and his comrades and the malignant way in which he has been treated?

Now, Mr. President, I do not want Senators to get the impression that I think Funston is the only hero of the Spanish-American war. I have put his record before the American people in detail for the reason that he has been especially assailed. I remember that Otis, and MacArthur, and Lawton, and Wheaton were all heroes before General Funston was born, and I remember also that the commanding general now in the Philippine Islands was a hero more than forty years ago.

By the way, if you will allow me, General Chaffee is well-nigh a Kansan also. He married a Kansan woman, and the better part of most good men has been brought out by the devotion and the love of some good woman. The trip by General Chaffee from Washington City to where the allied armies were congregated in China, the bold announcement he made to the generals of the armies of other countries that he proposed to move the next morning to Pekin, and his successful march to the relief of our minister and others who were confined in the Chinese capital is one of the brightest pages in the history of modern warfare.

I may be permitted also to point to the fact that the first soldier who scaled the walls of Pekin, under Chaffee, was a Kansas boy—young Titus—who is now at West Point, being the better prepared to make of himself an American soldier.

It is not my purpose to discuss at length the charges made against isolated acts of brutality by the American soldier in the Philippines, nor do I intend to weary the Senate with reciting at length the many cases of barbarous cruelty perpetrated by the insurgents. There are other Senators upon this floor, members of the committee, who are more familiar with the facts than myself; but I must be permitted to say that the record of the men who have been in command, as well as the record of General Chaffee, who is now in command in the Philippine Islands—their whole life given in patriotic service to the country—is a sufficient guaranty that the warfare that we have been carrying on in suppressing this insurrection has not been attended with any more cruelty than was absolutely necessary, unless it be in isolated cases.

It is inconceivable, at least to me, that men of the experience, courage, patriotism, and honor of these generals would sanction a violation of the rules of honorable warfare. There is one thing to be remembered: You can not fight a barbarous foe in the same way that you can a civilized enemy. Andrew Jackson, when he fought the Seminoles in Florida, conducted an entirely different campaign from what he did in the war of 1812.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] called my attention just awhile ago to the fact that we have violated the rules of civilized warfare in our combats with the Indians from ocean to ocean.

Colonel Chivington, in his fight with the Indians at Sand Creek, conducted a different warfare from what he would had he been fighting a civilized foe. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] will remember that battle. I believe it created an issue in Colorado politics back, I think, in 1864, and, if I am reliably informed, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] took the side of Colonel Chivington. A man who was in direct command and who really fought the battle was afterwards, for a great many years, an honored member of this body.

General Forsythe, who fought the last Indian battle in this country, at Wounded Knee, killed every single Indian, and was justified, in my judgment, in doing so.

The Senator from Tennessee seems to forget that isolated cases of barbarity are incident to all wars, even among civilized people. Allowances must be made for the passions of men, and especially for the acts of bad men that are connected with all armies.

I was surprised the other day when the Senator arose in his place and said there was no massacre at Fort Pillow. The Senator is not able to efface the history of that transaction by a mere statement that there was no massacre. I do not pretend that the authorities of the Southern Confederacy were responsible in any way for it. It was the act of a few infuriated men under General Forrest; but if everything that has been charged by Senators on the other side were admitted, if every instance of isolated brutality should be as real as has been painted by their ready words and brilliant imaginations, it fails in comparison with the atrocities at Fort Pillow. The Senator will see that the blood of Tennesseeans was shed in that awful slaughter. I mean, of course, Union soldies, not Confederates.

Here I desire to put in the RECORD, and will not stop to read it unless it is insisted upon, the account of that massacre as reported by Benjamin F. Wade and D. W. Gooch in report of committee No. 65, first session Thirty-eighth Congress, pages 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. How many pages does the Senator say?

Mr. BURTON. It takes six pages, the portions of which I have marked I desire to put in the RECORD. I will send the report to the Secretary's desk now and have it read if the Senator so desires.

Mr. CARMACK. If it is not too much, I should like to have it read. However, I will not interfere with the Senator. Let it go.

Mr. BURTON. I have no objection to having it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Kansas will be inserted without reading.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FORT PILLOW MASSACRE.

Although your committee were instructed to inquire only in reference to the attack, capture, and massacre of Fort Pillow, they have deemed it proper to take some testimony in reference to the operations of Forrest and his command immediately preceding and subsequent to that horrible transaction. It will appear from the testimony thus taken that the atrocities committed at Fort Pillow were not the result of passions excited by the heat of conflict, but were the results of policy deliberately decided upon and unhesitatingly announced. Even if the uncertainty of the fate of those officers and men belonging to colored regiments who have heretofore been taken prisoners by the rebels has failed to convince the authorities of our Government of this fact, the testimony herewith submitted must convince even the most skeptical that it is the intention of the rebel authorities not to recognize the officers and men of our colored regiments as entitled to the treatment accorded by all civilized nations to prisoners of war. The declarations of Forrest and his officers, both before and after the capture of Fort Pillow, as testified to by such of our men as have escaped after being taken by him; the threats contained in the various demands for surrender made at Paducah, Columbus, and other places; the renewal of the massacre the morning after the capture of Fort Pillow; the statements made by the rebel officers to the officers of our gunboats who received a few survivors at Fort Pillow—all this proves most conclusively the policy they have determined to adopt.

* * * * * * *

It was at Fort Pillow, however, that the brutality and cruelty of the rebels were most fearfully exhibited. The garrison there, according to the last returns received at headquarters, amounted to 19 officers and 538 enlisted men, of whom 262 were colored troops, comprising one battalion of the Sixth United States Heavy Artillery (formerly called the First Alabama Artillery), of colored troops, under command of Maj. L. F. Booth; one section of the Second United States Light Artillery, colored, and one battalion of the Tennessee Cavalry, white, commanded by Maj. W. F. Bradford. Major Booth was the ranking officer, and was in command of the post.

On Tuesday, the 12th of April (the anniversary of the attack on Fort Sumter, in April, 1861), the pickets of the garrison were driven in just before sunrise, that being the first intimation our forces there had of any intention on the part of the enemy to attack that place. Fighting soon became general, and about 9 o'clock Major Booth was killed. Major Bradford succeeded to the command, and withdrew all the forces within the fort. They had previously occupied some intrenchments at some distance from the fort and farther from the river.

This fort was situated on a high bluff, which descended precipitately to the river's edge, the side of the bluff on the river side being covered with trees, bushes, and fallen timber. Extending back from the river on either side of the fort was a ravine or hollow, the one below the fort containing several private stores and some dwellings, constituting what was called the town. At the mouth of that ravine, and on the river bank, were some Government buildings containing commissary and quartermaster stores. The ravine above the fort was known as Cold Creek Ravine, the sides being covered with trees and bushes. To the right, or below and a little to the front of the fort, was a level piece of ground, not quite so elevated as the fort itself, on which had been erected some log huts or shanties, which were occupied by the white troops, and also used for hospital and other purposes. Within the fort tents had been erected, with board floors, for the use of the colored troops. There were six pieces of artillery in the fort, consisting of two 6-pounders, two 12-pounder howitzers, and two 10-pounder Parrots.

The rebels continued their attack, but up to 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon they had not gained any decisive success. Our troops, both white and black, fought most bravely, and were in good spirits. The gallant No. 7 (New Era), Captain Marshall, took part in the conflict, shelling the enemy as opportunity offered. Signals had been agreed upon by which the officers in the fort could indicate where the guns of the boat could be most effective. There being but one gunboat present, no permanent impression appears to have been produced upon the enemy; for as they were shelled out of one ravine they would make their appearance in the other. They would thus appear and retire as the gunboat moved from one point to the other. About 1 o'clock the fire on both sides slackened somewhat, and the gunboat moved out in the river to cool and clean its guns, having fired 282 rounds of shells, shrapnel, and canister, which nearly exhausted its supply of ammunition.

The rebels, having thus far failed in their attack, now resorted to their customary use of flags of truce. The first flag of truce conveyed a demand from Forrest for the unconditional surrender of the fort. To this Major Bradford replied, asking to be allowed one hour to consult with his officers and the officers of the gunboat. In a short time a second flag of truce appeared with a communication from Forrest that he would allow Major Bradford twenty minutes in which to move his troops out of the fort, and if it was not done within that time an assault would be ordered. To this Major Bradford returned the reply that he would not surrender.

During the time these flags of truce were flying the rebels were moving down the ravine and taking positions from which the more readily to charge upon the fort. Parties of them were also engaged in plundering the Government buildings of commissary and quartermaster stores in full view of the gunboat. Captain Marshall states that he refrained from firing upon the rebels, although they were thus violating the flag of truce, for fear that, should they finally succeed in capturing the fort, they would justify any atrocities they might commit by saying that they were in retaliation for his firing while the flag of truce was flying. He says, however, that when he saw the rebels coming down the ravine above the fort and taking positions there he got under way and stood for the fort, determined to use what little ammunition he had left in shelling them out of the ravine; but he did not get up within effective range before the final assault was made.

Immediately after the second flag of truce retired the rebels made a rush from the positions they had so treacherously gained and obtained possession of the fort, raising the cry of "No quarter!" But little opportunity was allowed for resistance. Our troops, black and white, threw down their arms and sought to escape by running down the steep bluff near the fort and secreting themselves behind trees and logs, in the bushes, and under the brush, some even jumping into the river, leaving only their heads above the water as they crouched down under the bank.

Then followed a scene of cruelty and murder without a parallel in civilized warfare, which needed but the tomahawk and scalping knife to exceed the worst atrocities ever committed by savages. The rebels commenced an indiscriminate slaughter, sparing neither age nor sex, white or black, soldier or civilian. The officers and men seemed to vie with each other in the devilish work. Men, women, and even children, wherever found, were deliberately shot down, beaten, and hacked with sabers. Some of the children, not more than 10 years old, were forced to stand up and face their murderers while being shot. The sick and the wounded were butchered without mercy, the rebels even entering the hospital building and dragging them out to be shot, or killing them as they lay there unable to offer the least resistance.

All over the hillside the work of murder was going on. Numbers of our men were collected together in lines or groups and deliberately shot; some were shot while in the river, while others on the bank were shot and their bodies kicked into the water, many of them still living but unable to make any exertion to save themselves from drowning. Some of the rebels stood on the top of the hill or a short distance down its side, and called to our soldiers to come up to them, and, as they approached, shot them down in cold blood; if their guns or pistols missed fire, forcing them to stand there until they were again prepared to fire. All around were heard cries of "No quarter!" "No quarter!" "Kill the damned niggers; shoot them down!" All who asked for mercy were answered by the most cruel taunts and sneers. Some were spared for a time, only to be murdered under circumstances of greater cruelty. No cruelty, which the most fiendish malignity could devise, was omitted by these murderers.

One white soldier who was wounded in one leg so as to be unable to walk, was made to stand up while his tormentors shot him; others who were wounded and unable to stand were held up and again shot. One negro who had been ordered by a rebel officer to hold his horse was killed by him when he remounted; another, a mere child, whom an officer had taken up behind him on his horse, was seen by Chalmers, who at once ordered the officer to put him down and shoot him, which was done. The huts and tents in which many of the wounded had sought shelter were set on fire, both that night and the next morning, while the wounded were still in them—those only escaping who were able to get themselves out or who could prevail on others less injured than themselves to help them out, and even some of those thus seeking to escape the flames were met by those ruffians and brutally shot down or had their brains beaten out.

One man was deliberately fastened down to the floor of a tent, face upward, by means of nails driven through his clothing and into the boards under him, so that he could not possibly escape, and then the tent was set on fire; another was nailed to the side of a building outside of the fort and then the building set on fire and burned. The charred remains of five or six bodies were afterwards found, all but one so much disfigured and consumed by the flames that they could not be identified, and the identification of that one is not absolutely certain, although there can hardly be a doubt that it was the body of Lieutenant Akerstrom, quartermaster of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry and a native Tennessean. Several witnesses who saw the remains and who were personally acquainted with him while living have testified that it is their firm belief that it was his body that was thus treated.

These deeds of murder and cruelty ceased when night came on, only to be renewed the next morning, when the demons carefully sought among the dead, lying about in all directions, for any of the wounded yet alive, and those they found were deliberately shot. Scores of the dead and wounded were found there the day after the massacre by the men from some of our gunboats, who were permitted to go on shore and collect the wounded and bury the dead. The rebels themselves had made a pretense of burying a great many of their victims, but they had merely thrown them, without the least regard to care or decency, into the trenches and ditches about the fort, or the little hollows and ravines on the hillside, covering them but partially with earth. Portions of heads and faces, hands and feet were found protruding through the earth in every direction. The testimony also establishes the fact that the rebels buried some of the living with the dead, a few of whom succeeded afterwards in digging themselves out, or were dug out by others, one of whom your committee found in Mound City hospital, and there examined.

Of the men, from 300 to 400 are known to have been killed at Fort Pillow, of whom at least 300 were murdered in cold blood after the post was in possession of the rebels and our men had thrown down their arms and ceased to offer resistance. Of the survivors, except the wounded in the hospital at Mound City and the few who succeeded in making their escape unhurt, nothing definite is known, and it is to be feared that many have been murdered after being taken away from the fort.

In reference to the fate of Major Bradford, who was in command of the fort when it was captured, and who had up to that time received no injury, there seems to be no doubt. The general understanding everywhere seemed to be that he had been brutally murdered the day after he was taken prisoner.

There is some discrepancy in the testimony, but your committee do not see how the one who professed to have been an eyewitness of his death could have been mistaken. There may be some uncertainty in regard to his fate.

When your committee arrived at Memphis, Tenn., they found and examined a man (Mr. McLagan) who had been conscripted by some of Forrest's forces, but who, with other conscripts, had succeeded in making his escape. He testifies that while two companies of rebel troops, with Major Bradford and many other prisoners, were on their march from Brownsville to Jackson, Tenn., Major Bradford was taken by five rebels—one an officer—led about 50 yards from the line of march and deliberately murdered in view of all there assembled. He fell, killed instantly by three musket balls, even while asking that his life might be spared, as he had fought them manfully and was deserving of a better fate. The motive for the murder of Major Bradford seems to have been the simple fact that, although a native of the South, he remained loyal to his Government. The testimony herewith submitted contains many statements made by the rebels that they did not intend to treat "home-made Yankees," as they termed loyal Southerners, any better than negro troops.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, now, since the Senator from Utah has spent so much time in describing the cruelties of some of our soldiers in the Philippines, careful all the while to leave out anything about the cruelties of the Filipinos against our soldiers, one would imagine after reading his pages of criticism and condemnation, and hearing him fairly scream in agony of soul as he recounted them, that he had never heard of any massacre nearer home. I will tell him that when he was a little child, near where he was born, and traced to the leaders, or at least to some of the leaders, of the church of which the honorable Senator is familiar, there was a massacre which for hideous atrocity and devilish slaughter—slaughter of men, women, and children—has never been paralleled, at least on this continent. I refer, as everybody knows, to the Mountain Meadows massacre.

I desire to present parts of three affidavits, which I have marked, published in Senate Executive Document No. 42, Thirty-sixth Congress, first session, pages 80, 81, 82, 83, and 84. I will not stop to read the affidavits now, but I desire to have them incorporated with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The affidavits referred to are as follows:

MOUNTAIN MEADOWS.

CAMP FLOYD, UTAH TERRITORY, August 18, 1859.

SIR: Inclosed herewith you will find an affidavit of Captain Lynch and others in relation to the massacre at the Mountain Meadows. This affidavit I have been permitted to forward to you for your information in relation to the sad affair of which it treats. One thing I think you may regard as certain; that is, that these children never were in the hands of the Indians; were never purchased of anyone, but were parceled out among the murderers, and that Dr. Forney and Hamlin knew it.

This affidavit may also be useful to the Administration in explaining the differences existing among Federal appointees in Utah.

I assure you, sir, that it affords me no pleasure to give you this information. I do so only under a strong sense of duty.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

D. R. ECKELS.

HON. SECRETARY OF INTERIOR.

NOTE.—I am informed that Captain Lynch has chosen to make a copy of these affidavits public.

D. R. ECKELS.

UTAH TERRITORY, Cedar County, ss:

James Lynch, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, states on oath that he was one of the party who accompanied Dr. Jacob Forney, superintendent of Indian affairs, in an expedition to the Mountain Meadows, Santa Clara, etc., in the months of March and April last, when we received 16 children, sole survivors of the wholesale massacre perpetrated at the former place in the month of September, 1857. The children, when we first saw them, were in a most wretched and deplorable condition. With little or no clothing, covered with filth and dirt, they presented a sight heartrending and miserable in the extreme. The scene of the fearful murder still bears evidence of the atrocious crime, charged by the Mormons and their friends to have been perpetrated by Indians, but really by Mormons disguised as Indians, who, in their headlong zeal, bigotry, and fanaticism, deemed this a favorable opportunity of at once wreaking their vengeance on the hated people of Arkansas, and of making another of those iniquitous "blood offerings" to God, so often recommended by Brigham Young and their other leaders.

For more than 2 square miles the ground is strewn with the skull bones and other remains of the victims. In places the water has washed many of these remains together, forming little mounds, raising monuments, as it were, to the cruelty of man to his fellow-man. Here and there may be found the remains of an innocent infant beside those of some fond, devoted mother, ruthlessly slain by men worse than demons. Their bones lie bleaching in the noonday sun, a mute but an eloquent appeal to a just but offended God for vengeance. I have witnessed many harrowing sights on the fields of battle, but never did my heart thrill with such horrible emotions as when standing on that silent plain contemplating the remains of the innocent victims of Mormon avarice, fanaticism, and cruelty.

Many of these remains are now in possession of a Mr. Rodgers, a gentleman who accompanied us upon the expedition. Why were not these remains interred, if not in a Christian-like and proper manner, at least covered from the sight? But no, the hatred of their murderers extended to them after their death. There they lay, a prey to the famished wolves that run howling over the desolate plains to the unlooked-for feasts, food for the croaking raven that through the tainted air with swift wing wended their way to revel in their banquet of blood.

I inquired of Jacob Hamlin, who is a high church dignitary, why these remains were not buried at some time subsequent to the murder. He said the bodies were so much decomposed that it was impossible to inter them. No longer let us boast of our citizenship, freedom, or civilization. Here was 140 poor, harmless emigrants to California butchered in cold blood, by white men, too, with attending circumstances far exceeding anything in cruelty that we have ever heard of or read of being perpetrated even by savages. It is now high time that the actors and instigators of this dreadful crime should be brought to condign punishment. For years these Mormons have possessed an immunity from punishment, or a sort of privilege for committing crimes of this nature, but soon, it is to be hoped, a new state of things must dawn—retribution must come, vengeance must be had. Civilization, humanity, and Christianity call for it, and the American people must have it. Blood may be shed, difficulties may be encountered, but just as sure as there is a sun at noonday retribution will yet overtake the guilty wretches, their aiders and abetters, whether open or hidden under disguise of Government employment.

John D. Lee, a Mormon president, has knowledge of the whereabouts of much of the property taken from these ill-fated emigrants, and, if I am not misinformed, in possession of a large quantity of it. Why not make him disgorge this ill-gotten plunder, and disclose the amount escheated to and sold out by the Mormon Church as its share of the blood of helpless victims?

When he enters into a league with hell and a covenant with death, he should not be allowed to make feasts and entertain Government officials at his table, as he did Dr. Jacob Forney, superintendent of Indian affairs, while the rest of his party refused, in his hearing and that of Lee, to share the hospitality of this notorious murderer—this scourge of the desert. This man Lee does not deny, but admits, that he was present at the massacre, but pretends that he was there to prevent bloodshed; but positive evidence implicates him as the leader of the murderers too deeply for denial. The children point him out as one of them that did the bloody work. He and other white men had these children, and they were not in the hands of the Indians, but in the hands of those who murdered them, and Jacob Hamlin and Jacob Forney know it. The children pointed out to us the dresses and the jewelry of their mothers and sisters that now grace the angelic forms of these murderers' women and children. Verily it would seem that men and women alike combine in this wholesale slaughter.

This ill-fated train consisted of 18 wagons, 1,820 head of cattle, household goods to a large amount, besides money, estimated at $80,000 or $90,000, the greater part of which, it is believed, now makes rich the harems of this John D. Lee. Of this train a man, whose name is unknown, fortunately escaped at the time of the massacre to Vegas, 100 miles distant from the scene of blood, on the California road. He was followed by five Mormons who, through promises of safety, etc., prevailed upon him to begin his return to Mountain Meadows, and, contrary to their promises and his just expectation, they inhumanly butchered him, laughing at and disregarding his loud and repeated cries for mercy, as witnessed and told by Ira Hatch, one of the five. The object in killing this man was to leave no witness competent to give testimony in a court of justice; but God, whose ways are inscrutable, has thought proper, through the instrumentality of the "babes and sucklings" recovered by us, to bring to life this most horrible tragedy and make known its barbarous and inhuman perpetrators.

James Lynch, being duly sworn, states on oath that all the material facts stated by him in the foregoing affidavit, so far as he states the same as of his own knowledge, are true, and so far as he states the same as from information derived from others, as also the conclusions drawn from the same, he believes to be true, and further saith not.

JAMES LYNCH.

Sworn to and subscribed July 27, 1859.

D. R. ECKELS,
Chief Justice of Supreme Court.

The undersigned state on oath that the foregoing affidavit has been carefully read to them; that they are the identical persons named in it as having been employed by Dr. Jacob Forney to return with him to Salt Lake City; that they went from Beaver City with said Forney south, and back again, and that we fully concur in the statements made by James Lynch, esq., in the foregoing affidavit, as to what we saw and heard on the trip, and the conduct of Dr. Forney, superintendent of Indian affairs, and further say not.

THOMAS DUNN.
JOHN LOFINK.

Subscribed and sworn to before me July 27, 1859.

D. R. ECKELS,
Chief Justice of Supreme Court.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have reluctantly called attention to these two terrible massacres. I do not charge anyone living with the responsibility for either. I do not charge the Confederate authorities for the responsibility at Fort Pillow. I do not believe that the Mormon Church as an organization ought to be charged with the Mountain Meadow massacre, but that there were some of the high dignitaries that helped plan and execute that bloody slaughter there can be no question. Nor do I refer to these acts of cruelty and barbarism to be plead in mitigation of any wrongful act that has been committed by any soldier in the Philippines. That there have been barbarous cruelties practiced I have no doubt. They are incidents of war. Bad men will get with the Army. Vengeance will be meted out to those who practice cruelties against our soldiers, and we can not expect but what there will be some cases—and there may be many cases—of seeming or actual cruelty, but, as I said before, we must not forget we are fighting a savage foe, and in doing that the same kind of warfare can not be had that is expected between civilized nations.

I know, Mr. President, it has been said repeatedly upon this floor that the Filipino people are a highly civilized and educated people; that nine-tenths of them can read and write. That may be true as to many of the citizens of the villages and towns, but the great number of the millions who live there are evidently savages, and the testimony is overwhelming to that effect. I do not mean, sir, but what there are different grades, from the savage bushmen up to men like Aguinaldo and Luna, but their practices of torture, their practices of warfare, and those incidents that General Funston and other generals have given go to show that they are not a civilized people.

I am led to inquire now, What is this all about? Why do Senators stand here as the advocates of the insurgents? Why are we called upon to stand here and defend our soldiers? The reason is apparent: In quelling the insurrection in the Philippine Islands, Senators on that side of the Chamber believe we are doing wrong. We believe we are doing right.

They say, Tell the Filipino that he shall have his independence. We answer, He shall submit to the authority of this Government, a part of which now is the Philippine Islands, and when he does that, and when we have established civil government, just in as large measure as he is capable of receiving it we will take up the other question, as to whether we will withdraw from the islands or permanently retain and civilize them.

You may ask me how soon that problem will be solved. That I can not tell. It may be a year; it may be five years; it may be twenty-five years. But whatever the time will be, howsoever long it may take in order to establish civil government in those islands, while they are part of the United States we will keep on in our efforts in that direction.

I know the Senator from Tennessee the other day in a satirical way referred to our President in speaking about the time it would take to civilize the Filipinos. The President needs no defense at my hands. As a soldier, as a statesman, in literature, and in politics—using that word in the highest, purest, and best sense of the term—Theodore Roosevelt is easily the first citizen of the Republic. But the Senator thinks him a little strenuous and that he travels too fast. I will say to the Senator that at the close of the campaign in 1904, when the besotted, bedraggled, and defeated Democracy attempts to gather itself together, he will be more impressed with that idea then than he is now. I also venture to suggest that the Senator will not compare the President at that time to a race horse. That may do now; but then visions of a steam engine will flit through the bewildered brain of the Senator when he thinks of President Roosevelt.

But, Mr. President, in speaking of the time it takes to civilize savages—if I may use the term—or men of a lower order of civilization, it is well to see something of our work in this country. I know, sir, we have mistreated the Indians a great many times; we have mistreated them not only in warfare, but we have mistreated them in treaties we have made with them and in other ways; but I know also that we have been the means of civilizing these people. It has taken a long time to do it. To-day there are in the Five Civilized Tribes men who are capable to sit in either branch of Congress. The governor of the Chickasaw Nation and the chiefs and governors of other of those tribes are men of commanding ability—men who were born there. These Indians now have their churches, their schools, their homes. They have at last entered into agreements that will soon make them citizens of the United States in the full sense of the term. Within two or three years more, at most, the territory of these tribes will become a State or a Territory of this Union. It has taken a century to bring those people up to this high plane of capable citizenship; but who doubts that our work has not been on the whole best for them and best for us.

I desire in this connection, Mr. President, to call attention to something that was said yesterday by the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. His position is that the Anglo-Saxon hates the black man; that he is not willing to do anything to help civilize him; and the Senator then went on to speak of the way they did in South Carolina. I want to read something the Senator said:

> We have in the United States a problem which will give you scope for all the philanthropy and all the humanity and all the Christianity and all the elevating, humanizing, Christianizing forces of which you are capable, and yet you turn your backs on that and march to the East and seize ruthlessly and by torture and by infamies, villainies, and cruelties the habitations of the poor Filipinos. And you murder, you butcher, you shoot them in blood, you torture them, you do everything. You have eclipsed the South in your story of infamy under the United States flag in the Philippines.

The foregoing is a monstrous slander on our soldiers and is not borne out by the facts.

I am surprised, after I heard what the Senator had said before that, namely, that "when they put a negro's head in the sand that they put his whole body in the sand," he should be willing to admit that the tortures and barbarities of our soldiers in the Philippines were as bad as what he says the people of the South have been inflicting on the negro. Conscious of their infamies, miseries, and wrongs, it seems that the Senator wants company. He says we of the North also lynch the negro. He made reference to my State:

> Why, even bleeding Kansas has her story of rape and a negro burned for it.

Mr. President, that is true. I do not suppose that Senators, when I tried to say something good yesterday about Kansas, imagined that we have no crime at all in our State. I am sorry to say that now and then a criminal develops there; now and then we have a murder; and I am especially sorry to say that on one occasion we had a lynching. Every Kansan is ashamed of it; every man in my State who cares anything at all about good government is ashamed of it. If the Senator from South Carolina is proud of his people doing anything of that kind, I want to assure him that we are not proud of it. In Kansas the negro has the same right and is protected in the same way as the white man. The white man of Kansas does not hate the negro.

No Senator from Kansas has ever boasted that our people have lynched a negro; that distinction, I believe, is enjoyed alone by the Senator from South Carolina. We do not believe in brutalities against the black man, either in this country or in the Philippine Islands. We would help, we would educate, we would civilize him. The North as well as the South paid in treasure, tears, and blood for every wrong against the black man in the past, and the same just God who required that awful sacrifice will hold us to a strict account for every wrong we commit in the future.

Mr. President, I know that the people of the South will not think that I have any feeling against them, born, as I was, just across Mason and Dixon's line. My people for one hundred and fifty years were from the South. Many of my kith and kin live there now. I know them to be a brave and chivalrous people. I know also that there is presented to them a very important and overwhelming problem—What shall become of the negro? But I say to the Senator from South Carolina that his State, and no other State, can maintain government in the way that he described yesterday.

It may be, sir, that we gave the negro the ballot too soon. I shall not stop to discuss that. It may be that a mistake was made there. It may be that it is necessary for certain States to violate the Constitution, or if not directly, then indirectly, in order to suppress a portion of the negro vote. I do not know. But I do know this: That if you inflict the kind of wrongs the Senator from South Carolina admitted upon this floor that you are committing against the negro; if you make it necessary for him to have property in order to vote, or if in other ways you take the right of suffrage away from him, I want to tell you that the law of compensation will assert itself and the negro will get the property. Already that great prodigy of common sense, Booker T. Washington, has begun to advise his people along the right lines. If I understand him aright, he says to his people: "Let politics alone, get a home, develop yourselves in the useful arts." He is having imitators in my State. Rev. William T. Vernon, one of the ablest orators I ever heard, a man of commanding ability, is building an institution there for the purpose of educating the negro, educating him in the useful arts, and that great philosopher, orator, and philanthropist is telling his people to get homes and get property. He has not a drop of Anglo-Saxon blood in his body. His skin is black, but his heart is white. He is doing a very great work. He has the sympathy and he is getting help from the white man.

Mr. President, I have faith to believe that the negro in this country will continue in the future, as he has continued in the past, to advance in civilization, and I believe that the white man will help him. I believe, sir, that, as the last wound of the great civil strife has healed over, there will come a time when the last vestige of prejudice against the man in this country who has a black skin will be obliterated. It may take a long time in certain sections of the country; but even now down South, I am told, that it is difficult to tell the exact color of the skin of a man who is rich. As I said before, shut the negro out of politics, tell him he must have property before he can advance socially or politically, then while you are telling of his inferiority and boasting of your superiority the negro will be acquiring the property.

There is nothing in this world that is real but the good. Every wrong is an illusion, and there are no exceptions to the laws of God Almighty. I know, sir, we have this serious problem before us; but what is the mission of the Anglo-Saxon race? Is it to go on and conquer and oppress? No; it is to go on and conquer and civilize.

We have carried the principles of the Declaration of Independence into every country that we have acquired. We carried the principles of the Declaration of Independence to Florida, to Louisiana, to New Mexico, and to California, and we are now carrying them to far-away Alaska, to Hawaii, and to Porto Rico, and this bill, Mr. President, is a step in the direction of taking self-government into the Philippine Archipelago. We do not belong to that part of the Anglo-Saxon race which believes in oppression, and I do not belong to the party which believes in oppression. Ours is the party of liberty, of civilization. It has done more for the amelioration of mankind than any political organization in the history of the human race.

What, sir, has the Democratic party done for the benefit of anybody, especially in the last forty years? What have you done, except to grumble? You grumbled at Lincoln and you grumbled at Grant. You grumbled because it was necessary to make a great debt in order to save this Government, and then you grumbled because we proposed to pay it in good money. You grumbled at us because we returned to specie resumption, which did so much to give us a splendid prosperity.

You grumbled because we passed laws for the protection of American industries and American labor. You have been grumbling at us while we have been passing laws under which our manufactures have scaled the Allegheny Mountains, penetrated the Mississippi Valley, crossed the prairies of the West, crossed the Rocky Mountains, and reached down to the Golden Gate. You have been grumbling at us while we have been passing laws which have enabled our network of railroads to ramify this entire country. You have been grumbling at us for the past forty years, notwithstanding the fact that in those forty years in every field of human industry that you can now name we have made greater strides of progress than did our fathers from the landing of the Pilgrims down to 1861. We have opened up in the last forty years and planted more acres of ground to the staple crops than did our forefathers from the time Columbus discovered America down to the close of the civil war. We have built more manufactures. We have grown and produced more. Yet during all that time instead of helping us you have been grumbling at us.

You grumbled, complained, and promised, until at last, in 1892, the American people were led to trust you. And what was the result? Inside of six months there was a greater monetary loss, a greater depreciation of property than the total aggregate national debt at the close of the war. You are assuming now the same rôle that you have been playing for the past forty years. You are grumbling. I ask you to quit it. I ask you to come forward now and debate this bill upon its merits. I ask you to quit talking against our soldiers in the Philippines. I ask you to stop questioning our motives. I ask you to stop talking against imaginary policies, policies that exist only in your suspicions, that we are trying to enslave somebody over there.

What we are trying to do is to learn what we ought to do. A nation no more than an individual can do a wrong without punishment. When a man does his duty he builds better than he knows. When a nation does its duty it builds better than it knows. When a man does a wrong the harmful effects are greater than he ever conceived or intended. When a nation does a wrong the evils flowing from it are greater than were ever anticipated. This is the law of our being, the law of God, and can not be violated without punishment.

What I want to know now is, What is the right of this question: what is our duty? How did we come in possession of the Philippine Islands? You all know it was the result of the Spanish-American war. Everybody was in favor of that war. Cuba had kept a butcher shop near our shores as long as we could endure it. We heard the cry of those people for help, and we responded to that cry, and we responded in a way that no nation ever did before. We tendered our blood and our treasure as a sacrifice to help those people and never expected a dollar of money or a foot of land as a reward. We never expected any material benefit. We never expected anything except the satisfaction of having done our duty.

We did our duty, and in doing it we builded better than we knew. Within ten days after war was declared everybody was astonished to see our flag floating in the Orient. Before the war was over everybody realized that we were a reunited people. The soldier who had worn the blue and the soldier who had worn the gray were marching under the same flag, wearing the same uniform, mixing their blood together on the field of battle. Sir, that war was worth all it cost us to have a reunited people. But that is not all.

For a great many years next before 1898 we had been giving all our energies to industries upon the land simply because it paid better. I know it has been said that a protective tariff destroyed our merchant marine. I do not believe that is true. Our merchant marine was allowed to be destroyed because it paid capital better to make investments on land. It paid better to put money in a railroad, in a manufactory, in a farm, or in a mine. We had gone on for a great many years making investments and developments on the land. We cared nought for the sea. We had reached the point, without realizing it, where we could make more and grow more than we could consume. We were ready for foreign markets. We were ready to ship what we made and what we grew to the uttermost parts of the world and we wanted our products to be shipped in our own vessels. Capital was ready about that time to go into ships, but there were two things that deterred it. We had no Navy to protect our merchant marine, as we thought, and, next, other nations were subsidizing ships. Up to this time we had done nothing to protect our shipping interests.

Just here I wish to pay special commendation to a few members in this and the other body who a few years before that time saw the necessity of increasing our Navy. You will remember, my friends, that the men who did this were largely Republicans.

I remember that in the campaign of 1896 in Kansas one of the opposition nominees for Congress made his campaign upon the statement, "What do we want with a navy? A navy can not plow corn." Two years after that it became apparent why we needed a navy.

By reason of our protective tariff, encouragement was given to labor, and the result was the best mechanics in the world. They lifted mechanism almost to the domain of the fine arts; and we discovered during the Spanish-American war that we were making in this country the best guns that were made anywhere, and that the few ships which had been built here were of the very best quality. What is more, we had also been developing and educating the seaman. We had behind the guns the best gunners. We had been breeding shooters in this country for two hundred years, but we did not know it. Capital did not realize it.

After the battle of Manila Bay and after the battle of Santiago, battles that astonished not only ourselves but astonished the world, capital was perfectly willing to invest in ships. Examine the record. Since the close of the Spanish-American war investment in ships has increased to a remarkable extent. The other day, not with your help, but in opposition to your efforts, we passed a bill which will still further encourage the building of ships. What will be the result? In a short time we will build a thousand, aye, 10,000 merchant ships. They will float the American flag; they will be manned by Americans, and they will carry from this great workhouse—for the United States is fast getting to be one vast workshop—what we make and what we grow to every part of the globe, and carry back to us the products of every clime. We have subjugated the land, now we are ready to dominate the sea.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I have been very much interested in the latter part of the Senator's argument. If I understand his argument, or that part of it with which I thoroughly agree, it is that we have not been investing in ships up to this time because the capital of the country has found more profitable employment in the building of railroads and in the opening of mines. I believe that was the Senator's statement.

Mr. BURTON. And other industries on land.

Mr. CARMACK. And other industries. I believe that was the Senator's statement.

Mr. BURTON. And for the further fear that the merchant ships could not be protected, not knowing that we had the kind of a Navy we did have until after Dewey and Sampson and Schley and the other captains revealed it to us by the battles of Manila and Santiago.

Mr. CARMACK. The economic reason which I understood the Senator to give was simply that capital could find more profitable employment in other directions than it could in the building of ships, but that with the change of conditions the building of ships has begun, because now capital can find profitable employment in building ships. Did I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. BURTON. That was about half my statement. There is not the same opportunity for capital to make investment on land that there has been in the past. Our railroads are largely built. Our manufactures are developed and other industries upon the land are developed. We were reaching a point, without realizing it, when it was necessary to pay attention to the sea. We did not know that until it was revealed to us by the Spanish-American war.

By reason of the protective tariff which has been in force in this country, by reason of the thorough establishment of the gold standard, which has given confidence to everybody, by reason of the wise laws which have been enacted in the past by the Republican party—by reason of all these things we accumulated an immense amount of property and money and developed in a material way faster since the close of the civil war than at any other time in our history. Indeed, we have not only excelled ourselves, but we have passed, far away passed, the entire civilized world.

We then reached a point where interest was very low. We had a vast amount of capital. We were ready to seek investments elsewhere, among other things in ships. But capital was deterred for two reasons. One was that it did not know that we had a sufficient navy to protect it. Another was that it did not know that it would have sufficient encouragement from the Government. Now we have passed a bill to extend that encouragement. We are going to protect that industry, just as we protect our other industries, and in a comparatively short time, as I said, the result will be that we will have thousands of merchant ships.

I understand what is in the mind of the Senator from Tennessee. He wants me to say that the ships would be built even if we had not passed the ship-subsidy bill. Yes; to a certain extent that is true, but not to the same extent. This is the very time to encourage that industry. It was revealed to us as the result of the Spanish-American war. We have been talking, for instance, for fifty years of an isthmian canal, but the Oregon sailing around the Horn was an object lesson that has done and will do more to build the isthmian canal than fifty years of speech making. That is another blessing which has come to us as a result of the Spanish-American war.

Now, sir, along with these blessings that have come to us may come some burdens, some obligations. Here is the Philippine Archipelago with millions of benighted people. What shall we do with them? Turn the country over to them? What is your plan? Shall it be that we will establish a protectorate there? Shall we establish any government at all there? What kind of a government? The kind, you say, that Aguinaldo and his compatriots want. Suppose they want an empire? Shall we let them build it, and shall we help them protect it?

There may be burdens to be borne, but "bear ye one anothers burdens" was given as a blessing and not as a curse. I am not influenced by the argument as to what it will all cost. I do not know how much it will cost to civilize the Philippine Archipelago, but I know that if it is our duty to do it, we are in perfect harmony with the laws of God Almighty by carrying out that duty, and the blessings will come. We gave our blood and our treasure to free Cuba. We expected nothing. In four short months we had Porto Rico and we had all the blessings I have recited, and many more.

Let us do our duty by the Filipinos. Let us first establish civil government there—first put down insurrection. Ah, Senators, listen to the words of General Funston when he says, stop this carping criticism now, and stop it until the insurgents acknowledge the authority of the American Government, a part of which they are, and when that is done, then let us calmly discuss what is best to be done. And that is answered when we learn what is our duty toward these people.

Gen. Robert E. Lee, at the supreme crisis of his life, in writing to his son, said "duty" was the greatest word in the English language. What is our duty?

I want to hear that discussed more. It will not do for Senators to stand upon the other side and indulge in ridicule. It will not do for Senators to think they have made a smart point simply by calling attention to the fact that out of all the evidence which has been presented it is shown that perhaps one Filipino child has been shot. That will not do. It will not do to heap contumely upon the heads of such men as Chaffee, Otis, MacArthur, and Funston. It will not do to do what you have always been doing—grumbling, finding fault, complaining. It does not require any ability to find fault. You can grumble about anything. Go into a forest of a thousand acres and you can not find a perfect tree. Go into a crowd of 10,000 people and you can not find a perfect man.

Mr. President, I have taken up a great deal more time than I intended. I am reminded now that when Dewey summoned his captains after the battle of Manila Bay to report to the flagship, Captain Coghlan was the first to respond. Admiral Dewey, with a look of anxiety on his face, said, "Captain, what casualties?" "There are no casualties on my ship, Commodore." Then came another and another and another, until each and all of the captains had responded, and each made the same report. Admiral Dewey bowed his head and in solemn voice said: "The hand of God is in it."

I know how easy it is to ridicule—I know how easy it is to charge hypocrisy; but I know, or I believe at least, that there is an overruling Providence who has been directing the affairs of this people from the time of the settlements at Jamestown. I believe there was an overruling Providence in the storm of battle throughout the entire civil war, and I believe the people of the South now realize it.

I believe that there was an overruling Providence that sustained Washington and gave him the courage and the strength to at last crush Cornwallis at Yorktown. I believe there is an overruling Providence that is now directing the affairs of this nation, and I believe that the all-conquering, all-powerful, all-dominating Anglo-Saxon race—yes, the better part of both the Teutonic and the Anglo-Saxon races, that give virility and strength to this people—are commissioned to carry a knowledge of our wise laws and our better civilization to the benighted peoples of the Orient. And I believe if we respond to this duty, not stopping to ask what is it all worth or what will it all cost, the blessings that will come to us will be manifold and lasting, or failing to discharge this great responsibility, the misfortunes that ever attend duty neglected will overtake us.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time to have it read or to read it now, but I should like to be permitted to insert in the RECORD the entire address of General Funston before the Lotus Club. I ask that it be printed as a part of my remarks, as an appendix.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none.

APPENDIX.

GENERAL FUNSTON DEFENDS THE ARMY.

Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston, U. S. A., was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Lotus Club in New York City on Saturday, March 8, which was attended by about three hundred people. General Funston made a ringing defense of the Army and of the Government's general policy in the Philippines. His remarks were received with the warmest approval and were frequently interrupted with applause. As reported in the New York Sun, General Funston said:

"To talk about the Philippines and about the war over there is not in all respects agreeable, but I am glad of the opportunity to lay before such a company a few facts. It may aid some of you who have been misled by stories of various kinds to believe that the Army in the Philippines has been doing as well as it possibly could, and it may enable others of you to be prouder than ever of the patience and fortitude and humanity which have distinguished the course of the Army and Navy in the Philippines from the beginning of the war down to the present time. [Applause.]

"I shall take very little of your time, and you will take into consideration, of course, the fact that I am not a public speaker. A man could not by knocking around the world for fifteen or twenty years acquire many graces as a speaker, but I will give you a few plain facts and ask you to draw your own conclusions.

WE COULD NOT SCUTTLE.

"When the city of Manila was surrendered to the Navy under Admiral Dewey [cheers] and to the Army under General Merritt, there were in the city some hundreds of Spanish families, men, women, and children, and a great many thousands of Spanish soldiers who were prisoners of war in the hands of our troops.

"In the eyes of the world these people, absolutely unarmed and helpless, were dependent entirely upon us for protection. In addition to these, there were many European residents; there were German and British merchants, with their families; proprietors of banks, commercial houses, warehouses, railroads, representing millions upon millions of dollars' worth of property.

"To have turned these helpless Spaniards and others over to the mercy of the uncontrollable mob which constituted the army of Aguinaldo would have been a positive crime. The Bulgarian and Armenian massacres would have been repeated on a smaller scale, and the whole thing would have constituted the blackest page in American history, a thing we could not have blotted out in a thousand years of repentance. [Applause.]

MASSACRE AND LOOT FOR MANILA.

"It is not to be supposed that Aguinaldo and some of the other higher officers would have countenanced a massacre of the helpless Spaniards or the looting of the city of Manila; but there is no possible doubt as to what would have happened. The 30,000 armed men who constituted his force would have been absolutely beyond control, and one has but to know that pitiable story of the execution of 200 helpless Spanish soldiers in 1899 by an insurgent major in the province of Albai—he has but to know that awful story in order to realize to what depths these brutal savages could go.

"No joint occupation of the city of Manila was possible. Only one thing could be done, and that was to put the insurgents, bag and baggage, clear outside of the city and make them stay outside, police the city with our own soldiers, and allow things to remain in that state until a final disposition of the Philippine Islands could be settled, either by the treaty of Paris or finally by the people of the United States.

"Accordingly, on the demand of the American authorities, the insurgents went outside the city instead of going up to Malolos, where their government went. They formed a line of trenches running parallel with our own and extending from the sea at Malibon on one side to Peracuna on the other. They dug their trenches to within 100 to 250 yards of our own lines and filled them with twenty or thirty thousand armed men, so that constant vigilance was necessary on our part.

FILIPINOS PROVOKED WAR.

"The insurgents, with ribald jests, with curses and indecent oaths and insults, taunted us as cowards and dared our men to open fire, but stern discipline prevailed in our army, and we obeyed the instructions from General Otis to avoid a conflict under all circumstances or delay it as long as was possible; but day after day the friction became more intense. Nearly all of us, I think, realized that it was not a question of months, but a question of a few days until the clash must come.

"Aguinaldo and his paper government, his cabinet, and his self-appointed congress retired to Malolos and there issued proclamations and sulked.

"Finally, probably two weeks before the beginning of the war, an insurgent captain who refused to respond to the challenge of a sentry on the streets of Manila was shot dead. That was the first actual clash.

"About three days after that a private soldier of the First Montana Regiment, who was on sentry duty outside the city, was approached by a man with a rifle at about 10 o'clock at night. He gave the usual challenge, but the man did not respond, but instead of that fired at him from a distance of a very few yards, but, Filipino-like, missed him. [Laughter.]

"Only two days later a private of the South Dakota regiment on outpost duty, only 2 miles north of the city, was approached by an apparently unarmed native, who asked him for a match. The sentry started to hand him one, when he drew a bolo, a native knife about 2 feet long, and gave him a terrific blow across the face, cutting him from the top of the skull down to the chin, and I am glad to say that within about half a second the native fell dead, shot through the heart.

FISHED FOR IT UNTIL THEY GOT IT.

"A few days later a drunken mob of Filipinos, partly officers and partly soldiers of Aguinaldo's army, attempted to rush through the lines of the First Nebraska near Santa Casa. Only the presence of Colonel Stearns, that magnificent soldier who fell at Cang Co, prevented the fight from opening at that time. He had a great deal of influence over the natives and over his own men, and he induced them to retire.

"Three days later an insurgent lieutenant and two soldiers approached a sentry on the Santa Lucia Bridge, 3 miles east of Manila. The sentry, in accordance with the orders that sentries usually have, challenged the three at once, and instead of halting the men gave him an insolent reply, came forward, started to cross his post, and he fired and by one shot killed the lieutenant and one soldier. [Laughter and cheers.]

"The remaining soldier ran back to the insurgent line after this shot rang out, and the First Nebraska was called out. Of course there was a great deal of excitement and everybody thought it was like the incident of the attempt to assassinate the sentry of the Montana regiment, which resulted in the shooting of the Filipino captain in Manila. We also thought that the thing was ended for the time being, but within a minute or two rifle fire broke out from the insurgent trenches in front of the First Nebraska Regiment, and war had begun.

OH, THE SENTRY BEGAN THE WAR, DID HE?

"It is said that that sentry began the war by firing the first shot, but I think Army officers here will bear me out in the statement that if he had shot his own captain under the same circumstances he would have gone scot free (applause), or even if he had shot the general commanding the Army of the United States. The Secretary of War, or even the President himself, can not force his way past a sentry of our Army. Under the circumstances, there is no possible doubt that he was justified in shooting this man, and the incident should have been closed right there; but the excited insurgents in the trenches, hearing what had happened, opened fire on the First Nebraska, a fire that spread like a prairie fire on the plains of Kansas, for 5 miles to the right.

AND SO THE DANCE BEGAN.

"The Twentieth Kansas, of which I was colonel at that time, was stationed in a district known as Penango, the commercial part of the city of Manila. We had on outpost about 75 men. I had just retired that evening when Major Metcalfe, afterwards colonel of the regiment, came to my door and knocked. I got up and went to the door, and he said:

"'Well, colonel, the dance has begun.'

"I said: 'What dance?' [Laughter.] And he said: 'Come out on the porch and listen to it.'

"We went out and heard that old familiar sound, the rattle of the Mauser rifle.

"Of course there are all sorts of men in our Army—Regular and Volunteer—good, bad, and indifferent; but I believe that it is a pretty safe guess to say that 95 per cent of the men who constitute our Army are a brave and humane lot of men, who are a credit to the service. [Long applause.]

"The other 5 per cent of the men are the kind that write letters to the newspapers at home and tell big stories, and they are the class of men who have ornamented the inside of a guardhouse more often than they have distinguished themselves in the field. [Applause.]

SOME OF THE GOOD MEN WHO ARE GONE.

"I wish to hold up a certain officer who lost his life in the Philippines as a fair type of our Army officer, as humane and kind a gentleman as ever lived. Capt. George J. Godfrey, of the Twenty-second Infantry, who was born here in New York City, was appointed to West Point from here, and served under New York men. He was a very popular man, beloved by his own soldiers and beloved by the natives, too; popular with his own comrades, humane and just, without such a thing as hatred in his heart.

"I was on a campaign one day with Godfrey's company, and owing to the conditions there—ambuscades being absolutely certain—we ran into an ambuscade and had a fierce fight, lasting for about half a minute, and Godfrey was shot through the heart as close to me as the president of this club is. I heard the curses of his men and saw them crying, and I knew what they had lost in their beloved captain.

"Another type of man was a certain Sergeant O'Brien, first sergeant of Troop G of the Fourth United States Cavalry, twenty-five years an enlisted man in the Army, a magnificent type of the professional soldier, sober, attentive to his duties, courteous, and with great pride in his occupation. He had started at one time on a scout from the town of San Isidro with Troop G, now at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

"O'Brien had been ill in the hospital for some days; he heard that we were going on a scout and he wanted to go with the troop. But his captain, Captain Keeler, said:

"'No, sergeant, you can't go; you are not well enough.'

"O'Brien replied: 'I have been in every fight with my troop for twenty-five years, and I hope I don't have to be left behind now.'

"Captain Keeler said: 'Well, all right; come along.'

"We marched out to the town of Sampaloc. We had information that 250 insurgents, under Lacuna, were going to attack the town that night; the town had a very small garrison. We divided our men up so that our detachment, with which we finally struck them, numbered only about 50 men.

"Within twenty-five minutes after leaving town we struck them, and there was one of those wild minutes that are worth ten years of an ordinary humdrum existence, and when it was over there were 44 dead insurgents on the field, and among our own dead was Sergeant O'Brien, shot through the heart—shot off from his horse.

"I simply wish to hold up those two soldiers, Godfrey and O'Brien, as fair samples of the magnificent men who are being sacrificed in the Philippine Islands.

SHOT IN THE BACK.

"And now I am going to say something which I hope you gentlemen will not criticise; I am going to say it just as mildly as I can, but we who have seen our men killed, who have seen our men die of typhoid fever, die of dysentery in the hospitals, and who have buried them in hundreds of nameless graves in the Philippine Islands, feel bitterly about this subject. All of those men who have fallen since the month of January, 1900, have died not because the Filipinos really had much heart in fighting against us, but because they were kept up by a lot of misinformed and misguided people here in the United States. [Applause and cries of 'That's right.']

"It is perfectly proper for us to have all sorts of opinions about the advisability of holding the Philippine Islands—as to whether they are worth anything to us or whether they are a burden to us—we are perfectly justified in having as many opinions about them as there islands in the Philippines; but, for Heaven's sake, let us keep those opinions to ourselves until the sovereignty of the United States has been established over every square inch of those islands, and then let us get together and pull hair and fight the thing out among ourselves. [Cheers and prolonged applause.]

ALL OVER BUT FOR MISGUIDED AMERICANS.

"I have been told by a number of insurgent officers of high rank, after their surrender or after their capture, said they were kept up solely after January, 1900, by the hope that the people of the United States would compel the Government to withdraw from the islands. I was told that without any hesitation whatever by even so reserved a man as Aguinaldo himself. I was told that by the notorious Alejandrino, by Luna, by Pablo Tecson. None of these men made any secret of it at all.

"It can not be claimed that the first part of the war should have been the end of it at all; the first part of the war was absolutely unavoidable; it could not have been avoided; but when the insurgent army went to pieces in January, 1900, when they broke up into bands of guerrillas, then the thing would have stopped; they would have turned in their arms and given up, and all the hundreds of lives and all the millions of money expended since that time would have been saved.

WAS WASHINGTON AN ASSASSIN?

"I hope that I may be allowed to combat another impression that is altogether too prevalent in the United States; that is, that the insurgent leaders in the Philippines are a very high type of men, patriots, fighting for the good of their country, and all that sort of thing, and that they are to be compared with the men who won the independence of the United States more than a hundred years ago. I shall in a few moments give you a few samples of some of these patriots over there, and allow you to make your own comparisons.

"About the ablest military leader the insurgents had was Antonio Luna, who was a brave man, a good officer, accomplished, and as to the capability to handle troops in the field he probably would come up almost to the officers of our own Army. This man on account of his personal courage was gaining such prestige with the insurgents that Aguinaldo ordered him to be assassinated, which was done at the town of Palanan, the man being shot down in cold blood by the sentries on guard at Aguinaldo's door when he stated to the sentry on duty that he wanted to see Aguinaldo. I talked with the late lamented dictator himself on that subject and asked him about it. He said:

"'Why, yes. I had him killed simply because if I had not he would have been dictator in my place.'

"Can you imagine George Washington doing such a thing as that? [Cheers.]

DID GENERAL PUTNAM MURDER CHILDREN?

"In the town of San Isidro, where I commanded for a year and a half, was a family of the name of Baya, a Filipino family. The father had been an opponent always of rebellion. He was a large landowner and had a considerable family. He had five or six sons, among them, the youngest boy, a chap of about 10 years. This boy was working away at the English language, and he had come to me half a dozen times to get some aid when he would get all tangled up on some of our beautiful words.

"This boy was suspected finally of being a spy because he came over to my headquarters a few times.

"This poor helpless boy, who was as innocent of being a spy as anyone possibly could be, and who, in fact, had never discussed any phase of the war with me at all, was taken by these murderers, tied to a stake, and flogged to death. They flogged him for three hours, until he fell dead.

"Can you imagine Israel Putman doing a thing of that kind? [Cheers.]

"A few days later the same chief who had had the boy flogged and who had been unable to collect any taxes in the town made a raid in the town with a number of guerrillas; he made the raid and burned about 30 houses and killed more than 15 people, without any just cause or provocation whatever, in order to compel them to pay taxes to the alleged insurgent government. We had been hunting him for fully a year, and laid for him for many a week, and I am glad to say that the next time I had command of a detachment that got him, and now he is with the angels. [Laughter and applause.]

EVERY CHIEF A MURDERER IN OUR EYES.

"It would be impossible to exaggerate the number of crimes that have been committed by the insurgent leaders—crimes almost against their own people, the assassinations of Filipinos, not only those who were suspected of being in sympathy with the Americans, but people who had refused to pay insurgent taxes, men against whom there was no suspicion whatever. The number would run not only up into the hundreds, but even up into the thousands.

"There is not a town in the Philippine Islands in which men have not been assassinated by the orders of these men, and there is not a single chief, from Aguinaldo down to the lowest leader of a band of guerrillas, who could not be put on trial and convicted of murder before any jury in the United States—downright, deliberate, cold-blooded murder.

"Aguinaldo himself, tried in any court in the world, could be convicted of the murder of Luna, and there is not one who could not be convicted of the assassination of men, women, and children.

OCCASIONALLY A FEW GET HANGED.

"We had at San Isidro a sergeant of police named Lopez; he had been a soldier in the Spanish army. We appointed this man a sergeant of police, and he was very efficient in the obtaining of information regarding the insurgent tax collectors who came into the town, and also in ascertaining the hiding places of concealed arms. The insurgents made every effort to capture this man, but he slept with our soldiers and they found it impossible.

"One day he and his wife and daughter, a young girl of about 15 years, went in a small vehicle, about as large as one of our buggies, to a little town not far off on a visit. Tecson's men were lying in wait for them and captured them, and they took these two women and this man out into the fields and brought them before a guerrilla chief, who ordered the three to be thrown down a well 35 feet deep. We recovered their bodies a short time afterwards. We captured the murderers and hanged every one of them. [Applause.]

"I believe it is safe to say that there has never been a war in this world where the people have shown such patience and such humanity as have the United States troops in the Philippine Islands. [Cheers.] With very rare exceptions all the men executed have been executed after a fair trial before a military commission. They had counsel to defend them where the case has gone before the commanding general for final review.

"Of course there have been exceptions, but probably not more than a dozen altogether, where men caught red-handed in the commission of a crime have been summarily executed. But that is done in every war; it was done in our own civil war; it has been done in every war that the world ever saw. But these cases have been very rare.

"I suppose that as many as 700 men in the Philippines have been tried and sentenced to death for murder by our military commissions, or probably three-fourths of them for murder. Of those, not more than 200 have been executed. The sentences of the others have been commuted to imprisonment for a number of years, and others for various reasons have been allowed to go free.

"I do not want to say anything brutal, but, as I say, the Army feels bitterly about this business. I have no quarrel with the man who thinks that we should not at first have taken the Philippine Islands; I have no quarrel with the man who thinks a whole lot of things, but who does not say too much about it now; but all those men who have been writing and talking about this thing and keeping this warfare alive and in the field to-day—I say that I would rather see any one of these men hanged—hanged for treason, hanged for giving aid and comfort to the enemy, than see the humblest soldier in the United States Army lying dead on the field of battle. [Applause and cheers.]

WHY NOT WAIT UNTIL ARMS ARE LAID DOWN.

"Those of us who have served with these humble men, these magnificent soldiers, these faithful fellows, feel for them in a way that others can scarcely understand.

NOT FIT FOR SELF-GOVERNMENT.

"It can not be said that these people are fit for self-government. It is perfectly ridiculous to imagine such a thing. Of course, they clamor for it, and, of course, when I say they are not fit for self-government, I do not mean that they are not fit for some such government as has been given to them under Judge Taft, but I mean absolute independence. No; there is no comparison between the Cubans and the Filipinos as far as their capacity for self-government is concerned. I don't lie awake nights admiring the Cubans, and I know them pretty well, but it can not be denied that the Filipino insurgents have not and never had among them such men as that magnificent Maximo Gomez, such a man as Garcia, or such a man as Lacret, and dozens of other insurgent chiefs—such men as Palma, who was one of their leaders in the rebellion of '68.

"These men will see that Cuba is taken care of all right. Garcia put into it every cent he had, with the exception of a few thousand dollars which he gave to his wife to live; the same with Maceo, the same with dozens and dozens of other insurgent leaders.

"Some of them were not worth much, perhaps, but there have been absolutely no men in the Philippine Islands, if we except Antonio Luna, now dead, and Pablo Tecson, who is still living, who have character and real patriotism enough to enable them to form a government over there and keep it going for as long as six months.

OUR WITHDRAWAL MEANS CHAOS.

"If we withdraw from the Philippines to-day, withdraw entirely, and not establish a protectorate, there would be half a dozen kinds of civil war inside of six months. There is no possible doubt of that. Every chief would gather his followers about him, and they would burn and loot and march up and down the country, each man killing those opposed to him, and we would have another Colombia or Venezuela or some other kind of South American trouble on our hands at once, and the world, I am sure, would hold the United States responsible for that."

STORY OF THE CAPTURE OF AGUINALDO.

In response to an urgent demand General Funston proceeded, with much reluctance, to tell the story of his capture of Aguinaldo. He said in introducing his remarks: "Of course you know it was what they call 'a dirty Irish trick' on Aguinaldo." [Great laughter.]

"Aguinaldo," General Funston continued, "told me that he had never returned anywhere near the vicinity of Manila after he had been chased northward by General Lawton. [Cheers for Lawton.]

"He had retired to the little village of Baler, near the northeast coast of Luzon, across an almost impassable range of mountains, and there, accompanied by, I believe, 8 officers and 40 soldiers, had settled down in this small village, which was 50 miles from the nearest town garrisoned by Americans, and I can tell you that 50 miles over those mountains is farther than from here to San Francisco on a Pullman car." [Laughter.]

Then followed the story of the capture of Aguinaldo's letters and the inception and execution of the plot to penetrate his stronghold and capture him. As to his command being disguised, General Funston said, "There seems to be a very general misapprehension of the fact that we had gone to Aguinaldo clothed in insurgent uniforms. The fact is that we had been accustomed to going about in all sorts of uniforms, and sometimes with no uniforms at all. We were merely dressed as if we had gone out to-night in evening clothes, to shoot people, and then come back and hidden our Mausers, and put on regular working clothes again. But we took along some insurgent uniforms, probably about twenty, although not more than half a dozen were worn at all; and it is a fact that having those insurgent uniforms with us had no bearing on the success of the expedition. The insurgent uniform, by the way, was merely the uniform of the Spanish army. They had these uniforms because they had captured them when they drove the Spaniards out of the towns of central Luzon, and consequently when the insurgents began fighting us they uniformed every man in Spanish uniforms, and I do not know but that we had about as much right to put that uniform on the Macabebe soldiers as had the insurgents to wear it. That is a question worth thinking about."

In substance General Funston's account of his expedition was what we have already had, but there were some things of special interest in it and we give the following:

"Hilario Placido and three other officers who accompanied us had been insurgents, two of them had been captured about three months before and the others had voluntarily surrendered. No particular inducement was offered to them to join us, except that we told them we would reward them pretty well and we would have a pretty good time. [Laughter.] They were not informed as to the actual purpose of the expedition until we had sailed from Manila, as it was not considered advisable to take too many into our confidence.

"However, we sailed from Manila on the Vicksburg, and, by the way, it was a lucky thing for us to get such a ship as the Vicksburg, and so fine an officer as Captain Barry in command of her, and such a lot of sailors as manned her, because if we had to depend on any merchant ship in the world, or any picked up crew of men, I don't know what in hell we—I mean we would never have put that expedition through successfully. [Great embarrassment on Funston's part as he caught the Rev. Dr. Minot J. Savage's eye.]

"The country between the place of disembarkation and his camp was almost impassable mountains—mountains which had never been crossed by a white man, except one, by a Jesuit priest, about twenty-five years before. The country was inhabited mostly by savages, but there was about twenty miles north of our landing place a village known as Casiguran, a small town of not over 500 people. They had a presidente, or mayor, as we would call him, and a small force of insurgent soldiers.

"Before disembarking from the ship we five Americans were dressed entirely as private soldiers, in the uniform of the United States Army, but with no insignia of rank. Each man wore a campaign hat, a blue shirt, and a pair of khaki trousers, and carried no extras, I believe, but a few that did not weigh very much anyhow, and when we reached Casiguran we were turned over to the Casiguran authorities and put in the town jail. In case I ever run for office back in Kansas I do not want that fact brought out.

"It had been our hope that in this town of Casiguran we would be enabled to obtain some provisions that we could carry, but we found the people there living almost exclusively on sweet potatoes and fresh fish. For obvious reasons it was impossible for us to carry enough of those articles to last for seven or eight days.

"It is too long a story to go through—that terrible march. We left Casiguran unable to obtain a full supply of cracked corn; we left with what would be about a three-days' ration, counting on two meals a day, and with probably one day's ration of dried meat. We simply thought we would take chances. If the march had lasted another day, if we had been 20 miles farther away, not a single one of us would ever have got out of the country alive. When we finally reached our destination some of the Macabebes had given up, some of them were crawling on all fours, and I myself had to lie down every half hour for a minute or two, so weak that I could not walk.

"For the first six days we made this cracked corn hold out, with the dried meat; then we caught small snails and ate them; we scraped limpets off the rocks and ate them, for we were marching along the sea, and I regret to say that we also ate an octopus. I know the octopus is supposed to live in New York, and therefore I am afraid to speak about that. This octopus is a sort of small devilfish, and the Macabebes made a stew of it. I took some, and I do not believe I care for any more.

"Hilario Placido, who had been an insurgent officer, who had been shot through the lungs early in the war—back in 1899—was personally acquainted with Aguinaldo, and was standing next to him when the firing began. In the meantime Sigismondo had gone outside and ordered the firing.

"IS IT A JOKE?" ASKS AGGY.

"When the firing began Aguinaldo thought his own men had ordered the fire to greet the reenforcements they were expecting, so he stepped to the window and said:

"'Stop that foolishness.'

"Then Hilario Placido hurled him to the floor and said: 'You are a prisoner; keep still.'

"About that time we five Americans got into the room and Aguinaldo got on his feet, and he was a very mellow individual. He was fearfully excited, as a man would naturally be under those circumstances. He asked us to protect him, and I assured him that he would be protected. He said:

"'This is not true? This is a joke?' I said:

"'No; this is not a joke; this is the real thing.' [Laughter.]

"The turmoil was all over in a very few minutes, but the Macabebes were wildly excited. They had been under a terrible nervous strain, and especially for an hour the situation was very trying for them. They ran around like wild men, and insisted upon hugging us and calling out in Spanish: 'What's the matter with the Macabebes? They're all right. Who's all right? The Macabebes.'

"You will understand that these men had very little faith in the outcome of the expedition. We did not explain to them what we were going to do until we sailed from Manila. They feared that none of us would ever come back, and it was simply by cajoling and threatening also that we kept them up to it.

"They were men no better, nor any worse, than the other Filipinos. They were simply Filipinos and did not constitute a separate tribe, but simply belonged to a certain village; they have never been insurgents simply because of the lack of opportunity.

"The Macabebes had recognized Aguinaldo and were anxious to kill him. They had no particular spite against the other insurgents. It was in 1897 that 300 Macabebes were penned up in a church and burned to death by an insurgent force under Aguinaldo, and that is the reason they felt so bitterly toward him personally.

"However, we took every possible precaution to protect the prisoners from harm, and treated them with all consideration. They appeared very much surprised that they were not put in irons, and they asked if they were to be sent to Guam—evidently they had heard of that cheerful resort—and also if they were to be executed. We told them that it was very unlikely, but that it would depend very much on their own conduct.

"Just as we reached the coast we saw a black speck of smoke away out at sea, and we knew that the Navy was doing things right, just as it usually does them. The Vicksburg steamed in within 2 miles of the shore, it not being safe to come closer; so we arranged a signal. We had brought down with us a bed sheet, and this was rigged on a bamboo pole, and we signaled: 'We have him; send boats for all.'

"We watched with our glasses the signal on the Vicksburg, and finally we spelled it out:

"'Bully! We are coming.' But a tremendous surf was running, and we had very serious doubts as to our ability to get on board the ship. All of the ship's boats except the steam launch were lowered, and they came through that surf; and honestly it seems to me as if it was half as high as this room; maybe it was higher; I don't know. One of the boats turned upside down, but finally they came through the surf, and the men cheered and yelled.

CAPTAIN BARRY IN THE FIRST BOAT.

"The commander was in the first boat that came through.

"We ran up and of course there were very cordial greetings. It seemed to me those men never stopped howling and yelling; they just went through the surf and they were drenched through and through from head to foot, but that didn't make any difference. When they got through with their boats they just yelled and whooped it up.

"We got out with a great deal of difficulty. A couple of trips had to be made, but fortunately we got through without any accident at all, and we were finally on board the Vicksburg, all drenched through from head to foot. The officers lent us some clothing and we sat down to a very good dinner, and two days later we turned the late lamented Emilio Aguinaldo over to General MacArthur.

"I had a most important talk with Aguinaldo on the way down—and, by the way, he is a very reserved, cautious man, says very little, and you have to get everything out of him by questions. Barcelonia was very talkative, and consequently we concluded that what he said was not of a very great deal of value.

"The most important thing that we got out of Aguinaldo was in his mellow moment, about half an hour after his capture. Just as soon as things calmed down I went to talk with him, before he got his wits collected, and so I asked him a few questions, a little bit impressively. Of course we had all heard this story to the effect that Admiral Dewey and various consuls and naval officers had promised the Filipinos independence. As far as I am personally concerned, Dewey's denial of that thing settles it with me. [Cheers and applause.] But just to see what Aguinaldo would say I asked him the question direct:

"'Did you ever have any promise from anybody, any American Army or Navy officer, that the United States was going to recognize the Filipinos?'

"He hesitated and stammered, and said—this is in confidence; I did not know I was going to tell about this at a Lotos Club dinner; this is between ourselves. [Cries of "Of course."] He said:

"'No, nobody promised us anything; but we had faith in the generosity of the American people.'" [Loud cheers and applause.]

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of participating in the present debate, which I am very sorry to say has degenerated somewhat into a sectional discussion. I see, however, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning a statement by my friend the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], made yesterday, which I feel compelled to notice in justice both to the living and the dead.

It seems from the RECORD that the Senator from South Carolina made the statement, which has been found in the public press and heard from the lecture platform for the last three years, that at the historic conference in Hampton Roads during the year 1864 between Abraham Lincoln and William H. Seward, President and Secretary of State of the United States, and Alexander H. Stephens, Vice-President of the Confederacy; R. M. T. Hunter, formerly a United States Senator, and John A. Campbell, formerly a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Lincoln wrote upon a blank sheet of paper the words "Save the Union," and then handed the paper to Stephens, saying, to quote the language of the Senator from South Carolina, "Aleck, take this paper and fill up for yourself the conditions of peace between the two sections."

This remarkable assertion was called to my attention some two years ago in a lecture delivered by that eloquent and very distinguished gentleman, Col. Henry Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, when he paid the highest tribute to the life and public services of Abraham Lincoln. Colonel Watterson, beyond any question, believed the statement to be true, and said that it came from a neighbor of Alexander H. Stephens, who had the incident from Mr. Stephens's own lips. Hon. John H. Reagan, some few years ago a member of this body from the State of Texas, and the last surviving member of the Confederate cabinet, having been postmaster-general for four years, in an open letter to Colonel Watterson denied the truth of this statement upon information derived from the commissioners of the Confederate States themselves.

Mr. President, I know personally, without having been present at that celebrated interview, that the incident is without the slightest foundation. If true, it would place the Government and officers of the Confederate States in the category of criminals, because, if true, the Confederacy was offered all that it ever demanded in the wildest hopes of the most extreme partisan of that war, if they would only return to the Union. In other words, to show how absurd the statement is upon analysis, it would mean that the Confederacy could have placed upon that blank sheet of paper the perpetual establishment of slavery, the right of secession, the most extreme demand that had ever taken locality even in the dreams of any Confederate.

I happen to know from the lips of two of the commissioners, Alexander H. Stephens and R. M. T. Hunter, that no such incident ever occurred between the representatives of the United States and of the Confederate States at Hampton Roads. Upon the return of the commissioners of the Confederacy I heard their official report, as Mr. Reagan heard it, he being a member of the cabinet, while I was a member of the Confederate senate, and I am to-day the only surviving member of the 26 gentlemen who acted as Confederate senators.

What did happen at Hampton Roads beyond question was this: When the commissioners, if I may so term the President and the Secretary of State of the United States, met the commissioners of the Confederacy, Mr. Lincoln, addressing himself to R. M. T. Hunter, whom he knew very well, said, "In the first place, gentlemen, I desire to know what are your powers and instructions from the Richmond Government?" avoiding, as Mr. Hunter told me himself, the words "Confederate States," but terming the Government that of the Richmond Government. Mr. Hunter, to whom the inquiry was addressed, said, "Mr. President, we are instructed to consider no proposition that does not involve the independence of the Confederate States of America." "Then," said Mr. Lincoln, "the interview had as well terminate now, for I must say to you gentlemen frankly and honestly that nothing will be accepted from the Government at Richmond except absolute and unconditional surrender. I may add," he said, "as the Chief Executive of the United States, in addition to this, that if you lay down your arms and submit to the authority of my Government I will exercise the largest Executive clemency to the leaders and generals of the Government at Richmond."

This terminated the interview, and as the commissioners of the Confederacy retired from the chamber, Mr. Lincoln, addressing Stephens, who was the last to go out of the room, said: "Stephens, you are making a great mistake. Your Government is a failure, and when the crash comes, as it soon must come, there will be chaos, and disasters which we can not now foresee must come to your people."

This account of that interview substantially and almost word for word as I have given it came to me from Alexander H. Stephens and R. M. T. Hunter—one Vice-President of the Confederate Government and the other president pro tempore of the Confederate senate.

But, in addition, to put this matter beyond all sort of dispute, Judge Campbell, than whom a more honest and frank and trustworthy man never lived, took down in pencil at that interview, word for word, what passed between the commissioners. I heard of the existence of that paper after the return of the commissioners, but I never had any interview with Judge Campbell upon the subject. However, his account in writing was exhibited to many of his friends in the city of Richmond, and among others to the Hon. James L. Pugh, the predecessor of my friend the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] at this time, who read that account and who has stated to me often that it contained almost exactly the same description of the interview which I have attempted to give to-day.

I repeat, Mr. President, that I have considered it my duty to make this statement in order that history may not be falsified, in order that the men who were said to have refused this offer at the hands of Mr. Lincoln should not be made to sin in their graves, for if they had refused what was said to have been tendered to them by the President of the United States they would have been accessory to the murder of every man who fell from that time in defense of the Confederate cause, and they would have given the lie to the intentions which they professed when they risked everything, everything that is held dear amongst men, in defense of the Confederate cause.

It may be but a very short time until I shall join the 25 colleagues I had in the Confederate senate, and I do not want this statement, which I have no doubt the Senator from South Carolina believes to be true, to go into the records of this country without my statement of these facts and my solemn denial that there is the shadow of truth in this assertion which has been going the rounds of the newspapers of the country for the last few years.

Mr. CARMACK obtained the floor.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has very properly corrected, in the interest of truth and in the interest of history, a statement made by the Senator from South Carolina on yesterday. I desire for the same reason to correct a statement of more recent history made by the Senator from Maryland

[Mr. McCOMAS] on yesterday, which I find in the RECORD this morning.

The Senator from Maryland in his speech said "the minority have in a prolonged debate ignored all history, ignored the treaty most of them helped ratify."

Now, Mr. President, the speech of the Senator from Maryland was a prepared speech.

Mr. McCOMAS. That should be "some of them."

Mr. BERRY. Ah! I spoke of it as I found it in the RECORD. The Senator said "most of them."

Mr. McCOMAS. I should have said "some," if I did say "most."

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state that on the ratification of the treaty every Democrat voted either for the ratification or against it or was paired. There were 10 Democrats who voted for it, 25 who voted or were paired against it, and of those who were then known as Populists and Silver Republicans there were 4 who voted for it and 3 who voted against it. Instead of its being "most of them," as I found it in the RECORD, the statement I have made is correct, that there were only 10 Democrats who voted for it, while 25 voted against it.

I did not wish the statement to go uncorrected in the RECORD, that a majority of the Democrats had voted for that treaty when the facts were otherwise.

Mr. McCOMAS. I wish to say to the Senator that I will make that correction. I did have it in my manuscript "most." What I said here was "some." The RECORD is wrong. I will have the correction made.

Mr. BERRY. I said that I found it in the RECORD.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I shall occupy the time of the Senate to-day only for a short while.

I listened with rapt and attentive ear to the labored eulogium which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON] paid to his friend and hero General Funston. If it will satisfy that Senator to know that he has proved General Funston to possess the qualities of physical courage and physical endurance, I freely concede it. If a few acts of reckless dare-deviltry in the Philippine Islands or elsewhere are enough to make a man a hero, he is entitled to his laurels. I do not dispute anything the Senator has said or that anybody else may say bearing upon the one question of General Funston's physical courage. I am as ready as any man in the country to honor an exhibition of military courage, though as a matter of fact it is the commonest quality of our race, and there are very few men who do not possess it. In an army of 100,000 men gathered from any part of the United States you would not find a thousand, and I do not believe you would find a hundred, cowards. So I say the quality of physical courage, of military courage, is not so very rare that we are to make a demigod of every man who demonstrates the fact that he possesses it.

There is another type of heroism probably as noble as that of the swordsman. The engineer who meets death with his hand on the throttle, the fireman who rushes through flame and smoke to save a woman or a child—the physician, and I have known many of them, who goes into the midst of the pestilence through weary weeks and months, facing death every moment of every hour, day and night—each of these is a hero; but because he is a saver and not a destroyer of life, he does not think that he is the lord of the universe; he does not think that the earth is his, and the fullness thereof; he does not believe that he has been licensed to scourge and kick all mankind into an humble submission of any views he may choose to express, or offer to hang every man who does not agree with his opinions.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I shall never consent that any man shall have unlimited license to insult and slander and defame simply because he has swum a river or charged a fort.

The Senator from Kansas makes pathetic reference to the fact that General Funston's lips are sealed. Who sealed his lips, and how did they come to be sealed? The Senator simply draws attention to the fact that Funston's slanderous and licentious tongue had made him such a common nuisance, had caused such shame and a scandal to the Army and to the Administration, that the President of the United States, in the interest of common decency, was compelled to muzzle him.

The Senator seems to think that I am lacking in magnanimity because I attack a man whose lips are sealed. But what difference does it make that Funston's lips are sealed, so long as the mouth of his Senatorial champion gapes wide as Erebus? What difference does it make that Funston is extinct, so long as the Senator from Kansas is in constant eruption, belching forth fire and smoke and melted lava from his agonized and tumultuous bowels?

Why, sir, so long as Funston has such able champions and defenders on the floor of the Senate whom a man must encounter every time he mentions the name of this doughty hero, I think it an act of dare-deviltry worthy of anything that Funston ever did in the Philippine Islands to assail him on the floor of the Senate. I do not want to boast of my own exploits, but I think the bravest act, the most heroic act that any man ever did was when I dared the vengeance and the wrath of the distinguished Senator from Kansas by expressing my opinion of Funston. Why, Mr. President, as the hangman's assistant he is almost as much an object of dread and horror as the hangman himself. There is a suggestion of the dull, sickening thud in the very tones of his voice; that as he shook his grisly forefinger in the air I could almost see the grease of the gallows dripping from the end thereof.

But I have no desire, to waste any words on Funston. Perhaps, sir, the curse of silence which the President has laid upon his remorseless and incessant larynx is as much punishment as he should be called upon to endure. I hope, now that his attention has been withdrawn from the sound of his own voice, he may have an opportunity for quiet reflection that may teach him that even heroes have no right to slander and defame public men for daring to express their opinions upon a public question.

The Senator proceeded to read at great length testimonials to Funston's character, and he proceeded to read from his Lotus Club speech, the speech which caused the President to put the extinguisher upon his light, or rather upon his mouth, in which he charged that every leader of the Filipinos was a murderer and an assassin, and in which he made the charge that Aguinaldo had burned 300 people alive at one time.

Now, Mr. President, in my opinion, when General Funston made that accusation he willfully and deliberately and premeditatedly lied. I do not believe that there is one word of truth in it. Stop for a moment and think what is involved in this charge, that Aguinaldo was and for a long time had been a common murderer and an assassin, that he had burned 300 people alive at one time. All this is said to have occurred before the American Government engaged in its war with Spain.

Aguinaldo was the man whom Dewey sent for, with whom he sought cooperation, whom he helped to arm and place in charge of an army of 20,000 or 30,000 men and turned them loose in the Philippines when there was not an American soldier there. A common murderer, common assassin, common thief, a man who was in the habit of burning people alive by the wholesale, is the man whom Dewey selected, whom Dewey armed, whom Dewey helped to organize an army and turn loose in the Philippine Islands when there were thousands of Spanish women and children, noncombatants, absolutely at his mercy and at the mercy of the fiendish chiefs and subordinates who constituted his following, according to the statement of General Funston. If that is so, Admiral Dewey violated all the rules of civilized warfare, and instead of being honored as a hero he ought to be court-martialed and turned out in dishonor and disgrace.

Mr. President, General MacArthur, Admiral Dewey, Dr. Schurman (the first president of the Philippine Commission), and Governor Taft (the second president of the Philippine Commission), all unite in denouncing these stories as absolutely false. General MacArthur says they are false. I am not attacking Funston simply because he does not agree with me upon this question. I say, from the evidence and from the record, the man is not worthy to be believed upon any question whatever.

Mr. President, before I take my seat, I wish to make just a few remarks upon another question, and that is the efforts to revive the passions and the bitterness of sectional hatred which have been made upon the other side of the Chamber. It is a deliberate purpose, a deliberate effort in pursuance of a deliberate plan, to divert this debate and to divert the attention of the people from the atrocities you have committed in the Philippine Islands, and which you are attempting to-day, with an almost incredible indifference to human suffering and to the honor of the American Government, to justify and excuse.

A few days ago we saw in the newspapers that the President of the United States had called the leaders of his party together and had demanded of them that they should abandon their policy of contemptuous silence and do something to break the force of the shameful revelations that were being made with reference to your conduct in the Philippine Islands. I suppose, sir, that it is in obedience to instructions from the White House that the effort is now being made to reopen the healed wounds of the country and to fan the flames of sectional hatred and of passion. I suppose it must have been the result of that conference, for a short time thereafter, before a single word had been uttered upon that side of the Chamber, it was given out in the newspapers that the policy of the Republican party would be to divert attention from what was going on in the Philippines by reviving all the stories of atrocities being perpetrated, or which had been perpetrated, in the South away back to the time of the war of secession.

We had been hearing of late a great deal about a reunited country. Are we to understand, Mr. President, that Republicans love the South only when there is a war to be fought and when soldiers are needed, and does your love of the South cease as soon as the war is over and no more Southern blood is needed to be shed in defense of the flag? I do not know; but I know that at the very first opportunity you have had after the close of the war with Spain you again raise your hideous ensign of the bloody shirt, and again you seek to distract and divide the country into two distracted, hostile, and embittered sections.

Ah, Mr. President, the course of some Senators upon the other side, if it shall be followed by others—as I hope it will not—but the course of some Senators upon the other side of the Chamber seems to indicate that all of your professions have been but shallow hypocrisy, a mere whiting of the sepulcher, behind which are rottenness and dead men's bones.

When Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, who are flaunting the bloody shirt, make their speeches about Southern outrages pertinent to any question that is before this Senate, I shall be ready to meet every slanderer of the South and every defamer of its honor; I shall be ready to meet any man who calumniates the people among whom I was born, when he makes his remarks pertinent to any question before the Senate; and I care not, sir, whether the assault comes from some part of the country beyond the borders of the South or whether it comes from a recreant and degenerate son who has proven a traitor to the womb and the bosom of his mother. I shall be ready to meet him, but I will not be diverted from the issue that is now before the Senate by any number of miserable, crawling, slanderous falsehoods that may wriggle in the dust of this debate.

No man in the country could deplore more than I do any effort on the part of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, or upon this side of the Chamber, to reopen any of these questions, which we had fondly hoped were buried forever. I am one of those who want to see all such questions hidden forever from the public eye. We have wrongs in our part of the country that we have to deal with; you have conditions in your part of the country that you have to deal with. For God's sake let us let each other alone. We will do the very best we can with the conditions with which we are beset. We are men of the same race and blood as yourselves; we will deal as best we can with the awful conditions that confront us in the Southern States. All we ask of you is not to make matters worse; all we ask of you is to let us alone.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who apologize for, or who attempt to condone or excuse many of the things that have occurred in my part of the country. I have sorrowed for them as much as any man in the United States. No man, I believe, of my humble position and capacity, has done more in the way of protest against lynchings than I have done. I have myself faced mobs; I have done everything that I could to prevent the lynching of negroes, or any other form of lawless violence in the Southern States. We are doing the very best we can on that question. You can not help us by denunciation upon the floor of this Senate. The very best thing you can do is to keep your mouths shut and let us alone.

Mr. President, there is only one view in which speeches of that character can be at all pertinent to the question that is now under consideration. What will Senators upon the other side of the Chamber prove for their cause in the Philippine Islands if they do succeed in proving every horror and every outrage they may allege with respect to the race question here in our own country? If you succeed in proving all the horrors that have been committed and all the crimes that have been perpetrated by reason of the contact of the Anglo-Saxon with the lower race, what does it prove for your policy in the Philippine Islands?

If Senators mean by bringing such things into this debate to justify their course and policy upon the argument that violence and bloodshed and cruelty are the inevitable result of a contact between the Anglo-Saxon and the lower races, it may be some excuse for a people who, without any purpose on their part; who, because of circumstances over which they had no control, have been forced into conflict and collision with a lower race; but it is no excuse whatever for those who would go 7,000 miles away to seek an opportunity for such a conflict with all the inevitable consequences that must ensue. If violence and tyranny and oppression are, as you seem to argue, the inevitable result of a contact between the Anglo-Saxon and the lower races, if that has been true in our own country, what do you expect when you go 7,000 miles away and attempt to establish your dominion over another lower and inferior race? What can you expect except constant tyranny and oppression, and the necessary result of war and insurrection, to be suppressed at the cost of the blood and treasure of the American people?

Mr. President, I shall not attempt at this time to make any extended reply to the remarks made by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. There were some things in the Senator's speech, however, which struck me somewhat strangely. I want to say, in passing, that upon one part of the Senator's speech, and that the part which he seems to consider the most vital and important in this debate, I must congratulate the Senator from Massachusetts. That was the part in which he convicted my friend [Mr. RAWLINS] of having said "Copernicus" when he should have said "Galileo." Here the triumph of the Senator from Massachusetts was complete. How he towered above my poor crushed friend from Utah in high and scornful consciousness of his own superiority!

The Senator from Massachusetts may not be able to detect a flaw in an argument, he may not see a gap in a logical progress from premise to conclusion, but let a man be guilty of a slip of the tongue, let him fail in a matter of grammar or of pronunciation, and he need expect no mercy from the Senator from Massachusetts. Mr. President, if I believed, as the Senator from Massachusetts seems to believe, that this question of Copernicus and Galileo was the vital point in this discussion, I should abandon this debate right here, but I really think, it is my honest opinion, that we may concede the point as to Copernicus and Galileo and still have a good deal of argument left.

As to the rest of the Senator's speech, if he is proud of his effort in defense of the American Army, as he called it, I think he will enjoy that satisfaction in solitude and alone. The Senator says that we are attacking the honor of the American Army, and doing it for mere partisan purposes. If the Senator from Massachusetts really believes that, it is simply because any other than a low, a narrow, and a partisan purpose is something he can neither appreciate nor understand. I think there are some men on this side of the Chamber who are just as honest and just as honorable as the Senator from Massachusetts.

Assailing the American Army! Because we do not exactly believe that the orders of Smith for the butchery of children, for the extermination of a whole people—because we can not agree that that is exactly wise and just and humane we are assailing the honor of the American Army! My opinion is that the man who stands up in this high presence and seeks to find justification and excuse for such atrocious practices dishonors the American Army and he dishonors the American Senate.

The most effective part of the Senator's speech was that in which he demonstrated that Nero did some things that Smith had not yet done. Why, he told us the old story of Christians being burned in the imperial gardens of Rome, and said, "We have not done anything like that in the Philippines." What a defense, Mr. President! What a defense, and to what depths we have descended when a man will stand up here in the presence of the American Senate and contrast the action of our American officers with the infamies of Nero in order to prove that they are comparatively humane? We have not acted yet as badly as Nero, or we have not acted as badly as the Tartars did. There are some instances in history of cruelty and inhumanity worse even than that of Smith! That is the Senator's plea.

The Senator said that he could remember when Grant was termed "a butcher." He is a little older than I am, and he can remember some things that I can not remember, but the inference seems to be that the time will come when those who are calling Smith a butcher will be compelled to retract their accusations and when Smith, like Grant, will become the idol of the American people.

The Senator brought forth an array of atrocities perpetrated against our own soldiers and of which our soldiers were the victims. That, he seemed to think, excused and justified the atrocities of Smith. Why, he said, we must think how these American soldiers are driven to rage and fury by the tortures and the cruelties perpetrated upon their comrades.

Mr. President, the Senator is attempting to shift the responsibility from the commanders to the soldiers. It is not true that these atrocities have been due to rage or to lust for vengeance on the part of the American soldiers. I say, as I said the other day, that against their own will they have been driven to it by the orders of their commanding officers. Smith himself, in a signed article in the Manila Critic, spoke of the conditions existing in this very province of Samar, and referred to the kindly relations existing between the officers and the soldiers on the one hand and the natives upon the other and of absolute confidence in the natives on the part of officers and soldiers. Smith came upon the scene. He came there with a preconceived opinion, as he declared in his article, that all these natives were enemies; that they were harboring secret treachery in their hearts; and he said he found it difficult to convince the officers and the men that these natives were anything else than white-winged angels.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If I have the transaction correctly, the massacre at Balangiga was where the peaceful neighbors turned out with bolos and killed an entire command of the American Army, at least a month before General Smith came to the islands, and the order of General Chaffee had devastated every town on the south coast of the island of Samar long before the expedition of Major Waller was ordered to cross that island.

Mr. CARMACK. I am speaking from General Smith's own language as to what the condition was when he went there.

Senators would seem to argue that all the soldiers and all the subordinate officers were burning with hatred toward the natives and with lust for revenge. General Smith himself declares that he found it almost impossible to convince the officers and the soldiers that the Filipinos were not white-winged angels, and he said to them, "All these people are secret traitors; they are secretly supporting the insurgent government and the insurgent army; and we must give them a lesson by showing them that war is hell." That is what General Smith said.

Now, sir, as to the massacre at Balangiga, horrible as it was, it gives no excuse whatever for an order of death which comprehended a whole province, which devoted a whole people to absolute extermination. I have read a statement made by one of the survivors of that massacre, a man who was commended and promoted for his bravery in that very fight. He was awarded a medal of honor for his courage upon that occasion, and he said that weeks before that occurred the captain there in command had seized a large number of natives, had put them into practical slavery, had compelled them to work all day upon the roads, had kept them confined all night—90 of them in two little conical tents, barely sufficient to hold 16 men each—had not allowed them to go home to visit their families, and that they had to be supplied with food by their families bringing food to their tents.

He says that the whole mood and temper and disposition of the people in that little town changed from the time this practice was begun; that the people became sullen and morose, and that he and other soldiers became very apprehensive on account of it that the people would rise up against them. That went on for about six weeks. Finally these people, who had been reduced to and held in slavery, and their friends and neighbors did take advantage of an opportunity and did massacre the American soldiers.

Mr. President, there can be no justification for that massacre; but, at the same time, I say that the uprising of the people in a single town—not a mere act of treachery on the part of pretended friends—but the uprising of men reduced to slavery, executing vengeance, although in a barbarous and treacherous manner, on their oppressors, is no excuse whatever for this brutal and inhuman order of Smith, devoting a whole people to indiscriminate massacre and extermination, an order to kill every male human being above the age of 10, to make the country a howling wilderness, and thus to leave the others to perish from slow starvation. That, sir, is the order which Senators have the devilish impudence to stand up in the presence of the American Senate and seek to justify or excuse, and when other Senators say it is cruel and inhuman, they are denounced as slandering the American Army.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, does the Senator really think "devilish impudence" is a very parliamentary phrase?

Mr. CARMACK. No, sir; and I withdraw it. It is not. I beg pardon for it. I should not have used it,

Why, Mr. President, the Senator has been able to bring a great array here of atrocities of which our soldiers were the victims. I have no doubt that there are many such acts, some of them perpetrated by Filipino insurgents, many of them perpetrated by mere robbers, Ladrones, and outlaws swarming over that distracted country, and General MacArthur tells us that we must not make the mistake of confusing the outrages perpetrated by these mere robbers and outlaws with the operations of the insurgents.

The War Department has been exceedingly diligent; it has gone over the whole country with a fine-tooth comb to find every single outrage of which an American soldier was the victim, and it has been equally diligent in trying to conceal every outrage perpetrated upon the people of the Philippine Islands. What more could you expect of a people like that, not as highly civilized as our own, not having developed the power of self-control, when they are driven to desperation, when they are making their last desperate battle for liberty—what could you expect of such a people, when driven to the last ditch, except a resort to cruelty against their more powerful oppressors, and what could you expect, sir, when there has been practically no effort to stop the perpetration of cruelties upon the Filipinos themselves?

Why, sir, we have here a statement from the War Department of court-martial proceedings against American soldiers and American officers in the Philippines. I went down the list. In one column was stated the charge, in another the finding, and in the third column the punishment fixed by the court-martial. Here was one of the charges: Hanging natives by the neck—torturing natives by hanging them by the neck; finding of the court, guilty; punishment, reprimand. That was an officer in the American Army. Another case, same charge—torturing natives by hanging them by the neck; finding of the court, guilty; punishment, reprimand. There was a multitude of cases of officers of the United States looting and encouraging their men to loot; firing into a populous town and looting; punishment, reprimand.

But finally they determined to make an example. They thought things were getting so bad that they would have to make an example of somebody, and one fellow was tried and convicted of making assaults upon unarmed and helpless natives, and among them he assaulted a helpless Filipino girl, 14 years old, and they fined him $60. What can you expect, when you make no effort to put an end to the infamous and criminal practices that may be resorted to by lawless men in the American Army, except the bloodiest retaliation on the part of the Filipinos?

Sir, it has been proved here again and again that it is the constant practice to subject natives to the water torture, and I notice there has been a disposition to make light of the water torture. Some papers have said that it is simply a rough form of hazing. The water torture in precisely the same form in which it is executed in the Philippine Islands was a recognized form of torture to extort confessions back in the Middle Ages. It was not an invention of the Filipinos. It was an invention of a higher civilization than theirs and was carried by civilization to the Philippine Islands. It is a horrible form of torture when carried to excess, and the only way the victim can keep it from being carried to excess is by confession—either confessing the truth or confessing a lie. It makes no difference to his persecutors. He must confess that he is guilty or that somebody else is guilty in order escape this horrible torture.

We have had proved before our committee numbers of cases where absolutely innocent people were tortured, not because they had done anything, or because they knew anything, but because it was supposed that they might know something. A number of them have been tortured until it was found by their agony and their failure to confess that they could not know anything or they would have confessed—not one case, not two cases, but many cases. They had a regular water-cure detail, whose business it was to torture natives wherever they could seize on anybody who might possibly have some information, not that they had reason to suspect that they had such information, not that they had any reason to suspect they were in sympathy with the insurgents, except on the theory laid down by Smith and Bell and Chaffee that every man in the Philippine Islands was supposed to be guilty of insurrection until he had proved himself to be innocent.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] grows eloquent in his appeal for the friendly natives. He says we should have some consideration for our Filipino friends. We on this side of the Chamber, he charges, are thinking all the time of the welfare of the hostile Filipino. He demands that we shall give some consideration to the friendly Filipino. How much consideration have they had from Chaffee, from Bell, or from Smith?

How much consideration did Smith show for the friendly natives when he told his soldiers to go forth and slaughter every human being who came in their path without stopping to ask a single question? "Do not stop; do not waste time to inquire whether these people are friendly or not. As soon as you see a male human being who looks like he might be as much as 10 years old, kill him, and take no prisoners." Consideration for the friendly Filipino! Chaffee and Bell both declare that there are no friendly Filipinos. They say you must proceed upon the presumption that they are all unfriendly, and you must deal with them as enemies unless in certain proscribed ways, usually impossible, they prove themselves friendly, and if they can not do that they are to be dealt with as enemies.

We had before our committee the case of a friendly guide, a man who had been absolutely faithful, according to the testimony of the witness, who had guided the American forces to a place where he had said there was a force of armed Filipinos. When they got there, the insurgent forces had vacated the town and left. Then they asked this guide where they had gone. He did not know. They threw him down, whipped him, and put him to the torture, and when he had nothing to confess they repeated the operation until finally the commander saw that the man was honest, that he had told all he knew, and then they let him alone. There was a friend. But they thought perhaps he knew something which he had not divulged.

How many friends will you leave in the Philippine Islands by this policy you are pursuing? It may be, sir, as Chaffee and Smith and Bell all testify, that there are no people in the Philippine Islands who are friendly to the United States; but there might have been if it had not been for Chaffee and Smith and Bell. Their brutal and inhuman conduct has destroyed the last vestige of friendship and loyalty there ever was in the breast of a single Filipino.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Does the Senator from Tennessee mean to say that General Chaffee has given any such testimony, except as to a single hostile province, where General Bell's brigade was stationed?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes; I do, most emphatically. I say his statement comprehended the whole islands, the entire archipelago. "These islands" was his statement.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the Senator be kind enough to cite it?

Mr. CARMACK. I will bring it to the Senator. I did not expect to go so far in this discussion to-day when I started, but I can bring it here. It has been quoted, though, in this debate.

I think my friend the Senator from Utah quoted it. "The whole people"—that was his expression. That was the form of words he used. It was with reference to all the people in the islands. "The whole people" turning war traitors was one of his expressions.

There are the conditions. Senators say we are assailing the American Army. Mr. President, as I have said, the commands of these officers show that in their opinion the feeling of the common soldiers toward the Filipinos was too kindly; they were being driven on to perpetrate these outrages, and the soldiers who have been before our committee did not show any such feeling as that spoken of by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator said, and he seemed to lay a great deal of stress upon it, that we have not proved any outrage in the Philippine Islands less than a year old. In the name of God, how can we do it? How can we prove what is going on now in the Philippine Islands, when we are not allowed, under the rule of the committee, to bring a single witness from the Philippine Islands?

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will permit me, I will read the language of General Chaffee. It is in a letter dated—

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF THE PHILIPPINES,
Manila, P. I., September 30, 1901.

MY DEAR GENERAL HUGHES: I inclose to you a copy of the indorsement made by me on your letter of September 10, in which you refer to discharges from the First and Ninth Infantry.

At the bottom of page 1591 General Chaffee used this language——

Mr. DOLLIVER. What page?

Mr. RAWLINS. Page 1591 of the committee hearings.

The condition of mind of officers and men in these islands is largely in error, and they must be given to understand that they are in error; by which I mean their opinion is that the people are far more friendly than they really are, and that they are satisfied with our presence among them In a considerable sense this may be true: women and children are probably friendly toward us, but as a rule I would not trust 50 per cent of the male population, and they must not be trusted. It is our duty to suspicion every male inhabitant in these islands, and the proof of any error in this regard must rest with them, not so much in words as by action which can not be misunderstood.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If the Senator will permit me, that was addressed to the military commander in the remaining disturbed districts of the islands, and it falls very far short, even supposing it to apply to all the islands, of the statement of the Senator that General Chaffee said we had not a friend in the islands, for he says that the women and children are friendly; and in a domestic population such as has been described there that would indicate at least a degree of toleration on the part of the male inhabitants.

Mr. CARMACK. He says that perhaps 50 per cent are friendly; that they must be treated as enemies whether friendly or not. That is his statement. That while perhaps half of them are friendly, it is your duty to regard everybody as an enemy and force him to prove his loyalty. That is what Bell said. That is what Smith said. He has to prove by actions, and by certain specified actions, that he is friendly, and if he can not prove it he must be treated and dealt with as an enemy.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am certain the Senator does not mean to misinterpret General Chaffee's meaning. General Chaffee, in the letter from which the Senator has quoted, explains his purpose, reason, and meaning in saying that everyone is to be suspicioned. He goes on and says it is for the purpose of vigilance:

I hope you will take measures to arouse the officers and men to a sense of their responsibility and the fact of extreme vigilance. They can be vigilant without giving offense, and this is what I mean.

That is all there is in the injunction to suspicion—merely that extreme vigilance should be exercised, and it is followed with the express injunction to be vigilant without giving offense.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me?

Mr. CARMACK. I yield to my friend.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will read further, in order that General Chaffee's meaning may be correctly interpreted, this language in the same instructions to General Hughes:

While I do not urge inhuman treatment of any person in these islands, it is necessary that we be stern and inflexible, and both officers and men must be cordially supported in their duty in this regard. There is one thing necessary, and that is the wholesome fear by these people of the Army, and that every hostile motion of any inhabitant toward the troops will be quickly and severely punished. This does not interfere at all with our cordial support of the civil authority in these islands; on the contrary, it is the very best aid that we can afford for the establishment of civil government.

I have all the time thought that we do not appreciate the fact that we are dealing with a class of people whose character is deceitful, who are absolutely hostile to the white race, and who regard life as of little value, and, finally, who will not submit to our control until absolutely defeated and whipped into such a condition. It is to our interest to disarm these people and to keep them disarmed, and any means to that end is advisable. It will probably cost us a hundred lives to get back the guns lost at Balangiga.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I think it is due to the truth that another fact should be noted in this connection, and that is that this letter which has been under consideration was written two days after the disaster at Balangiga, and it had reference to that disaster, a disaster which the Senator himself, a few moments ago, described as the result of treachery, a massacre that was absolutely indefensible. It was evidently—and on the face of this letter it so appears—the purpose of General Chaffee to charge his subordinates to be more vigilant, to the end that the lives of American soldiers might be protected and that there might be no more surprises. In that behalf the letter commends to them the idea of regarding everybody with distrust, in view of the character of the people with whom they had to deal, and to do that, however, without giving offense any further than was necessary.

Mr. CARMACK. That has reference to the very point I am making. The Senator from Massachusetts was appealing to us in the most eloquent terms to look after the interests of the friendly natives in the Philippine Islands, and here are the orders of our generals—and that was the order, likewise, of Bell, as it was of Smith, long before this atrocious order was given—to regard all the people there as enemies.

Chaffee did not speak simply of Samar; he did not speak simply of certain provinces, but of all—of the whole islands, of all the people—who were to be regarded as enemies of American sovereignty, and Smith and Bell proceeded upon that assumption. Senators talk about looking after the interests and protecting the welfare and preserving the lives of friendly natives, and yet an officer, a general in the American Army, issues a general order to kill everybody, to make the whole country a howling wilderness, to kill every man and child as you come to him, without pausing to ask a single question. How much consideration was there in that for the friendly natives? How much consideration for the friendly natives when you seize upon a man without any knowledge whatever of his antecedents, just upon the supposition that he may possess some information, and subject him to mediæval tortures in order to extract information that he does not possess?

The plain truth of the matter is that you have been conducting an indiscriminate warfare against a whole people, without seeking to make any distinction whatever between combatants and noncombatants, between friends and foes, a war which has been conducted upon the principle of destroying the fighting force of the people by the extermination of all who are able to bear arms, whether they are bearing arms or not, whether they are enemies or not, whether they are hostile to the American people or not. If they are old enough to bear arms, if they are 10 years old, kill them as soon as you see them, without asking a single question.

That is what Senators upon the other side of the Chamber seek to justify and excuse, and when we denounce it, when we say it is inhuman and brutal, they say we are assailing the honor of the American Republic. I repeat, the man who stands here to excuse it is assailing the honor of the American nation and the American Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I dislike exceedingly to interrupt the Senator, but he has said not only once but repeatedly that Senators on the Republican side of the Chamber have been seeking to justify the order to which he refers as an order given by General Smith. I have not participated in the debate, and so I know he could not have referred to me.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course not.

Mr. FORAKER. But I have been present and have listened to the speeches delivered by Senators on this side of the Chamber, and I have not heard any Senator seek to justify any such order, if it shall prove that such an order has been given. On the contrary, I have heard every Senator who has spoken on this side say explicitly that he did not justify or excuse any such order, and particularly did the Senator from Massachusetts make that statement in the course of his remarks a few days ago.

What the Senator from Massachusetts undertook to do and what other Senators have undertaken to do has been simply to show that this is not the first time in the conduct of war that barbarities have been perpetrated.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER, I know I am trespassing unduly.

Mr. CARMACK. I am not trying to interrupt the Senator. I merely wish to ask him a question.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to know of the Senator what good it does to show that like or worse barbarities have been perpetrated at other times? What good does it do to show what Nero did?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know which Senator showed what Nero did.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FORAKER. And I do not know just what was the application of the Senator who showed what Nero did of that fact. But Senators, in the latitude which we take here in debate, have been simply, in that connection, undertaking to point out what human nature is—what you may expect when the passions are aroused by war—and they have undertaken to point out that while such an order as General Smith is alleged to have given is utterly indefensible and not to be justified by anybody, we should bear in mind that there may be extenuating circumstances under which such an order may have been given or on account of which barbarities which have been pointed out may have been committed.

Mr. CARMACK. There were and can be no extenuating circumstances whatever for the massacre of a whole people, including little children.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me for just a moment? I dislike to interrupt the Senator and to inject into his speech what he may not want to have there, but if he will allow me to interrupt him to the extent of a very few minutes, I will point out that not only is this not the first time when barbarities have been practiced, but that it is not the first time when speeches such as that which was made by the Senator from Massachusetts have been made on account of them. I do not know whether or not the Senator is familiar with what is known as the Chivington massacre.

Mr. CARMACK. I am not.

Mr. FORAKER. But the junior Senator from Colorado is very familiar with it, and if I do not state it correctly I will thank him to correct me.

Some time during the sixties, I believe it was, in the State of Colorado, to repel the Indians who were attacking the frontier, a regiment of volunteers was raised. The commander was a Colonel Chivington. He pursued the Indians. He fought them and he massacred them. The story of that massacre is one of the most revolting that can be found anywhere. He massacred men, women, and children. The story is not only revolting, but it is almost incredible, such were the brutalities practiced. Not only were men, women, and children killed, but they were mutilated after they were killed. They were disfigured in every possible manner.

Mr. CARMACK. By American soldiers?

Mr. FORAKER. Every shocking brutality that was possible was committed.

Mr. CARMACK. By whom? By American soldiers?

Mr. FORAKER. By these volunteers under the command of Colonel Chivington.

Mr. CARMACK. Was he an officer in the Regular Army?

Mr. FORAKER. No; he was a volunteer officer called to the command of these Colorado Volunteers.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not desire to take the time out of the time to be occupied by the Senator from Tennessee to enter into a discussion of what is known as the battle of Sand Creek. Perhaps as the discussion progresses I may have occasion to refer to it and to show the marked difference between anything that occurred there and the things which are occurring in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. FORAKER. What I want to do is to call attention to the fact that here was a massacre, here was a barbarity, and then there came a speech on account of it, and I desire to show that the speech made on account of it by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] was not in that respect unlike the speech made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to know how long the speech is before the Senator reads it.

Mr. FORAKER. That is a very legitimate inquiry under the circumstances, but I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I wish to read only one paragraph, and that a very short one.

In the course of his remarks the Senator from Colorado, then a member of the House, used this language:

> But I simply ask these men who have been filling this House for days past with stories of atrocities of whites to the Indians to recollect that which produced the state of mind and prompted the brave men of the West for a single moment to forget what was due to the weak and the helpless of any class of people, Indians, blacks, or whites, and become almost fiends themselves. There is palliation for it, there is excuse for it, but to the cause, the direct cause of it, if the cause ever be placed where it belongs, was the inefficiency of the bureau and the men who had control and charge of the Indians of that day and who failed to do their duty by the white men and white women and white children of the frontier.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator kindly give the volume and page from which he reads?

Mr. FORAKER. I am reading from volume 4, part 3, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, page 2635. That was in 1876.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from whose speech he read?

Mr. FORAKER. I have read from the speech of Mr. PATTERSON, who I understand is the junior Senator from Colorado. He was then a member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not understand that.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am pleased to say that that was my speech. There is no mystery about it.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not cite it for the purpose of criticising the Senator from Colorado at all. I think it is a very natural speech under the circumstances; I think it was a very justifiable speech under the circumstances; but I think if his speech was a proper speech under the circumstances, so, too, was the speech of the junior Senator from Massachusetts an entirely proper speech under the circumstances. I only cited it to show the similarity of thought and of speech.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me one moment?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The battle of Sand Creek followed the perpetration of the most inhuman atrocities upon men, women, and children by Indians upon the war path. Stages were stopped, men, women, and children were killed and mutilated. The wives of citizens of Denver were brought from the plains to their homes giving evidences of the most horrible atrocities that wild and inhuman men can perpetrate upon women. The Indians attacked the whites; they went where the whites were living, and where, I believe, it is conceded the white people had the right to be. They were there building up a State in the American Union, making laws and observing all the demands which could be made upon people by humanity and religion, when suddenly, without warning, the Indians broke out and committed these atrocities. We have gone with our ships and our soldiers and our cannon and our guns 8,000 miles away for the purpose of shooting an unwilling people into submission to a government that they have no cause to like and in which they are permitted no voice.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Ohio began his interruption by the statement that no Senator upon that side of the Chamber had undertaken to excuse or justify the bloody orders of General Smith. Before he concluded he began himself to find excuses and justification in the butchery of a band of Indians, including women and children. There could have been no object whatever in the Senator's reading that statement to the Senate unless he had expected it to operate to some extent at least as an excuse and a justification for what General Smith is doing or has ordered his men to do in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose simply to inquire of the Senator if by his statement that Senators have been excusing and justifying this order he means only that which he now explains; that is, you have reference simply to the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts pointed out that there had been barbarities in connection with other wars, and as the Senator from Colorado pointed out the circumstances in connection with them?

Mr. CARMACK. I mean that, so far as the Senator from Massachusetts is concerned, the whole tenor of his speech was a labored piece of special pleading to excuse—I probably used too strong a word when I said justified—I should not have said that, but the whole tenor of his argument was a labored piece of special pleading to find excuse and palliation for the bloody and infamous and inhuman orders of General Smith. The Senator himself suggests that there may be mitigating circumstances for the issuance of a wholesale death warrant against a whole people without stopping to make any discrimination whatever between friend and foe.

The Senator says there may be extenuating circumstances. Mr. President, there can be no extenuating circumstances. The Senator from Massachusetts in the whole course of his speech not only was unable to suggest a single circumstance that mitigated or extenuated in the least degree this inhuman order, but he failed to suggest a single reason why this man Smith ought not to be hanged as a common murderer. He is not quite as bad as Nero was. That is the plea of the Senator from Massachusetts. He has not yet dipped men in pitch and lifted them up on poles to be burned alive. Smith has not done that. That is the defense of the Senator from Massachusetts. He has not lit the tar candles yet. He has done nothing but butcher in cold blood a whole people, including little children, leaving the women and the babes at the breast to starve to death in the land which he had made a howling wilderness.

That is the only defense the champions of Butcher Smith have been able to make on the floor of the United States Senate, and a man who says anything against Smith is dishonoring the American Army. Why do you not say that he is attacking the whole Smith family? Smith is not the American Army; Bell is not the American Army; Chaffee is not the American Army, neither is Root the American Army. So far as I am concerned, I do not intend to be deterred by any slanderous imputation upon the motive of Democratic Senators from expressing my opinion of any of the brutal and inhuman wretches who have been perpetrating these atrocities in the Philippine Islands.

The Senator from Ohio says that it is just what is to be expected. Well, Mr. President, you knew what was to be expected when you went to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not know that I understood the Senator or not, but I did not make any such statement as I understood him to impute to me just now. I understood the Senator from Tennessee to say that I had stated a moment ago—I suppose he meant——

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. That what is occurring is just what was to be expected. I did not make any such statement as that.

Mr. CARMACK. I understood the Senator from Ohio to say not that the order of Smith was what was to be expected, but that this kind of warfare going on in the Philippine Islands is just what was to be expected.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. CARMACK. Well, I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. FORAKER. When he comes to look at the RECORD he will find that I did not say any such thing as that. I made no such remark. I have never made any such remark at all. I was talking about the speech made by the Senator from Massachusetts, and referred to the facts stated by him that in connection with wars there had been barbarities heretofore, but I made no remark as to what had occurred in the Philippines or as to what we might have expected.

Mr. CARMACK. The remark of the Senator I took down on this paper as he was speaking. After speaking of these barbarities, he said, "What can you expect?"

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is entirely mistaken. I did not say any such thing. If I did, I have no recollection of it.

Mr. CARMACK. I thought the Senator said that. I do not mean to do him any injustice.

Mr. FORAKER. I am told by Senators who sit near and who could have heard, that I made no such remark, and I do not know why I should have made it.

Mr. CARMACK. I took a pencil and tried to take the words as they fell from his lips; but of course I suppose that the Senator did not mean it, and I accept his disclaimer.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to say one thing more, that I did not say it and would not say it. There are some things which have happened that I did not expect.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator would not have been very far wrong if he had said it.

Mr. FORAKER. It is possible that the Senator from Tennessee expected it.

Mr. CARMACK. I did.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not.

Mr. CARMACK. In my place on the floor of the House of Representatives I declared that just such things would happen, and I referred to the atrocities which had been perpetrated by the English army in their wars against other races. Mr. President, we might as well admit that the Anglo-Saxon race, when it comes to deal with a desperate situation, becomes as utterly remorseless as any people in the world, and especially in their wars with inferior races.

The Anglo-Saxon is the proudest and most insolent race on the face of the earth, and when it comes to deal in war with a lower and an inferior race it can be as cruel and as merciless as any race in the world. That has been shown in the history of England's conquests. All history can hardly afford a parallel for the bloody and inhuman butcheries perpetrated by the English army after the battle of Omdurman, when English soldiers under the command of their officers walked over the field deliberately bayoneting and shooting the wounded, and when they turned volleys of musketry and of grapeshot into the narrow, crowded streets thronged with women and children and mowed them down by the hundreds.

I say when the people of our race come to deal with a desperate situation, and especially when they are dealing with a lower and inferior race, they become as remorseless and as merciless as any people in the world. Our officers in the Philippine Islands have been dealing with a desperate situation. They have found a whole people saturated, permeated with intense hostility to American rule. Wherever they have gone they have met it on every side. They have been driven to desperation and despair. In their fury, in their desire for success, they have adopted what they thought was the only means that would accomplish their purpose, and that has been the utmost cruelty, torture, and in the last resort, the extermination of a whole people, the killing of every human being able to bear arms, whether he was bearing arms or not.

Mr. President, every student of history, every student of our race and of the oriental races, knew what would happen when we entered the Philippine Islands under the circumstances in which we entered them, having gone there first as the friends and allies of the Filipinos, knowing that they were fighting for independence, having held out to them the hope of independence, causing them to believe that we were there to help them to achieve their independence. When we turned around and demanded of that people that they should lay down their arms and surrender their every hope of freedom, make themselves abject subjects of our sovereignty and dominion, I say every man of any sense in the United States knew that we were entering upon a bloody and remorseless and devastating war. You knew that when you began it. When you entered upon this task you knew that it meant bloodshed and desolation and ruin to the people who but lately had been your allies and your brothers in arms.

No, Mr. President, the facts alleged by Senators when they tell of the terrible hatred, the terrible cruelty which the Filipinos have exercised, and the remorseless retaliations, as they choose to describe them, which have been perpetrated upon them, although we have slaughtered people and tortured people who have committed no wrong, show that we are entering upon a task that means a century, perhaps three centuries, of constant bloodshed, of war, and of insurrection, that means the shedding of God only knows how much American and Filipino blood and of how much treasure to be wrung from the American people, and all, as I have said before, for no other purpose except that a few carpetbag thieves may have unlimited license to plunder the people of the Philippine Islands. That is what we are asked to do. We are asked to assume all that burden, we are asked to foot the bill, we are asked to tolerate murder and massacre and torture for no other purpose except that a few carpetbaggers may have the opportunity to rob the people of the Philippines as they used to rob the people of the Southern States.

That, sir, is the only question that is presented to the American people. Honor, honor of the flag——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the honor of this nation, the honor of the flag, demands that the American nation shall stand true to its principles and that the American flag shall be planted forever upon the American Constitution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether or not he thinks it was the purpose of President McKinley, in doing what he did to secure the annexation of the Philippines, to provide a theater for scoundrelism, for exploitation, a place for a lot of scoundrels who would go there as carpetbaggers?

Mr. CARMACK. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Senator if he thinks it was the purpose of President McKinley, in recommending the annexation of the Philippines, to provide this country with a theater of scoundrelism, a place where carpetbaggers could go and exploit and practice bad methods? Was it the purpose of the Senate of the United States, when we ratified the treaty, to acquire a place for the exploitation of carpetbaggers, and was it the purpose of the commissioners who represented this country in the negotiations of the treaty under which we acquired the Philippines to secure a theater for scoundrelism and carpetbagism?

Mr. CARMACK. Is the Senator through with his question?

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator to say that that was the only purpose we had in connection with the Philippines. Now, I want to know where that purpose originated? Whose purpose is it?

Mr. CARMACK. I shall not attempt to trace that purpose back to its origin. I am speaking of the purpose as it exists to-day in the United States. President McKinley's motive, as he asserted it, was benevolent assimilation. The motive of those who now control the Republican party is malevolent dissimilation. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I appreciate the humor of that remark, but I do not want to prolong the colloquy.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator, I have no doubt, feels the truth of it.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to prolong the colloquy. It might provoke another sally of that kind at my expense. But I ask the question in all seriousness. The Senator makes a very extraordinary statement, to characterize it as mildly as I can, when he says there is no purpose on the part of this Administration with respect to the Philippines, confining it as he now seems to the present Administration, except only to provide a theater for carpetbagism, for exploitation. Where did that purpose originate? Whose purpose was it? Who is carrying it out? Are Governor Taft and his associates over there for that purpose? Are all our representatives in the islands there to promote that kind of an idea? I simply want to get the measure of the charge the Senator makes.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, as I have said to the Senator, it will be a little difficult to trace the purpose back to its origin. Of course, every movement of this sort is somewhat complicated. There are some honest fanatics always engaged in every fool movement and every dishonest movement. There are always some honest, misguided fanatics mixed up in it, and also some men with most benevolent intentions. But I will say to the Senator that the very first movement I remember with respect to the seizure of the Philippine Islands appeared in a telegram that went from the Navy Department to Admiral Dewey asking which one of those islands was the best one for us to take, from a naval and commercial point of view.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, in order that that may be stated with accuracy, it was a telegram signed by the Acting Secretary of the Navy to Admiral Dewey, in which he stated that he made the inquiry by direction of the President.

Mr. FORAKER. Can the Senator give us the date of that?

Mr. BACON. I can.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the date?

Mr. RAWLINS. August 13.

Mr. FORAKER. August 13, 1898?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. Then will the Senator allow me to ask, Does he include the Democratic Senators who voted for the ratification of the treaty subsequently?

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, no.

Mr. FORAKER. And without whose votes the treaty could not have been ratified?

Mr. CARMACK. Why, of course——

Mr. FORAKER. Does he include William J. Bryan?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir. They made their little mistakes. It was an honest mistake, as far as they were concerned.

Mr. SPOONER. They were the honest fanatics?

Mr. CARMACK. They were the honest fanatics; that is right.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator, if this is a mistake, as he characterizes it, they should at least bear their share of the burden, should they not?

Mr. CARMACK. They ought; that is right; they are doing it, too. They are bearing it. I heard one of the Senators say the other day, who voted for the ratification of the treaty, that he had been wearing sackcloth and ashes ever since, and that he regarded it as the mistake of his life.

Mr. President, there were men who voted for the ratification of that treaty who, like my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], never intended that the Philippine Islands should be permanently annexed to the United States. There were men on that side of the Chamber and men on this side of the Chamber who voted to ratify the treaty, but who were earnestly opposed to the retention of the Philippine Islands under the sovereignty of the United States. Two men of that sort were William J. Bryan and the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PATTERSON. And the Senator from Ohio also, I believe.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I omitted to ask the Senator, when I was on my feet a moment ago, a question that I wanted to get an answer to in that connection, or as near to it as possible. The telegram that was sent by the Navy Department, as I understand, was sent on the 13th day of August, 1898, and it was in the nature of an inquiry as to which of the islands it would be best for us to retain, having in view a naval station and commercial purposes. The inquiry I wanted to make is whether or not that is the first time we heard of commercial purposes in connection with the annexation?

Mr. CARMACK. From the Government of the United States, I think it was.

Mr. FORAKER. I mean the first time the Senator ever heard of it?

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, no.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood him to say that was the first time he heard of it.

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, no; I said from the Government of the United States.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. I simply want to say that that is not the whole of that cablegram. It inquired about the best one of the islands, if only one was retained. It also inquired how valuable those islands would be if held as colonies of the United States.

Mr. CARMACK. That is the language, Mr. President. Now, I say that at that time, if that dispatch is to be taken as evidence, the only idea in the mind of the Administration was, How much profit can we make out of the Philippine Islands? That question did not indicate any concern whatever for the welfare of the Filipinos. It indicated a purpose on the part of the Administration undoubtedly to take the very best island we could pick out and turn all the others back to the bloody and remorseless rule of Spain. That seemed at that time to be the idea that was in the mind of the Administration. The question did not make a suggestion that had the remotest bearing upon the welfare of the Filipinos or upon their desires or their wishes. Pick out the richest island there, the best island there from a naval and commercial point of view, and we will take that, whichever one it may be, and leave all the others to the bloody and remorseless rule of Spain.

I say that was the idea at that time, and it seemed to be the only idea in the mind of the Administration with reference to the Philippine Islands—simply the spoils of war. Admiral Dewey, in his answer, showed that there were a number of islands that he thought would furnish valuable coaling stations and things of that sort. Then the idea seemed to grow that we had better take the whole thing. The idea of "benevolent assimilation" did not exist at all in the inception of this business; it never had entered into the mind of anybody connected with the Administration that we were concerned as to the welfare of the Filipinos.

So far as President McKinley is concerned, Mr. President, I do say that if he had lived and could have controlled—as he could not have done—if he had lived and could have controlled the action of this Government in the Philippine Islands, that action would have been benevolent. I do not believe that he ever had any other but a kindly feeling toward anybody in the world. I believe he always tried to be regardful of the welfare of the Filipinos; but, Mr. President, it is simply impossible for a Government like that of the United States to rule a people of a different and an alien race 7,000 miles away and to rule them on benevolent principles.

President Roosevelt, in his able address on "The Strenuous Life," held up England's rule in India as an example of what we can do in the Philippine Islands, and the great blessing that it will be both to us and to the Filipinos.

Mr. President, with the possible exception of Ireland, there is not a worse governed and a more cruelly misgoverned people on the face of God's green earth than the people of India. I will not go into a discussion of that to-day, but at some future time, some time in the course of this debate, I hope to take that question up and to show that India is an absolute burden and a curse to Great Britain and that Great Britain is an absolute curse to the people of India. England derives no profit whatever from the possession of India, and England's rule of India is an absolute and utter curse to the people of that country. So our rule will be of the people of the Philippine Islands. It is simply a natural impossibility to send over a lot of carpetbaggers to islands 7,000 miles away from any sense of responsibility, beyond the eye and the reach of their Government, and expect to have honest government under such circumstances and conditions, to expect to have any other kind of government than the kind of government that will cause insurrection and war and bloodshed again and again.

Mr. President, you are not going to pacify the people of the Philippine Islands. The pacified Filipinos are those who have been laid beneath the sod of the Philippine Islands. The pacified Filipino is the dead Filipino. Every one that is left alive will live with a memory of the horrors of this war, will have an inextinguishable hatred of the American people, and will transmit that hatred to his children and his children's children for generations yet to be born. We are simply taking to ourselves and will transmit to our children a legacy of war, of strife, of bloodshed, of tyranny, and of cruelty that will be a burden and cause shame and dishonor to the American Government and to the American people.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I may as well confess, before I proceed, that I have deplored more deeply than any other thing that has occurred during my service in either House the tone and character, not to speak of the purpose, of this debate. I have indulged the hope of seeing our people in a frame of mind to discuss the problem with which we have to do in the Philippine Islands in a spirit of generosity and with that mutual concession of honest purposes to each other that is essential to any good result in great affairs.

I had the good fortune to hear the speech which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] made this afternoon before either of us had left the House of Representatives [laughter], and I congratulate my honorable friend——

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me, I have had the honor to hear the speech the Senator is now going to make, before either of us left the House of Representatives. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I will stand in the main aisle and if what my friend says turns out to be true I will admit that I have been a little adventurous in introducing the subject.

The first thing I wish to speak about in connection with my friend's speech is the fact that, without his intending it, it contains an almost continuous departure from accuracy and from truth. Anybody who listened to it would suppose that as a rule those of our officers and men in the Philippine Islands who have been tried by court-martial have been discharged, after having been found guilty of infamous offenses, with a reprimand. He said that a man convicted of an outrage against a defenseless woman had been convicted and reprimanded. I will leave it——

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is not now in the Chamber.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It is not my fault that he is not in the Chamber. I am only indirectly concerned about his departure.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator allow me to state that in that instance the Senator from Tennessee said that the soldier had been convicted and fined $50?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Very well; that is almost as bad. But did not the Senator from Tennessee leave the impression upon the mind of my honorable friend from Mississippi that the usual record of these convictions and sentences was a mere reprimand? Now, I hold in my hand a report—I did not have the honor of hearing the testimony before the Philippine Committee—I have here what appears to be the official statement of every court-martial that has been held of men connected with our Army in the Philippine Islands, and I will challenge the Senator from Tennessee to find a case of a single reprimand in all that long list, with possibly one exception. I am told there is one, but this matter being in very fine print, my eye fails to catch it.

I find here case after case which indicates not negligence of duty on the part of the court-martial, but what seems to me to be almost an absurd severity.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator allow me to ask from what he is reading?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I am reading from the letter of the Secretary of War to the Philippine Committee of May 5.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, in order that the Senator may not be in error as to the document to which the Senator from Tennessee referred, I will say that it is a document of an earlier date than that.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have not at hand the document to which the Senator from Tennessee refers. In fact, I think he did not aid us by referring to a document at all. I have the official report, which purports to give a list of 350 officers and enlisted men in the United States Army who have been tried by court-martial for offenses against natives in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I cited two cases in the document which I had. I do not know what document the Senator has. That was a document that was presented here, and I think has been before referred to in this debate, in which two men—two different cases, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] I know referred to them in his address—were charged with torture to natives by hanging them by the neck. The finding was guilty, and the punishment was a reprimand in two different cases.

Mr. DOLLIVER. No such case appears to occur in this document.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know what occurs there, and I do not care.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I wish to illustrate the rigorous character of the courts-martial. I find here as one of many the case of Frank McDonald, of Company L, Twenty-first Infantry. The charge was larceny of $107 Mexican money. He seems to have been convicted and sent up for three years.

Mr. CARMACK. From whom did he steal it?

Mr. DOLLIVER. From a native.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not believe that.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Now, let me give you another case.

Mr. LODGE. These trials are all for offenses against the natives.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Here is the case of a soldier in the Fourth Infantry who was tried for the larceny of one dozen bananas from a native in May, 1899. The record states: "Discharged from Army dishonorably, but remitted. Forfeited his pay; but remitted all except $30," and sent up for three months.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, the Senator from Tennessee alluded to two cases in regard to a reprimand, and I have them here. They will be found on page 42 of the document furnished by the War Deparment. I will read the two cases to which the Senator from Tennessee referred, and one other.

Memorandum showing trials of officers, enlisted men, and camp followers for offenses of cruelty against natives in the Philippines and for violations of the laws of war.

Name and rank.	Date.	Offense.	Sentence.
Second Lieut. Francis J. Ellison, Thirtieth Volunteer Infantry.	Feb. 4, 1900	Looting and encouraging same.	Reprimand.
Capt. Geo. W. Brandle, Twenty-seventh Volunteer Infantry.	May 26, 1900	Torture, by causing natives to be hung by neck for 10 seconds.	Do.
Second Lieut. Alvin S. Perkins, Twenty-seventh Volunteer Infantry.	.....do.....	.....do.....	Do.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What is the date of that document?

Mr. RAWLINS. The document is furnished by the War Department. I will give the Senator the date in a moment.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is not material.

Mr. RAWLINS. It is contained in a letter of the Secretary of War of February 17, 1902.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have here the compilation of May 5, including, I suppose, all the courts-martial held in the Philippines up to that time, and I venture to say that a better showing of inflexible severity and discipline could not be possibly exhibited by the Army in the punishment especially of offenses heinous in character, such as the Senator from Tennessee alluded to. I find here more than once the infliction of punishment of twenty years, and even more, in the penitentiary. I have alluded to it only because of the fact that there appears to be a disposition on the part of——

Mr. SPOONER. In several cases of rape the punishment has been death.

Mr. DOLLIVER. And the sentence has been death, as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, for the same offense that I have alluded to in a number of cases. This plain record of the facts serves at least to exhibit the angle of vision at which men, saturated with political prejudices, approach a subject that ought to be free from such an influence.

I have not been one of those who have tried to encourage any discussions calculated, in the very wise language of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], to bring forth the fruits of bitterness and worthless dissension. To my mind it has made no difference, so far as this bill is concerned, what has occurred in the army in the Philippine Islands, for the reason, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has so well said, that the very object of this bill is to displace the military authority and to establish in its stead a self-governing native administration. I have not felt disposed either to abjectly apologize for or to wantonly assail the military orders which have been so often the subject of controversy in this Chamber.

I do not know that I would have brought myself to refer to the subject at all, except that I saw a man in the corridors of the Senate, with tears in his eyes, a veteran newspaper correspondent, honorably connected for many years with the press service of the House of Representatives, asking whether there was not somebody who would speak in the Senate in behalf of our soldiers in Samar.

"My boy was with Major Waller and came out of that dreadful march a skeleton and a wreck," said the newspaper man, and as I saw him standing there crying I made up my mind that if every other man on this floor took refuge in the language of apology there should be one voice to ask at least the charity of the common-law presumptions for the victims of the prevailing mania for court-martials which seems to have taken possession of the War Department. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

I have made an effort to find out something about the island of Samar and the military conditions there. My friend from Tennessee said that it was a blooming garden, or words of like effect, and that even to the eye of General Smith it presented a rosy and beautiful prospect when he went there. I deny it.

What are the facts about Samar? Long before General Smith's order was issued, and just after the horrible atrocity at Balangiga, where a whole command of our troops, who thought themselves secure in the friendly assurances of the neighborhood where they were encamped, were cut down by armed savages, who mutilated the dead as well as the living, the orders were issued by General Chaffee himself for the punitive expeditions which these conditions of barbarous and treacherous warfare required. These expeditions burned the towns which were sheltering and furnishing the savages with supplies, until, as Stephen Bonsal has said, "As far as the eye could see, southern Samar was converted into a wilderness."

Why was that done? It was done because when our boys went there the natives said that they were friendly—were glad to see them; and while they were sitting at breakfast, as they supposed, in perfect peace and perfect security, they were set upon by savages armed with bolos, and butchered to death with horrible mutilations, not fit to be mentioned here. It was then that General Chaffee issued the order to make a fitting retribution against the authors of this outrage.

I have here a letter of a famous war correspondent, whom I quote with some confidence, because he has been offered as an authority on the other side of this Chamber—Mr. Stephen Bonsal. He was with General Smith in Samar. He went with him there. He tells of the indignation aroused throughout the whole American colony at Manila by the report of the pitiable affair at Balangiga.

He said there was not an American soldier or civilian in all that far-off land who did not approve of the resolution of General Chaffee to send out forthwith his orders to make an end of the conditions which sheltered that unspeakable crime; and in accordance with those orders, long before poor old General Smith ever got to Samar—an island apparently infested by armed savages with the instincts of butchery—before General Smith ever got there those orders had been well and faithfully executed, so that, according to Mr. Bonsal, as far as the eye could reach the coast of southern Samar was already a wilderness.

This, it should be remembered, was several weeks, or, at least, a month, before Major Waller reached the island at all. These native bolomen had retired to the mountains and were relying upon supplies sent up to them from the coast villages; and it was to reach these barbarous tribes in the interior of an uncivilized island that old General Smith issued such orders as he did issue.

I do not propose to pass judgment upon them until I see them printed. The evidence in the court-martial of Major Waller indicates that it was not an order at all; that it was a conversation which General Smith had with Major Waller, in which he told him that those people were hidden in the inaccessible fastnesses of these mountains and it would be his business to go up there and to do what he could to dislodge them.

If he did tell him to convert those mountains into a howling wilderness, Major Waller had an easy task, for according to a speech made here two days ago by the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] the only offense charged against Waller in the execution of that order of General Smith was the shooting of several treacherous guides, who were defended on the ground that the major had no right to ask prisoners to dig roots for his men when they were perishing of hunger.

So that from their own statement the interior of that island was an inaccessible wilderness. I have looked it up, and I do not need the authority of Mr. Bonsal for saying, as he does say, that half a mile from the coast there is not a road in the island.

I for one am tired of hearing the excited exclamations against an old American soldier infuriated by the fate of our boys, a soldier who won his honors and his commissions by a long career of gallantry and who bears in his body three wounds received in the national defense.

Another thing, Mr. Bonsal was by the side of General Smith during his entire operations in this island. He says:

> I went to Samar with General Smith and remained with him almost constantly for the first month of the operation. During the time I can say that I never saw any undue severity exercised upon women and children, nor did I hear from the mouths of credible witnesses of any such unworthy acts having been committed.

I stood up the other day and challenged somebody—I do not recollect what member of the syndicate of vituperation it was—to name the case of one woman or of one child that had suffered by an order of General Smith in Samar. Now, why should we not judge him with a decent charity? We do not quite know his situation. We have some light on it. Mr. Bonsal gives us a little light. The army of the bolomen, as I have been informed, was under the command of a broken-down attorney from the city of Manila, who was not even a citizen of the island of Samar. He had them in charge up in the mountains.

After having described the character of that army of Philippine liberty, Mr. Bonsal says:

> In some portions of the press I find the position taken that our officers, before descending to fight the savages with their own savage weapons, should have made an appeal to Lukban, warning him of the unspeakable horrors that would follow upon the shameless scenes of slaughter inaugurated by his orders. As a matter of fact, this was done, and the answer came in the general orders and proclamations, twelve of which I have seen, that the dictator issued from his mountain camp.
> They are addressed to the civilian inhabitants as well as to the enrolled bolomen, and in nearly every one of these orders which I have seen the desirability, in fact the imperative necessity, of showing no quarter, is impressed upon all quarters.
> In one of these documents the dictator, now happily in our power—

A circumstance which we owe to the son of Ulysses S. Grant—> commands:

> "Kill all the white men you can lay your hands upon, by fair means or by foul, but spare the white women, that they may serve us as slaves."

That is the testimony of a reliable newspaper correspondent, who read the proclamation of the Manila lawyer, who had put himself at the head of an armed band of savages in the desolate mountains of Samar. When I come to judge General Smith, when I come to judge Major Waller, when I come to judge the footsore company who clambered with him through that wilderness which civilization had never before disturbed, I propose to know all the facts.

The time may come, as the Senator seems to think, when we will in sheer exhaustion abandon our work in the Philippine Islands. Our burdens have been grievous, and sometimes I have thought they have been almost too heavy to be borne; but if the time ever comes for us to go we will not go under the auspices of the minority of the Philippine Committee. Our retreat will be taken up in an orderly way and it will not be conducted by the men who have defamed the uniform of the American Army in the Senate of the United States. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, The Chair would remind the occupants of the galleries that marks of approval or disapproval are not proper under the rules of the Senate, and there must be no repetition of them.

Mr. DOLLIVER. And in after years when nations more robust, moved by other motives, have taken up the burden which was greater than our strength, we will ask permission to go back to the harbor where our volunteers first heard the cheers of Admiral Dewey's squadron, to gather up the ashes of our dead—the poor boys who had faith enough in their country to give their names to its enlisting regiments, to follow its officers with a soldier's reverence, and to die if need be in its service.

If such an experience should come to us within my lifetime I hope to be spared the humiliation of recalling one word uttered here or anywhere that would warrant the surviving comrades of these men in reproaching me for having passed judgment upon them without hearing the evidence, without knowing the circumstances by which they were surrounded, the provocation by which they were inflamed, and the military necessities under which they obeyed their orders.

Another thing. My friend from Tennessee has intimated that we are governed by political motives in this matter. Such a feeling is far from my heart. I have tried to support the Philippine policy of the Government of the United States since we began it, though, like many others, I have looked forward to the outcome with solicitude and with anxiety; but I have never doubted the ability of the American Republic, I have never doubted the fidelity and the resolution of the people of the United States, and I am sorry that current politics have come into the discussion, and sorrier still that the politics of other generations have been dug up and paraded here in the Senate.

But the Senator from Tennessee is not the man to complain of that. The first citation of the dark and bloody past I heard from the lips of the Senator from Tennessee, when for nearly an hour he discoursed, turning to his brethren of the South, of the horrors of General Grant's administration of the affairs of the Government of the United States nearly a generation ago. The fact that I heard it again to-day and the dim recollection that I heard it nearly two years ago, seem to me to indicate that it is a part of the intellectual as well as the political stock in trade of the Senator from Tennessee.

My friend says that the Republican leaders in Congress were notified by the President that some notice must be taken of the arguments on the other side. I deny it. At any rate I venture seriously to dispute it, or at least to doubt it.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I said it was understood that the President had called together a number of the leaders of the Republican party. The Senator must not understand that I intended to include him in that category.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I know, and the Senator from Tennessee ought not to understand that when I refer to him I refer to him as a leader, for one of the things that has impressed itself upon my mind more than anything else is that in order to keep this debate going at all it has been necessary for the Senator from Tennessee three times to produce a speech that contained exactly the same ideas, and if that is not fair evidence of the fact that my friend needs the cooperation of some of the men——

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that it may be that my three speeches have contained the same ideas. In that respect they differ from all the speeches ever made by the Senator from Iowa, which never contain any ideas at all.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is an easy fling. I am not a genius. I find that my friend the Senator from Tennessee has that reputation. He thinks that political advantage is to come from his attitude in this Chamber. I do not think so. I do not believe there is a Republican who fears the moral effect either on Republicans or Democrats in the United States of such a speech as that of the Senator from Tennessee.

I confess when I first heard it I was afraid it might interfere with the faint hearts of some, at least, in the mountains of Tennessee, where the distinguished Senator is an idol in the community, and so I ventured timidly to open the Tennessee newspapers. I did not dare to open a Republican paper, but I thought I would get hold of an orthodox Democratic organ to see how the Senator's performances were striking the people of Tennessee, and by the merest accident I found a journal which gained "the largest circulation in the South" while the honorable Senator was himself its editor, before he put away his pen and put out his tongue to defy the Republican policy now prevailing in the United States. [Laughter.]

I have here a calm, a peaceful, and a very suggestive commentary upon the present labors of the honorable Senator from Tennessee. It is entitled "Senator CARMACK's speech," and it appears in the Commercial-Appeal of the city of Memphis. It says:

Tennessee has every reason to be proud of Senator EDWARD W. CARMACK.

A sentiment in which I graciously concur.

The newspaper fraternity has many special reasons for being proud of his success and achievements. He has given hope and courage to many a struggling worker. He has demonstrated, in his proper person and by his success, that the force of intellect can break the bonds of convention and bid defiance to the glory and power of wealth.

All of which sounds natural. [Laughter.]

ED CARMACK is a man of the people. He is one of God's rare souls—who rise above and become superior to environment and force tardy recognition from unwilling minds. He is a living evidence that there is still some spiritual potentiality in manhood, and that to achieve eminence one must not depend wholly and entirely on the almighty dollar or other sordid considerations.

I have read these opening sentences in order to show that the witness is not prejudiced against the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CARMACK's speech on the Philippine question, as reported in the columns of the Commercial Appeal yesterday, was a rhetorical gem. Those who knew him know that he is capable of such an effort. The country will be amazed and astonished that one man could produce in one speech so much to attract universal attention, but he and his newspaper friends who have labored with him know that he has accomplished greater efforts day after day and week after week in his editorial capacity which were passed over with but an indifferent notice or recognition.

What a tragedy is that—[laughter]—a tragedy that almost suggests the picturesque description of Goldsmith's village schoolmaster—

> And still they gaz'd, and still the wonder grew
> That one small head could carry all he knew.

[Laughter.]

The article continues:

The great public is not insensate, but it is slow to recognize genius, and it can only realize a truth after it feels the repeated impact of that truth.

I reckon that is the reason why we enjoy the impact of that speech so often during this session of the Congress of the United States.

So much in justice to Mr. CARMACK.

Now, the editor, in the cold light of truth and patriotism, takes up the substance of the discourse:

Judgmentally—

That was a word left over by the old editor when he entered the House of Representatives.

Judgmentally his speech, with all its brilliancy, was an error—

That is exactly what other competent and honored leaders have been heard to whisper, so I am advised, among the surviving friends of the Democratic party—

Judgmentally his speech, with all its brilliancy, was an error, in the opinion of The Commercial Appeal. His condemnation of the Republican management of our new possessions was eminently correct and wise, but his declaration that we should abandon islands which we paid for—

There seems to be a little commercial spirit in western Tennessee [laughter]— which we paid for—

And there seems to be a little patriotism left there, for he adds:

and fought for is merely the refined sentimentality of the academician. It is almost pathetic—

And in this I quite agree with the writer.

It is almost pathetic to see such a magnificent mind and to see a man of such wonderful potentiality drifting away into impractical channels or beating his poor, bruised wings against the bars of irrefragible environment.

[Laughter.]

There is the only reason I can think of which leads me to acquit the Senator of having written that.

Admitting that he stands for the spiritual and better life of the Government, he is out of place and makes of himself no factor in the movement of events. Whether it is right or wrong, we have the Philippines as part of our possessions.

There seems to be a degree of resignation at Memphis which does not even raise a moral question, a thing which can not be said of all sections of our beloved country.

And the national aspiration is to hold them as against all comers. Any man, however great he may be, who sets himself against the inevitable destiny of the nation or who attempts to suffocate or throttle the national aspiration, must expect to go down in defeat.

We would like to see Mr. CARMACK's magnificent intellect render service to his country along the inevitable and destined ways. We would be gratified to see him something else than a stupendous negation. We would like to see him have something else to say than an amplified and eloquent "Don't." But wrong as he is, and insistent in his errors as he may be, we can not withhold from him the tribute of our admiration.

Lord Macaulay said that Edmund Burke had a particular genius for getting on the wrong side of every question and of adorning his error with a transcendent display of genius such as the world had never before seen. Taking Macaulay's estimate of Burke as a standard, all that we desire to say about our distinguished young Senator is that he is a modern Edmund Burke.

All I desire to add is that if Ed Burke can stand that the junior Senator from Tennessee ought not to complain of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I suppose I enjoyed as much as anyone here the delightful danse du ventre to which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] has treated the Senate and the country. I certainly had no idea when I entered into this discussion of crossing jawbones with so renowned and so redoubtable a tongue slugger as the distinguished Senator from Iowa. I do not know of anything quite so appalling to a raw and unskilled controversialist like myself as to see the distinguished Senator from Iowa draw his long red tongue from its scabbard and brandish it in the air.

The Senator from Iowa is very amusing when he tries to be, and he is often very amusing when he does not try to be. His effort this evening was exceedingly amusing. Where his language was not witty his gesticulation was at least ridiculous. [Laughter.] And the Senator from Iowa, when he can not raise a laugh by saying something that is funny, can always produce more or less merriment by doing something that is ridiculous. The Senator's speech was indeed accompanied by his usual refined and happy gesticulations—very amusing—but so far as any contribution to the knowledge of this discussion is concerned the Senator might as well have been engaged, as he usually is, in swinging by his prehensile tail from the leafy bough. I shall not attempt to answer the Senator's witticisms any more than I shall attempt to copy his inimitable gesticulations. I have not that control over my abdominal muscles which would enable me to do so.

The Senator has read an editorial article from a Memphis newspaper. The article was made very amusing by the gesticulations with which it was accompanied and the simian grimaces with which it was adorned. So far as I am concerned, I think the article was about as complimentary a one to myself as I could expect from a newspaper one of the principal owners of which is the Hon. Luke E. Wright, who is now holding a position under the present Administration in the Philippine Islands. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is a repetition of marks of approval or disapproval the Sergeant-at-Arms will be obliged to clear the galleries.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa had made his speech or given his performances a little earlier in the game, I might have answered a little differently the question the Senator from Ohio propounded to me. He demanded with some heat to know what Senator upon the other side of the Chamber had undertaken to excuse or to justify murder and butchery in the Philippine Islands. I can now answer him that the junior Senator from Iowa has done so.

"Poor old Smith!" Because the natives in a single town have risen up and butchered a number of our soldiers who were holding them in slavery, it is a "fitting retribution," in the opinion of the Senator from Iowa, that poor old Smith should issue an order to murder little children. Poor old Smith! Poor old scoundrel! Poor old murderer! Poor old butcher! I am proud to say, Mr. President, that up to this time the only man on the floor of the Senate who has been shameless enough to defend that bloody scoundrel has been the junior Senator from Iowa.

A few moments ago when I unguardedly used an expression about the impudence of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, the Senator from Wisconsin suggested to me that it was an improper expression, and I thought so, and withdrew it. The Senator from Iowa speaks of Senators upon this side of the Chamber as a syndicate of vituperation. I did not call the Senator from Iowa to order. If it had been any other Senator upon the other side of the Chamber I would have done so. But I did not call the Senator from Iowa to order because I know that to require him to speak the language of decency and courtesy in debate would be to condemn him to absolute silence for the rest of his life.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I call the Senator from Tennessee to order.

Mr. CARMACK. I am done. It does not make any difference.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire the ruling of the Chair.

My point of order is that the language which I request be taken down is a violation of the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words will be taken down and read.

The Reporter read as follows:

A few moments ago when I unguardedly used an expression about the impudence of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, the Senator from Wisconsin suggested to me that it was an improper expression, and I thought so, and withdrew it. The Senator from Iowa speaks of Senators upon this side of the Chamber as a syndicate of vituperation. I did not call the Senator from Iowa to order. If it had been any other Senator upon the other side of the Chamber I would have done so. But I did not call the Senator from Iowa to order because I know that to require him to speak the language of decency and courtesy in debate would be to condemn him to absolute silence for the rest of his life.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The language is very clearly out of order, but the Senator from Tennessee has resumed his seat.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to say that I do not regard it as of sufficient weight to require any attention from the Senate.

Mr. CARMACK. As the Senator from Iowa has decided that it is not entitled to any weight, that settles the whole thing.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, now that the Senator from Tennessee has finished expressing his pleasure at the speech of the Senator from Iowa, I should like to have put into the RECORD some papers in regard to an article that appeared in the Washington Post, and which was read here the other afternoon by the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I will read the letter that accompanies it, and I ask that the memorandum may be printed as a part of my remarks.

It will be recalled that the article read was a statement purporting to come from a clergyman in Lynn, who quoted his son as saying——

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to say that I intended, if the Chair thought my language was out of order, to ask permission to withdraw it. If it is out of order, I will do so.

Mr. DOLLIVER. In view of what the Senator from Tennessee has said, I desire to withdraw the remark which I have just made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the language is withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. It will be recalled that the article which was read purported to be a statement of the Rev. W. H. Walker, of Lynn, Mass., stating that he had letters from his son which gave an account of an action in the province of Sorsogon, where the army took 1,300 Filipinos; that 300 were killed and the remaining thousand were stood up by open graves and shot.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
DIVISION OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1902.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I inclose herewith memorandum respecting publication hereto attached.

It was said that the young man belonged to the Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry. The letter says:

By said memorandum it appears:

First. Sixteenth Regiment Infantry, United States Army, has never served in the Philippines outside of Cagayan, Isabela, and Nueva Viscaya.

That is, it has never served in Sorsogon.

Second. The Army rolls of Company I, Sixteenth Infantry, United States Army, do not contain the name of J. Bennett Walker.

Third. There is a John B. Walker in Company I, Fifteenth Infantry, United States Army. This regiment (Fifteenth) has been in the Philippines since December 15, 1900. Up to July 14, 1901, Company I had not been stationed or operating in Sorsogon, but on April 24, 1901, Company I was ordered to Albay Province, which immediately adjoins Sorsogon on the north.

Fourth. There are no reports on file in the War Department of engagements in Sorsogon in which Company I, Fifteenth Infantry, United States Army, participated.

Fifth. On January 11, 1902, J. G. Livingston, civil governor of Sorsogon, reports in detail on conditions prevailing since April 30, 1901 (page 458 of the hearings before Committee on the Philippines), and makes no mention of any affair where insurgents were killed or captured after August 26, 1901.

Sixth. No mention is made of the capture of 1,000 prisoners, referred to in said article, in any of General Chaffee's reports. Lieutenant Burr, the officer referred to, has never reported any such capture.

Seventh. No report has been received at the War Department in respect of or referring to the alleged incident detailed in said publication.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES E. MAGOON,
Acting Chief of Division.

Hon. H. C. LODGE,
United States Senator, Senate Chamber.

I have requested that a cablegram be sent to the Philippine Islands, which has been sent, to make further inquiries, but in the meantime a telegram has been put into my hands from the Boston Journal to their correspondent here. They interviewed Rev. W. H. Walker, to whom this statement was attributed. I will read it:

BOSTON, MASS., May 3, 1902.

L. A. COOLIDGE, Washington, D. C.:

Rev. W. H. Walker, Lynn, denies receiving letters from his son, John Bennett Walker, a soldier in Philippines, describing shooting of 1,000 Filipino prisoners. Says reports grossly misrepresented him. He says: "Instead of receiving 12 letters I personally never received but one. Three in all came to my family; other two addressed to my wife and daughter. All contained practically same information. They were written by my son before last Thanksgiving, and were received by us early in February—over three months ago. They contained nothing but a review of the soldier's life in the Philippines, which at times was hard, according to my son's story. In none of the letters was any reference made to cruelty, nor did my son criticise the American troops in any way."

BOSTON JOURNAL.

I let that go with the rest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the papers presented by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the RECORD.

The papers are as follows:

PRISONERS SHOT IN SQUADS—AMERICAN DECLARES 1,000 FILIPINOS WERE SLAIN NEAR SORSOGON—SENSATIONAL CHARGES CONTAINED IN LETTERS RECEIVED BY REV. W. H. WALKER, OF BOSTON, FROM SON AT THE FRONT.

LYNN, MASS., May 5, 1902.

"One thousand Filipino prisoners shot in platoons over the graves themselves had been forced to dig; a priest, who had acted in the dual capacity of father confessor and general, hanged before the slaughter of the prisoners and within their sight."

Such are some of the charges made by J. Bennett Walker, a private in Company I, Sixteenth Infantry, now at Sorsogon, in the Philippines, in letters to his father, the Rev. W. H. Walker, D. D., of this city. He is a special instructor at the Gordon Missionary Training School, Boston. Private Walker enlisted at the outbreak of the Spanish war, and was commended for bravery at San Juan.

The Rev. Dr. Walker has more than a dozen letters. He refuses to make them public, however, as he says: "The story is too fearful. My boy has written to me as son to father, and in the face of the inquiry now going on I fear it might bring him into trouble with his superiors.

"He writes of a 'hyke' he went on with men under Lieutenant Burr. A 'hyke' is an expedition in search of rebels. He writes that the detachment went to Trosin, 18 miles from Sorsogon, and took possession of a bamboo church there. They had hardly settled themselves in the church when 300 insurgents attacked them, armed with bolos and daggers.

"The insurgents were routed and 2 captured. The prisoners told of the location of the insurgent army and agreed to act as guides. The entire command was ordered out, the insurgents taken by surprise, 300 of them killed, and 1,000 taken prisoners, including a priest, who was their general and father confessor, 2 captains, and 4 lieutenants.

"This band proved to be a secret organization known as the Katyauman. The priest assured them that if by any chance a Yankee bullet did hit and kill them they would come to life again in three days. They were so convinced of the power of the charm that they did not fear any body of armed soldiers.

"The priest was called out to tell the insurgents that they had been duped. He refused to do so, although he was flogged, and as an example was strung up to a tree and allowed to remain there a week, so that it could be seen he did not come to life at the end of three days. The Katyauman were so superstitious and such fanatics that the thought of liberating them could not be entertained. To keep them prisoners would necessitate the placing of soldiers on short rations, if not starving them. There was nothing to do but to kill them. This was done by squads. Every morning three squads of 20 men each were sent out under guard.

"They were taken a mile or so inland, and then furnished picks and shovels and started to work. When they had dug a trench 5 feet deep they were told to stand up in it. The picks and shovels were taken away. A bullet for each man ended his agony, and he lay dead in the grave he had dug, in this fashion. The entire 1,000 were put out of the way of harm. While these measures may seem exceedingly cruel to us," said the Rev. Dr. Walker, "my son tells me they are absolutely necessary for the preservation of the American soldiers."

In the matter of charges by J. Bennett Walker, private, Company I, Sixteenth Infantry, United States Army.

The clipping attached appears on the first page of the Washington Post, published Tuesday, May 6, 1902, dated May 5, 1902, from information furnished by Rev. W. H. Walker, D. D., of Lynn, Mass., purporting to have been gathered from letters received from his son, J. Pennett Walker, a private in Company I, Sixteenth Infantry, United States Army, "now at Sorsogon."

By reference to "Roster of troops serving in Department of Northern Luzon," published November 1, 1900, it would appear that at that date the Sixteenth Regiment, U. S. A., was stationed at Aparri, and that Col. Charles C. Hood, of the Sixteenth United States Infantry, was commanding the district comprising the provinces of Cagayan, Isabela, and Nueva Viscaya, and the entire regiment was located within his district.

The roster of troops published October 31, 1901 (eleven months later), on page 6, still shows Colonel Hood in command of the second district of Northern Luzon, composed of the same three provinces, with the entire Sixteenth Regiment within his district and Company I, located at Aparri.

The stations of troops published at Manila, dated February 15, 1902, still shows the Sixteenth Regiment with headquarters at Aparri and Company I located at that point.

The attached article states that the letters received were written by J. Pennett Walker, of Company I, Sixteenth Infantry, "now at Sorsogon."

By reference to the map of Luzon, it will appear that the province of Sorsogon is the extreme southeastern province of the mainland of the island of Luzon and is a part of the Department of Southern Luzon, whereas Aparri and the districts constituting the second district of Northern Luzon are located on the extreme northern coast of the island of Luzon and the two points are as far apart as they can be on Luzon.

If the regiment was at Aparri, with Colonel Hood commanding the second district, on November 1, 1900, as shown by the first roster referred to; was still there October 31, 1901, as shown by the second roster referred to, and continued to be there on February 15, 1902, in the third roster referred to, is it likely that at any time within a reasonable period, when 1,000 Filipino prisoners would have been captured, Private J. Pennett Walker was at Sorsogon? Furthermore, the letter states that he went on a "hyke" with Lieutenant Burr. Neither the roster of the Sixteenth Regiment, United States Army in 1900, nor the roster of the Sixteenth Regiment on October 31, 1901, nor the last edition of the Army Register shows a Lieutenant Burr in Company I or any other company of the Sixteenth Regiment, United States Army. There is a Lieutenant Burr in the Philippines in command of a company of scouts, but not the company of scouts connected with the second division in northern Luzon. Careful consideration of the reports at hand fail to discover any engagement in command of a first lieutenant killing 300 insurgents and capturing 1,000 prisoners, as stated in this article.

The records of the Army, as shown by the rolls, establish the fact that the Sixteenth Regiment, United States Army, left San Francisco May 28, 1899, and arrived in Manila June 26, 1899, and the undersigned, with J. G. Hudson, of the Army rolls division, have on this 6th day of May, 1902, examined the Army rolls of Company I, Sixteenth Regiment, United States Army, and find that there never has been on the rolls of said company a man by the name of "J. Pennett Walker," "J. Bennett Walker," "J. B. Walker," or "J. P. Walker," either as a private, corporal, sergeant, or commissioned officer, since May, 1899. We did not deem it essential to go back of that date.

An examination of the report of General Chaffee of events in southern Luzon from the arrival of the Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, in which Lieut. Frank S. Burr is an officer, to wit, first lieutenant of Company E, on detached service in connection with Philippine scouts (so understood), we find that from the date of its arrival, to wit, September 4, 1900, to August 26, 1901, no report of any engagement in which Lieutenant Burr took part is made, unless it be one on February 8, 1901, in which a battalion of the Fifteenth Infantry was engaged, where there were 3 of the number killed, 1 wounded, and 3 captured.

As in all other engagements of that regiment, the names and companies are given, and his name does not appear in any reports made to or by his regiment.

It might be further added that in the ten months of reports from that regiment on file 11 engagements are reported, wherein the aggregate shows 26 insurgents killed, 25 wounded, and 21 captured.

The report of Governor J. G. Livingston, of Sorsogon Province, dated January 11, 1902, reports in detail conditions in that province since April 30, 1901 (p. 459, Hearings before Committee on Philippines), and he makes no mention of any such affair or of any affair where any number of insurgents were killed or captured after August 26, 1901, date of General Chaffee's report.

Lieutenant Burr himself reported to his proper superior officers from time to time, and we find in the report of the Lieutenant-General Commanding the Army for 1901, part 3, as follows:

"October 17.—Fifth district, headquarters scouts and Forty-first Volunteer Regiment scouts, commanded by Lieutenant Burr, Fifteenth Infantry, met a band of insurgents in the mountains west of Balanga, routed them; killed 7 and captured 4 rifles.

"January 17, 1901.—Lieutenant Burr, Fifteenth Infantry, commanding Fifth district scouts, met ladrones east of Santa Maria; killed 2 and captured 1 rifle."

He subsequently makes a final report for the month of February, 1901, showing four engagements of his scouts wherein several guns were captured. All the foregoing in southern Luzon.

It would appear but natural that had Lieutenant Burr, either as commanding officer or as participant, been engaged in an engagement as suggested by the article by the Rev. Walker, he would either have reported it himself or have seen that some other officer did so report.

The result of the foregoing would locate Company I, Sixteenth Regiment, at Aparri in a northerly point of Luzon; the affair recited at Sorsogon, in the extreme southeastern part of Luzon, and Lieutenant Burr in the central portion, and Private J. Pennett Walker not located.

There is a John B. Walker in Company I, Fifteenth Infantry, United States Army.

Should it transpire that the man Walker referred to is a member of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment, United States Army, then we submit the following as the record of the Fifteenth Regiment, and especially Company I:

By General Chaffee's report, Appendix N, it is shown that two battalions of the Fifteenth Infantry, United States Army, arrived in the Department of Southern Luzon, one (third) September 4 and the other December 15, 1900. On page 7 of the same appendix it is shown that the battalion arriving September 4 was sent to the towns of Sinoloan, Paquil, Paete, and Santa Cruz, Laguna Province. The battalion arriving December 15 was sent to Legaspi and Tabaco, province of Albay and island of Catanduanes.

It subsequently appears that Company I was a part of the First Battalion, which was stationed at Laguna, as shown on page 16, where, on April 24, the Third Battalion of the Fifteenth Infantry, including Company I, was moved, Company I going to San Jose de Lagoney, Albay Province; Company K to Sorsogon; Company L to Jupat and Matnog, and Company M to Donsol and Bulan.

It subsequently appears, on page 18, that Company I was transferred from San Jose de Laguna to Tobaco, Albay Province. At some time subsequent to July 14, 1901, Company I may have been transferred to Sorsogon, and hence, if the capture of 1,000 and killing of 300 insurgents by Company I, or any part of it, occurred, it must have been subsequent to July 14, 1901.

That our memorandum is correct we submit the following reports of engagements and expeditions by companies and battalions of the Fifteenth Infantry, United States Army, from the time of their arrival in the Department of Southern Luzon up to and including August 26, 1901.

The following, taken from Appendix N, being report of military operations in the Department of Luzon from August 1, 1900, to August 26, 1901 (report of General Chaffee):

"September 27.—Engagement by Captain Mitchell with Company L, in which 10 insurgents were killed, 20 wounded, and no captures. This occurred at Laguna, a province situated just south of Manila and several hundred miles north of Sorsogon.

"December 26.—An engagement by Company M, Fifteenth Infantry, in which 1 insurgent was killed and 1 wounded and 9 captured. This was also in Laguna Province.

"December 31.—Another slight engagement by Company M; no insurgents killed, wounded, or captured.

"December 31.—Another engagement by Company L, in which 2 insurgents were killed, 1 wounded, and 1 captured.

"January 25, 1901.—Another engagement, company not given; no insurgents killed or wounded; 9 captured.

"February 8.—Engagement by battalion, consisting of Companies I, K, and M, in which 3 insurgents were killed, 1 wounded, and 9 captured.

"February 19.—Engagement by Company D, in which 2 insurgents were killed, 2 wounded, and 1 captured.

"March 27.—Engagement by Company M, in which 2 insurgents were killed, 1 wounded, and 1 captured.

All of the foregoing were in the province of Laguna, above referred to.

"June 1.—Engagement by company not named, in which 15 insurgents were killed, 1 wounded, and 1 captured.

"June 7.—Engagement by Company D, in which 1 insurgent was killed, 1 wounded or captured."

The last two engagements were in the province of Albay, situated north of Sorsogon. No engagements in Sorsogon reported.

The foregoing, considered in connection with matter previously considered, showing that Lieutenant Burr was operating in central Luzon until at least March 1, 1901, these reports showing engagements of the regiment to August 26, 1901, and the report of Governor Livingston on page 419 of hearing, covering conditions up to January 11, 1902, would exclude the probability, if not the possibility, of any such affair occurring as referred to herein.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, it is exceedingly to be regretted that a measure of great public policy, involving such momentous and far-reaching consequences, can not be debated in the Senate of the United States without a display of temper. It is particularly to be regretted that two young Senators, each the peer of any man in the Senate, gentlemen of humor, eloquence, and wit, who are destined to run most brilliant and glorious careers here, should be so moved in the heat of debate as to use language which I know both will regret. It is very easy to indulge one's self in satire and wit and ridicule, but the barb goes very deep and leaves wounds so ineradicable that it must always be regretted by those who participate as well as by those who hear.

It is unfortunate that the debate has taken a sectional turn. I am not here this evening to debate this question, because I am physically unable to do so, besides lacking disposition to enter into a proper discussion of it. But I am on my feet to-day because of the use made of my name yesterday in a carefully prepared written speech by the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS]. The Senator has taken me to task for certain speeches which he said I made upon this subject, but he has forgotten that I have not made any. I have not spoken on this question or on the question upon which he then particularly animadverted.

I know the Senator from Maryland. I have served in the House and Senate with him. He has been a good-natured man and has been noted for the exactness, the painstaking accuracy of his methods. He has also been a judge on the bench, and his hand has had to hold untrembling the scales of justice. He has learned from the construction of statutes the value of accuracy in thought and precision in language. If he had said anything in an offhand debate in the Senate which for a moment seemed to involve me, it would have been a matter of no consequence whatever, and I should have allowed it to pass without mentioning it at all.

But when a man carefully writes his speech and reads it the presumption is that he has considered well whatever he has penned, and also the vehicle that communicates the idea to those who hear him. The mind of the Senator from Maryland is clear and strong enough, his understanding of any question he may debate is good enough, and his vocabulary is sufficient to adequately and appropriately convey to his auditors his meaning without the use of manuscript. So when he uses manuscript I understand him to have thoroughly examined into the matter upon which he speaks.

I did not have the pleasure of hearing him yesterday, because I could not attend the Senate at that time. He said of the Senator from Utah:

> The motto of the Senator from Utah, who introduced this substitute for the pending measure, is, "Let the Ishmaelite go"—a policy made more specific by the Senator from Mississippi, who adds, "Let him go to the devil." That is easy, but it is not statesmanship. It is not patriotic constructive statesmanship.

The Senator said yesterday that most of the minority on this side had voted for the ratification of the Spanish treaty. This morning he corrects that, although it was in writing yesterday, and he said that he now means "some of them." So he can see that a man's last interpretation of his own thought, or his last expression of it, is the one that the public should accept.

Now, when the Senator quotes me in this deliberately written article of his, or essay or speech, he did not get from the RECORD any such thing. There is nothing of the sort in the RECORD. I desire to say now that when I delivered that speech I acted as I do in all others. I never see the notes of the stenographer and I never see the proof sheet of the printer. I let go whatever faults may be committed, either in transcription or in printing, and I content myself with correcting the permanent RECORD.

I did say, in the heat of debate, in an offhand way, "Let them go to the devil," but that sentence was accompanied by others which the distinguished Senator from Maryland does not choose to quote. It does not mean our consigning them to hades, by any means. I said, "Let them go to the devil and take care of themselves," and I afterwards said to the stenographer, "That was a rough expression which I would not like to have go into print, and I hope you will put it in, "Let them go where they please and take care of themselves," and that is what appears in the RECORD. So the Senator has misrepresented me, and he has done it deliberately and coldly and mechanically. He had no authority to quote such language as against me in my speech. It is not a matter of record, and I had chosen to express myself differently, and there could be no objection to doing so.

But, Mr. President, before I used that language I expressed the idea that I sympathize with every people in the world struggling for liberty, and at the same time I expressed my confidence in the American Army. I said there was nothing that I would say to disparage our Army, and I never have yet said one single word. On the contrary, Mr. President, I said that I was attached to the Army by more than usual ties, because I have some of my family in Luzon, one of them fighting in the province of Batangas, or he has been, under Gen. Franklin Bell, and I will never believe that he or anybody perpetrated any act of barbarity if he had a thousand commands from poor old Smith and all the balance of the generals in the Army. I use the phrase of my eloquent friend from Iowa. I do not know how old General Smith is, or how poor he is, but it was used here so often, with such damnable iteration, that it made an impression on my mind, and I suppose he will go down in history as poor old Smith.

Mr. President, I said nothing about the paucity of the votes there. That question was not up when I spoke on the tariff in the Philippines. That question has come up under the pending bill. Yet I am represented as saying that by the Senator. He seems to take pleasure in associating me with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is quite able to take care of himself, I think; at least I will give him no assistance. But the Senator takes pleasure in associating me with him and making certain comments, and I will ask the patience of the Senate for a few moments. He says:

There will be more time to extend the Constitution to the Filipinos in the islands if they take all the time needed to undo that nullification of the Constitution whereby their Filipinos at home have been robbed of their suffrage and their citizenship.

That is, meaning Mississippi and South Carolina. He goes on to state—

It is safe to predict that most of the votes for this substitute will come from States where consent of the governed is least practiced, where the Constitution is nullified more and more.

It is a grave accusation to make against a sovereign State of the Union that it is nullifying now the Constitution and intends to nullify it more and more, and the gravity of it should make a man consider it well before he puts it in print. As a matter of fact, without impeaching the Senator, the statement is not true. I refer him to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Williams v. Mississippi, where the court decided there was nothing in the constitution of the State that was against the Constitution of the United States.

That should be a sufficient answer to any charge of nullification. But nullification attributed to a State is as old as the Union. The idea of nullification was proclaimed in New England when the Union was but six years old. It was preached in New England from that time down to the year 1860. I have never quarreled with them for preaching the doctrine of nullification, but the statement is made and the South is placed in this apologetic attitude eternally by these assaults made upon it and called momently to make its defense, and these things are reiterated over and over again until I am tired of explaining to Senators on the other side what is the condition of things in Mississippi. I have quoted the decision of the supreme court of Mississippi and the Supreme Court of the United States over and over again, and it does not require so good a mind as that of the Senator from Maryland to know what that decision was.

He goes on to say what the vote is in Mississippi. The question is not about the vote; the question is about registration, and there are 125,000 people registered in that State. I say now that there is not in the State of Mississippi a single man who has been unconstitutionally disqualified from voting, either by the constitution of the State or the Constitution of the United States. I say there is not a provision in that constitution that bars a man to make it objectionable to the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution, and I can support that contention here against the Senator from Maryland or any other man.

It seemed, however, that it was impossible to get the Senator away from the South. It is in the nature of a hound to follow the first scent; and though the track may be crossed by a hundred other than the fugitive, yet through all the mazes of the different tracks the hound follows the first scent. So, going through the forests and jungles and the rice fields and the mountains of Samar and Luzon, he harks back to his old trail, the scent of the African, and it is impossible to miss what seems to be his stock in trade, the hope of his political preferment hereafter.

The Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Mississippi with tearful voices cry out against the small percentage of voters we begin with in the early elections in the Philippines.

I do not know that I have ever spoken with a tearful voice. I will not be positive about that, but I will be quite certain about the voice of the Senator from South Carolina. If his voice is a tearful one, then God save us from the vociferous and the explosive and the volcanic. I have been accustomed to speak with moderation. I know what I say when I speak; but it happens that my voice, whether tearful or otherwise, has not been heard upon this question; I have not alluded to it; I have not been mixed in it; I did not intend to be heard upon the question, and I do not know that I ever will be.

Now, these things might not, perhaps, be worthy of notice if they were not carefully written. When I see a man write a speech I generally think that he has written it about a dozen times. I do not know how he feels when he is doing it, as I never did anything of that sort, but certainly the most careful preparation—I am not deprecating the writing of speeches—and the utmost care are demanded sometimes in expression. I suppose the Senator from Maryland wanted to be particularly accurate in all the statements he made for fear that his veracity would be impeached, and therefore he was doubly careful and rewrote and rewrote his speech again and again, and consulting every source of information. The best orators the world ever saw wrote their speeches. Demosthenes wrote his speeches, and generally wrote them twelve times, the last time to measure the sentences and get the rhythm, the cadence, and make music of that beautiful Greek tongue. So did Cicero write his great speeches, except those tremendous harrangues against Catiline, which were drawn out by the exigencies of the moment.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I wanted to know if the Senator from Mississippi intended to compare the Senator from Maryland to Demosthenes. If that is so, I intended to call him to order.

Mr. MONEY. I did not intend to compare him with anybody. I only instanced a fact.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The Senator from Tennessee desires to have that comparison applied to himself.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly; apply it all around. I am told that Daniel Webster wrote his great speeches very carefully and then dismissed them and spoke them as he remembered them. One of the greatest Southern orators—Mr. Lamar—wrote his speeches and studied them carefully and threw them away and repeated them. I have had the pleasure of having three or four of his speeches rehearsed to me long before he made them. I did not say the Senator was not at perfect liberty to write a speech, and I do not say it is not a good practice, but I do say that when a man takes the deliberate care that is involved in writing a speech he should be exceedingly accurate in his statements, but there must be a latitude allowed to a man who speaks simply upon the spur of the moment and spontaneously, and therefore there is liberty to change his remarks if he finds he has been mistaken in any point.

Well, the Senator goes on to accuse me of hypocrisy and effrontery:

Never until the past three years was there such effrontery of hypocrisy. We behold Senators from the two States where there is less popular liberty than in any others shouting loudest for constitutional liberty on the other side of the globe.

There is another mistake, if I may be allowed to use as mild a word as that, upon the part of the Senator from Maryland. I have not been doing any of that kind of shouting. On the contrary, in every remark I have made upon this floor (and I have spoken more than once upon the Philippine question) I have said distinctly that I spoke from an American point of view; that I spoke in behalf of the American people and American institutions; and that I cared nothing what the fate of the other man was except as I sympathized with any people, however savage, in their struggle for national independence. But I said also that wherever the American flag waved I wanted its foes to fall before it. I am no more concerned about the fate of the Philippines than is the Senator from Maryland about the fate of the negroes. He cares just as little for them as I care for the Filipinos, and he cares as little for the Filipinos as he does for anybody else.

Now, here is a novel idea from the Senator:

If the Filipinos upon an island have such inherent right to take our territory for such experiment, upon the demand of its inhabitants, each State at home, each Territory at home, has the right to demand independence.

I would be glad to believe that that was intended in a sort of Pickwickian sense, for I do not see how any Senator with ordinary information, especially a man of the good mind of the Senator from Maryland, could have used such terms as this, that they are trying to take our territory away from us in order to make an experiment in self-government. Why, the Republican party passed a resolution here the day they ratified the treaty, in which they declared that these people should never become citizens of the United States and their land should never become the territory of the United States, an integral part, at least, of the territory of the United States; and here we talk about our sailing seven or eight thousand miles to a people who are the autochthons of that country, so far as we are informed, and that they are trying to take away from us our territory in order that they might try the experiment of free government and independent government.

I have said over and over again here that I do not believe the mind of the Philippine people could conceive a republican government like ours. I am still in that belief. I said also, and I want the attention of the Senate to that point, that when the officers of the Army reported what they did about the Filipinos, I believed them, because our officers were honorable men and they would not tell lies. That is what I said, and I said, taking them at what they say, and they know better than we do, the sooner we cut loose from such a people the better for the people of the United States, both in its exchequer and in its character.

The contamination of association is inevitable. I recollect, while I am in reminiscence now, that when I spoke upon the Spanish treaty I predicted the very things that have followed. I said we would lay the bones of thousands of our best men upon the island of Luzon and in the archipelago. I said we would have the plunder of carpetbag government and the hard rule of military government. It is not a weakness or an infirmity or a vice of the American people. The American people are a humane people; they are a brave people; they are a people capable of self-government in the highest conception of what that government means and all that it implies. They are that more than any other people I know of on the face of the globe. Yet it is the weakness of human nature that when you unite, as I said then—I am quoting my language as near as I can recollect it—when you unite irresponsibility with power you must have a condition of things of which this country ought to be ashamed and will be ashamed. So far as I know, that prediction has been in some measure fulfilled and it is going on in fulfillment.

Now, we have the spectacle of a country that was acquired in the exercise of the laws of war, suitable to the occasion, as I will admit, in the exercise of the laws of war, where our armies have been compelled to burn cities and towns, burn men, women, and children at the doors, and kill the people. That has been, you may say, one of the necessities of the military situation. This is what I do not want. This is what I foresaw. This is what I predicted; and this is what I would have saved the American people from; and I say the end is not yet.

Taking it for true that General Smith issued that order, and there does not seem to be any doubt about it except in the mind of my friend from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], think of the condition we have voluntarily placed upon ourselves, the necessity for killing people, whether at war or peace, above the age of 10 years. To make that order ridiculous, which if it is true is cruel and hard, we have letters published in the press from people who profess to know about the Philippines, in which they say that the Philippine boy about 11 years is the most terrible fighter on earth. One man went down to 8 years of age, and said what a magnificent fellow he was with a bolo; that he would just like to chop up an American soldier on sight; and we all say that the men are cowards and can not fight, but that 10-year-old boys are savage and ferocious to the last degree. This is making an opera bouffe of the whole business. Here comes in General Bum, as in the Grand Duchesse, to play the funny part as a counterpart to this order of General Smith. These terrible Filipino boys of 8 are so to be dreaded that they are to be killed as soon as they get to the age of 10. I do not believe there is a Senator in this Chamber—I have too much respect for every single one of them to believe it—who will in his heart indorse the order of General Smith, if it is true as reported by cablegram.

I was glad to hear the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] say the other day that his heart revolted at such an order. It would be well for Senators to recollect before they enter into this defense or quasi defense they are making, whether true or not, that they must not allow themselves to be made a part and parcel of this bloody scheme of vengeance. We know there are reprisals in war. We know that sometimes we treat savages with savage methods. But when it comes to a plan of campaign I want to say what we hear on both sides of the Chamber about excesses in times of war has no bearing upon this question at all. The excess of Alva in the Low Countries and the Austrian Haynau in Hungary and the destruction of whole tribes by the Romans, or anything else that you can adduce besides religious persecutions of their own people, have nothing to do with the case whatever. You can not make an army without having brutes and thieves and criminals and fiends in it.

You must have some that are hard hearted and callous, ready to plunder and rob and to murder if need be, and we do not expect any country on earth to be free of these things. But I want to say when it comes down to issuing a plan of campaign the letter of general instruction by which subordinates are to be guided and directed and instructed, which orders they are bound to obey, then when it comes to order the wholesale destruction of people of 10 years of age it has rarely been witnessed, and thank God the pages of human history show few counterparts to any such order.

I hope from the bottom of my heart that there is some mistake about this matter. I hope it will turn out in the end that the whole thing is just such a fake as the Senator has explained in the massacre of 1,200 people, which I did not believe when I saw it in the papers. I did not believe it at first to be true, but as it is to-day the order comes to us so well substantiated that it would be well for both sides to wait to hear what the truth is about that order, and when it is ascertained, when the War Department receives the news authentically, I do not believe there is any Senator in this Chamber who will rise to defend it. I do not believe there is one who can sympathize a moment with it.

Now, it is the disposition of people at home to be humane. The excitement of battle, the joy of combat, as the Latin had it, or still better as Walter Scott had it, the rapture of fight takes men clean off their bearings and leads to wild excesses that they themselves are afterwards ashamed of, when—

> The war's wild blast has blown,
> And gentle peace returned.

Men do not sit at home after their campaign surrounded by their peaceful families and look back with pleasure upon the excesses they themselves have committed in war. They think with pleasure only when they succored the wounded and helpless and never of the time when they exercised an arbitrary brute force in order to inflict injury or death. The people of this country are a humane people. We are, as described by the Senator from Tennessee, an arrogant people, a people confident of ourselves, proud of our power of sustained purpose and our energy, proud of that principle which makes us capable of self-government and has made us so from our forefathers in the forests of Germany.

Now, Mr. President, I did not intend to go so far as this, but I must say another word about Mississippi. I want to ask a question now deliberately and I want a candid answer. We have made a constitution which does not, as I said, disqualify any man in the world contrary to the Constitution of the United States, and as a matter of fact there has not been in the execution of that constitution any law or any act at the polls of an executive officer which has been contrary to the Constitution of the United States. The most jealous scrutiny has been exercised upon the State of Mississippi since that constitution was adopted in order to find if possible a weak part in her armor in which the lance of her assailant might penetrate, and it has been futile.

We have there, according to the census, about 270,000 adult men. One hundred and twenty-five thousand are registered. I have in my office sheet after sheet, in one county over 3,000 names, of people who did not pay the poll tax, and therefore they were disqualified from any right they might have, and I say a man who will not pay a poll tax is not entitled to vote. It is good sense. It is good reason. It is a sound basic proposition for the suffrage.

Now, Mr. President, suppose that they all had registered and that they all had voted. There are in Mississippi a majority of 40,000 or 50,000 adult black people over white people. Would the Senator from Maryland, with his views of civilization, of Christianity, of education, of responsibility for good order in government, be willing to see every one of those men vote and to turn out every white man in this House and in the other? Would he be willing to see every office, from the governor down to the constable of the beat, filled by the black race? Would he be willing to see the institutions of that great State, its property, its education, its religion, turned over to the black race?

Are they the people he and posterity will hold responsible for good order there? Will any Senator say that he would have the Anglo-Saxon subdued to the power of the inferior race because of numerical superiority? When that people attempt to interpose a peaceful, legal, and constitutional inhibition against the qualification and characterization of the colored race and not against him, do you say that we have not the right to do it? I ask any man to show me a complaint made of an election in Mississippi since that constitution went into operation or before. I was seven times elected to the House and twice to this body, and nobody has ever yet raised a single complaint that at any time, at any polling place, there was an illegal vote cast or counted, or that there was any violence at any poll. My right to a seat here has never yet been contested by anybody.

Then what is the use, unless it is to stir up partisan feeling, to inflame sectional hatred and advance a partisan policy, to continually revert to the condition of things in the South, and to inject them into a debate that concerns a people 10,000 miles away? I ask what good can result from this, and what is to be the advantage to be expected? Are we to surrender Mississippi and South Carolina? These are the two States that have been assaulted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] so unjustly here. Are we to surrender our heritage and our birthright and to permit ourselves to be governed by an inferior race? What is good for those two States is good for forty-five States, and it is just as well, if Mississippi is to be represented here by a black man, that every Senator here should be a black man.

This talk about a skin government and skin society is all rot. There is not any sense in it; there is not any philosophy in it. It is not that a man is discriminated against or a race is discriminated against, but we know that a black skin is a badge of inferiority, and there is not a man in this Senate who does not know that and acknowledge it.

While Africa, according to Sir Rhoderick Murchison, is the oldest continent in the world, and they have had their own way there, yet they never have arrived at the dignity of a legislative council. It has been the rule of the strongest arm with the heaviest club. The white man never made them slaves, but the African chieftains themselves sold them to white men—white men more wicked than they. That was not the fault of the men who owned them in the South, however, for it happened that the slave trade was carried on by the natives, and carried on by men of New England, who derived enormous gain from it, and the most notorious and successful slave ship that ever sailed from an American port was a ship that was owned by what the biographers say were the leading commercial and social people of the town, and a man who was a captain of a slaver was made a Senator of the United States from the State of Rhode Island.

We are dealing with this problem, gentlemen, as God has brought it to us. We are dealing with it not only solemnly and seriously, but prayerfully. It concerns us a thousand times more than it does you men living north of Mason and Dixon's line. It is to us the whole world. Your foreign policy, your tariff policy, your fiscal policy are to us as dust in the balance compared with the one question whether the white man is to rule or the negro is to rule in the South; and this continual reference to this matter, I do not care who the Senator may be here, does not, in my mind, give evidence of the spirit that is tolerant of civilization, of Christianity, of good government, or of good order in society.

The negro has not a warmer friend in this country than I am. I was born on a cotton plantation and I was nursed at the breast of a black mammy, who afterwards died on my plantation, cared for as she had never been before in her life. I looked always with affection upon those employed about me. I never mistreated a single one of them, and none of them will ever lodge a complaint against me; but this does not prevent me from saying, as an intelligent human being, that it will not do for this Government to rest for a part of its foundation upon so unstable an element. It is like a quicksand. It will liquefy the very solid foundations of this Government if your substratum is that.

They are here, and their being here can not be prevented. We must deal with them as wisely and as humanely as we can; and we are trying, with all our might and main, to do that thing; but continually somebody abroad, not involved in the real horror of the situation, throws obstacles in our way, accuses us of oppression, and accuses us of having adopted a constitution which disfranchises them. It is not true. There is nothing of the kind there, though we are denounced. Why do not gentlemen inform themselves and not come in here and make such accusations as were made here the other day by the very genial, accomplished, and distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], without any knowledge whatever of what he was talking about, all sorts of machinery invented in his own mind, or taken from some newspaper, or from a dim recollection of what he had seen in some newspaper report.

I ought not to talk so long on that subject, and I beg pardon of the Senate for having done so; but I have been unwillingly dragged into a discussion of that matter because I owe a duty to the people who sent me here to speak when their honor is assailed—when it has been assailed without provocation, when I have not participated in this debate, when I have not yet uttered a single word concerning the right of suffrage in the Philippines, and have never expressed a wish that was contrary to the success of the American Army, but, on the contrary, speaking always with respect of the American Army. I have put myself in the attitude of endeavoring to bring about a compromise between the two parties, because I said neither one of their plans suited me.

I made a speech when the other bill was pending, the bill of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], I believe, which we settled some time ago, when I did animadvert upon the relations we are to enjoy politically with these people. But if all these things are true that are reported, if the things that are admitted by the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are true, then I want to ask you what is the compensation for holding on to the Philippine Islands?

We have seen the expense in the last four years of the Army and Navy mount from scores up to hundreds of millions of dollars. We see what it is this year, and we do not know that it is going to decrease soon. On the contrary, if we are wise we will increase our Navy, and we will necessarily be compelled to do so if we use any wisdom or precaution. To think, after having projected ourselves into the future storm center of the commercial world, that we are going to escape its accidents is beyond the lunacy of hope. So we have got to be prepared to meet them, and I do not see how you can diminish your Army or reduce your Navy; but, on the contrary, I see every reason why wise government should increase both if you intend to persist in this policy in the Philippine Islands.

I do not want all that added to the burden of the working people of this country. I do not want an occupation of those distant islands, that is indurating the character of the good soldiers that we send over there, even such good men as poor old Smith. I understand that he himself was compelled by circumstances to issue an order to which his whole soul must have been repugnant. Have we arrived at the bottom? No; for below the lowest depth there is a lower deep, and we are going down; facilis descensus Averni.

I am not talking from a party standpoint; I am not talking from a political standpoint, nor have I ever done so upon this question; but I am talking because I love my country, because I love humanity, and because I love liberty in the abstract as well as in the concrete as applied to myself and to my own motions.

For that reason I would implore the American Congress and the American people to consider the situation in which we are involved and to get out of it. Whether we will get out of it honorably is not the question at all. We can get out of it, because we are so mighty we can do anything we choose. A weak people might consider the loss of prestige; but not so the American Government. The Government of the United States has so preeminent a position before the whole world that it can dare do right, and it is so rich and so abundant in all its commercial blessings that it can afford to be generous.

When we consider these questions we must think about ourselves and about what the effect of these things must be in the reflex action upon ourselves. The dyer's hand is dyed with that in which he works. Rome had no gladiatorial combats until it became a great subjugating power; then the Romans grew hardened, until nothing but the spilling of blood could furnish a Romau holiday.

In every nation in the world, while war brings out manly qualities and great qualities—devotion to country and self-abnegation—yet, when it is persisted in against a weak country in a cause not entirely just the effect may be extermination of the one and the degradation of the other.

Mr. President, the questions in the bill as it stands I had not intended to speak upon to-day at all, but if this debate continues I think I shall. I have been suggesting to myself some things as the discussion has proceeded here which I expect to say. I have now only consumed a few minutes, for I am not able to speak longer. I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate at some other time to continue these remarks.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, I propose to occupy but a few minutes——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator yield to me just to give a notice?

Mr. MCCOMAS. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire at some time during this debate to make some remarks on this question. I understand there are some other Senators who desire to speak to-morrow and the next day. I therefore take advantage of this opportunity to give notice that at the close of the morning business on Monday next, with the indulgence of the Senate, I shall then make some remarks on this bill.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, it is true, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] has said, that we served together for years in the House of Representatives, as we serve here now, and that there is no reason, and there shall not be cause, to change those pleasant relations.

He omitted to read a part of my speech, which speech was not written twelve times, but only a few hours before my remarks were submitted to the Senate. My honored friend Senator BERRY, from Arkansas, called my attention to an error in my statement that most of the Democratic Senators had voted to ratify the treaty, when I had orally said some had so voted, and I made the correction. Because of that printed inaccuracy the Senator from Mississippi has repeated that statement.

The Senator complains that I made reference to his voice as "tearful." On this occasion, after having heard the Senator from Mississippi, I am prepared to withdraw the expression and to substitute for it any other which may be agreeable to him—cheerful, animated, bright, bird-like, or any other phrase.

I certainly had no motive in using the word "tearful" except to say that when he once complained about Filipino people being governed without their consent in perhaps a lugubrious tone, he did not mention the other Filipinos in Mississippi, the half of the people who are there governed without their consent.

I wish the Senator had read enough of my remarks to learn that I said—and I think I repeated it—that I had not yet heard any Senator who had been a soldier, any Senator who had worn the gray or who had worn the blue, rise in his place and rail at the American Army.

The Senator from Mississippi was a Confederate soldier. He discussed this Philippine government question on the Philippine tariff bill, on the substitute of the minority, which was not germane; but the Senator did discuss this question, and I say to his credit, he did not rail at the Army, and my remarks still hold good.

He was a Confederate soldier, and I have not yet heard a Confederate soldier, including the Senator from Mississippi, rise here in his place and rail at the American Army. I wish the Senator had read that remark in my speech.

Another thing. I thought the Senator might find he erred in his statement when he complained that I said he used, in speaking of the Filipinos, the phrase, "Let them go to the devil;" and thereupon I remarked that that was not constructive statesmanship. The speech of the Senator shows that he is not now proud of that phrase in his speech and is ready to agree with me that to let the Filipinos "go to the devil" is not constructive statesmanship. It is too easy.

I heard him make the remark and I heard the Senator from Ohio call his attention to it. The Senator states that, upon reflection, when he came to write the speech that he made a change and struck out the phrase which I had heard. I will say to the Senator that while it occurs frequently that I hear his remarks with pleasure, I do not always afterwards read in the RECORD what he has said. I only hear what he has said. It may be that the distinguished Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will excuse me, I never see the stenographer's notes until printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and not always then; but after my speech was reported I said to the stenographer that I thought the expression was a little harsh and that it had better be omitted. I do not wish the Senator to understand that I feel that it is an important point in etiquette or against good manners, but I did not care to have that language printed in my speech.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I accept what the Senator says now as to the notes of the stenographer. If I had known that, I should have been very well satisfied and left it out myself; but now, because the Senator thinks he should withdraw his remark as to the Ishmaelite, "Let him go to the devil," that it is not applicable to this discussion, certainly on his suggestion I withdraw it. Let us unite in trying to prevent the Filipino from going that way.

I meant no personal reflection upon the Senator from Mississippi, but I can not withdraw some facts of the census which I presented. I did say in that same connection that the Senator's State had only cast a vote of 3.8 per cent of the total population of that State. I remembered the remark of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] about the small per cent who were to vote in the archipelago under elections held by the Commission. This I could prove to the Senator from Mississippi if I could now take the time to do so.

In the discussion on the first Philippine bill following the remarks of the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], who complained that only 5 per cent of the people of the Philippine Islands could vote, or were allowed to vote, and that it was a monstrous thing to support a government with but 5 per cent of the people allowed to vote, I think I can say to the Senator from Mississippi, and I am not in error in saying it, that he then expressed concurrence with the Senator from Colorado and objected to a government with such a limited suffrage as that. Such objection came with ill grace from that quarter.

I repeat, it is startling to observe that after one hundred and eleven years under the Constitution of a popular government, after more than a century, there are States in this Union where of the whole population in the last election for President not more than 3.8 per cent of the population, where we have established a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, a government by the governed, with their own consent—that not more than 3.8 per cent in the two great Commonwealths of South Carolina and Mississippi voted for President in the year 1900.

I will add to those figures these: That in the State of South Carolina by the present census there are found to be 130,375 white males of voting age and 152,860 negro males of voting age, and yet in that election, where the consent of the governed was taken away, only 50,815, not one-fifth of the population of voting age, voted.

Now, I am not going to say unkindly what I do say, but this is a fact, and I will ask, What does it mean? It does mean much, but I do not stop now to comment upon it. In Mississippi, from the census taken in June of the year before last, it appears that there are 150,530 white males of voting age and 197,936 negro males of voting age, and yet in the last election, which was one of the most momentous and important which has ever occurred in this country, in the election for Chief Magistrate, there were returned but 59,103 votes as having been cast in that State.

My argument was not intended to stir up the negro question, but to point the contrast, an inquiry as to what weight should be given to the complaint of Senators from States where the suffrage was only a vestige of popular government, and yet such Senators were eager for government by consent of the governed among our antipodes, when only 3.8 per cent of the whole population at the end of that century are voting in two States of this country. What becomes of the desire of Senators that all men should be governed by their consent, and that no man is good enough to govern another? The condition at home provoked me to speak of this disparity.

I assume the Senator from Mississippi thinks himself sincere in his opinions, but it is impossible, with my habit of thought, to think that a man finding at home such scant suffrage should think 5 per cent of voters to population was such a bad beginning in the Philippines. What say you of our American Filipinos, if you have such uncommon anxiety lest only 5 per cent might be given the right to vote when we begin a civil government over in the Philippines?

Mr. President, I can not therefore withdraw the facts; I can not withdraw the statistics; I can not unsay my comment. The Senator has stated that this is not nullification under our Constitution. He has stated that the Supreme Court has decided the matter, and he has referred to the Williams case.

The Senator is a good lawyer and a very careful man. If he has not already found out, I will undertake to have him agree with me that in the Williams case the point was an inartificial and defective statement of the cause of action and a demurrer thereto, and the court held that the pleading only alleged difficulties that might occur under—not an allegation of the actual or necessary operation of the constitution of Mississippi—which thereby would violate the Federal Constitution, and in conclusion the learned Justice McKenna, in delivering the opinion, said "when it appeared that the constitution of a State in respect of its being in violation of the fifteenth amendment, when it appeared that it was in its operation a violation or that the law was administered with an evil eye and an unequal hand in its operation, then the court would pass on the question of the constitutionality of the Mississippi plan.

And there has been no decision whatever on that point. The time will come when that question, in proper form, will come up to be heard by that great tribunal, and it will decide whether or not these provisions, which take away from the governed the consent of the governed given them under the Constitution of the United States, are in the very teeth of that instrument which forbid such discrimination on account of race or color.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCCOMAS. Certainly; I yield to a question.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. What provision of the constitution of Mississippi is it that takes away the right of any citizen to vote?

Mr. MCCOMAS. At another time, Mr. President, if the Senator shall desire to put that question, I shall be glad to answer it. It is now half past 5 o'clock, and I will not go so far afield as Mississippi. I had rather proceed with the matter before us now.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. It will take but a moment for the Senator to refer to the section of the constitution of Mississippi.

Mr. MCCOMAS. It will take but a moment, but I will take the right moment to do it on another occasion.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. With the Senator's permission, I thought, inasmuch as he was referring to a provision of the constitution of Mississippi, that he had it in his mind and could refer to the section at once.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I have not the constitution of Mississippi in my vest pocket. If I carry a book, I try to carry a better volume than that. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I myself was born and raised in a former slave State. I know the colored race. I, too, was nursed in my early childhood by a black mammy. I know the affections that arise in such cases, and I know they exist in the heart of the Senator from Mississippi.

But, Mr. President, that question is too wide for this time in the evening. I think Senators are almost too sensitive when they endeavor to dissociate their local Filipinos from the like problem elsewhere respecting dark-skinned people.

The problems are grave enough, God knows. I know they are grave and difficult, but I think the very people who are not solving with any success like Filipino problems at home in their own States should not be the first to rail at us who endeavor manfully to meet the problems in the Philippine Islands.

This country is united. What I have said is not sectional and is not meant to stir up sectional feeling or any rancor in the heart. I myself number and am proud to number among my friends and intimates, my relatives and companions, a great many gallant Confederate soldiers. I know many of them who are full of hope for our country in the expansion of our commerce and confident we must win credit and advantage in this new experiment across the seas. Many of the strongest and most earnest expansionists I know are among Confederate soldiers.

We speak of the States. I love my State, which has honored me, as the Senator loves the State of Mississippi. My kindred and my forebears for nearly two centuries have dwelt there. I love my State, but I love my country. I love to speak of my country. I take no pleasure in making unkind remarks in respect of States. But it is all our country—the men who wore the blue and the men who wore the gray. When a man rises here to defend the sons and nephews and the brothers of the old Confederate and Union soldiers, shall he be told, when he says war is cruel, that he is reflecting upon some State?

I want to see some other rule of order here. I have heard men on this floor, as we have all heard them, when they are sensitive with respect to a single State, not sensitive in respect of the Union of all the States. Why should men here with bated breath speak about one State and then freely revile the 45 States—the Government of the United States.

Is it a rule of debate here that a man should bate his breath in criticising a State and yet be free, as an American Senator on this floor, to defame the American Army, defame the American Navy, traduce the American Executive, say that the Senate and the House are engaged in plunder and exploitation; that there is no good motive in the legislative and the Executive Departments; that the Government is going to destruction?

I think if there is reason why a Senator should not speak ill here of one of the 45 States, we have 45 reasons why he should not traduce the United States of America and should speak respectfully of the Government of the whole country and of all the States.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield.

Mr. PETTUS. I simply desire to ask the Senator a question. He says we are now a united people. Does the Senator think it contributes anything to the Union to speak in this way with regard to a State in the Union about which he knows nothing except from what he reads in the papers and books? Does the Senator think it is the part of patriotism to try to tear us apart? We have been living as an inferior race; but we are Saxons, and we can not always live in that way. I merely call the attention of the Senator to the question whether he thinks it contributes to the Union to abuse a State or any part of the Union?

Mr. McCOMAS. The honored Senator from Alabama knows that I do not want to abuse a State. I am sure the Senator from Alabama does not desire that men on this floor with commissions from States should spend hours and days in the vilification and abuse of all the States, the great and glorious Union to which we belong.

Mr. President, I believe the time will come when Senators who will look carefully into this question will find that the idea of carrying the proposition of the consent of the governed to other parts of our possessions had better be left, with some patience and humility, to the brave, honest, and true men who are trying to work it out, and not to hamper them, not to decry them, not to suspect them.

I have listened with amazement to Senators who, having had the benefit of the testimony taken in the Committee on the Philippines, have cited none of the good things which in hundreds of pages are shown, of the achievements of our administration there, none of which have been repeated or commented on or applauded on this floor. But the little and the cruel things, or the iteration of the same cruel things, are brought here to blot and blur the picture of the splendid success we are there making.

The day will come by and by when Senators who are now timid, and who in their timidity are carping and criticising, will look upon the splendid work of our American administrators in the Philippines and they will wonder how it was that with their blind and perturbed vision they could not have seen clearly the good of their country, nor had hope for its future, nor reliance in the justness, the integrity, the humanity of that Anglo-Saxon race to which we belong.

At this late hour I will make no further reply to the observations of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MONEY. I think I am entitled to say a word or two after the speech of the Senator from Maryland. I can go on to-morrow if the Senator from Massachusetts prefers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion?

Mr. MONEY. It will take but a moment.

Mr. LODGE. If the debate is to go on I will withdraw it.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I merely rise to say that I am very much gratified at what the Senator from Maryland has said about his intentions in the matter of his speech and of his feeling toward me, and also to mention the fact that I have not asked him to withdraw anything, and I never would ask him to withdraw a fact. The figures he states may be absolutely correct for all I know. I have not questioned them or asked him to withdraw them.

I have explained to the Senate more than once the reason for the small vote polled in the State of Mississippi. I explained it in such a manner that it is impossible for anyone who did me the honor to listen to attribute it to anything but the indifference of a great many voters. The registered vote is 125,000. The voters do not choose to go to the polls, but they go to the primaries. There is no contest in the State. If there was as little contest between political parties in the State of Maryland as there is in the State of Mississippi the Senator would find that the vote at the ratification by the people at the polls would be just about as small as it is in the State of Mississippi. That is all I desire to say.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 9, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 8, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MEMBER OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee assignment:

Member of Committee on Appropriations—Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12543, the statehood bill, and pending that motion, after consultation with all members who are interested in this matter, I ask unanimous consent that unless general debate be sooner concluded in Committee of the Whole that it end at 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12543, the statehood bill——

Mr. BARTLETT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to withhold his motion for a moment that I may prefer a request about a matter not connected with this.

Mr. KNOX. Very well.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the minority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency have until to-morrow to file their views on the bill H. R. 13363, known as the Fowler bill, and in doing so I would state that this is prefectly agreeable to the chairman of the committee and to the majority members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the minority may have until to-morrow to file their views on what is known as the Fowler bill, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Pending the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, he asks unanimous consent that, unless sooner closed, general debate be closed to-day at 3 o'clock. Is there objection to this request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12543—the statehood bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12543, with Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair.

ADMISSION OF OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO AS STATES.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, but little remains to be said in support of this measure after the favorable presentation by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] and by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY]. Perhaps it ought not to be said that gentlemen are pledged to support this measure merely because their party platforms declare for the admission of these Territories as States in the Union, for it is possible that in the minds of some gentlemen conditions may have arisen which would justify them in the violation of the pledge made by their party in convention to the people of the United States. If, however, under a sound policy, if in common justice, the constitutional right to admission exists, then this House ought not to hesitate to exercise that discretion which is conferred by the Constitution and the law for the admission of these Territories.

Is there any sound policy that would deny their admission? Are the people of these Territories unlike the people of the States? Do they adhere to any doctrines in government that are in opposition to the principles of republican government? Is the Territory not sufficient in area to make a State? Is the population not sufficient to constitute a State? Are the resources of the country insufficient to support a State government? If so, then this House ought to exercise its judgment in opposition to their admission. If, however, these questions may be answered favorably to the Territories, it is the duty of this House to exercise that discretion which the law confers upon it and admit the Territories. As a matter of justice, taking into consideration the conditions that existed when six of the original States that formed the Union were made a part of it, and when twenty-six of the States that have been since admitted were admitted, it would seem that there ought not to be any hesitancy on the question of their admission; but, sir, the people of the Territories demand admission to the Union upon higher and broader grounds than mere public policy.

I assert, fearing not that it will be contradicted by any lawyer on this floor, that the moral right to admission exists now, and that the denial of admission is a denial of a right perfected under the Constitution. It has been determined by the court of last resort in the United States that when territory is acquired by the Union it is acquired with the ultimate purpose of statehood; that it is clothed with the inchoate right of statehood; that Congress alone has the right and the power to determine when the territory so acquired is fitted for statehood. This is a discretion that can not be overruled by any other power. It is vested in Congress alone. Yet it is not a mere arbitrary discretion; it is a semi-judicial, it is a legislative discretion which Congress is called upon to exercise when the conditions are such as to fit the Territory for statehood.

The facts, therefore, must be such as to invoke this legislative discretion in wisdom and in justice, and not arbitrarily. Hence, if the Territories are numerically sufficient in population; if the resources are sufficient; if they are imbued with the principles of republican government; if they desire admission, then the inchoate right which passed to the Territory at the moment of its acquisition has become completed under the law, and the right of admission is a clear constitutional right which the Congress can not deny without impugning its integrity and exercising the highest order of tyranny which any legislative body can exercise; for when a power is vested in a legislative body to be exercised in judgment and in justice, and that power is exercised arbitrarily, it is the most grievous form of public tyranny.

I will not review the facts, for they are supposed to be in the possession of every member in this House, having been so admirably and tersely stated in the report of the Committee on Territories, and clearly demonstrate the fitness of the Territories for States. Arizona, Oklahoma, and New Mexico are standing to-day at the bar of the American Congress with clasped hands. They come clad in the robes of organized American Territories, the indicia of political bondage. United in one petition, they ask at your hands the scepter of local self-government, the crown of sovereignty, and the robes of statehood. Who are they? Whence do they come? They are not strangers to your shores, they are not strangers to your institutions, but nearly a million of American citizens, they rest on the bosom of the most fertile portion of the great American domain, rich in resources and magnificent in area. They have performed all the obligations which the law imposes upon them; they ask you to exercise that judgment and discretion which the law imposes upon you.

They come with neither armies nor navies nor other insignia of power, but a brave and virtuous citizenship, all that constitutes a great State. In the name of the Federal Constitution, which they have so long obeyed, they now ask its vindication. Under the shadow of that flag they have so long followed as the emblem of their country's justice and power, they have come to kneel at the altar of American liberty and as free States swear eternal allegiance to the Republic. [Applause.] What patriot will deny this privilege? What partisan is here to protest? Go fix their stars on the flag of the Union, and God grant that in the ages to come they shall burn as brightly as on their natal day, the symbols of States still sovereign, still free, undimmed by the glare and the glitter of imperial power. [Prolonged applause.]

And when they have taken their vows, that they may not depart from the paths of truth and freedom, teach them that liberty is not license, but consists in the power of doing that which just and constitutional laws permit. Tell them the sad but ever beautiful, glorious, and inspiring story of the march of their elder sisters from the night of despotism into the light of day. Warn them of all the dangers that beset the journey. Let them know that devotion to the principles of the Declaration of Independence and obedience to the Constitution is the only hope of the political salvation of the States and of the perpetuity of the Republic; that the Republic itself rests on the rock of the Constitution, and if you shatter not the Constitution the Republic can never fall.

Let them know that the greatest enemy to the Union is the unbroken and unbridled spirit of party partisanship, overriding justice in her tribunals, destroying freedom of speech in the legislative halls, and usurping power for the Executive; that profligacy and corruption are the children of intolerant party spirit; that no government can be purer than the people that sustain it; and that no corrupt people can long sustain a free government. Caution them that inequality in taxation, injustice in administration, legislation for the advancement of special interests, and the unauthorized assumption of power as the very essence of corruption are the potent powers in the destruction of free states.

And, Mr. Speaker, when they take their stand among the great Commonwealths that constitute this Union and look back upon its struggles, its tribulations, and its perils, let no page of that history discourage them, though upon it may be written in blood the infraction of individual rights and the desecration of Commonwealths, for these are but the cruel markers of the progress of a people's national growth, the index to the evolution of government. Let them understand that the high tide of danger can not come to American institutions until the limit of Federal power has been reached and exhausted, and the Government shall be still powerless to contend against the great and gigantic corporations that have grown beyond the control of law, and when it shall assume to itself inherent powers of sovereignty and no longer look to the Constitution as the source of power. Then, Mr. Speaker, and not till then, an imperial democracy may lift the crown of sovereignty from the people and place it upon the head of their tyrant, who in turn will deliver it to the people's oppressors.

If we shall avoid the approaching dangers—if we shall forever defend and protect those principles of free government for which brave men have ever contended—I warn you that the Federal Goverment must be strengthened by Constitutional amendment to the end that no power may exist within the confines of the Union that is greater than the Union itself; that every power under the Federal Constitution must be exercised to its full limit in the protection of the masses of the people; that all men at last may salute the flag, obey the Constitution, and move forward the march of the States in one great Union to that destiny that awaits them in a mighty Republic, where truth, justice, and law triumphs, and liberty like day breaks on the soul, and by a flash from heaven fires all the faculties with glorious joy. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I find myself in a somewhat anomalous condition; willing to support some portions of this measure and unwilling to support the balance. Therefore I find myself now constrained to refuse to support this bill as it has been reported to the House by the Committee on Territories. Doubtless it was apparent to the Committee on Territories that somewhere in this bill there is a weak spot, else there would have been no occasion for the massing together of Territories stretching almost from British America to the Torrid Zone in one grand combination seeking votes for a measure which could not have received the votes of this House if submitted upon separate propositions.

I am aware that logrolling is an incident to modern legislation. I want to describe one of the old logrolling occasions of the frontier days of my boyhood, and show the House of Representatives that there is nothing new; that this measure has all the elements of the old-time raising or logrolling or grubbing bee. It was too big a job for the farmer and his boys to roll the logs on a given piece of clearing in the springtime, and he did not have any hired man, and there were a number of other neighbors in the vicinity in the same boat. They, too, had logs to roll, and they had too weak a force of their own to undertake the enterprise; and the result of it was all made a logrolling, and in that way the logs of neighbor A were disposed of on one occasion, B on another, and so on down to the end of the list. I find that these occasions have perpetuated themselves in more ways than one in this bill which we have before us. Some neighbors were too lazy or too shiftless to deserve any help, and yet if they could get in and could get themselves attached to the combination they could get their logs rolled in some way; and we find here suspicious circumstances that refresh my memory of the old times when the poor man—that is, poor in spirit, poor in industry, poor in everything except the genius to attach himself to somebody else—was able to get his logs rolled at the same time that the big man, the enterprising man, the industrious man got his logs rolled.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Did any of them get so mean that after they had got all their logs rolled they allowed their neighbors to do the rolling for themselves?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That depended upon circumstances.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. When they got their logs rolled they quit the business.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will show the gentleman how this occurs. It is quite important to get into the logrolling.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to hear it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to show him that this claim, as put forward by the gentleman from Massachusetts, has no shadow of foundation in the history of this country or in the logic of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know that this is not the first omnibus statehood bill presented here. I recollect one in which I participated myself, and in favor of it I made a speech, and against which I found the substantial vote of the Democratic party; and they put it upon the broad, high ground, which they had a perfect right to put it, and which has been the true ground that has controlled the action of Congress ever since the foundation of the Government; that there were political reasons incident to the introduction of new States that made the Democratic party on this floor and in the Senate opposed to the introduction of those States. Now, then, the gentleman from Massachusetts tells us that this is not a political question. I tell him that is contrary to all the history of this country; it is contrary to every step of legislation that this country has taken in this behalf ever since the foundation of this Government from the time when the thirteen original States of the Union prescribed the terms upon which the three States to which he has referred should come into the Union, and all the other States from that day to this; and I lay down the broad sweeping proposition that from the days of the introduction of Vermont first, and Tennessee second, and Ohio third, and so on to the rest, this question has been a question of politics, and no statesman of that period ever hesitated boldly to put forward the proposition that he opposed or supported the introduction into the Union as an argument one way or the other of what the effect would be upon the policy and politics of the Union.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman state whether there was any opposition to the admission of the State of Ohio?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know that there was.

Mr. LLOYD. You have just referred to Ohio as one upon which there was objection. There was no political objection to the admission of the State.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not made any such statement. I have said that Congress has insisted upon prescribing the terms on which these States should come into the Union.

Mr. LLOYD. And then referred to the fact that Vermont, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and Ohio were admitted under that kind of a provision.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say that now.

Mr. LLOYD. Then the gentleman's statement must have conveyed the idea that men then voted with reference to the question of admission purely on their idea of politics.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I said nothing that sounded like it. I said that Congress prescribed the terms on which the State might come into the Union, and then I said from that day down nobody had hesitated to admit that it was a question of politics.

Mr. LLOYD. If I was mistaken, I desire now that the gentleman from Ohio should state upon what terms Ohio was admitted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There were plenty of them. The enabling act was full of terms, and if the gentleman is ignorant of the fact that Congress on each occasion prescribed the exact terms upon which these States might come into the Union, I shall not deflect now and hunt up statutes that admitted the State of Ohio; but all the terms were prescribed with as much detail as we have in the bill before us.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman shows that he has not read the enabling act of his own State.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have practiced law in Ohio from the time I was admitted in 1857, and I have found the land titles of the State prescribed and defined by the act of Congress admitting the State into the Union. I have found section 16, devoted to public schools, prescribed in the act of Congress admitting the State into the Union. I have found section 29, the ministerial section, provided for in the act of Congress admitting Ohio into the Union. That is not all that happened in the case of Ohio, and in the case of Tennessee, and in the case of Vermont. After the enabling act had been passed by Congress, Congress so far supervised the functions of the new State as to pass laws, notwithstanding the ordinance of 1787, passing an enactment extending the operation of the Constitution and laws of the United States out over the Territory then divided up and of which the State of Ohio was a part, showing conclusively that the State of Ohio was not exempt, notwithstanding that Ohio stood upon very different footing, as the gentleman will find when he reads the ordinance of 1787, from any of the States of the Union except the four other sister States that were carved out of the territory northwest of the Ohio and conveyed by the act of cession.

Mr. RODEY. Does not this bill provide everything with reference to the land?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Undoubtedly it does; and that is the line of my argument, to show that Congress has the right to dictate terms on which States shall come into the Union and prescribe the land titles and gifts of land and all the other things. For instance, the case of Utah; we made prescriptive declarations in regard to her constitution, in regard to her laws, and in regard to many other things that have been omitted in many of the other States.

Mr. RODEY. I do not think anybody has denied that here.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am stating it, and it does not detract from the force of my statement whether anybody has denied it or not. My friend from New Mexico said a great many things yesterday that nobody denied.

Mr. RODEY. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Congress went so far in the case of the ordinance of 1787 as to prescribe that these States should never go out of the Union. "They shall ever remain a part of the confederation of the United States of America, subject to the articles of confederation." The ordinance of 1787 was passed prior to the adoption of the Constitution. The ordinance was passed in April, 1787, and the Constitution was adopted in September of that year.

Now, then, the argument seems to be this. I have said, however, that from the foundation of the Government down to the present time, the question of politics has invariably found itself operating upon the judgment of Congress. Before the war when the great question of slavery and free territory was the great political question of the country, when it was determined upon the part of the lovers of freedom in the Territories that Kansas and Nebraska should become States of the Union, the battle of the South was made against the introduction of these States as free States, upon the ground that it destroyed the equilibrium of political power in this country. Nobody has ever been heard before to boldly deny it. Read the works of Benton of Missouri, one of the great men of his time, and see how fearlessly he puts forward the proposition that the whole question or the great question always turns upon the question of the politics of the incoming State into the Union.

So we admitted the State of Nevada into the Union for purely political purposes. There is not a man on this floor now, not even the distinguished gentleman representing the State of Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], who will not candidly admit that the admission of Nevada was for the purpose of creating a preponderance in favor of the North side of the great question that was presented at that period when the State of Nevada was brought into the Union.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are not party politics defined in the party platform, or does not the party platform define what political principles are?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am coming to that point, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has not the admission of these Territories been supported as a matter of party policy in both the Democratic and the Republican platforms?

Mr. GROSVENOR. So have a great many other things that people pay no more attention to than the barking of a dog in the morning.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then you declare on this floor that you pay no more attention to those declarations than to the barking of a dog?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have made my declarations on this subject a great many times before. I do not allow myself to be bound by such a declaration of party policy. I will stop right here and say to the gentleman that when the chairman of the committee in the Republican convention reported those resolutions I was as near to him as I now am to the gentleman from Texas, and I do not believe there were ten men on the floor of that convention who knew that Mr. Quigg had injected any such thing as that into the platform of the Republican party at the time the platform was revised.

Mr. RODEY. But they knew it after it was read, did they not?

Mr. KNOX. Is there any substantial difference between the platform of 1900, when, you say, these resolutions were injected into the platform——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; injected.

Mr. KNOX. Is there any difference between those resolutions of 1900 and the platform of 1896, adopted four years before? Was not the same declaration injected into the platform of 1896?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, when I get to that, I will try to talk about it.

Mr. KNOX. You have got to it now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I have not. I am trying to get back to the question I was discussing in spite of gentlemen who go off into the woods and hunt up some question that has no bearing upon what I am saying, and with it try to break up my speech.

Mr. KNOX. I would not break up the gentleman's speech for the world. I want you to make your speech.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] knows as well as I know that there has been a long line of clap-trap perpetrated by both parties upon this question of home rule and the introduction of States into this Union.

Mr. KNOX. I am a humble member of the party who does not know it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do. We have been saying for the past twenty-five years that we are in favor of home rule for the Territories, and Mr. Cleveland's Administration went into power upon that basis. Yet he sent Mr. Springer and almost everybody else that wanted a position out there to the Territories, until he had filled the offices all up with nonresidents. And our party, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, is in no better historical position than is the Democratic party upon that same question.

Mr. KNOX. I think I have heard the gentleman take quite a different position sometimes in denouncing the Cleveland Administration.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not on that question.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Never. I will defy the gentleman to show it. The gentleman knows he can not find any such declaration.

Mr. KNOX. I have no doubt I can.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, "no doubt" is another thing.

Mr. KNOX. I think I can show that the gentleman has been on very many sides of very many questions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, you will always find me ready to defend any position which I take. I am not here to have any personal controversy with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KNOX. Certainly not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He has uttered a political and legal doctrine here that was bitterly opposed and denounced by Daniel Webster, and which has been opposed by every leading or distinguished Republican member of Congress, or of the judiciary, ever since the first introduction of new States into this Union. The gentleman has announced this doctrine—and I am ready to meet him upon that proposition at once—that the people of a Territory have a right to be admitted into the Union. I say there is no such thing, either in the law books or in the Constitution or in the declaration of any man on the floor of Congress, until the gentleman from Massachusetts made that declaration yesterday, nor is it in the platform of any political party, nor will it ever be repeated again except in furtherance of some measure of this character.

Now, let me read to the gentleman what jurists and statesmen of New England have said upon this identical question. Bear in mind what the particular position of the gentleman is:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I was going to ask the gentleman whether the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo did not stipulate that New Mexico should be admitted as a State?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Do you know what that treaty said? What did it say?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Did it not say that New Mexico should be made a State in the future?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No. It did not say any such thing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let the gentleman read the language of the treaty and see.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The trouble with the gentleman is that he undertakes to interrupt me and does not quite understand what he is talking about. The treaty said in substance that at a suitable or a proper time New Mexico should be admitted as a State.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not fifty years—a half a century—a proper time?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am going to show directly that that is a question for Congress. I take this position, that there is no such thing as a right, a political right—and that is what it must be, if it is anything—in the people of a Territory to demand admission into the Union of the United States, and their exclusion from admission into the United States, if done by the deliberate act of Congress, is conclusive upon all mankind, and this is in accordance with the history of the country from the foundation of this Government down to the present time.

Mr. RODEY. Will the gentleman from Ohio answer this question: Have the Territories, then, a right to secede from this Government if they are not admitted?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; they have not.

Mr. RODEY. Then they can be kept in eternal bondage, notwithstanding the treaty provision of the Louisiana purchase in the case of Oklahoma and the provision of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in the case of New Mexico and Arizona?

Mr. GROSVENOR. They can, for the Supreme Court has said so within a very brief period. It has delivered the broad, sweeping proposition that the Territories of the United States, while parts of the country—I will read just what the Supreme Court of the United States has said on this subject——

Mr. RODEY. But are you advocating the doctrine that this Government ought to shut out the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona at this time?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, I do not propose to make my speech in pieces.

Mr. RODEY. I should be glad to hear from the gentleman as to that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY] yesterday spoke away here by the hour, assailing everybody, abusing everybody, charging everybody with wrongdoing toward the Territory, and all that sort of thing, using language which I will show him has been repeated heretofore and been rebuked by one of the great Democrats of this country, and nobody interrupted him; and now I have not been talking about the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which the gentleman is trying to make me speak about, and I have not said a word about the nature of this Territorial relation to the United States, and yet the gentleman proposes to get up here and break into my speech in order apparently to disorganize my line of thought. I can tell the gentleman that he is fooling away his time. I know what I am going to say before I get through, and as I have an hour to speak in I shall use that time all up before I will be broken into in that kind of way.

Mr. RODEY. I will state to the gentleman that I have no desire to interrupt at all; all I desire to know is what he is advocating.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Here is what the Supreme Court of the United States says your Territory is, and you might as well understand it; and this identical language of the Supreme Court of the United States has been acted upon by the people of the United States from the days when they organized the Northwestern Territory and put into the Constitution the section that provided that Congress may make all needful rules and regulations for the government and disposition of Territories of the United States. Here is what the Supreme Court has recently said.

Mr. RODEY. From what does the gentleman read?

Mr. GROSVENOR. From the case of the Gem of the Orient the Philippine decision—

> The Philippines thereby ceased, in the language of the treaty, "to be Spanish." Ceasing to be Spanish, they ceased to be foreign country. They came under the complete and absolute sovereignty and dominion of the United States, and so became territory of the United States over which civil government could be established. * * * Their allegiance became due to the United States, and they became entitled to its protection.

That is the condition in which your Territory has been for fifty years, and that is the condition in which every foot of the territory of the United States stands to-day by the terms of the Constitution.

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman yield to a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. Do you not think that on account of that decision, placing the citizens of those Territories on a level with the Filipino and Porto Rican, it is time for us to emancipate them and make them American citizens? [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, the gentleman shall not drive me to discuss the relative position of the citizens of the various dependencies of the United States. I could say some things on that subject that possibly would mar the feelings of the gentleman, and I will not do it. [Laughter.] I think the Spanish language is used pretty fluently in both sections. I think I could go a great deal further and point out to the gentleman a great many things, but I am not going to do that; I will not be driven into assaults upon the Territories or their people.

That, then, is the position of the Territories of the United States. Now, says the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX], they have rights that have been violated, and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY] would have you believe that the Government of the United States has been constantly oppressing and depressing these people out there. Here is what a gentleman said, that I believe in his day has been as good a lawyer as is my friend from Massachusetts, as clear-headed a statesman, and I will not say a greater one. When the Dakota bill was before Congress a nearly solid Democratic war was made against her admission. Why? Just for one reason, and one reason alone, and that was for the same reason that there will be a solid Democratic vote for this bill to-day. That vote was given in order not to strengthen the Republican power in this Government, and this vote will be given in order to strengthen the Democratic power in this Government, and I am not criticising the Democrats on this floor. It has been done in all the history of this country, and it has always been done bravely and openly and aboveboard.

Mr. BOWIE. By all parties?

Mr. GROSVENOR. By all parties, and I glory in it. I voted for the Dakota bill and urged the passage of the Dakota bill, among other things, because in my judgment it would be a Republican State. I did it exactly as the Republican party and the Whig party together introduced the State of California without a Territorial legislature or a Territorial organization, in order that the equilibrium of political power might be sustained in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not true that in the discussion of the Dakota bill that every Democrat who spoke on the bill announced the proposition that he was decidedly in favor of the admission of Dakota, and that the members of the Republican party who expressed themselves on the floor of the House insisted on the proposition that Dakota should be divided and that there should be two States instead of one.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, and I will read you what was said at that time by a gentleman who was wide-awake and alive on that question. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] was not here and he does not remember that battle as well as I do.

Mr. Springer led the matter through, to complicate matters, and insisted on a united State, and this was said to him, and he never denied it:

> The bill having passed, Mr. Springer made a motion to amend the title, and upon that motion demanded the previous question; thereupon Mr. GROSVENOR asked unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the amendment, which was refused; thereupon debate ensuing upon the amendment to the title to the bill,
> Mr. GROSVENOR said: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to have offered what I conceive to be the true title of this bill and one that would have conveyed to the people of the United States the idea which they have already formed. My amendment is as follows:
> "An act to try to convince the people of Dakota that the Democratic party is willing that Dakota may come into the Union, but, in fact, to keep that Territory and all others which have a Republican majority out of the Union for an indefinite length of time."
> Now, Mr. Chairman, the fulsome efforts as to the magnificent Territories of the Union by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] will not deceive anybody as to what was and what is the deliberate purpose of the Democratic party on this floor. This bill to admit the Territories on this ground was reported to this House away in March last, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] and his party resisted at every step every attempt made here by the friends of Dakota to call up that bill or to assign any day for its consideration, and they went on in that way through the long session of Congress, baffling every effort that was made by this side of the House to admit Dakota into the Union of States, and that long session, which extended away past the middle of October, ended without a single effort being made by the Democrats to act upon this bill. They presented a solid front in opposition to the admission and in opposition to everything that would enable us to act on any one of the Territories. But gentlemen have heard a voice, not "as one crying in the wilderness," but it has been the voice of a magnificent uprising of the same people whom the gentleman from Illinois now so fulsomely and eloquently describes.

That was what was done precisely, and if the gentleman will wait for a moment I am going to read from a bitter speech made by a leading Democrat against the admission of any part of Dakota into the Union.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would rather not, but go ahead.

Mr. THAYER. I heard the gentleman state a moment ago that the Democratic party would vote for the admission of these three Territories because thereby they would receive an advantage from it. Is it not true that two of these Territories are represented by Republicans, and if they are made into free States the Republicans would have four Senators, while the Democrats could get but two?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman believe that statement? [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. Is it not a fact? Is it not a fact that New Mexico and Oklahoma are now represented here by Republicans on this floor at this minute?

Mr. GROSVENOR. And is the gentleman dissatisfied about it? [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. No; I am not objecting to that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And the gentleman's district, that is now represented by a Democrat, is that a Democratic district? [Laughter.] But if the gentleman will allow me to go on——

Mr. THAYER. They are pretty well satisfied.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know whether they are or not.

Mr. THAYER. There are many things the gentleman does not seem to know.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am more than evened up by the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. Will you answer that question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me read what I undertook to read some time ago. I will read it, if the Lord spares me, if it takes a couple of weeks. [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. You are imitating TILLMAN. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not with a pitchfork. [Laughter.] On that very identical question we have presented here, the right to come and demand, in the language of the gentleman from New Mexico, to come and shake your fist in the face of Congress and demand as a right, vested somewhere and by somebody, that you are to be admitted into the Union. That was the question in the Dakota case, after we had succeeded in pulling it through the House of Representatives and it got over into the Senate. I do not remember whether it was a Democratic Senate or not.

Mr. RODEY. Did the gentleman ever admit——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am going to read this paragraph.

Mr. RODEY. I desire to ask the gentleman if he will not yield to a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, go ahead.

Mr. RODEY. You will admit that the Dakotas did not have a treaty like the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, with a specific provision that they should be admitted some time?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Just as binding as the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Mr. RODEY. Where did it come from?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was inherent in their admission as one of the Territories of this Union.

Mr. RODEY. But is not the specific provision that we shall come in, and be admitted at some time—is not that something in addition to the inherent right of the Dakotas?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If you admit the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee, which I do not, in the language of Justice Taney, of the Supreme Court of the United States, that there is no power in the United States to acquire territory only for the purpose of making them States, which I, of course, do not admit, and which I deny, the gentleman has placed himself upon that, and that is the position which you must occupy before you can demand anything at the hands of Congress. You do not stand, therefore, upon any higher ground because of the difference growing out of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo than did the Territory of Dakota, which was acquired for a State. Now, if the gentleman will look at the treaty between the United States and France, under which we acquired the Louisiana purchase, he will see that the people of North Dakota and South Dakota stood upon rights quite equal in all respects with the people in New Mexico, barring the section to which you refer and to which I will come directly.

Mr. RODEY. I will state to the gentleman right here that I do not think that the agreement under which the Dakotas were made a part of that purchase gives them any less rights than the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well.

Mr. RODEY. But do you deny that the people who organized and constituted the Territory, who then resided in it, were assured that at a time to be determined later on by Congress they were to be admitted to the enjoyment of all the privileges of citizens of the United States?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am coming to that treaty in a moment. I shall not dodge anything if I can help it. I was discussing here and I shall pick up here for the third or fourth time the identical question which the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New Mexico spoke about—precisely the idea here that was discussed in the Dakota case, and which was insisted upon at that time by one side of the House and sturdily denied on the other side of the House; and Mr. VEST, of Missouri, one of the ablest lawyers in the Senate to-day, barring the consideration of his feeble health, took issue with the gentleman from Vermont in the idea referred to, and utterly denied that the people of the Territory had any right to demand anything at the hands of Congress, and argued it plainly and thoroughly, that it was simply a question of grace upon the part of Congress to admit a Territory or prescribe as they might the terms upon which it should come in, and then, in order to fortify himself, he turned to the declaration of the gentleman himself, and here it is:

> There is no inherent right in the people of any Territory to be constituted into a State. Congress may never organize a Territory at all; it may never dispose of its public lands there; when organized it may keep it in the perpetual condition of a Territory if it pleases, because all the considerations which govern such questions are considerations which merely appeal to the ordinary legislative discretion of the lawmaking power, and therefore every circumstance and consideration which enters into the fitness of the thing itself which is proposed to be done is a matter that we have no right to set aside.

Now, that is the doctrine laid down by the distinguished jurist of Vermont, Senator Edmunds, and which was stated with approval by Mr. VEST, of Missouri, and I say has been the law unquestioned of this country from the day that the thirteen States of this Union prescribed that Congress might provide for the admission of States into the Union. Therefore the whole argument made yesterday does not come up to the question of fitness and propriety and discretion, and falls to the ground.

The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was made between the Government of the United States and the people of Mexico. As a matter of course, the people of the ceded territory acquired, by comity at least, the rights that have been stipulated between the Government of Mexico and the people of that territory. Now, the argument is made that because of the language of the treaty there is some special claim that takes out of the rule laid down by Judge Edmunds the people of that territory and gives to them a better right to come into the Union than the people of the territory acquired under other circumstances.

Now, let us see how long that argument will bear investigation. In the first place this treaty was made in 1848. Construction, action, things done under acquiescence, cut a great figure in construing the language of documents or contracts of every character, and especially a document the character of which is a treaty between two countries foreign to each other.

The language of the treaty, which I will get directly, I hope, confers upon Congress, and Congress alone, the power to say when this Territory shall come into the Union as a State. Now, what has been the conduct of the contracting parties? We have never heard a word of complaint from Mexico, and doubtless Mexico, it will be said, had no power to complain. We have stipulated certain things, not alone the introduction into the Union as a Territory, but the question of the right of a Mexican to withdraw and expatriate himself from that Territory, and the right to stay there for a year, I think it was, and exercise his right of choice at any time during the year. We had a great many other things of that character—providing for religious freedom and for taxation and for a great many other things that enter into treaties—and it was stipulated that this Territory should be admitted into the Union, the language being in effect "when Congress saw fit to do it." Now, what has been the construction put upon the language of that treaty by Congress itself? Well, it is enough to say in the start that it has been fifty years since that took place, and men have come and men have gone, and yet that Territorial condition has gone on, not forever, but for fifty years.

Congress has exercised the right, and it has come to be the law of the United States in its treatment of New Mexico, that New Mexico had no voice in fixing the time when she should be admitted into the Union. Congress has acted upon that for fifty years; acted under a strict treaty stipulation that clearly gave to Congress the power and the discretion of acting as it did act, and it is too late in the day now to come here and say that Congress is bound by that treaty stipulation and that the time has now come.

Now, that is all I wish to say on that subject. I do that to defend both Democratic and Republican Administrations, for during this period of fifty years we have had Democratic Presidents and Republican Presidents, Democratic Congresses and Republican Congresses, and they have made a history of construction, a record of construction, of that language of the treaty which can not to-day be upset by any appeal to the judgment of Congress to override the history of the country for the past fifty years.

Mr. RODEY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well?

Mr. RODEY. Is the gentleman aware that the State of Arkansas, when it came into the Union, at first attempted to get in by adopting a constitution straight out, and stated that it required no enabling act to have it admitted under the treaty of the Louisiana purchase?

Mr. GROSVENOR. How did she get along? Did she get in?

Mr. RODEY. Congress thought it better to pass an act, I think.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We have had a good deal of that, and, coming down to facts, all the Territories of the United States are property of the United States and subject to the will of the United States, as expressed in Congress. There is no power, either in the treaty or the law, to control the discretion of Congress in that behalf.

It is very clear from the language of the treaty that it was intended that there should be a discretion exercised by Congress; because if that had not been the purpose and intent of the treaty, it would have been declared in plain words that this Territory should be admitted into the Union as a State at once. A gentleman near me has very kindly furnished to me the text of the treaty, and I will read it:

> The Mexicans who, in the Territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time, to be judged of by Congress, to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution, and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property and secured in the free exercise of their religion, without restriction.

There was the old doctrine that made its appearance within the knowledge of our commissioners that under no conditions would they stipulate that any country or territory could come knocking at the door of this political corporation, the United States, and demand membership in that corporation, without the agreement or consent of Congress. And so they were careful to say that the "proper time" should be "judged by Congress," exercising a reasonable discretion to be decided by the majority of the people of the United States, acting through their legitimate representatives.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I have not discussed the merits of this bill, because I have been trying to answer these arguments which were put forth here yesterday—arguments which upset all the bases upon which legislation and treaty had before been established—which overturned the action of Congress declared over and over again—arguments which nakedly hold that the people of a Territory have the right to come and demand admission into the Union by virtue of a stipulation in a treaty or upon some other ground, of which they themselves are to be the judge.

Let me say to you, gentlemen, that whatever may be the result of this issue, the Congress of the United States fixes the terms of the admission of States into the Union. Our Union is a political corporation made up originally of thirteen States, and no State has ever been admitted into this political corporation except with the consent and by the act of the legally constituted agent of that corporation. No Territory has any more right to demand admission into the Union than has any other body of men anywhere on the earth, as a matter of political or legal right. The whole question turns upon what is the proper, what is the right thing to do under all the circumstances.

Population has a great deal to do with the case.

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman allow me to bring to his attention a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on this point?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. GROW. I do not remember the name of the case, but when Judge Nelson was on the bench that court, in an opinion written by him, decided that the inhabitants of the Territories of the United States hold their political rights as franchises in the discretion of Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is it, and that has been the law of our country from the beginning down. It has never been disputed in my hearing on the floor of Congress until yesterday.

Mr. RODEY. One other question, if the gentleman pleases. Does the gentleman contend that under that language of the ninth section of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo Congress, no matter how well fitted New Mexico and Arizona may be, can keep them out of the Union forever without violating that provision of the treaty?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That question answers itself. Congress can do anything that you can not compel it not to do.

Mr. RODEY. That does not answer my question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Suppose Congress should go on for another fifty years and continue to refuse admission to New Mexico, can you force Congress to take such action? Is there any writ of mandamas that can operate in such a case?

Mr. RODEY. I did not ask that question. I asked whether or not, in the gentleman's opinion, it would be a violation of the ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hildalgo for Congress in that way to refuse admission to New Mexico and Arizona?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It certainly would not.

Mr. RODEY. No matter how well fitted the people of those Territories might be for admission?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is a question for Congress to decide, and there is no appeal from that decision. The trouble with my friend is that he has an idea—and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] laid down that proposition—that Congress is merely a sort of agency that can be coerced in some way to do a thing which is in fact left to their own discretion, there being no power on earth that can affect their discretion.

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Has he not confused the question of legal right with the question of moral right? Does he claim that in my address yesterday I maintained that a Territory has a legal right to insist upon admission to the Union upon its own application?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know that the gentleman used the words "legal right."

Mr. KNOX. Have you not set up a man of straw for the purpose of knocking him down?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am glad the gentleman is getting a little tired of that straw man.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, no; I refer right to my speech.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman never made any such distinction, and the gentleman will find in the notes of his speech when he gets them——

Mr. KNOX. They are already published.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That he uses the word "rights," and he does not draw any distinction between a legal and a moral right.

Mr. KNOX. The very fact they are here asking for admission shows the legal right. What is the use of arguing that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Shows what?

Mr. KNOX. Shows that they can not get admission without the act of Congress. What is the use of arguing a proposition of that kind? Everybody concedes that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what I thought all the time that the gentleman was speaking yesterday.

Ms. KNOX. I never made any such claim and no one can draw any ru fe irence from my remarks. We claim they have the moral right to be admitted under the language of the Constitution, and I do not believe there is a man on the floor misconstrued my language, and I do not believe you did.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will take occasion, if the House does not object to it, to criticise and analyze the argument of the gentleman on that very point. Let us see where the moral right comes in. That is the weakest spot in the whole of the gentleman's argument. That is fallacious beyond my power of description. A political right now is sought to be asserted, the right of a State to come into the Union and force itself into the councils of a great nation and be put upon an equality with the other States in the power that it has in the Senate of the United States, and that now is called a "moral" right.

Mr. RODEY. Will the gentleman permit me another question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a moral right to override a political question and to do away with the necessity of a legal right. Why, the argument of the gentleman falls to the ground in a moment. What moral right has a man to come and ask a favor, and if a man has not a right to come and ask a favor from another that is based on no consideration, what right has a Territory to come, when they are themselves organized under the provision of the Constitution of the United States that says that Congress alone shall admit States into the Union—what right have they to come here and assert a moral right that is solely addressed to the discretion of Congress?

Mr. KNOX. Does not the gentleman agree that a man may have a moral right and something which he can not get without the action of the power which confers it? And does not the gentleman see the distinction?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; it is not plain to me.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If there is a moral right, when did it begin? If there is a moral right, was there a moral right forty years ago?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Of course.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. At what particular time did that moral right cease?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Morals ripen with age. [Laughter.]

Mr. RODEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. When the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was made, was it not made with reference to the 60,000 citizens of Mexico that were then in the territory?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose so.

Mr. RODEY. It is reasonable to suppose that the Mexican Government, which was one of the contracting parties, and the people left in New Mexico believed that they would have to wait, under the terms of that article that you have just read, until all of those citizens living in the land then ceded to this country died before getting the rights given by that section.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose they have nearly all died.

Mr. RODEY. Yes; they have died without their rights being granted, owing to the neglect of this Government, but can that section of the treaty be so construed as to mean that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. RODEY. Well, that is a doctrine that what little intelligence I have prevents me from subscribing to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It has been construed by the only power that can construe it. There is the trouble. It has been construed for fifty years by the power that your grantor agreed should be the power to construe it.

Mr. RODEY. Then does the age of a wrong make it a right?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not talking about your moral wrongs or your moral rights.

Mr. RODEY. I thought you were.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is the position you find yourself in. Your grantor has stood by for fifty years while that power that was charged with the discretion in the case has held distinctly that they would not admit this Territory into the Union, and your people had the right for a year with their eyes wide open to leave that Territory and not become citizens of the United States, if they saw fit to do it, and they stayed there for a year and they bound themselves to recognize the discretion vested in Congress, that Congress might act when it got ready, and I deny that upon a question of politics, a question of the political rights of a State, and the political relations between a State and a Territory, there is any question of moral right that can rehabilitate a broken reed of a political claim. I agree with John Bright that the moral law applied to the conduct of nations as well as to the conduct of individuals. But the maxim does not apply here.

Mr. RODEY. Then why do you not vote for its enforcement on the part of the United States here?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Because I deny that you have any such moral right.

Mr. RODEY. You deny that the ninth article of the treaty means anything?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It means just what it says.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is the discretion vested in Congress an arbitrary one?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is one that can not be controlled.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Of course it can not be controlled.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My friend is a lawyer. It is a vesting of a discretion without any power to control it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is no doubt about that; but does the gentleman think that it ought to be arbitrarily exercised?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That answers the whole of it. If there is no power to control it and Congress itself will not act, then the presumption—the strong presumption and the reasonable presumption—is that Congress has acted wisely for fifty years.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman mean that an uncontrolled discretion is a wise exercise of it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all; but every case stands on its own bottom, and when it is a question of the introduction of a political factor into a political corporation that corporation has a right to act, and its discretions can not be challenged by the man who wants to come in.

I was going on to say that the question of population and availability for future settlement strongly affects the question of the propriety or the nonpropriety of the introduction of these new States into the Union. Actuated upon this ground, while I believe and think I know that the Territory of Oklahoma would come into this Union as a Democratic State and will send two Democratic Senators and two Democratic Representatives—and I have it from an authority that knows more about it than my friend from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY], many times more, that I am absolutely right in that judgment—yet, notwithstanding all that, under the circumstances of the rapid growth of that Territory, the splendid results that have grown out of the emigration into that Territory of a great body of capable and competent citizens, the fact of her wealth of soil, and especially the rapidity of her growth, I would cheerfully join to vote for a single bill for the admission of Oklahoma into the Union and stand my chances to be criticised, even if the growth of Democratic power should be thereby enhanced.

But, Mr. Chairman, as far back as the admission of Ohio into the Union, that my friend says was never resisted, as far back as the organization of the Northwest Territory, wise men from the East—quite as wise but no wiser than the gentlemen who come from the East here now—called attention to the growing disparity of numbers in the Senate of the United States.

A section of this country has the right to discuss that mighty question. You admit to-day six Senators into the Senate of the United States, whether they be Republicans or Democrats, and you have added power to the west of the Missouri River that, in the Senate of the United State, gives substantial control of the Government of the United States, and you do that without creating any equivalent power in the representative branch of the Government. You will have for each State 2 Senatorial votes in a body of 90; you will have 6 Senatorial votes added to a body of 90, while you have but 4 Representative votes in a body of 384, and with the piling up in that section of the United States of political power that can control and govern this Union in spite of all the protestations that you can make. Now, it may be that there will be——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio may be extended fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, I was saying that it might be—taking up the thread of my thought at the point I laid it down—that these new States and Territories, with these new Senators from those States, might wisely govern the country; but, speaking for a representative body of constituents in the great center of this Union in point of population and of wealth, I say that we have a perfect right here, and it is demanded of us here, in the popular body of the country, not to make haste to strip the East and the center of its political power and turn it over.

Now, there have been complaints made against these States that have come into the Union that they did not do exactly as we thought and hoped they would do; but in God's good time they are getting around all right, and I think will satisfy the people of the country upon some of the questions before the country. But these are political questions about which the people of the United States have a right to be heard and their judgment taken upon so important a question as adding six Senators to the body already constituted.

Now, take this population. Take the population of New Mexico and Arizona—about 250,000, or, if you please, 400,000, a little over the ratio of a single Representative in Congress. We give them two Representatives through this bill. That is not unreasonable. Every State ought to have a Representative; but when you give to them four Senators, equal in political power with the great States of New York and Pennsylvania in the Senate of the United States, upon what ground do you do it? Upon the ground of growth in the case of Arizona; upon the ground of growth of the Territory of New Mexico?

Why, the very argument of the gentleman destroys its own force. For fifty years it has stood, as my friend from Massachusetts has described with great eloquence, as to the richness of that country. Did he make a discovery in richness, or what have the people of the United States been doing as to the splendid soil, the magnificent rivers, the great mineral wealth, and its capacity of production of wool? Have the people of the United States been blind all these years as to that? And yet right through that railroads run, right through it the lines of the great transcontinental railroads run, and yet we find the Territory of Oklahoma, that has been constituted within the past ten years, double, more than double, the population of both of these Territories. How does it happen that these Territories are valuable? Look at the State of Nevada.

Now, the gentleman from Nevada, to whom I will refer, and although he is not present, I shall certainly say nothing unkind about him; a gentleman of great power, of great representative capacity, has never said a word in favor of Nevada's greatness on the floor of the House that was not doubled and quadrupled when she came into the Union; and yet, with six counties in my Congressional district, I have got more people in one county than the State of Nevada has to-day. What is to be predicated of the history of New Mexico and Arizona; what is to predicated except that they will never be any better, in any considerable amount of population, than they are now. I say nothing against them. They have worked out under all circumstances great results, but they have been handicapped by the conditions that a man, one of the chief men in Mexico, who uttered the sentiment that he was rejoiced that the United States was so thoroughly satisfied with a piece of worthless territory. Fifty long years, and that population is 350,000. How many of them are there—the men of 1848 and their descendants—I do not know; but I will assume in Arizona and in New Mexico 50 per cent of the people there to-day, a much larger per cent in New Mexico, and a smaller one in Arizona, aggregating about 50 per cent of the population of both of those Territories, were there in the Territory at the time of the cession, or are the descendants of Mexicans who were there.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Where does the gentleman get any such information about Arizona? The gentleman is making such a reckless statement that I can not help interrupting him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Arizona tell me how many natives and descendants of the people who were there at the date of the treaty there are in the Territory to-day?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not know; there were none at the date of the treaty, or very few, and very few to-day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then, my friend has been arguing about a political right vested in nobody.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman made a statement recklessly, and one he must not have considered, when he speaks about there being anything like 40, 30, or 20 per cent of the people of Arizona who are descendants of those people.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman can come forward with his figures and demonstrate it if he can. I have said it was an estimate. Let us see how they stand together. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY] has argued that it became a vested right of a great body of people, by the language in the treaty, who have the right to come here and assert and demand admission into the Union. He is speaking of New Mexico. Now, the gentleman from Arizona arises and, resisting that statement, suggests that there was nobody in Arizona at the time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am not resisting anything that the gentleman from New Mexico said, nor am I bound by what he said. I am trying to relieve this House of the statement which the gentleman from Ohio made and which he has no proof of.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I made no statement that I claimed to have proof of. I said presumably 50 per cent of the present population of the two Territories put together were either men that were there at the time of the treaty or descendants of those people.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And that was pure presumption.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly; and I said it was.

Mr. RODEY. And there are not over 30 per cent of that population in New Mexico to-day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well, take it at 30 per cent and nothing for Arizona. Take nothing from nothing and not very much remains. [Laughter.]

Mr. RODEY. And they are as good citizens as can be found in any State in the Union.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no doubt about it. The gentleman will get their votes and he need not repeat it. He has been a faithful representative. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Ohio let me read a statement as to the population of Arizona?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should be glad to have him.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (reading):

The population of Arizona, from the best obtainable statistics, school census, number of school children, etc., is 175,000. This population has a greater proportion of native-born inhabitants than probably any other subdivision of the United States.

The statement of the gentleman from Ohio was that there were only 250,000 in the two Territories.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Something like that. I have the census to support my statement.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Arizona has a population of 122,221 and New Mexico 195,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well. How wide of the mark is that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That makes over 300,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well; call it 300,000.

Mr. PAYNE. And 125,000 of that 300,000 are Indians untaxed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; and can not vote. They pad their figures and come at me because I have not mine here. [Laughter.] Now, the gentleman from New Mexico says that not over 30 per cent of the citizens of New Mexico were there at the time of the treaty, or their descendants.

Mr. RODEY. Yes; but not that many of them live there now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But they have had children. Babies grow there, do they not? [Laughter.]

Mr. RODEY. They do not constitute over two-fifths of the whole population at the present time, and they are as good citizens as live anywhere in this nation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Two-fifths; then my figures turn out pretty well. Now, I have said nothing against the citizens. I think a great deal of your mixed race down there. You had one of them here, and a very efficient and valuable representative of your Territory, and I am very fond of him.

Mr. RODEY. I am glad to hear you say so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But what I was arguing was to show how few people, with all this Arcadia and Garden of Eden that the gentleman from Massachusetts spread out, has in fifty years gone out to this particular Territory.

Mr. RODEY. Does not the gentleman know that for many years they were a thousand miles from railroads, with Indians depredating on them, being neglected by Congress, and that Congress failed for half a century to settle their land grants, and that anybody that settled there might expect to have a Spanish claim turn up against him as to his land any day? Is not that a reason for slow development?

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much have you grown within the last ten years?

Mr. RODEY. We have gained about 177,000 in population in that time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What was your population in 1890?

Mr. RODEY. One hundred and fifty-three thousand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How large is it now?

Mr. RODEY. Three hundred and thirty thousand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. By the census?

Mr. RODEY. No; by the actual fact.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, actual fact. [Laughter.] I have lived in a country where they have had actual facts. Now, the gentleman from New Mexico is trying to get me to abuse the people of that Territory. I am not going to do it. What I am saying is that the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico have demonstrated in fifty years that there will never be a population that will be respectable in point of density throughout that vast territory, and we shall have two more "rotten boroughs."

Mr. RODEY. I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not yield further——

Mr. RODEY. Only one more statement and I shall be through. I wish to state to the gentleman that the Rio Grande Valley and the Pecos Valley in New Mexico are, when properly brought under cultivation, capable of supporting a more dense population than the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The people of the United States are pretty wide-awake to find out those places on this continent which are "capable of supporting a dense population;" and they have rushed into Oklahoma at a ratio that is surprising and gratifying, while they have gone past the Territory of New Mexico and settled over on the Pacific slope.

Mr. RODEY. Because Oklahoma has good land, where irrigation is not necessary.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is just it; Oklahoma has good land.

Mr. RODEY. Where irrigation is not necessary. The people will go to such a country first every time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I would vote for the admission of Oklahoma. I believe it would have been admitted upon a single bill. I would vote for it now upon a single bill, and I will vote for its admission if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] should carry. But I will not vote to load upon the shoulders of Oklahoma the admission into the Union of the two Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. Nor do I believe it is wise to do it. I believe it will defeat the bill for the success of the Oklahoma bill, and I put my decision largely—I do not deny it—upon the ground that in my opinion such an admission would be a disturbance of the political and industrial equilibrium of the people of the United States. I do not go so far as to apply in this case the maxim which I have operated upon for a good many years, "find out what your enemy wants and then do the other thing." I do not apply that maxim here; but I do act upon this proposition, that the introduction of new States into this Union is a political question, and the unanimous vote of the Democratic caucus justifies my statement. In my judgment the time has not come when it is wise and beneficial to the political corporation to which we belong to introduce new members representing those two Territories, and if they continue to be included with the Territory of Oklahoma in this bill I shall be compelled regretfully to vote against the measure. [Loud applause.]

Mr. KNOX. I move that the committee rise informally.

The motion was agreed to.

The committtee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3439) to amend an act entitled "An act to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia," and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Whereas the Senate having heard with profound grief of the death of Rear-Admiral William T. Sampson, United States Navy, which occurred in this city May 6, 1902: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to attend the funeral as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased officer.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Presiding Officer had appointed as said committee Mr. PERKINS, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. QUARLES, Mr. MARTIN, and Mr. MALLORY.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 4234) providing that the statutes of limitations of the several States shall apply as a defense to actions brought in any courts for the recovery of lands patented under the treaty of May 10, 1854, between the United States of America and the Shawnee tribe of Indians.

DEATH OF REAR-ADMIRAL SAMPSON.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the action of the Senate touching the death of Rear-Admiral William T. Sampson, I desire to ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the House of Representatives has heard with profound regret of the death of Rear-Admiral William T. Sampson, which occurred in this city on the 6th instant; and

Whereas the Senate of the United States has appointed a committee to join a committee of the House in attendance upon the funeral services:

Therefore, as a mark of respect for the deceased, and as a tribute of esteem for his distinguished services to the nation,

Be it resolved, That a committee of seven members be appointed to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker announced the appointment of the following-named members as the committee on the part of the House in pursuance of the resolution: Mr. DAYTON of West Virginia, Mr. PAYNE of New York, Mr. GROSVENOR of Ohio, Mr. WATSON of Indiana, Mr. MEYER of Louisiana, Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, and Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia.

ADMISSION OF OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, the House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and resumed the consideration of House bill 12543, Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, when the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union it was agreed that the general debate on this bill should close at 3 o'clock to-day. A question arose yesterday as to the division of the time. I now find that the time consumed yesterday by speakers who were not for the bill as it stood has probably been credited to the advocates of this bill. May I ask the Chair how much time is left for the advocates of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN (after a pause). The time used for the bill has been two hours and forty minutes, and the time used against the bill one hour and thirty-three minutes. The time occupied by the gentleman from Arkansas is counted as a part of the time against the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In view of the announcement of the Chair, the time still remaining for the advocates of the bill is shortened beyond what I had expected. I had thought that the time occupied to-day would be equally divided. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Delegate from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] and the Delegate from Arizona, who are of necessity more interested in this measure than others, and who, it is to be presumed, know as much about the facts in this case as anybody else, be allowed the remainder of the time on behalf of the bill, the time to be equally divided between them.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Arizona that the remaining time be divided between himself and the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. PARKER. I do not want to make any objection——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There will be opportunity for debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wanted to read three or four lines from a decision of the Supreme Court showing that the position of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is entirely wrong.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You can do that under the five-minute debate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Very well; I make no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

[Mr. FLYNN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, it is with hesitancy that I attempt to speak after listening to the splendid oration of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN]. He need not fear that Oklahoma exercises no influence upon the House of Representatives and the Government of the United States. When a Territory sends a man of talent like my friend, who combines the two Senators and a Representative in one, and whose policy can not be divided, he carries a power in this House and in the other that is exercised by no other man. But I deny the statement made by himself and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] that they are the men most interested in this measure. No.

The whole people of the whole United States are the most interested in that wonderful balance of power created by our forefathers in the House and in the Senate. The Constitution guarantees to the Senators an equal representation from every State. How better could you destroy that equal representation than by a measure which, as far as Arizona is concerned, with less than 100,000 of population, excluding Indians, would be in its effect like creating two States with four Senators out of any district represented in this House.

In creating new States we owe it to the people to preserve the balance of the Government. There are in this country, in the 45 States, 74,000,000 people in round numbers (74,607,225). The average for each State is over 1,650,000 (1,657,938). It is now proposed to make three States out of territory containing altogether (besides Indians not taxed) less than 700,000 people, or less than one one-hundredth of the present population of the whole Union. To that territory it is proposed to give six Senators, equal to one-fifteenth of the entire Senate.

That is not all. This territory as a whole extends from the watered lands of the East to and beyond the Rocky Mountains. Beginning with the young giant, Oklahoma, of which my friend [Mr. FLYNN] has just spoken, which, taking its start only thirteen years ago, contained in 1900, eleven years after its inception, nearly 400,000 people (398.331), the territory as a whole, comprising Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona, running on substantially the same line of latitude, extends west through what was known as the Great American Desert to and beyond the summit of the Rocky Mountains. It reminds one very much of the State of Texas, which in the east and for several hundred miles back from the Gulf is well watered and contains good agricultural farming land, but afterwards in the interior runs into desert. Of this great territory we have made only one State, having something over 3,000,000 population.

Mr. Chairman, it is 3 o'clock, and as I yielded my right to the floor I will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether I may proceed now for ten or fifteen minutes, or whether I shall do so under a motion to amend after the first section has been read.

Mr. KNOX. I will yield to the gentleman fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that the House has fixed the time for general debate to close. The gentleman can secure time under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territory of Oklahoma as at present described may become the State of Oklahoma as hereinafter provided.

Mr. PARKER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MCRAE. I have a substantial amendment which I desire to offer. I do not wish to lose my opportunity.

Mr. PARKER. I hope the gentleman will have an opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. MCRAE. I must insist that I do have the opportunity.

Mr. PARKER. There is no question about the gentleman's right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized to offer his amendment after the gentleman from New Jersey has concluded his remarks.

Mr. PARKER. I should like to have fifteen minutes by unanimous consent, if I may be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to proceed for fifteen minutes.

Mr. KNOX. How much time does the gentleman from Arkansas want?

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in good faith, and we have reached the point where it is in order. I do not want to lose the opportunity to do it.

Mr. KNOX. I do not wish in any respect to cut off the right to offer amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey that he have fifteen minutes to discuss his amendment to strike out the last word?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, there is a good deal of likeness between this Territory and that of Texas, although the population is so much less. There are 265,780 square miles in Texas, and there are 274,630 square miles in this Territory as a whole. There are 3,000,000 people in Texas (3,048,710). There are less than 700,000 in this Territory as a whole (total, 716,572; less Indians, 51,371; balance, 665,201). The growth, as in Texas, has been in the eastern and southeastern part, where it is watered. If the proposition were to put all these three Territories into one State, I would say, "Amen;" but when you propose to take Arizona and New Mexico and Oklahoma and to make three States, you might much better divide my little State, which contains over 2,000,000 people, into three States in order to make six Senators.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many people did it have when it was made a State of the Union?

Mr. PARKER. I could answer questions, but I have no time to do so. There is no difficulty in answering such questions.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, how many did it have? I should like to know.

Mr. PARKER. It contained 184,000 people, out of over 3,000,000. That was about one-fifteenth.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There are over 300,000 people in one of these Territories.

Mr. PARKER. We had our proportion. I am talking of the balance of the Senate. There are 90 Senators, represented by 400 members of this House, under the new apportionment, and you propose by this bill to add to the Senate six Senators, which is out of all proportion to the addition to the House of Representatives. As to Arizona, I have been there. I remember the country through which I passed—the great sage-covered plains, broken by rocky mountains, islands in the middle of those plains, or by canyons absolutely bare and desert, except where little rivers ran in the narrow valley at the bottom of the canyon.

I believe there are better parts of Arizona, but let us look at the census. We can deal with nothing else: In 1900 Arizona has less than 100,000 white population. Its growth, as shown by the census, was 39,930 in white population during the last ten years, and that is all. By the census of 1890 it contained slightly over 1,200,000 acres (1,297,233) of lands fit for farming, which is not much over 1,800 square miles. It has 113,939 square miles of territory, or 73,000,000 acres, and one acre in a hundred only is fit for cultivation. Of that million of acres, 104,000—I do not give the extra figures—or only one-tenth of that fit for cultivation, was cultivated.

The committee report shows that agricultural lands must be irrigated, and that by storing the water they could double that amount. One hundred thousand acres is only a hundred and fifty square miles—say, 12 or 13 miles each way—and with these prospects of development it is proposed to make Arizona into a State. Arizona had 104,000 acres under cultivation, Rhode Island had 274,491 acres, and every other State, except in the Rockies, had from one to twenty-five million. Colorado had 1,823,920, and even Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, and Idaho had from 475,000 to 915,000 each.

Our Government is organized on the theory of preserving a balance of power between the several States in the Senate and this House.

The Senate represents independent States. Their votes are to be equal. But if we "colonize" the Senate by giving the votes of two Senators to any 100,000 people, what becomes of the equality of the States?

Let us take up the case of New Mexico. The statements made in the census are the only ones that we can really trust. New Mexico was not founded ten years ago, like Oklahoma. It is one of the earliest settlements of the United States. It was explored in 1565, or thereabouts, and (I am speaking but by memory) it was settled in the latter part of the sixteenth century, and it has been occupied ever since. The United States during the last decade, from 1890 to 1900, grew over 20 per cent in population. New Mexico grew less than 20 per cent.

Mr. RODEY. We have increased, according to the last census, 27 per cent, and 100 per cent if the former census was correct.

Mr. PARKER. I take the rate from the report of the statistics of population of 1900, on page 4. New Mexico (No. 34) has an increase in population (outside of persons on Indian reservations) of 29,727, or 19.4 per cent. The gentleman can see. Here is the census report.

Mr. RODEY. I have looked at it a hundred times, and it shows 27 per cent, taken even as the census is given.

Mr. PARKER. The census shows only 195,310 people, including 11,990 Indians.

The population of New Mexico has increased only 19.4 per cent, and has now but 184,000 people, excluding Indians, while that of the United States has increased 20.7 per cent. If this shall continue, then that Territory will never have a proper population to be credited with two Senators.

Mr. RODEY. Would you have made that statement with regard to Colorado when it was admitted, and the conditions are practically the same.

Mr. PARKER. I do not believe that the conditions are practically the same, and if you will look you will see that that is so. I can only point out to those who prize their Government as comprehending States equally balanced that they must beware——

Mr. RODEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. PARKER. I decline to yield.

Mr. RODEY. Just one question.

Mr. PARKER. They must beware of making the Senate resemble a corporation organized with convertible bonds that can be turned into stock for the securing of a majority. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts. There is no politics, or there ought to be no politics, in this question. Those on my side of the House are honestly divided; not so on the other side. Let us hope there is no politics in their agreement to this measure, and that no pledge made here or anywhere will deter men whom we respect on both sides of the House from their doing what they think is right for the maintenance of the Constitution of this Government, which depends so much upon the equality of the States under the Constitution.

Territories ought to have more self-government. They ought to have it as Territories. They should have the right to elect their own governor, and in Territories like Oklahoma they should appoint their own judges, just as the thirteen States that came into the Union had been doing for a hundred years before the Revolution, and before they had received any statehood. Let us give them local independence as Territories. Let us not attempt to give two Senators to 100,000 people, for this is an injustice that never ought to be permitted. There ought to be no politics in this.

Mr. Chairman, a good politician in my State, who was a member of an Episcopal convention, was taken to task by a dear old lady because he had not bowed his head in prayer to be guided in the choice. The old lady hoped he would not be offended, and he answered, "Oh, no; I won't be offended, but you know I couldn't very well pray because I have just been in a caucus and agreed how I should vote." Let no pledges in or out of caucus turn us from our duty.

Mr. Chairman, when we are dealing with that sacred thing, the Constitution, let us not pack the Senate with false ballots which do not represent a real State. Let us not number among the States any Territory which not only is not now able to be a State, but never will be, as far as human prophecy can go. I do not say a word against Oklahoma. It is the little giant of the Sierras; it is surpassed only in its history by that great State of Texas. I do oppose this proposition, however, to divide what ought to be one State into three and to add six Senators and three stars to our Constitution out of such a meager showing of wealth, resources, population, and increase. It is one of the mistakes of which we ought to beware.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment read which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 1 and insert the following:

"That the inhabitants of all that part of the United States now constituting the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, namely, that section of country bounded on the north by the States of Colorado and Kansas, on the east by the States of Arkansas and Missouri, on the south by the State of Texas, and on the west by the State of Texas and the Territory of New Mexico, may become the State of Oklahoma, as hereinafter provided: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair any right now pertaining to any Indian tribe or tribes in said Territory under the laws, agreements, or treaties of the United States, or to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulations or to make any law respecting said Indians or their lands which it would have been competent to make or enact if this act had not been passed and the constitutional convention hereinafter provided for shall by ordinance irrevocably express the consent of the State of Oklahoma that Congress shall retain complete jurisdiction over all lands that belong to any Indian tribes until the same has been allotted in severalty and becomes subject to taxation."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, to that I make the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. I think the gentleman is too late.

Mr. LLOYD. I have been trying to get the ear of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. LLOYD. This amendment, as proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas, is not germane to the bill. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a decision. I will not take the time to read it, but I will call the Chair's attention to the authority in this case. When they were considering the question of the admission of the Territory of Dakota into the Union, a motion was made to substitute in the place of the bill for the admission of the Territory of Dakota a bill providing for the admission of Montana, Washington, and New Mexico. Mr. BURROWS at that time made the point of order that this amendment would not be germane, and, as I understand it, that is the situation here. This is a bill that provides for the admission of Oklahoma, and the gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment which provides that there shall be added to Oklahoma the Indian Territory. That would place it on all fours with the case that I have mentioned, which was thoroughly discussed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. The Chair in ruling on the matter at that time said:

The Chair supposes that a mere technical difference between the two bills would not be material; for instance, a correction of a mere clerical error or something of that sort. But it seems that the proposed substitute now offered by the gentleman from Illinois contains provisions of a substantial character and not contained in the original House bill. The Chair thinks, therefore, that the order does not apply to it and believes that, in accordance with the practice of the House and its rules ever since the House overruled its own decision in the case of California, that this substitute is not in order under the rules. The Chair therefore holds that the substitute sent to the desk by the gentleman from Illinois does not come within the terms of the order made by the House, and hence is not in order under the rules and practice of the House.

Now, I call the Chair's attention to this particular fact—that this amendment provides for the admission of two Territories instead of one. The bill now pending before this House provides for the admission of Oklahoma, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas provides for the admission of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, and that is the exact point passed upon in this case. This is a precedent that has never been overruled and is the law in the case, and I insist on the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, there is no analogy between the case cited and the one before the House. In that case there was a special rule, and the ruling of the Chair was to the effect that the rule under which the bill was being considered excluded the consideration of anything not mentioned. In that case it was sought to annex as a new State an organized Territory, and in this case it is to enlarge Oklahoma by adding an unorganized Territory that is contiguous to it, entirely within the jurisdiction of Congress; in other words, to define the boundary of Oklahoma; in the third place, the bill itself in the third section has a proviso which contemplates that this very Territory may at some time be added.

And it is strange indeed that a member of the Committee on Territories should make a point of order against doing now that which he provides may be done at some time.

I do not think it necessary to detain the committee or the Chair by further discussing this proposition. It is untenable on the three grounds I have stated; and I can not believe that the decision cited will give the Chair any difficulty whatever.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there can be no serious question in regard to this point of order. The case cited was a case where a bill was introduced for the admission of the Dakotas, and the proposition was to amend by admitting as States Montana, New Mexico, and Arizona—three distinct propositions.

This bill in its first section gives the boundaries of the State of Oklahoma, which it seeks to create, The amendment proposes merely to change those boundaries, taking in other territory. As the gentleman from Arkansas has well said, the bill itself provides that in course of time, or, indeed, at any time, the Indian Territory may come in as a part of Oklahoma—may be added to the State of Oklahoma. But the distinction between this case and the one which has been cited is that in that case it was proposed to take different Territories and make them separate States. Of course that was not germane. This is a proposition simply to amend the boundaries of one of these proposed States, as defined in the first section, and it must be germane.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the force of the grave objection advanced against this amendment is not at all weakened by saying that this is merely a proposition to change the boundaries of one of these Territories, because, if such a position could be maintained, then by simply extending the boundaries of one State or Territory by taking in land contiguous thereto you could accomplish all the mischief which the rule was designed to prevent. To say that this is a mere proposition for extension of boundaries seems, therefore, to me a simple evasion of the question.

There is another matter stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] which the bill does not bear out and which the gentleman who advocates this amendment, it seems to me, does not state exactly as it is. The provision as to the Indian Territory does not provide in any way for the admission of the Indian Territory or for annexing it or any part of it to Oklahoma. That power by the bill is left for future action of Congress. This bill does not disturb it in any way. The only provision in reference to this matter is the following:

Provided, That the constitutional convention provided for herein shall, by ordinance irrevocable, express the consent of the State of Oklahoma that Congress may at any time, or from time to time, attach all or any part of the Indian Territory to the State of Oklahoma after the title to said lands in said Indian Territory is extinguished in the tribes now claiming the same, and the same assigned in severalty and subject to taxation.

The only effect of this provision is to reserve to Congress the power which belongs to it, by compelling this prospective State to express its consent that when Congress may choose to make this addition or attachment of the Indian Territory to Oklahoma it may be done. The power of Congress with reference to the Indian Territory is left precisely where it is now. If there could be new matter introduced into any bill, if there could be a substantive provision departing entirely from the purview of the bill, it would be a proposition to annex one Territory to another by an amendment of this kind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the decision of Speaker Carlisle in the Fiftieth Congress, cited by the gentleman from Missouri, must be clearly in point. I can not see how the gentleman from Arkansas can differentiate the bill to which that decision applied and the bill now before the House. It is true that something was said in the decision about the bill then pending (for the admission of Dakota) having been brought before the House by a rule, but the question that came before the Chair for its decision was not whether an amendment was in order; that point was not raised. There was no question as to whether under the rule any amendment could be offered—that was all that a rule could undertake to provide or limit—but the question was the same as that raised in this case, whether the amendment offered was germane. The Chair did not make any decision whether it was in order to offer an amendment. The decision had relation simply to the question whether the amendment submitted was germane to the bill, and the effect of that decision was very clear—that a bill providing for the admission of Dakota into the Union could not be amended by adding a provision for the admission of other Territories. There is no question as to the effect of that decision.

Now, does that decision cover this case? This bill provides for the admission of three States. Its provisions are limited to those three States as much as the bill in the Fiftieth Congress was limited to the proposed States of North and South Dakota. It is true that the bill now before the House provides that under certain conditions the Territory of Oklahoma shall consent that the Indian Territory shall be added thereto, if the Federal Government so desires. But that is not a provision relating in any way to making the Indian Territory a State of the Union; it does not contemplate any such provision. It is merely a limitation on the constitution that the Territory of Oklahoma may hereafter adopt. It does not relate to the boundaries of the Territory of Oklahoma or the Indian Territory. It is like other provisions of the bill, merely a limitation on the powers of the constitutional convention to be called preparatory to the admission of the Territory into the Union. It is a limitation on the powers that may be placed in that constitution. It has nothing to do with the question whether the Indian Territory may be admitted or not.

Now, as to the germaneness of the proposition to this bill, it seems to me very clear, under all the decisions, that when a committee reports to the House a bill for the admission of one particular Territory as a State, that measure can have no reference whatever to the admission of another Territory into the Union. The fact that the Indian Territory lies adjacent to Oklahoma does not affect the proposition any more than if it were a question of admitting Alaska at the same time that Oklahoma is admitted. I think it very clear, under the decisions already referred to, that if the gentleman from Arkansas, or any other gentleman, should move as an amendment to this bill to admit the Territory of Alaska into the Union the Chair would be bound to hold the amendment not germane to the bill before the House.

And if it is not germane to admit the Territory of Alaska it can not be germane to admit the Indian Territory simply because at one time they constituted the same geographical division, which has since been separated by an act of Congress, or because they lie adjacent to each other. That being the case, if the Chair opened the proposition to any amendment that might be offered on the floor of the House, why, you could offer an amendment for Hawaii or for the Philippine Islands. There would be no limitation on the proposition whatever when it came before Congress, and the object of these rules is to hold the legislation before Congress to the particular subject that is brought before it by the committees. That is the only reason we have rules. Otherwise it would be unnecessary to have rules of this kind. But in order to transact the business of this House orderly and to have it considered properly by the various committees of the House from time to time it has been held that it is not in order to bring legislation before the House by way of amendment that has not first been properly considered in the committees having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, it is very evident that the proposition of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] changes the whole character of this report from the committee. It is not an amendment germane to the subject-matter at all. If it is held in order, why, then you can move to add any other portion of the country to it which constitutes the territory of the United States. I rise to speak on this question for the reason that I am going, at the proper time, to offer an amendment to strike out what I regard as the only objectionable feature of this bill, namely, that portion which relates to the admission of the Indian Territory.

Mr. McRAE. Will my friend allow me to ask him right there if he considers the paragraph he wants to strike out as subject to a point of order?

Mr. HOOKER. I think it is subject to amendment.

Mr. McRAE. If it is not subject to the point of order, how could this amendment be obnoxious to the point of order?

Mr. HOOKER. For the reason that we are proposing to do more than the committee proposes. You are proposing to include the whole Indian Territory in this bill to constitute a part of Oklahoma. It is well known to those who are familiar with our territorial history that Oklahoma itself originally constituted a portion of the Indian Territory, belonging to the five semicivilized tribes, the Choctaws, Creeks, Cherokees, Seminoles, and another.

Mr. MADDOX. The Chickasaws.

Mr. HOOKER. Oklahoma was dissevered from the Indian Territory and created a Territory of the United States, subject to the laws, rules, and regulations which pertain to a Territory. This is a proposition to admit that Territory and not anything else; but if my friend from Arkansas can propose to add this scope of territory which the Indians now have, and which I think they are entitled to have as a State of their own, not added to any other, why, then there is no limit to what can be done by way of amendment of this bill.

We ceded those lands to the Indians that you now propose in this indirect way to take away from them. We ceded them in terms of solemn treaties between the five semicivilized tribes and the Government. I allude to this in order that I may show that this proposition of my friend from Arkansas is in violation of the rules which prevail, that you can not offer an amendment to a bill unless it is germane to the bill. Why, sir, the idea of taking that vast territory of the five semicivilized tribes of Indians and making a State out of it without consideration by a committee of this House shocks every idea of parliamentary law as well as of justice and right. His proposition now is to take the whole. The report of the committee proposes that Oklahoma, if it shall accept this inauguration into statehood, shall in its convention provide that such portions of the Indian Territory as they may see fit shall be added to it.

That, I think, is the only objectionable feature of this whole bill. They have no right to take it either in parcels or absolutely and entirely, as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] provides. If that could be done, why, then you could make a State out of a Territory without notice to that Territory, without representation by that Territory, and without an expression of opinion by the people of that Territory; and therefore it seems to me that the point of order is properly raised that this is not a subject cognate to the subject-matter which the committee considered, but entirely different from it and proposing to create a State out of the present Territory of Oklahoma, that has metes and bounds properly defined, and to make a State not only of Oklahoma, but to include that vast domain ceded to the Indians, which, when it was ceded, General Jackson said should be theirs "as long as grass grows and water flows."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, is the Chair ready to rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. If this were a bill for the admission of Oklahoma Territory alone as a State there would be no doubt as to the position taken by the gentleman from Missouri being correct. An amendment to admit some other Territory as a State would not be in order. But this is a general bill covering three different Territories, and an amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to admit Alaska as a State would be in order on this bill.

For instance, a private claim bill for the allowance of a single claim would not be subject to an amendment allowing some other claim, but a general claims bill, such as often comes before this House, can be amended by adding another claim. So with public building bills. A bill to erect a public building at Birmingham, Ala., could not be amended by a proposition to erect a public building at Indianapolis, Ind.; but a bill providing for a number of public buildings could be amended by adding another public building. One is a general bill, the other is a bill for a single object; and as the Chair said, if this were a bill to admit Oklahoma alone as a State, this amendment would not be in order. On the other hand, it is a general bill proposing to admit three Territories as States.

In the Thirty-fourth Congress a decision was made by the Speaker that covers this point clearly. On July 17, 1856, Mr. Elihu B. Washburne, of Illinois, reported from the Committee on Commerce a resolution of the Senate for enlarging the custom-house and post-office and court-house at Milwaukee, Wis., and at Detroit, Mich., and for the construction of a public building for the same purpose at Dubuque, Iowa, with an amendment providing for some public buildings at Toledo, Ohio, Ogdensburg, N. Y., Ellsworth, Me., Chicago, Ill., Nashville, Tenn., and other points.

Mr. James L. Orr, of South Carolina, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane to the original resolution, inasmuch as it provided for the construction and enlargement of public buildings in different cities and States from those mentioned in the resolution to which the amendment was offered. The Speaker overruled the point of order. There was the exact question. There was a public-building bill providing for two or more buildings. An amendment was offered to add another building in another State.

The point of order was made, and the Speaker of the House, Nathaniel P. Banks, jr., of Massachusetts, overruled the point of order. There is no doubt, in the opinion of the Chair, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] is in order on this bill, this being a general bill for the admission of Territories. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, recognizing the importance of the decision, I ask to take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In deference to the wishes of my colleagues, I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. McRAE rose and was recognized.

Mr. KNOX. I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas how much time he desires?

Mr. McRAE. I will only consume five minutes.

Mr. KNOX. I did not know whether the gentleman proposed to occupy considerable time.

Mr. McRAE. No; I do not. I want to facilitate the consideration of this bill as much as possible, and as I have already spoken in the general debate I have very little to add, except that I want to call the attention of members of the House to the map before us, so as to show the relation of these two Territories, one to the other, and thus get a clearer idea of what is involved in my proposition.

You will find the Indian Territory indicated in red on the east. It is only a little less in area than Oklahoma. It has a few thousand population less, according to the census of 1900, and according to the census it has a denser population than Oklahoma. The Indian Territory has 12 people to the square mile, while Oklahoma has only 10. They are of the same character of people and have a common history. They ought to be in the same State for the good of both.

I submit to the House and to the country that it is unjust to the people of the Indian Territory to provide for the admission of all of the rest of our Territories between the two oceans and leave this one in this uncertain and undesirable attitude. These people deserve a better fate.

If we are to pass the bill to admit three Territories, then we should cover all of them by taking in the Indian Territory.

I do not undertake to speak for the politics of either of these Territories. There has been no election to indicate what the politics of the Indian Territory are, but they are supposed to be Democratic, but if we take the record as to Oklahoma it is Republican. I make no objection on that account, for whether they be Democrat or Republican, it is their right and their privilege to have admission, and then at their own pleasure select their affiliations.

I appeal to Republicans and Democrats alike to consider the condition of those people. They are equally as worthy as the people of Oklahoma. I am willing for Oklahoma to take her own governor, her secretary, and the Dawes Commission and hold this election, and hold the convention in the capital of Oklahoma, giving her any advantage that she can get out of that, but I want the Indian Territory attached now or never. Any other course would be unjust to her. With 800,000 inhabitants the two will have four Representatives on this floor, and they will be worthy of her neighbors, Missouri, Kansas, Texas, and Arkansas.

But, my friends, if you leave them as separate States you will find them both lacking in revenue, lacking in many things necessary to make a great State. Lacking in the money necessary to educate her children, and if they are to become a great people and prosper they must do that. I believe if you will make this State you will make these people glad and do a patriotic duty to all the people of the Union. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in reply to what has fallen from my friend from Arkansas with reference to the adoption of his amendment. He urges it as an act of justice to the Five Semicivilized Tribes. Have they asked, Mr. Chairman, to come in as a State in connection with Oklahoma? Has the Territory of Oklahoma, through its representative upon this floor, asked it? Whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, it makes no difference to me. No word has been heard in the debate of petitions addressed to this House and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that a convention has recently been held in the Indian Territory, at which resolutions were adopted, requesting that they might be added to Oklahoma and admitted to statehood under this bill. I introduced a similar bill requiring that to be done. As the gentleman no doubt understands, the great majority are white people in the Indian Territory.

Mr. HOOKER. That may be the information of the gentleman. My information is that these Indian tribes have not passed upon this question. They have wanted to be made a State under their own laws, and if there is any portion of the territory of the United States which can appeal more earnestly to the Congress of the United States than another, it is the Indian Territory.

From them we have obtained all of the vast region of territory which the white people now occupy, and when we acquired the country from the Cherokees when removed from Georgia and the Choctaws removed from my own State of Mississippi, they were assured under solemn treaties with the Government that the territory which they were to be moved to should be their own; and under this assurance of territorial condition they ought to have the right to be created a State of their own, with Indian blood and the Indian people and Indian sentiment to represent them. If that appeal has been made, why is it not sent to this Congress expressing that sentiment?

I am informed by the most intelligent Indians representing the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, the Cherokees, the Creeks, and the Seminoles that they want a territory of their own government, and they are entitled to it. Let Oklahoma have her Territory created into a State. If the speech of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX], the chairman of this committee, is to be relied upon, and it was a speech of great power, backed with figures as to the population and wealth and school advantages and all other things; if his speech is to be relied upon, and I do not think a single position taken by him has been skaken by the argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who said he would vote for Oklahoma if separate, it should be admitted. I am going to vote for it because it is connected with the others, and say that we ought to act upon the report of the committee and permit these Territories to come into the Union as States, and then we can wait for the request of the people of Oklahoma and for the request of the semicivilized tribes of Indians. [Applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret to express an opinion differing from that which has been asserted by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], for whom I have the very kindest personal regard. I am very sorry indeed, however, that he has presented this amendment. I fully agree with everything he said on yesterday with reference to the condition of the people in the Indian Territory.

I am aware of the fact that those people are without government, that they are practically in a state of rule by justices of the peace, and that the only additional rule is that of the civilized tribes. I concede that they need some kind of government. I fully concur in all that has been said with reference to that particular feature in this controversy.

The Committee on Territories has very carefully considered the question of what should be done for the Indian Territory. Hearings have been given to all parties connected with this matter, and after careful consideration it has been determined that the Indian Territory ought to have a Territorial form of government.

There is pending before this body to-day what is known as the Moon bill, which provides a form of government for them. Gentlemen now insist that they ought to have statehood. Why, the Indian Territory has served no probationary period. New Mexico and Arizona have served their long period of probation; Oklahoma has been a Territory of the United States for these many years, but the Indian Territory has never had government. The truth is the civilized tribes have a rule there of four years more by reason of the treaty relations that exist between them and the Government. The thing that ought to be done, in my judgment, is to establish there a Territorial form of government.

But I am not concerned at this time to give my opinion on this subject. There were hearings before the Committee on Territories, and there has been a great amount said and done with reference to the question of statehood. You would suppose from what has been said thus far in the debate that there is only one opinion in the Indian Territory, and that is that they desire to be a State in this Union, a part of the State of Oklahoma. The people themselves, according to the information that the committee has, do not desire to become a part of Oklahoma and do not desire at this time statehood.

Mr. MCRAE. Will the gentleman tell this side of the House why that provision was put in the bill for emasculating the Indian Territory by piecemeal?

Mr. LLOYD. That was placed there to satisfy an element of which my friend from Arkansas is a faithful representative.

Mr. MCRAE. I deny it. I would not vote for that separate proposition if it cost me my seat in Congress. I regard it as a most iniquitous one, and the gentleman must not charge me with any responsibility for that provision.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman did not quite understand me. I have no charge to make against the gentleman as being the author of that clause in this bill. I answer his question by saying that in the consideration of this Territory by the committee, after hearing the parties, there was a concession made to an element which the gentleman from Arkansas represents, and that element insisted that they should be a part of Oklahoma.

Mr. MCRAE. I would like to see the color of the man's eyes who lives in the Indian Territory or has any interest in it that would consent to a proposition like this.

Mr. LLOYD. Now, if the Chair pleases, I am not willing to be called away from the point I was undertaking to discuss at this time. My time, of course, is limited. I wish to call attention to the fact that there was in Oklahoma a statehood convention, and that convention was the largest ever held in the Territory of any kind. It passed a unanimous resolution in favor of separate statehood, and appointed a committee to present their views to Congress, which appeared before the Territorial Committee and demanded the consent of the House to their request.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I would like further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his time be extended. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LLOYD. I thank the committee for this compliment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was there not held in the Indian Territory recently a convention by citizens of that Territory, representing all parts of it, known as the "single statehood convention," in which they passed resolutions asking to be added to Oklahoma, and making it form one State; and is not it a fact that the great majority of white voters of that country are demanding that at the present time; and have not you had petitions before your committee to that effect, and have not you heard arguments before your committee for that to be done?

Mr. LLOYD. We had before the committee a number of petitions from towns in the Indian Territory insisting that they should not be made a part of Oklahoma. There were also petitions asking that it should be made a part of it. They had a convention at the time named, but I can not concede all that is implied in the question. There was another convention in the Indian Territory, composed of both parties, and at that convention they passed resolutions against statehood.

Now I want to call attention to what a citizen of the Indian Territory said about this matter in the hearings before the committee. The individual to whom I refer is Col. R. L. Owen, a very intelligent gentleman. He said:

> I am a citizen of the Indian Territory. I have lived there twenty-three years. My people have lived there ever since it was inhabited by civilized man. My great-grandfather was a Scotchman and took the first band of Indians into that country. I represented the Cherokees in charge of their school for four years and then I represented the United States as Indian agent for the Five Civilized Tribes, and know those people there very well.

In speaking of the single statehood convention he said:

> In their enthusiasm they imagined that they represented all the people of Indian Territory and Oklahoma, but as a matter of fact those who assembled there met under a call which provided that only those who were in favor of single statehood should be there.
> Their meeting was unanimous—

Of course it would be—

> it was harmonious—

Certainly so—> they passed resolutions embodying their own ideas. They did not invite those that were not in favor of single statehood to attend the meeting. Before that convention for the purpose of resoluting in favor of single statehood, about every business man in Muscogee, including the presidents and cashiers of the banks, and all the business men almost without exception, signed the call for a meeting for the purpose of giving expression to their opinions on statehood.

> I was at the convention and was made chairman of the committee on resolutions and drew them. I drew them in accordance with the sentiment of the Territory. Those resolutions were passed unanimously and were against statehood.

You will find further in the hearings that various individuals have been interrogated with reference to the sentiment in the Indian Territory, and I believe it is true that the portion of the Indian Territory lying next to Arkansas—nearest to that which is represented by my friend from Arkansas—has many advocates of single statehood; but the testimony of two leading witnesses was to the effect that nine-tenths of the people of the Territory are opposed to single statehood. With reference to the sentiment of the Territory, there can be no question, I think, from the testimony before the committee, that the Territory of Oklahoma is decidedly opposed to single statehood. The people there are concerned to have separate statehood.

One objection raised here is that this Territory has not sufficient area for a State. I was surprised that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] should insist on this objection, coming, as he does, from a State not one-fourth as large as the Territory of Oklahoma and not one-fifteenth as large as the Territory of New Mexico. Yet he says that the three Territories should be bound into a single State; and that is his argument.

But, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I wish to do that which is best. I have no personal concern except to secure that which will inure to the benefit of the Indian Territory and Oklahoma. Their wishes should be consulted to ascertain what they desire; and I believe as firmly as I believe anything that the people of Oklahoma are decidedly opposed to single statehood, and that a majority of the people of the Indian Territory oppose it, and that it should not be imposed upon them.

Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to submit some general observations on the bill.

No question of higher privilege can be considered by this body than the one enabling a Territory to become a State of this Union. To-day three large areas of country, with a considerable population and great wealth and resources, ask for statehood, and this House is charged with the important duty of voting to enable them to become commonwealths in this great domain or to prevent them from the enjoyment of such privilege. The original thirteen colonies all became States of their own volition. They are responsible for the declaration of their rights and the accomplishment of their independence. They made the sacrifice in the Revolutionary period which resulted in their triumph at Yorktown and their recognition by the nations of the world as a free people and an independent government. They made the Constitution which determined the rights of citizenship and exalted the people to sovereignty. They laid well that foundation on which the governmental structure of to-day so securely rests and sent a triumphant republic on its march to supremacy.

It is my purpose at this time to give a brief résumé of the history of the legislation that has added so many States to the original 13 and to present, if I may, the motives which seemed to actuate Congress from time to time in its consideration of the numerous applications for statehood which have been presented. I shall be pleased also to gather from the records of Congress the requirements demanded for the exalted position of partnership in the American Union, if it may be done.

The Continental Congress, in 1787, two years before it was superseded by the Congress provided by the Constitution, passed an ordinance for the government of the Territories northwest of the Ohio River, the subsequent division of that territory into States, and expressly declared that—

> Whenever any of the several States have 60,000 free inhabitants therein, such States shall be admitted by its Delegates into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government, and, so far as it can be, consistent with the general interest of the Confederacy, such admission shall be allowed at an earlier period, and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the State than 60,000.

The act of Congress of May 26, 1790, establishing a government for the territory south of the Ohio River, provided that the inhabitants were to enjoy all the privileges set forth in the ordinance of the late Congress for the government of the Territory of the Ohio. By common acceptation, as well as by these general terms, it was understood that when any organized Territory, on either side of the Ohio River, with 60,000 inhabitants asked for admission it was, as a matter of right, entitled to statehood.

The first division of territory that asked for admission as a State was Kentucky, but the first to be recognized under legal enactment was Vermont. The latter State was at that time a part of the State of New York, but by the consent of that State and through its own earnest appeal its application was considered. On February 9, 1791, President Washington submitted the petition to Congress, and in the accompanying message said:

> I have received from the governor of Vermont authentic documents expressing the consent of the legislature of New York and of the Territory of Vermont that the said Territory should be admitted to be a distinct member of our Union, copies of which I now lay before Congress, with whom the Constitution has vested the object of these proceedings.

Within ten days from that date the Green Mountain State was admitted into the Union. It was then the seventh State in area and had a population of 85,425. The glorious flag of victory which had been aloft on so many bloody battlefields was now to have another star, emblematic of the new relation which it sustained by this addition to the family of States.

Kentucky secured the passage of its bill for admission several days before that of Vermont, but by the provisions of the act itself the date of recognition was fixed, and ere that period was reached Vermont had been accepted as a State. In the message of President Washington to Congress in December, 1790, he stated:

> Since your last session I have received communications by which it appears that the district of Kentucky, at present a part of Virginia, has concurred in certain propositions contained in a law of that State, in consequence of which the district is to become a distinct member of the Union in case the requested sanction of Congress be added. For this sanction application is now made. I shall cause the papers on this very important transaction to be laid before you. The liberality and harmony with which it has been transacted will be found to do great honor to both the parties, and the sentiments of warm attachment to the Union and its present Government expressed by our fellow-citizens of Kentucky can not fail to add an affectionate concern for their particular welfare to the great national impressions under which you will decide in the case submitted to you.

The resolution accepting Kentucky as a State passed the House January 28, 1791, without a dissenting vote, and the Annals of Congress have this record of its passage:

> On motion of Mr. Brown, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole and took up consideration of the bill providing for the admission of Kentucky into the Union, Mr. Bodinst in the chair. The Chairman reported the bill to the House without amendment, and, on motion, it was read the third time, and passed.

The Senate had previously considered it, and it only remained for the President to approve the act of Congress, which was done February 4, 1791, and it, with its population of 73,677, became the fifteenth State in the Union. This daughter of Virginia, the first to leave the maternal fold, was then the home of Daniel Boone and a year later became the residence of Henry Clay. What a history one hundred and eleven years has made. How many a son of the West has, within that period, begun his biography "born in Kentucky," and how many living to-day point with pride to their ancestors who migrated from the blue-grass region.

The next applicant for statehood was Tennessee. There was quite a debate over its admission. It was contended that by the compact previously made no Territory could become a State unless it had a population of 60,000; that to determine the question of the number of its inhabitants the Territorial census must have been taken by authority of the General Government. On the other hand, it was claimed that it was optional with Congress whether it accept into the Union organized Territory with less than 60,000 inhabitants and that no law directed who should take the census, and this view was finally accepted. According to the census of 1790 Tennessee had a population of 35,691, but by a census taken by authority of the Territorial legislature in 1795 it had 66,000 inhabitants. In the course of the debate James Madison, afterwards President, in referring to the condition of the Territory, said:

> The inhabitants of that district of the country are at present in a degraded situation; they are deprived of a right essential to free men—the right of being represented in Congress. Laws are made without their consent or by their consent in part only. An exterior power had authority over their laws; an exterior authority approved their execution, which was not analogous to the other parts of the United States and not justified by anything but an obvious and imperious necessity.

How well did he describe the condition of the Territories to-day, and before ballots are cast against admission it would be well to measure these Territories by his standard of right and duty. After several days' discussion the bill passed the House by a vote of 43 to 30, the vote in the Senate on the same proposition was 15 yeas to 8 nays. In May, 1796, the bill was approved, and the first organized separate Territory was accepted as a State. Within a short time it elected Andrew Jackson as its first representative in the popular branch of Congress.

Ohio, in 1802, prepared its constitution and demanded statehood. In 1800 it had a population of 45,365, and it is hardly probable that in two years it had reached the number of 60,000 which entitled it to admission. But no question was raised against its coming into the Union, and practically by unanimous consent it was received. Its constitution was voted on in November, 1802, and many claimed that as the date of admission. But the more satisfactory statement seems to be that its admission should date from its first recognition by Congress or the Executive, which was in February, 1803. This Commonwealth has a marvelous history. Virginia may be the mother of Presidents, but Ohio has in recent years been the possessor of them. It is now the fourth in population, and ranks high in education and material wealth. It is entitled to have its centennial anniversary with the people of the Louisiana purchase, because it was admitted by President Jefferson the same year that Louisiana was obtained from France.

LOUISIANA.

The fifth State admitted to the Union was Louisiana, a part of Jefferson's purchase. This legislation was perfected April 12, 1812, a little less than three years before the crowning event of that war, in which General Jackson completely defeated the British at New Orleans. There had been much contention about what should be the boundaries of the new State but at last it was accepted with its present area. One of the principal advocates of statehood was Henry Clay. The census of 1800 gave Louisiana a population of 76,556, much beyond the limit then required, but no question of the number of inhabitants was raised during the discussion.

Then came, sixth in order, a part of the Northwest Territory, the district of Indiana, and asked for admission under the Federal Constitution. But a serious question was raised here, more important than in the case of Tennessee. Its population in 1810 was only 24,520. Notwithstanding its apparent lack of inhabitants it was accepted and admitted to the full rights of statehood December 11, 1816, and its people were given that freedom which all men may properly demand and which is vouchsafed under the Constitution and Declaration of Rights promulgated by our fathers.

A year later the Territory of Mississippi, then a part of Georgia, through its Territorial legislature, asked for recognition as a State. It had been ceded by the Continental Congress to Georgia, with an agreement that afterwards it might become a State, in these words:

> That the territory thus ceded will form a State and be admitted as such into the Union as soon as it shall contain 60,000 free inhabitants, or at any earlier period if Congress should think it expedient.

In the debate on the resolution it was argued that it should not be accepted, because its area was too great, and that in time its influence would be too powerful. These insisted that it should be divided. Others believed that if it should be divided the population would not be sufficiently large to admit either part of it, and especially the eastern division. After a vigorous discussion that lasted for days, it was determined to admit the western portion, now the State of Mississippi, and the eastern part was formed into a Territory, which afterwards became the State of Alabama. In 1810 the then Territory of Mississippi had a population of 40,352, but in 1820 the State, as limited by Congress, had 75,448 inhabitants. December 10, 1817, marks the acceptance of Mississippi, in the first year of the Administration of James Monroe and about the time of the death of Thaddeus Kosciusko, the great Polish general and patriot for whom one of its counties is named.

Illinois was the next to seek statehood. The bill asking for an enabling act named boundaries which would have made a State no part of which would have touched Lake Michigan. The great city of Chicago, now the pride of the State, would have been part of Michigan. An amendment to the bill was made at the instance of Mr. Polk which fixed the present boundaries. The only contest was on this amendment. The bill passed both House and Senate almost unanimously, and on December 3, 1818, it became a State. The census which followed in 1820 showed a population of 55,211, so that it fell much below the 60,000 limit at admission, but now the city of Chicago alone contains over a million and a half inhabitants. This was eighteen years before the present chairman of Appropriations made his advent into the world and fifty-four years before he was sent to Congress.

From the Southland came the next petition. Alabama, two years before its present junior Senator, Mr. PETTUS, was born, asked for recognition as a State. The census of the following year gave its population as 127,901. There were no serious exceptions urged against its acceptance, and on December 14, 1819, in the year of the birth of Queen Victoria and the cession of Florida to the United States, it was admitted into the Union as the Twenty-second State.

Maine, a part of Massachusetts, sought separate statehood. Quite a contention arose in Congress over an attempt to admit Missouri and Maine together. It was sought by this means to compromise the slavery question, and admit one as slave and the other as a free State. But this proposition failed and Maine was accepted March 15, 1820. It had then a population of 298,335. Its boundaries were practically the same as at present. In 1783, in the treaty with England, the boundary between the two countries was fixed, but in 1827 points of difference had arisen which were referred to the King of the Netherlands for settlement. His award was in the nature of a compromise, but more favorable to England than to this country. At the earnest solicitation of Maine this award was rejected, but after severe and threatening complications the boundary was fixed by the Webster-Ashburton treaty of 1847, which was slightly more favorable to Maine than the previous award but not much different from it.

One of the bitterest sectional debates in Congress up to 1820 was on the bill to admit Missouri as a State. The contention was over the proposition to admit it as a slave State, and finally resulted in a compromise, whereby Missouri was to retain its slaves, but slavery was not to be permitted north of 36° 30′ north latitude in any State to be admitted thereafter. The vote on this compromise in the House was 90 yeas to 87 nays. But few speeches are more interesting than those made on this memorable bill. I wish to quote a few words from Mr. Kinsey, of New Jersey, who said:

> We have arrived at an awful period in the history of our empire, when it behooves every man of this House now to pause and consider that on the next step we take depends the fate of unborn millions. I firmly believe that on this question now before us rests the highest interest of the whole human family. Now, sir, is to be tested whether this grand and hitherto successful experiment of free government is to continue, or after more than forty years of enjoyment of the choicest blessings of heaven under its administration we are to break asunder on a dispute concerning the division of territory. Gentlemen of the majority have treated the idea of a disunion with ridicule, but to my mind it presents itself in all the horrid, gloomy features of reality; and when we unfold the volume of past ages and in the history of man trace the rise and fall of government we find trifles light as air compared with this dissolving the most powerful confederations and overturning extensive empires.

How thoroughly prophetic was this utterance. How vividly did he present the picture of the contest that came forty years later. But the real sentiment of this appeal, devotion to the Union, and a desire that its blessings should be forever enjoyed, applies with equal force to the Territories applying for statehood to-day. No trivial matter should stand between us and our duty, and the voice of 900,000 souls begging for civil liberty, the right of self-control, and the opportunity to participate in the counsels of the country should not be passed unheeded. Missouri, a part of the Louisiana purchase, which now possesses the metropolis west of the great Father of Waters, the place where the great world's fair is to be held, was accepted into the Union August 10, 1821, and Thomas H. Benton became one of its first Senators. This State had at the time of the passage of its enabling act only 66,586 inhabitants, but now it has as great a population as the original States when Washington was inaugurated President. It became a State in the year that Napoleon Bonaparte died on the lonely island of St. Helena.

In 1836 Arkansas claimed the privilege of statehood and insisted that no enabling act by Congress was necessary. It relied upon the provision of the treaty with France made in 1803 which stipulated that—

> The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and be added as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of the citizens of the United States.

They sought to have a convention to frame a constitution, but the governor of the Territory endeavored to prevent the people from accomplishing this purpose. He inquired of President Jackson how this could be accomplished, who replied:

> The people undoubtedly possess the ordinary privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, among them the right to peacefully assemble and to petition the Government for the redress of grievances. If, therefore, the citizens of Arkansas think proper to accompany their petition by a written constitution framed and agreed upon by them in assembly or by a convention of delegates chosen by such assemblies, I perceive no legal objection to their power to do so.

The people, however, in order to avoid complications made the ordinary application to Congress praying for admission, and without serious contest their prayer was granted June 15, 1836, and Arkansas became the twenty-fifth State in the Union. It had at that time a population of 52,240, and in the census which followed, in 1840, the population was 97,574.

Michigan was established as a Territory in 1805, and did not apply for statehood until 1832, and then only to receive adverse action. The bill was revived in the next Congress, in 1834, but it likewise met defeat. No satisfactory reason was given for this action, and judging from the record of the vote it must have been rejected on partisan grounds. Undaunted and determined, the application was again renewed, and after a vigorous and prolonged contest, in which the strongest men in Congress participated, the bill passed. In the Senate Benton, Clay, and Calhoun engaged in the discussion; Benton favored admission and Clay and Calhoun opposed it. In this instance the points in controversy were the proposed boundary line and the alleged misconduct of the people. By a close vote it was determined to admit Michigan, but with a changed boundary and on the condition that her people, in a convention to be called for that purpose, should assent to the change of boundary, which assent when obtained should authorize the President to announce the admission by proclamation. A convention was called through the legislature to consider the terms fixed by Congress for admission, but the convention rejected the same and refused to be admitted on the basis fixed by Congress. Later, however, delegates were elected to a convention which did accept the provision of the Congressional act. President Jackson, in his message to Congress on this subject, stated:

> The latter convention was not held or elected by virtue of any act of the Territorial or State legislature. It originated from the people themselves and was chosen by them in pursuance of resolutions adopted in primary assemblies held in the respective counties. The act of Congress, however, does not prescribe by what authority the convention was to be ordered or the time when or the manner in which it was to be chosen. Had these later proceedings come to me during the recess of Congress, I would have felt it my duty, on being satisfied that they emanated from a convention of delegates elected in point of fact by the people of the State, for the purpose required, to have issued my proclamation thereon as provided by law; but as the authority conferred on the President was evidently given him under the expectation that the assent of the convention might be laid before him during the recess of Congress, and to avoid the delay of a postponement until the meeting of that body, and as the circumstances which now attend the case are in other respects peculiar and such as could not have been foreseen when the act of June 15, 1836, was passed, I deem it most agreeable to the intent of that law, and proper, for the reasons that the whole subject should be submitted to the decision of Congress, to present it to your body. The importance of your early action upon it is too obvious to need remark.

Under the circumstances I have detailed Michigan was admitted into the Union by action of Congress January 26, 1837. In 1830 its population was 31,639, but during the decade following it grew rapidly, so that in 1840 the census showed 212,267 inhabitants. This year was marked by the accession of Queen Victoria to the Throne of England and the inauguration of Mr. Van Buren as President.

Florida became a part of the United States in 1821. It first applied for statehood in 1839, but in 1840 had a population of only 27,943 whites. It had, since the visit of Ponce de Leon, in 1512, been the theater of warfare more or less and had been controlled by various countries. Not until the year 1845 was it ever permitted to enjoy absolute freedom. It was then accepted as a State by Congress without contest.

This was within four years of the birth of all its present Representatives in both branches of Congress. It had in the census of 1850 a population of 87,445, so that at the time of its admission it had evidently passed the 60,000 limit. This was the last of the eleven States known as the Confederate States to join the Union, but it, like all the rest, now renders the most faithful allegiance to that flag which had in its beautiful folds the twenty-seventh star because of its acceptance, and is one of the two States which, following the election of 1876, was in contest, and, because of its doubtful vote, the 8 by 7 electoral commission was called upon to determine who was President, Mr. Hayes or Mr. Tilden.

Texas first declared its own independence the 20th of December, 1835. Shortly after, however, Santa Anna captured the Alamo, whence only three persons were permitted to escape—a woman, child, and a servant. A second declaration of independence was announced March 1, 1836. A government was then speedily established, and in March, 1837, the United States acknowledged the independence of Texas. A treaty was proposed April 12, 1844, annexing Texas to the United States, but was rejected by the Senate June 8 of that year. Joint resolutions providing for the annexation of Texas passed the United States House of Representatives in January, 1845, by a vote of 120 to 98, and were passed by the Senate by a vote of 27 to 25 a few days later. The principal objection to annexation was the slavery question. But another serious trouble was its unsettled relations with Mexico. The President approved the resolution of annexation March 1 thereafter. During the summer following a convention was held by Texas, and it accepted the annexation proposition, and by act of Congress approved by President Polk December 29, 1845, Texas was admitted as a State. The census five years later gave it a population of 212,592.

Iowa, the fourth State of the Louisiana purchase to be admitted, claimed the benefit of the cession from France as Arkansas had previously done. In 1834 it was a part of Michigan, and in 1836 was placed under the jurisdiction of Wisconsin. In 1838 it was organized into a Territory, with Burlington as its capital. In 1845 Congress passed an act fixing the boundary of the Territory, which was accepted through a convention of the people assembled for that purpose, and on December 28, 1846, was admitted as the twenty-ninth State, when the present Speaker of the House of Representatives was but 6 years old. No question of a serious character was urged against its admission after the boundary had been fixed. It had in 1850, according to the census, a population of 192,214, which was an increase of 500 per cent over that of 1840. This State has an Indian name, which is said to mean the beautiful land.

Quite a spirited debate arose in Congress over the proposed boundary of Wisconsin at the time of its application for statehood. Three different boundaries were suggested and each had its warm adherents. At last it was admitted with its present boundary. In the census following it had a population of 305,391, ten times that of 1840. It was March 3, 1847, that Congress provided for admission, when the constitution should be approved by the people. The constitution submitted to the people was rejected. It was afterwards amended and resubmitted and accepted at the second vote. Congress on May 29, 1848, admitted it as the thirtieth State in the Union. It was during this month that the treaty was ratified between Mexico and the United States which ceded California and New Mexico to this country and within a few weeks of the proclamation declaring France a Republic.

The treaty of cession by which California and New Mexico were obtained had the following, among other provisions:

That the Mexicans who remain in the ceded territory and become citizens of the United States shall be incorporated into the Union and admitted at the proper time (to be judged by the Congress of the United States) according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the full enjoyment of their liberty and property and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

Attempt was made by Congress in 1848 and 1849 to organize a Territorial government for the new Territory, but owing to the questions of slavery, boundary, and form of government which arose it adjourned without making any arrangements for its government. Thereupon the military governor of California called a civil convention of the people to frame a constitution for themselves June 3, 1849. The convention met in obedience to the proclamation of the governor and framed a system of government for the State, and in it was a provision which accepted any changes suggested by Congress which might be agreed to by the State legislature. In November following the constitution was adopted. The legislature elected at that time convened in December and elected United States Senators. John C. Frémont and William M. Gwin were the persons chosen. In 1849 and 1850 the question of the admission of California was prominent before Congress. It had declared itself a free State.

Southern members were anxious that it be a slave State, and on this rock different elements contested. The Northern States believed that if it came in as a slave State they would lose the balance of power; if as a free State, they could overcome the aggressive movement of the South. For several weeks the agitation continued, with Webster as the leader of the antislavery party and Calhoun as the champion of slavery. It was at last admitted as it had asked, and within a day thereafter, September 11, 1850, its Senators took the oath of office. California had at that time a population of 92,527. This year was marked by the ratification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, with reference to the communication by ship canal between the Atlantic and Pacific, and also by the abolition of the slave trade in the District of Columbia.

At the time Minnesota asked for admission two serious questions arose to prevent her progress. One was what should be her boundary; the other whether her electorate should be confined to citizens of the United States in the selection of delegates to the State convention. After a protracted discussion, it was decided that only citizens should enjoy the elective franchise. The boundary question was settled without serious friction, and the enabling act was passed by a vote of 97 to 75 in the House and met but little opposition in the Senate. The date of its admission was May 11, 1858. In 1860 it had a population of 172,023. This State was admitted in the year of the execution of John Brown, of Virginia, and the death of Washington Irving and Lord Macaulay.

Oregon applied for admission near the close of the Administration of Franklin Pierce. The enabling act passed the House, but was defeated in the Senate. The bill was renewed in the next Congress, but met with a vigorous opposition, led by Hon. J. A. GROW, now of the House. The reason assigned was the action of Congress in the preceding session in making objectionable requirements of the people of Kansas. Mr. GROW had made a report favorable to the admission of Oregon in 1857, but was not now willing to admit this as a Democratic State when conditions had been placed on Kansas which, in his judgment, would not be accepted by the people. After a stubborn contest the bill passed the House by a vote of 114 ayes to 103 noes. The bill was approved February 12, 1859. At the census following it had a population of 52,465.

Kansas had a more strenuous and protracted opposition to admission than any State. There were two serious questions on which the people were divided, and Congress as well—slavery and the right of the State to dispose of the Government lands within its borders. Both Houses of Congress, April 13, 1858, passed by majority vote the bill which admitted Kansas to statehood; but certain restrictions and conditions were made with reference to slavery, which it was required to accept before admission. When these propositions were submitted to the people, they were rejected. Again it applied for statehood in 1860. The Committee on Territories, in reporting the conditions of the State at that time, said:

The government under which they have been forced to live began with a desperate, cruel, and bloody establishment by armed usurpation, and was marked in its continuance by the revolting atrocities which characterize savage warfare, emanating directly from the Territorial organization or supported and defended by those clothed with its authority.

After protracted discussion, involving the political conditions of the time, the bill for admission was finally passed, and Kansas, notwithstanding its turmoil, division, and strife, became a State in the Union near the beginning of that fratricidal war which resulted in the loss of so much blood and treasure. It had a population of 107,206.

At the beginning of the civil war many of the mountain counties of Virginia were opposed to secession. Quite a conflict arose between these counties and the other portions of the State. They held various conventions and public meetings, with Wheeling as a headquarters, from time to time, and protested in every way against committing the State to the South and expressed their desire to remain a part of the Union. They conferred by delegates and otherwise with the State authorities and the members in Congress for Virginia, but with no hope of agreement. The result of this unfortunate condition of affairs led to a division of the State, and West Virginia, by proclamation of the President, became a separate State June 19, 1863, and was recognized as in every way loyal to the Union and in opposition to the sentiment of the South. There was no separate census until 1870. There never was any question about the number of population being sufficient to entitle that part of Virginia to recognition as a State. This division was one of the unfortunate outgrowths of the civil war and was fully justified by the conditions that then existed, and doubtless it is fortunate for both sections of the original State that the division was then made, as well as for the common country.

In 1862 the Territorial legislature passed an act authorizing the framing of a State government in Nevada, but owing to political dissension the people decided against a State government. Mr. STEWART, now Senator from that State, was one of the members of the Territorial convention and opposed statehood. In January, 1864, Congress was again asked to authorize the people to frame a constitution, and it did so, and they by an overwhelming vote adopted the constitution, which had been framed in accordance with the act of Congress, and by the proclamation of President Lincoln Nevada was recognized as a State October 31, 1864. It had at the census following a population of 42,491.

In the midst of the throes of civil combat, with the smoke of battle blackening the heavens with its deadly flame, Nebraska, loyal to the Constitution and the cause of the North, begged for full recognition and the enjoyment of self-government. The country of the Platte was permitted by act of Congress to form a State government April 19, 1864, and the State of Nebraska ratified through its people on January 21, 1866, a constitution by the close majority of 100. In July, 1866, a bill passed Congress for its admission, but did not receive the signature of the President.

In January, 1867, another bill passed both Houses of Congress, but was vetoed on the ground that it embraced conditions not found in the enabling act and on which the people had not decided and to which they had not consented. The conditions to which the President referred were that it should agree that there was to be no denial of the electoral franchise or any other right to any person by reason of race or color. He gave as a further ground for his veto that the people of the Territory were not sufficient. But Congress, on the 9th of February, 1867, passed the act over the President's veto. The legislature within two weeks accepted the conditions named in the act, and the President, on the 1st of March, 1867, made formal proclamation of its admission. The population of Nebraska in 1870 was 122,993, plainly showing that there was no ground for the veto of the President on account of the number of its inhabitants.

An effort was made in 1863 to secure an enabling act for Colorado, but without avail. In March, 1864, however, Congress passed an act enabling the people to frame a constitution. Later in that year an election was held, but the people very properly refused to accept statehood, because they were of the opinion that its expense would be so great as to be burdensome to the people and because the organic act of the Territory restricted the right to vote to free white male citizens of the United States and by specific enactment had provided that no negro or mulatto should enjoy the electoral franchise. Again, in 1865, a convention was called, which promulgated a constitution which, when submitted to the people, was accepted by them. Shortly after Senators were elected and sent to Congress. They were, strange to say, accepted, notwithstanding the Constitutional provision.

Congress agreed to admit the State, but President Johnson vetoed the bill for admission. The reason given for his act was that its population was not sufficient, but the actual cause of this veto, it is claimed, was that the two Senators, Chaffee and Evans, would not pledge themselves to vote against Johnson's impeachment. In 1868 a similiar bill was passed, and another veto was given. The Senate only lacked one vote, however, of having the necessary two-thirds to pass it over his veto. Various other attempts were made, but not until March 3, 1875, was an act for statehood adopted. In July, 1876, a new constitution was formed and adopted by an overwhelming vote, and Colorado became the Centennial State, and elected as one of its first actual Senators the present senior Senator from that State [Mr. TELLER]. The population in 1875, by State census, was 135,000, but in 1880 the Government showed the number of inhabitants to be 194,327.

The greatest contest that was ever waged over the question of statehood was in 1888, when Montana, New Mexico, Dakota, and Washington asked for admission. The discussion came over a bill to divide Dakota and to admit South Dakota as a State. The division was largely on political grounds, although the arguments gave support or opposition for other reasons. One party favored the admission of Dakota, but objected to its division; the other insisted on admitting South Dakota and in making North Dakota a Territory. The question of division had previously been voted upon by the people, and North Dakota gave a majority of 10,388 votes against it and South Dakota 15,259 votes in favor of it. After extended discussion, in which the two Houses of Congress disagreed, it was finally determined in conference on February 22, 1889—on Washington's birthday and in the centennial year of the Constitution—that New Mexico should be dropped from the bill and that Dakota should be divided into two States.

The vote in the House on the admission of these States revealed an opposition which asserts itself here to-day. The House bill as it went to the Senate had the two Dakotas, New Mexico, Montana, and Washington in it. If members will examine that vote, they will learn who were friends to statehood then and that the opposition to this bill is consistent at least with its past record. The several legislatures adopted constitutions in accordance with their enabling acts and were accepted into the Union by proclamation of the President—the Dakotas, November 3; Montana, November 8, and Washington, November 11, of the year 1889. In the year following, the census gave these States the following population: North Dakota, 182,719; South Dakota, 328,808; Montana, 132,159; Washington, 340,390. There was thus admitted the greatest area of territory that ever came into the Union in any one year and the largest number of people were permitted the full enjoyment of the benefits of a republican government in that month of any in the history of our institutions.

Idaho applied for admission after its people had adopted a constitution. An interesting controversy arose in Congress over the question of the ratification of their constitution, mainly because it permitted female suffrage. The old question was also discussed, which had been raised in numerous instances, as to whether it was right to accept a State without having previously directed that it should form a constitution. The final vote on the bill was largely partisan. The State in 1890 had a population of 82,385.

About the same time Wyoming presented its constitution to Congress and asked that it be accepted as a State. The same question of female suffrage that was raised in the case of Idaho became an issue on this application, and, in addition, the question of polygamy was discussed, and some believed that the constitution should not be ratified unless there was a stringent provision in it against the usages of the Mormon Church. It was admitted July 11, 1890, and had in that year a population of 60,705.

Utah asked for an enabling act in 1893. The question of polygamy and the influence of the Morman Church were very thoroughly discussed. There were those who insisted upon the exclusion of Mormans and polygamists from participation at the polls, while others insisted that stringent regulations were not necessary, as the church had abandoned polygamy and had promulgated an edict against it. The act passed enabling them to frame a constitution in July, 1894. The constitution was framed in accordance with the mandates of Congress and submitted to the people and by them ratified. By proclamation of President Cleveland it became a State January 4, 1896. Its population at the last census was 276,749.

The legislation made and attempted on the question of statehood in the past, and the discussions from time to time, show population to have been an important factor in the consideration, and that 60,000 inhabitants was accepted as the number entitling a Territory to recognition. So far as the record discloses no application was ever rejected where there was a population above that limit on that ground alone. And if we shall be governed in our action to-day by the record heretofore made there can be no question about our duty to admit these Territories.

The most annoying division that ever presented itself in Congress was the question of slavery. Recognized Southern States were admitted as slave States without protest, and the Northern States were to be free as a matter of course. But the border and Western States served to agitate the slavery question and to determine its supremacy. Missouri and Kansas bore the burden of this discussion, one forty years before the civil war and the other about the time of its breaking out. The patriot may now rejoice that this question is forever settled and that it will never again enter into the consideration of the right of the State to enjoy the blessings of liberty and self-government.

The question of boundary, which has served to check the progress of statehood in so many instances, does not enter as a factor in determining whether there shall be an enabling act granted the Territories now asking for statehood. Their boundaries are permanently fixed, and, so far as the Committee on Territories is informed, there can no dispute arise in regard to them.

Partisan bias has been a great factor in determining the vote of members in the past, but I see no chance for it to become an element in determining the fate of these Territories. Every political partisan must support this bill if he would be loyal to party. In 1896 the Republican national platform declared:

> We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interest of the people of the Territories and of the United States.

In 1900 the language of the platform was stronger than before if possible. This language was used:

> We favor home rule for and the early admission to statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

The Democratic platform of 1900 commits the party in these words:

> We denounce the failure of the Republican party to carry out its pledges to grant statehood to the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, and we promise the people of these Territories immediate statehood.

These pledges take the question of statehood out of the domain of politics. Every gentleman on this floor loyal to party is committed by his party to vote for statehood. Is it true that the Democratic charge of insincerity made against the Republicans in the solemn councils of its convention is well founded? Will Republicans enter a plea of guilty to this indictment by voting against admission? This committal is specific. It names the Territories of this bill, and any gentleman, Democrat or Republican, who votes against the admission of any or all of these Territories voluntarily and deliberately violates the injunctions of his party and spurns its demands in this regard.

Aside from any political obligation, we may safely inquire, What are the merits of this bill? There can be no question, if population is considered, that these Territories should be recognized. If area is to be made a factor in determination, they certainly possess the requisite number of acres. The smallest of these, Oklahoma, is larger than Indiana, West Virginia, and a majority of the original States. The largest, New Mexico, is surpassed in size only by Montana, California, and Texas. I take it that it is not necessary to further investigate this phase of the case, for no one would seriously contend that any of them are too small to be free.

It is the duty of Congress to inquire into the ability of these several Territories to maintain the expenses of State government. The assessed valuation of Arizona in 1901 was $38,853,831.37; New Mexico, $38,227,878; Oklahoma, $52,190,365. This is a greater amount of property than was possessed by 12 States at the time of admission. The only added expense is that of the State government, which would add very little to their aggregate taxation as now levied for other purposes. There is not the slightest doubt of the ability of any of these Territories to meet the obligations of statehood in a financial way.

It may be that there are those who believe that speculation and careless business habits characterize those people. But from the commercial reports of the Government it may be learned that there were 1,992 business concerns in Arizona last year and only 2 failures, the best business record of any State or Territory in the Union. New Mexico, with 1,662 business houses, had only 3 failures, and Oklahoma, with 6,862 separate enterprises, had 44 failures. These Territories have made a record that would do credit to any State for careful, cautious business management.

An impartial inquiry as to the character of the people, their education, and habits will show beyond question a superior citizenship, well qualified in every way to perform the duties devolving upon them as citizens of a State. It has been claimed that the percentage of foreign-born population has much to do with determining the character of the population. If this is true, these Territories will not suffer in comparison with the States in the Union. Arizona, which has the largest of this class, possesses a greater per cent of native-born citizens than the North Atlantic States, while New Mexico has 7 per cent and Oklahoma less than 4 per cent of those who are foreign born. There is an erroneous impression as to the nativity of the people of New Mexico especially, for it is supposed by many that its population is largely Mexican; but the census plainly shows that such assumption is untrue. Many of its people are of Mexican origin, but the present population, as a rule, were born in that country.

There can be no question of the patriotism of the people of these Territories. When the call to arms was made in 1898 each of them quickly responded with a full quota of their best citizens, who were willing to enlist in a cause which would remove suffering and oppression and bring the blessings of freedom to a neighboring people, and now they come under the same flag under which they then enlisted and ask that the ban may be removed and the full benefit which their country and ours may bestow may be shared by them. They ask to be sovereigns, not subjects, citizens equal before the law.

Will this earnest and patriotic cry go unheeded? Will gentlemen turn a deaf ear to their appeals? Will partisan pique or personal bias dissuade from recognition? I beg you to listen to their plea, not that of the oppressed, but of those not equal in advantage, and for the sake of liberty, for the memory of our fathers, who bought it with the sacrifice of their own blood; in honor of him in whose memory there stands in New York Harbor a statue to catch the eye of the immigrant as he gazes for the first time on this land of the free, and in remembrance of the Father of our Country, whose monument towers above all else in Columbia and teaches the stranger that beyond all we place the cause of human liberty.

Now, in the high tide of prestige and achievement near the beginning of the twentieth century, with the bright star of hope shedding its effulgent rays in every direction, with Christian civilization and moral progress placing new laurels on the brow of victory, joined by the strong ties of common interest, striving in unison for the upbuilding of cherished institutions, with the fires of love burning on the altars of home, with the people loyal to country and ready to offer the sacrifices of life itself in patriotic devotion, with hearts filled with sympathy for mankind and with the outstretched arm of needed assistance the Congress of United States says to-day in words of tenderest regard to Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico, You are welcome to the glorious Union, and there shall be added as an earnest of interest in your welfare three stars to the flag, that you may be recognized in full fellowship, crowned with all the honors incident to freedom, partners in every conquest in the uplift of the people, and factors in that development which shall continue to astonish the world and make more appreciable the influence for good which shall be exerted by this Government in its onward march. [Applause].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the Territory of Oklahoma has been made up from time to time of land taken from the Indian Territory, and this bill, in my judgment, very wisely provides that the growth of Oklahoma shall continue, and it shall continue after the admission into the Union. They have organized under the Dawes Commission a method of transition from former conditions to permanent civil government in the Indian Territory. As rapidly as any one of the tribes, or the people in territories inhabited by such tribes, become ready for self-government, as soon as the land becomes taxable, this bill provides that it may be added to Oklahoma. The destiny of the Indian Territory should be linked with Oklahoma, ultimately.

It is not ready at this time for the Union. It is not ready for the transition now. It never should be an individual State. The Creek and Seminole country will, within the next two years, be ready for the transfer, and it is better that this transfer should be made on the installment plan, by piecemeal, as the bill provides, and therefore, while I favor the ultimate single statehood of these two Territories, and believe the legislation should be in that direction, the bill in its present form wisely provides for the gradual acquisition of the Indian Territory as speedily as the Dawes Commission can get through with their work, and therefore, while the general purpose that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] has in view of the final joining of the two Territories is a wise one, it should not be done at this time, because the Indian Territory is not ready for it. We would have an instance of representation without taxation, as the property of the Indians is now untaxable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that a great many States have had inside of them Indian reservations; that numerous Indian reservations have been within Western States, and could not Oklahoma take inside of its boundaries at the present time these Indian reservations and let this Commission get through with its work and let it all the while be a part of the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. LACEY. I would like to say to the gentleman that the most indigestible thing that a State ever had in its stomach is an Indian reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would be nothing new, however.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, this question was discussed before the Committee on Territories. The Committee on Territories, after having given hearings and considering the matter, inserted the proposition which is contained on page 4 of the bill, which provides that before the State of Oklahoma shall be admitted it shall in its State constitution surrender in advance to Congress the right to add any or all of the Indian Territory to it.

Now, the question arises, Why not do it at this time? I will tell you very frankly. The Indian Territory, covering, as it does, an area equal to the State of Indiana, has not within its boundaries one foot of public highway. They have raised two or three generations of people who do not know the color of a public school. It has scarcely one dollar of property taxed for school or other purposes. It was thought best by the Committee on Territories that a Territorial government should first be given it. They have never had any kind of government except the Indian government. The Committee on Territories have unanimously reported a bill for a Territorial form of government for that Territory.

As a representative of the Territory of Oklahoma, asking statehood here, I say that I never will consent to the admission of Oklahoma at this time with the Indian Territory without provision first being made by Congress to protect the Indian Territory, to furnish it money and lands for its public schools.

Oklahoma has gone on and has reared a commonwealth that everybody here is proud of, whether he votes to pass this bill or not, but we do not feel that it is right to take one-half of the property we have and divide it with the people in the Indian Territory, who, as I say, have not one acre of taxable property within the confines of an area equal to the size of the State of Indiana. It will take, if you should admit them, if you had the power to do it—you may say you have the power, but I deny that you have it now in fairness under the treaties, because in the recent treaties made with some of those Indians in order to get them to surrender the titles of their land we said that we would place no government over them other than what they had for six years from the time that we ratified the treaty, and if the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas should prevail you would repudiate the several agreements made with those Indians, and if you carry out your agreements it will be impossible to add it to Oklahoma until 1906.

Mr. McRAE. I want to ask you if the Territorial bill will not violate this treaty you speak of?

Mr. FLYNN. I do not think so.

Mr. McRAE. Then I should like to know if the Territorial bill brings with it any taxable property?

Mr. FLYNN. No more than it would if it admitted the same Territory to statehood. But I will tell you what you can do. You can have these people under some kind of a civilized government, which is more than they have had. The struggling State of Oklahoma ought to be allowed to go on in its onward march, and let Congress take care of the Territorial government of the Indian Territory just the same as you did for us. That is what you gave Oklahoma first. We had no taxable property when you gave us Territorial form of government. We have gone on now and in the matter of taxable property, as in other things, we have as creditable a showing as can be made.

But let me say to you that it will take $10,000,000 to get public highways alone in the Indian Territory. If you should admit Oklahoma as a State, do you want her to pay for that? Oklahoma has a larger school fund to-day than any State in the Union, and I for one will never consent that one dollar of that shall be diverted to the Indian Territory or any other place. Why? Because the land from which we derived that school fund came from within the boundaries of Oklahoma, and not an acre of it from within the boundaries of the Indian Territory. I believe that eventually Oklahoma and Indian Territory will be one State. The bill I introduced and which is incorporated in this omnibus bill has that object in view, but Congress must first equalize the school fund so that Oklahoma will not be asked to support the schools of the Indian Territory.

Mr. KNOX. I move that debate upon this amendment be considered closed.

Mr. McRAE. I should like to be heard for about a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that debate on the amendment be considered closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question being taken, on a division, demanded by Mr. McRAE, there were—ayes 57, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

ADMISSION OF OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO AS STATES.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government of said Territory on the fifth Tuesday after their election, excluding the day of election in case such day shall be Tuesday, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed State, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State government for said proposed State. The constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said convention shall provide, by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State:

First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Second. That the people inhabiting said proposed State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title in or to any unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian tribe; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States the same shall be and remain subject to the disposal of the United States. And said Indian land shall remain under the jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that land belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the limits of said State shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to the residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the State on lands or property belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use. But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said State from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States, or from any person, a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the land thus granted from taxation; but such ordinance shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said State so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe: Provided, That the constitutional convention provided for herein shall, by ordinance irrevocable, express the consent of the State of Oklahoma that Congress may at any time, or from time to time, attach all or any part of the Indian Territory to the State of Oklahoma after the title to said lands in said Indian Territory is extinguished in the tribes now claiming the same, and the same assigned in severalty and subject to taxation.

Third. That the debts and liabilities of said Territory of Oklahoma shall be assumed and paid by said State.

Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said State and free from sectarian control; and said schools shall always be conducted in English: Provided, That this act shall not preclude the teaching of other languages in said public schools.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso on page 4 of the bill which makes it the duty of the Territory of Oklahoma to acquire territory from the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proviso in section 3 of the bill from the word "Provided," on page 4, to the word "taxation," on page 5.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on this subject. This is an entirely abnormal and unusual provision.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the words which are proposed to be stricken out may be read.

Mr. HOOKER. I will read them to you, if you have not read them yourself. The proviso is:

Provided, That the constitutional convention provided for herein shall, by ordinance irrevocable, express the consent of the State of Oklahoma that Congress may at any time, or from time to time, attach all or any part of the Indian Territory to the State of Oklahoma after the title to said lands in said Indian Territory is extinguished in the tribes now claiming the same, and the same assigned in severalty and subject to taxation.

I say that this is an unusual and extraordinary provision. You propose to create a State out of Oklahoma by the boundaries and metes now provided by law constituting that Territory, and yet you require by this provision that in the convention which Oklahoma is to call it shall by irrevocable ordinance give consent to the addition of such portions of the Indian Territory from time to time, or all of it, as Congress may choose to determine. I say that such a provision has never been added to any Territorial bill passed by Congress, whether an omnibus bill or a special bill. It is unjust to the Indians, as I have before remarked. I have given my reasons for it. As has been well said by the gentleman from Missouri, they ought to be put under a Territorial government, and no State ought to be clothed with the power and authority to take any portion of their land in violation of the treaties of the Government of the United States, no matter whether that State be Oklahoma, now proposed to be admitted, or any other State.

The Oklahoma convention could not, under the law, under the treaties, and under the Constitution, clothe herself with the power to do any such thing. It is abnormal and unnatural, and if the committee act properly I think they will agree with me that it is better to strike out this proviso, which has no connection with the bill and ought never to be put into it. If they do that, in my opinion, they will pass their bill as it has been advocated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX], the chairman of the committee, and as it has been strenuously advocated by the representatives from Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona.

If this proposition is retained in the bill, it will be the means in the future, in case Congress should determine to do so, to increase by adding the whole of the Indian Territory to Oklahoma. I take it, from the vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas, that there are many who voted against that amendment who yet believe that at some time in the future, when the conditions in the Indian Territory shall justify it, that Territory, or part of it, at least, shall become a part of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman believe that this provision will bind the State of Oklahoma when it shall have been established?

Mr. KNOX. I do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it the understanding of the gentleman that it is binding on the United States Government also?

Mr. KNOX. It leaves the power in Congress, where it is now. We do not undertake to vacate the power of Congress in any case as to the Indian Territory or any part of it, but as to the State of Oklahoma we do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand that any time any future Congress, notwithstanding this provision, shall have the right and the power to erect or to make a new State out of the Indian Territory, the same as it has now.

Mr. KNOX. I understand that is so. The enabling act which gives Oklahoma the authority to hold the convention and to form a constitution that governs this whole matter will be binding upon Oklahoma to admit any part of the Indian Territory that Congress shall dictate.

Mr. RAY of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. I would like to inquire if he thinks that under the Constitution of the United States we can create a sovereign State to-day, clothe her with the powers of a sovereign State, and in so doing impose a condition that at some future time, when we see fit, we may attach to her and make a part of that sovereign State some other territory, some other people, against her consent, and that we can bind such new State by such a condition.

Mr. KNOX. I answer that question confidently in the affirmative.

Mr. RAY of New York. Where do you get any authority for it?

Mr. KNOX. Here in the very act that gives to the Territory of Oklahoma its power to have a convention to adopt a constitution on which it will be admitted into the Union as a State. In that very enabling act; and it is granted, and presumably it would be so held, as a binding condition of this irrevocable agreement to admit the Indian Territory or any part of it. It is in her constitution. It is a condition imposed by the United States in the act which enables her to make a constitution. It starts from the beginning.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, would it not be true if we pass this law, and then under that law admit that Territory as a State, that the newly created State of Oklahoma will have all the powers, all the sovereign powers, that any one of the original thirteen States had, each one of them? It has been decided over and over again that whatever the conditions are or the limitations you attempt to impose that when you have created a new State—and the law enacted by Congress may make whatever condition it pleases to impose—still you have granted and conferred all the powers and sovereignty that each of the original thirteen States had, and you can not reserve or keep from such new State any of those sovereign powers. You may just as well undertake to say that the people of one of the Territories shall be attached to Texas or shall be attached to any other of the States against her will as to put this proviso here in this bill. It has no force whatever.

Mr. KNOX. We do not say that they shall be attached to anything.

Mr. RAY of New York. But what you undertake to say in this proviso is that hereafter Congress may attach the Indian Territory——

Mr. KNOX. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. RAY of New York (continuing). Or a part of it, to Oklahoma.

Mr. KNOX. Nothing of the kind. We say that Oklahoma shall express her consent, and that shall be an irrevocable ordinance.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then under this bill you are not granting sovereign powers to this newly created State. You are seeking to impose restrictions and reserving the right to Congress to tell Oklahoma that she must at a future day receive other people and an extension of territory.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, no.

Mr. RAY of New York. You can not constitutionally enact this proviso. It will have no force.

Mr. KNOX. Now, as to the suggestion that the gentleman makes, this is a primary condition imposed by this bill on the State when it is raised from the condition of a Territory. Do you think that after they have done that that they subsequently can repudiate it, that being one of the conditions upon which this enabling act is passed? Do you think that after the bill creating the Territory of Utah a State that they could enact a law authorizing polygamy, if it were otherwise lawful, under their agreement?

Mr. RAY of New York. We may impose any condition we please that is preliminary to their coming in; and they must accept those conditions when they come in, and make their contract and make their bargain themselves. But once in, the contract can not be enforced. But that is a different proposition entirely from the one contained in this bill. This is a proposition where you undertake to say that we will give Oklahoma statehood, make her a sovereign people, a sovereign power, and she must agree that at some subsequent time, as a sovereign State, she will permit the Government of the United States to attach to her other people and other territory. I refer you to Escanaba Co. v. Chicago (107 U. S., 678), and Huse v. Glover (119 U. S., p. 546). Such provisions are void.

Mr. KNOX. Not at all. They agree to it; they express their consent to it; it is not a future agreement at all.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no; not at all; not for a moment.

Mr. KNOX. Not for a moment, but forever. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. LITTLE. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi may be adopted. I believe it will be not only an unwise but an unjust policy toward the future prosperity and hopes of the people of the Indian Territory to have the grab hooks around its neck with a threat or a promise that hereafter that Territory or any part of it may be added to the State of Oklahoma if she should be admitted to statehood under this bill.

We waive for the present the question whether it is within the power of Congress to lay a condition of this character that would bind a sovereign State after its admission to statehood; but passing that by, I want to address myself to the wisdom of the proposition. I happen to personally know hundreds of citizens of the Indian Territory, both Indian citizens and noncitizens, and I can say to you what I believe to be the truth when I say it is the hope of that great people and that great resourceful country that in the near future they may alone represent one of the stars of our flag. I voted against the proposition to unite the two. I did it, first, because I believe it would, if adopted, defeat the pending bill, which I hope may pass; and, second, I believed the policy ought to be defined now—I believe this Congress should say that it is not only its purpose to make a State out of the Territory of Oklahoma but that it is its purpose and intention to ultimately make a sovereign and independent State out of the Indian Territory.

There is there to-day sufficient intelligence, sufficient manhood, sufficient of American citizenship to bear aloft the banner of a beautiful and grand State. Over 300,000 American citizens—not ignorant citizens, as has been indicated—are within its borders. The children, it is true, have no schools except in the towns and cities, but some of the best blood of the surrounding States of the American Union are citizens of that country. They have builded up there prosperous towns and cities all over the country, running up into the hundreds, and so far as that is concerned there is taxable property and privileges sufficient in the Indian Territory to support a splendid Territorial government and to bring the promise of free schools to the people of that Territory.

Therefore I hope that this amendment may be adopted, to the end that the uncertainty, created by the provision sought to be stricken out, in the future toward the people of this Territory may be removed, and that they may go on building up the Territory and building up their country with the certainty, or at least the hope, that this Congress will give them Territorial government, and when the time comes, and in the near future, it will extend to them the privileges and rights and sovereignty of an independent State. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

The question was taken; and on a division demanded by Mr. HOOKER there were—32 ayes and 101 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 18, after the word "worship," add "provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to legalize the practice of polygamy."

The amendment was considered and adopted.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 10. That said sections 13 and 33 aforesaid when sold shall be disposed of at public sale as the legislature of said State may prescribe, preference right to purchase being given to the lessee at the time of such sale; but the same may be leased for periods of not more than five years, under such rules and regulations as the legislature shall prescribe, and shall not be subject to homestead entry or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for designated purposes only, and until such time as the legislature shall prescribe the same shall be leased under existing rules.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a member of the committee how the schools are supported now?

Mr. FLYNN. By the land that we now have. This confirms to us the lands reserved to us since we have been a Territory, and we are using them now.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is what I thought; this confirms the lands as the property of the schools?

Mr. FLYNN. Yes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 13996. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service in the Republic of Cuba.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3567. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter J. Osterhaus.

ADMISSION OF OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO AS STATES.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territory of Arizona as at present described may become the State of Arizona, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 19 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 19. The inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as at present described may become a State under the name of Montezuma, or such name as may be finally determined by the convention to be elected under this act."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I wish to have this amendment pending in order that members may see it in the RECORD. As the hour is late, I have no disposition to press it further to-night.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, before moving that the committee rise I wish to state that, though to-morrow is, under the rules, pension day, it is our intention to go on with the consideration of this bill to-morrow morning. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of the reports of its inspectors showing the condition and defects of safety appliances and the practice of operating trains by train or power brakes, as required by the act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, approved March 2, 1893, on the following-named railroads and their leased lines: Baltimore and Ohio; Chesapeake and Ohio; Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific; Erie; Illinois Central; Lehigh Valley; Louisville and Nashville; Lake Shore and Michigan Southern; New York, New Haven and Hartford; Norfolk and Western; Pennsylvania; Queen and Crescent; Southern, and Southern Pacific.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KEAN. I should like to see it in print. Let it go over for one day. I shall not object to its consideration after I have had an opportunity to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 8007) granting an increase of pension to James W. Lewis;

A bill (H. R. 11850) granting an increase of pension to Susan A. Volkmar; and

A bill (H. R. 12552) granting a pension to Erwin A. Burke, alias B. A. Erwin.

The message also transmitted resolutions of the House relative to the death and funeral of Rear-Admiral William T. Sampson.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 4647) to amend section 4929 of the Revised Statutes, relating to design patents.

MILITARY ORDERS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on the 7th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following:

1. Copies of all orders, instructions, letters, and cablegrams which have at any time been sent by the War Department to the civil or military authorities of the United States in the Philippines relating to reconcentration, and especially copies of any such orders, instructions, letters, and cablegrams which relate to the orders of Brig. Gen. J. F. Bell, dated Batangas, December 8 and 9, 1901, on the subject of reconcentration, and also copies of all orders, instructions, letters, and cablegrams which have at any time been received by the War Department from the civil or military authorities of the United States in the Philippines on the subject of reconcentration.

2. Copies of all orders, instructions, letters, and cablegrams which have at any time been sent by the War Department to the civil or military authorities of the United States in the Philippines in reference to the order of Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith to Maj. L. W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, and copies of all orders, instructions, letters, or cablegrams which have at any time been received by the War Department from the civil or military authorities of the United States in the Philippines in reference to said order of General Smith.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, substantially all of the facts asked for in the resolution are given in Senate Document 347 of this session. There is a question in my mind, however, whether there is a full answer to a portion of the second paragraph. I feel assured that there is no further information in the possession of the Secretary of War on the subject, and I have no disposition to press the resolution. It may be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. BERRY, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and are hereby, discharged from further consideration of House joint resolution No. 41, entitled "A resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States," and that such resolution be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, on the second day of the present session of Congress the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] and myself each introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution to elect United States Senators by the people. On the same day those resolutions were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That has been more than five months ago.

On the 14th day of February a joint resolution, which had come from the House and had been passed by the House for the same purpose, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That resolution had passed the House of Representatives unanimously. It was referred to that committee, as I stated, on the 14th of February, which is almost three months ago.

On the 11th day of March I asked the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections [Mr. BURROWS] in open Senate if it was probable that a report would be made on any one of these resolutions. He stated at the time what I will read. I shall not read all of his statement, but I will read a portion of it. In the course of the colloquy which ensued the Senator from Michigan stated:

I will say to the Senator that there is no disposition, so far as I know, on the part of the committee to shirk any responsibility in that matter, and the measure will be considered by the committee and action taken and a report made to the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. In time to secure a vote during the present session of Congress?

Mr. BURROWS. I have no doubt about it.

That was on the 11th day of March, almost two months ago. Some five weeks ago I was told by members of the committee that on the following Tuesday there would undoubtedly be a report made, either favorably or adversely. When that Tuesday had passed I was informed that for some cause a vote could not be secured, but it would certainly be taken on the following Tuesday. I waited until after that Tuesday, and was again told that they had been unable to get a report either one way or the other, but on the next Tuesday it was absolutely certain that a decision would be reached. On the next Tuesday no report came, and I was told then that on account of the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] no action had been taken, but on the following Tuesday there would be no objection. On last Tuesday, when it was certain, as I thought, that a report would be made, I was told that the committee had met and had not ordered a report, but that the chairman had called a special meeting for yesterday, in which it was stated that the matter would be finally disposed of.

I was informed yesterday by a member of the committee that the committee had refused to report the joint resolution favorably; that they had refused to report it adversely; that they had refused to report it favorably with an amendment; that they had refused to report it unfavorably with an amendment. Therefore it occurs to me that there is no probability of any report being made. In view of that fact, I felt it my duty to offer the resolution which I submitted yesterday and which is now before the Senate.

I wish to say that so far as the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Michigan, is concerned, I am satisfied that he has done everything in his power to secure a report from the committee; that he is in favor of the resolution, and that he has been diligent in trying to secure a report. I am satisfied from what I have been told by members of the committee that the majority of the committee have overruled him and he has been unable to secure such a report.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the merits of the joint resolution. It is wholly immaterial, so far as the pending resolution is concerned, whether the joint resolution ought to pass the Senate or not; but after waiting for more than five months for a report from this committee, when every man in the Senate knows that every member of that committee knew on the day the joint resolution was sent to the committee whether he was for it or against it, I submit that it is not fair to refuse to bring the joint resolution back with either a favorable or an adverse report. I think the Senate is entitled to have the joint resolution go upon the Calendar and to have a vote upon it.

During the last Congress the House of Representatives passed a similar resolution with, I think, ten or twelve dissenting votes on a yea-and-nay vote. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], when this question was up before, said he thought the joint resolution was passed by the House jocularly, or he used some word to that effect; I do not know what it was. But the House passed it this time unanimously. They passed it in the last Congress on a yea-and-nay vote with only ten or twelve dissenting votes. Legislature after legislature of the different States has called upon Congress to submit the proposed amendment of the Constitution.

I submit, Mr. President, in all fairness, that the committee has had every opportunity given it, and after five months, when it has refused to report the resolution and let it come before the Senate, there is no necessity of its remaining in that committee longer, and the Senate ought to pass a resolution to discharge the committee and place the joint resolution upon the Calendar. Then if the Senate wants to consider it and take a vote upon it, it can do so. If it refuses to do it, if a majority is opposed to it, it has that right, but let us have a vote and do not let us set the precedent in the Senate that any committee of this body can refuse to return to the Senate measures that have been sent to it, important or unimportant, but especially one which commands the attention of so many people of this American Republic, and where so many favor it and want a vote on it. I repeat, it is not fair to smother it in a committee and refuse to give the Senate a chance to vote upon it one way or the other.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, of course it is within the power of the Senate at any time to discharge one of its committees from the consideration of any matter which has been referred to the committee by the Senate. It was therefore entirely proper for the Senator from Arkansas to move the discharge of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and bring the joint resolution to which he refers before the Senate for its consideration.

I am, however, constrained to resist the adoption of the pending resolution, because, in my judgment, the Committee on Privileges and Elections is not subject to the censure which the resolution, if passed, would imply.

The Committee on Privileges and Elections has given the subject most careful and thorough consideration, and I for one have been gratified to note in the committee no feeling of partisanship, but a desire to give the question, which certainly is of the gravest importance, very careful consideration. Party lines have not been drawn, and I think I will be borne out by every member of the committee in the statement that there has been no disposition whatever to smother the joint resolution, as the Senator has intimated.

It is true the joint resolution has been before the committee some time, but the Senator must bear in mind that there are other committees in this body charged with grave responsibilities, and the membership of the Committee on Privileges and Elections can not always attend the sessions of that committee. There has been from the beginning—at least that is my judgment, and I think, as I have said, the committee will bear me out in it—no disposition to smother the joint resolution at all. Sometimes prominent members of the committee have been obliged to be absent, and by courtesy the committee meetings were not called. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who has taken a lively interest in this matter, and to whose judgment we all naturally defer, has been obliged to be absent, and as a matter of courtesy to him a meeting of the committee was not called in his absence. We are in the midst of the consideration of the joint resolution, and it is fair to the Senate to state just the condition it is in to-day.

An amendment was offered to the joint resolution, and the amendment adopted by a majority vote. At a special meeting of the committee day before yesterday a motion was made that the joint resolution be reported to the Senate favorably with the amendment, and upon that motion the yeas were 3 and the nays 7. A proposition was then made to report the joint resolution adversely, and the yeas were 4 and the nays 5—1 member of the committee not voting and 3 members of the committee being absent. If the entire membership had been present and all voting, the joint resolution would have been reported back to the Senate either favorably or adversely. It is my expectation and belief that the resolution will be reported back to the Senate either favorably or adversely at a very early day, and certainly——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator be a little more definite and specify what he means by an early day?

Mr. BURROWS. I can not, any further than to say that we have our meetings weekly, and if the membership of the committee is present I should presume that at the first meeting a report will be made.

But I wish to say in addition to that there is a proposition pending before the committee in the nature of a substitute for the joint resolution, or a proposition which will remove one of the objections to the present system of electing Senators by the legislatures. That proposition is now under consideration, and when the Committee on Privileges and Elections is in the midst of the consideration of the joint resolution and a proposition is pending, not possibly in the nature of a substitute, but a measure which tends to remove one of the objections to the present system of electing Senators, I submit the Senate ought not to discharge the committee in the midst of its deliberations, unless in the judgment of the Senate it can better discharge that duty than the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If it shall so order, the committee will submit to the judgment of the Senate, but I insist that the resolution offered by the Senator from Arkansas ought not to pass.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I must confess, in view of all I have heard from members of the committee, that I have been somewhat surprised at the statement the chairman has made. I had stated that he was in favor of the joint resolution and I had understood that he was anxious to get it out of committee. In order to show that I have not shown any undue haste in this matter, I stated that it has been two months since I asked the question and was assured that the report would come in. I wish to repeat what I said a while ago—that I was promised for the last five weeks by members of the committee that a report would certainly come the next week, and the next, and the next. In view of that fact, I am a little bit surprised that the Senator from Michigan should say there has been no undue delay.

Nevertheless, the Senator assures me that it will be reported at a very early date, and he thinks at the next meeting, provided there is a quorum of the committee present. I will rest on the statement and ask that the resolution go to the Calendar for the present, and I will not press it at this time. I do this because I take the word of the Senator from Michigan that we will have a report on the resolution at an early date.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have been alluded to by the Senator from Arkansas, who stated that one weekly meeting of the committee was omitted because of my absence. I suppose it is proper to say that my absence was occasioned by one of the most important public duties which I have ever had assigned to me in my life, which required my presence at home, and that I offered to the committee to have a meeting instantly on my return at any day which should be chosen by the other members of the committee. But they are all gentlemen who are engaged on other very important committees. Two or three members of the committee are engaged in the great Filipino investigation which goes on every morning. There are three members of the committee upon the Committee on the Judiciary, and all the other members have their important engagements on other committees.

Now, this is one of the greatest questions which can come up for consideration. It is a question of amending the Constitution of the United States in a manner which some persons think destroys the whole scheme on which it was founded and in spirit breaks the agreement that no State should be deprived of its equality in the Senate without its consent. Some persons think that implies not only that there shall be equality but that there shall be a Senate such as the Constitution defines, the express definition of the Constitution being that the Senate shall consist of persons elected in a particular way. Many believe, as I believe most religiously, that if the amendment be adopted there must be necessarily such inquiries into the elections as are made and have been made for many years in regard to elections in the House, and that it will involve considering every disputed State election, including the arrangement of the State constitution and the suppression of votes, if they be suppressed, or fraud, or anything else, as such things are inquired into in the House.

They may not be good reasons, but my proposition is that such a matter ought to be thoroughly debated in the committee. The Committee on Privileges and Elections has spent the time which the Senator from Arkansas complains of, as every member of the committee will bear witness, in thorough discussions. There have been grave, serious discussions from the time the committee would be called to order until the Senate met, and sometimes going over a little the time of meeting of the Senate. There has not been waste, or delay, or procrastination, or trifling, as I think every member of the committee will agree.

The Senator has referred to me. I have been promptly on hand; I have done everything I could to secure an early vote; I have been ready, and I took special pains that my absence of a week in Massachusetts should not affect this matter injuriously. I am quite prepared to have any member of the committee who differs with me on this question state whether what I say is correct.

This matter has not been in the committee an unusual length of time, in my judgment, considering the other grave questions which are before the Senate, for a measure of such great importance. It ought to be discussed in committee. Although the committee have had one or two votes on the general subject, there is a solution of the question which has been proposed, which is now before the committee to be discussed, and while I agree with the chairman of the committee in the expectation of an early disposition of the matter, I think it ought to be considered in the committee. If it should be reported back now I believe the Senate would send it back to the committee for the further consideration of some matters which they have not yet discussed.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I have been present at every meeting of the committee which has been called since this question has been before it.

Mr. HOAR. And the committee has given its undivided attention to it.

Mr. DEPEW. The debates on this question in the committee have occupied the whole morning until the meeting of the Senate at every session. At the last meeting before the one of yesterday it was understood that a vote should be had at the next meeting, which was called specially for that purpose yesterday. There were present at the meeting all the gentlemen representing the political faith of my friend from Arkansas, but there were three Republicans absent. The meeting was called for the purpose of making a report, and I was there prepared to vote almost any way which would get the resolution before the Senate. That it is not before the Senate is due to the fact that the political associates of the Senator from Arkansas—I want my friends on the other side to hear me—did not want it to come before the Senate, if their votes were an indication. A resolution was offered first that the resolution be reported adversely. Upon that the yeas and nays were called, and all the Democrats except one voted nay. One Republican voted nay. In that way the report adversely was defeated. Then a motion was made that it be reported favorably.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. I rise to a question of order. I insist that it is not in order for the Senator from New York or any other Senator to state the votes in a committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I trust the Senator from Colorado will withhold that point of order for the moment. The Senator from New York has divulged so much of the proceedings that I think it entirely fair that the Senate and the country should understand the entire proceedings.

Mr. TELLER. I will wait until the Senator from New York gets through, and then I will try and get a ruling of the Chair. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DEPEW. I do not want to continue the statement unless my friends on the other side have full opportunity to reply. I do not want them to be ruled out on a point of order after I have made my statement.

Then a motion was made that the resolution be reported favorably. On that resolution all the Democrats voted nay, and the Republicans present voted yea. So the efforts yesterday to secure a report of the resolution, as it now stands perfected, before the Committee on Privileges and Elections failed both on an effort to get it out by a vote for an adverse report and a vote for a favorable report. We then took an adjournment, having been in session until after the Senate met, in order to see whether at the next meeting of the committee we could not have every member present, and then secure a vote either favorably or unfavorably.

Mr. SPOONER and Mr. BLACKBURN addressed the Chair.

Mr. SPOONER. I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky. I rose for the purpose of moving to refer the resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BERRY. I am going to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say a word upon the subject, but I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no purpose, Mr. President, to say anything upon the merits of the subject.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator proceeds, I should like, as my name was mentioned, to ask him a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator if he or if any of his associates think that I have been the means, by my absence, of any delay in this matter?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am satisfied that the Senator from Massachusetts is not under charges here. If he is, I very gladly answer his subpœna as a witness and say that delay, if there has been any, is in no wise attributable to the Senator from Massachusetts. Upon the contrary, he has at every meeting of the committee when he was present evinced a perfect willingness to have the committee take such action as it might be able to reach without the slightest semblance of an effort to delay the consideration of the measure.

There is, I am sure, no criticism to pass upon the action of the Senator as a member of that committee in connection with this joint resolution, nor do I believe that the committee itself is properly amenable to any criticism in the direction of delay. Upon the contrary, meeting after meeting has been had, and they have been, all the conditions considered, fairly liberally attended. It is true that at the last meeting, on the day before yesterday, there were three absentees. I have no doubt they were necessarily absent. It is equally true, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], that assurances have been given by members of the committee—probably by all of them—that the time was in sight when this resolution would be brought back to the attention of the Senate.

Whether it be a violation of the rules, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], that the action of the committ should be made public here in the Senate, I hope that the point will not now be insisted upon. As one side of the case has been stated, I think it but fair that, as the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] has very properly suggested, the other side should have an equal opportunity to state its recollection.

On the day before yesterday, Mr. President, we came to a vote on this resolution for the first time. There never was a vote taken in the committee on the resolution as sent to the Senate from the House of Representatives.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I know the Senator does not want to be inaccurate, but there were several votes taken, probably when he was absent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I never was absent when that committee was there.

Mr. PETTUS. Very well. Then the Senator will recollect that there were votes taken on the amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am indebted to my friend from Alabama, but if he will look in the RECORD at what I have said, when it shall be printed, he will find that he is not correcting me, but he is making a mistake himself.

I said that the day before yesterday no vote was taken upon the joint resolution as passed by the House and sent to the Senate. Then two votes were taken. The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] had at a previous meeting offered an amendment, which had been agreed to by a majority of one vote in the committee. At the day before yesterday's meeting two votes were taken——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator will allow me to correct him and to say that it was yesterday we had the meeting at which the votes to which he has referred were taken, instead of the day before yesterday.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yesterday. I stand corrected, and I thank the Senator from Ohio. At the last meeting, on yesterday, two votes were taken by yeas and nays. One was upon reporting the joint resolution of the House favorably to the Senate as amended on motion of the Senator from New York. That was voted down. The chairman of the committee having overruled the point of order that I had raised, another vote was taken on the motion to report to the Senate unfavorably the joint resolution of the House as amended on the motion of the Senator from New York. I raised the point of order that that vote could not be taken; that a committee of the Senate had a right to report back to the Senate anything that had been referred to it with a recommendation of an amendment or amendments to be incorporated, provided that they reported it favorably and advised its passage, but that it was without precedent in parliamentary law to amend a proposition that comes from the other branch of Congress, and then report it to the Senate with an amendment on it which the House had never seen and which the Senate had never heard of—to report it back thus amended with the recommendation that it do not pass. The point of order was overruled by the chairman, and I have no criticism to pass upon his action. I simply did not take his view of it.

Then when the vote was taken on the motion to report the House joint resolution back to the Senate as amended in committee on the motion of the Senator from New York, with an adverse report, the yeas and nays being called, that motion was voted down.

Now the Senator from New York says that the reason that the Senate gets no chance to pass upon this resolution is because the minority membership of that committee prevent it. That is hardly an accurate statement of what happened on yesterday morning, unless the Senator will go further and say that he found it impossible to get any member of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to agree to report that House joint resolution back after he had tinkered with it in the fashion that he had with his amendment; neither did he get his Republican associates to agree with him on that proposition. After the New York doctor got through with his handling of this case, it was not, it seems by that vote, acceptable to either the Republicans or the Democrats of that committee. It was an open secret that the majority of the Democrats there were in favor of that joint resolution as it came from the House; it was an open secret that every Democrat in that committee was opposed to it as the Senator from New York proposed to amend it, for his amendment gave the Federal Government absolute supervision and control of those elections.

The chairman of this committee was exactly correct in his statement. The committee did not divide on party lines. One member of the majority said that the committee was in favor of the joint resolution as it came from the House and opposed to the amendment as offered by the Senator from New York. So that it is not fair to say that the committee would have reported the joint resolution back to the Senate but for the action of the minority members. The minority members insisted upon reporting that joint resolution to the Senate exactly as it came from the House, with one exception, and they were reinforced by one Republican—the chairman of that committee. The minority membership of that committee to a man objected to reporting that resolution back to the Senate adversely, either with or without the amendment of the Senator from New York. That is the exact statement of the facts.

Mr. DEPEW. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. Is not the position of the minority members of the committee this: That with the resolution as it now stands, amended by the vote of a majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the minority members are opposed to reporting it to the Senate either favorably or adversely?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Precisely. I tried to say that.

When the Senator from New York got through doctoring this resolution, then every member of the minority and some of the majority of that committee were opposed, as shown by a yea-and-nay vote, to reporting that resolution back either favorably or unfavorably or in any other way. In other words, to a majority of the committee, after the Senator from New York had amended the joint resolution, it was absolutely worthless and distasteful for any purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is so nearly through that I will not make the point of order upon him which was made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], for I do not wish to preclude him from making any further explanation he desires to make; but I should like to make the point of order and get a ruling upon it.

Mr. BAILEY (to Mr. SPOONER). Allow the point of order to be pending.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It rather surprises me, Mr. President, to see the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] trying to interrupt or shorten the utterances of one of the silent members of the Senate when he favors us so frequently with his own expositions on everything that comes up for consideration in this body.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator will not be sensitive as to what I have said.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; not in the slightest.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not raise the point of order now, but I say if we can get to know, as a matter of parliamentary practice, whether it is proper to repeat in the Senate what occurs in committee I think it would be a very important matter.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think it would be, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not going to make the point of order on the Senator.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand that. Mr. President, I wish to say that was my opinion, and when the Committee on Privileges and Elections adjourned yesterday morning I notified the committee that unless objection was then and there made I intended to state to the Senate the result of those yea-and-nay votes that were had there yesterday morning, and no objection was made to it, but I did not claim that privilege nor exercise it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With great pleasure.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under all the circumstances, would it not be wise that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should be very glad to see the committee discharged and that joint resolution brought here and placed upon the Calendar, for it is my purpose to insist, and to keep on insisting, and, if possible, to secure a vote in the Senate, not upon something else, but upon the joint resolution which the House has sent to the Senate for its concurrence.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I merely want to say a word, so that when this debate goes out to the country there may be no doubt as to what is the point of difference. My friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] says that the whole purpose and object of the joint resolution as it came from the House to have the election of the United States Senators by the people is defeated and destroyed by the amendment which I proposed, and therefore he and his associates are unalterably opposed to having that resolution from the House come before the Senate favorably or adversely reported if it has upon it that amendment.

The amendment which I propose is germane to that resolution, because it is simply this: That if the people are to vote for United States Senators and they are to be elected by the people, then the people shall be permitted to vote; but if they are deprived of that privilege by any State, Congress shall know why they are so deprived and whether they have voted and their votes honestly counted as cast, and have power to legislate to secure open, honest, and fair elections for members of this Senate under this new scheme. That is what my amendment is.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as a member of that committee I feel that I owe it to myself to state why I voted, as stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], against reporting that resolution either favorably or adversely. I did so purely and only because the committee had adopted an amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, that not only gives to Congress control over the time and manner of electing Senators of the United States, but also commits the question as to the qualification of voters to the Federal Government. Earnestly as I favor an amendment to the Constitution which shall provide for the election of Senators by a direct vote of th people, instead of leaving it as it now stands, to the legislatures o^e the several States, I could not for a moment, in committee or elsewhere, consent to such a change, coupled with the provision incorporated into the resolution by the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Now, Mr. President, having said this much—and I would not have been justified in saying anything about occurrences in the committee except for the statement of the Senator from New York——

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator passes from the point he is just leaving, I should like to ask him a question, if he is willing.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand the Senator to be unwilling, if Senators are to be elected by the people, or, on the other hand, to desire that inquiry into the election, into the legality of the proceedings, whether fraudulent or affected by intimidation or in any other way, shall be made here as they are now made in the House of Representatives?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; I am entirely willing that those inquiries shall be made here, and under our present right to judge of the elections, returns, and qualification of our own members we have ample power in that respect.

Mr. HOAR. I am quite sure that my question is clear to the Senator, because his answer is clear to me, but I want to have it clear to anybody who may read what is said here. It is expected, then, that if hereafter Senators are elected by the people to this Chamber there are to be inquiries as to the elections in entire States, whether little States like Delaware or great States like New York and Illinois, as to the proceedings at the election, so that seats in the Senate will be awarded or refused to persons who claim them under the practice which has prevailed in the House of Representatives in like cases.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very much afraid that such contests will be determined here, just as they have frequently been in the House of Representatives, more according to party considerations than on their merits.

Mr. HOAR. That is—if the Senator will pardon me one further sentence—instead of having such questions remanded to the State legislatures—and I very reluctantly made the report in the Indiana case, where I believed a great wrong was done—they are hereafter, if this amendment prevails, to be settled by party vote?

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. Is that what the Senator proposes?

Mr. BAILEY. The suggestion which the Senator from Massachusetts makes is a very strong argument against the change, which, in spite of that, I shall support.

But the special objection which I urged to the amendment offerred by the Senator from New York and adopted by the committee was that under its operation the Senate should go down into the various States, and not only go into the ballot boxes, as is done in the case of contested elections in the other branch of Congress, but it also gives Congress a power not now possessed by the House of Representatives in respect to its members to prescribe the qualifications of every man who is permitted to vote for a Senator. This question of qualifications has heretofore been left, and, as I think, has been wisely left, to be regulated by the several States.

The Constitution framers contented themselves with the provision that whoever is permitted by each State to vote for members of its most numerous branch of the legislature should also be permitted to vote for Representatives in Congress.

Mr. HOAR. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not wish to interrupt him——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. In the case of Representatives in Congress the Constitution provides that if any part of the citizens be disfranchised the representation in the House shall be diminished accordingly. Now, in case of the Senate, the Senator——

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator will permit me to say that even the fourteenth amendment still leaves the qualifications of voters with the States.

Mr. HOAR. That is true; but the point I was making for the Senator's consideration was this: If you disfranchise—I beg that nobody will understand that I am starting up any suggestion about any past or present history, I am only putting a purely hypothetical case—if Massachusetts, by her reading and writing clause, be held to disfranchise those of her citizens who can not read her representation must be diminished accordingly. That makes it equal as to all. But if Massachusetts disfranchises her foreign-born citizens, who are nearly or quite a majority of her whole people, and yet retains her votes in the Senate, her equality is kept just the same. That is the difference between the case put by the Senator and this.

Mr. BAILEY. That difference would exist, Mr. President, whether Senators were elected by the legislatures of the respective States or by the people en masse, and therefore I hardly think, with all deference to the Senator from Massachusetts, that his suggestion would alter the argument of this case.

But, Mr. President, having concluded what I desired to say about the statement of my own position, I desire to join the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] in insisting upon a ruling upon the question of order. My opinion is that if the occurrences of the various committees are to be brought into the Senate Chamber in open session by statements from the various members, we are apt on almost every day to have a repetition of what has occurred here this morning.

I have no objection to stating anywhere, and I believe that Senators who know me will believe I am sincere in saying that I have no objection to stating anywhere how I vote or the reasons for my vote, but it will be so easily perceived that as in committee rooms, there is no record and no stenographer to take down the observations of the members, we might find ourselves involved in interminable disputes as to what was said and sometimes as to what was done in committee.

If we are to have that kind of practice, I should like to have a stenographer for every committee, so that if a Senator, in perfectly good faith, differs with me as to what occurred we shall not present the spectacle of opposing in the Senate the statements of each against the other, but that there will be a record to which we can appeal and satisfy not only our colleagues, but ourselves.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I will occupy the attention of the Senate but one moment, and that for the purpose of clearing up a doubt or removing a cloud which has been raised by the remarks which have been made in reference to my amendment. I am in thorough accord with what the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has said about the proceedings of the committee, and I endeavored to keep myself within proper bounds, and to go no further than the vote of the committee, which had been taken by yeas and nays and recorded, and which I knew had already been revealed, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] said that he would reveal it if no one of us made any objection. So far in this discussion there has been nothing said as to the transactions of the committee about which there has been the slightest dispute.

As to the amendment which I have offered to the resolution, I shall discuss that when it comes before the Senate, as I trust it will, and think it will after the next meeting of the committee. In order that in this discussion there may be given the reason why I offered that amendment to the resolution, I will read briefly from the Constitution.

The fifteenth article of amendment to the Constitution says:

ARTICLE XV.

SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Everybody knows that that provision of the Constitution is either evaded or it is violated by the provisions which have been made, as Southern Senators say for their own protection—we are not discussing that—in the States where this vote exists.

The fourteenth amendment provided a punishment for the violation of the fifteenth amendment, which was this:

But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

When those two amendments to the Constitution were adopted for the purpose of securing the vote which is herein described, no one dreamed at that time that there would ever be a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States by altering it so that United States Senators should no longer be elected by the legislatures representing, as the framers of the Constitution intended, the sovereignty of the States, and that both the Senate and the House of Representatives should, by amendment to the Constitution, be made popular chambers. While therefore this punishment for violating the fifteenth amendment is provided as to all Federal and State offices for which the people vote, United States Senators are not mentioned. If the amendment should be adopted for the election of United States Senators by the people and any State should prevent, by anything in the Constitution or laws, a large number of its citizens from voting, that State can not in any way be reached for doing this in the election of United States Senators, though it may for all other officers. This amendment to the resolution giving Congress supervision of such elections supplies that deficiency.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, notwithstanding all that I have heard from members of the committee with reference to this matter, it seems to me that five months is a sufficiently long time to enable a committee of this body to report upon a proposition which has been argued for one hundred years, and a proposition as to which, I repeat, every member of that committee had a definite and fixed opinion when it went to the committee. To tell me that five months is not sufficient time for them to report either favorably or adversely is, it seems to me, to tell me that which is unreasonable.

In regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], I give my opinion that it was offered for the specific purpose which it has accomplished, and that was to avoid a direct vote upon the proposition as to whether or not United States Senators should be elected by the people, upon the resolution as it came from the other House. That has been my judgment about it—that the intention was to delay it and to embarrass the situation, so that we could not take a vote on the main proposition.

Mr. DEPEW. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. My object was to have the Senator from Arkansas and his associates go upon record as to whether they are willing to have the voters who are declared such by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution to vote for United States Senators in their respective States. In other words, if an amendment to the Constitution is adopted that United States Senators be elected by the people, are they willing that the people shall be allowed to vote, or only a select party?

Mr. BERRY. The object of the amendment, in my opinion, as I repeat, was to prevent a direct vote upon the joint resolution as it came from the House. I say that the resolution ought to be voted upon as the House passed it. If two-thirds of this Senate are in favor of it, let it go to the States, and if two-thirds are opposed to it they ought to have the courage to put themselves on record. If more than one-third are opposed to it, they ought to have the courage to so record themselves, and let the matter be squarely presented as to how Senators stand upon that proposition. But, Mr. President, in view——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. In a moment. In view of what the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has said, that he is satisfied that at an early date a vote can be had upon the proposition, I ask leave to be permitted to withdraw the resolution which I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. BERRY. Then I withdraw the resolution, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. Before the Senator withdraws the resolution I hope he will permit me to withdraw my motion to refer it to the committee.

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator from Arkansas withdraws his resolution I hope he will allow me to occupy just a moment.

Mr. BERRY. I will gladly hear the Senator, and let my withdrawal of the resolution be understood as pending.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope the resolution will not be withdrawn before the Senator from Ohio can be heard.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not wish to speak at any length, but I do want to say something in view of what has been said here as to my own attitude in regard to this matter.

The Senator has remarked that certainly five months is long enough time for a committee to consider this matter, and there is a great deal of reasonableness in that remark. The Senator will recognize, however, that we are all pretty busy here, and it does not mean when a measure is before a committee for five months that the committee has been for five months struggling with the matter.

But, Mr. President, what I want to say is, it does not take me five months to reach a conclusion in regard to this question. I am opposed to the joint resolution as it came to us from the House, and I shall vote in opposition to it in that form under all circumstances. I am opposed to it, Mr. President, not because I am unwilling that the people of the United States in the various States should have an opportunity to vote in the selection of Senators, but I am opposed to it because if we are to have Senators chosen by popular vote, I want the people to vote. It seems to me also that if we are to change the rule at all as to the power that is to select Senators we ought to choose an electorate that will be the same in every State, as it is the same in every State now. The Constitution prescribes that in each State the legislature shall choose the Senators. I doubt if it would be wise to change that. I think, upon the whole, that provision of the Constitution has worked well, but if we are to change it I am unwilling to make a change that will give to the State of Massachusetts or any other State a right to prescribe a different electorate in choosing a United States Senator from that which may be designated in my State.

I do not propose to comment—it is not necessary that I should—upon the different election laws that obtain in the different States. It is not necessary that we should call attention to the fact that there are differences now existing; but it is at least appropriate for us to take into consideration that it is a possibility that there may be widely different laws in the different States. Massachusetts does have a different qualification for exercising the right of suffrage from that which obtains in Ohio. They have a different qualification in the State of New York. They have different qualifications in many of the States of the Union from those which obtain in my State. It is not necessary for me to say which is the wisest, whether that obtaining in Ohio or that obtaining in Massachusetts or that obtaining in New York or that obtaining in some other State. The point that I want to make is that if we are to elect United States Senators by popular vote instead of, as heretofore, by the legislature, we ought to prescribe an electorate that will be the same in each and every State of the Union and provide for the enforcement of all laws enacted in that behalf.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose the joint resolution as it passed the House should pass the Senate and be adopted by the necessary number of States and become a part of the fundamental law of the land, does the Senator from Ohio not believe that Congress would have the right, if in its judgment it thought it to be wise, to provide for the qualifications without an amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. FORAKER. I beg the Senator's pardon; but I can not hear him distinctly enough across the Chamber to know what his question is.

Mr. MITCHELL. The question is this: If the House joint resolution should become a part of the Constitution of the United States without any amendment to it, as proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], does not the Senator from Ohio believe that Congress has the power, without any amendment to the Constitution, if it thought it wise to do so, to prescribe the qualifications of those voting for United States Senators?

Mr. FORAKER. The resolution provides to the contrary, as I understand it, but that is at least, if I am mistaken, a debatable question. It is my opinion that while we are considering the matter, if we are to take action at all we ought to remove all question of doubt about it. Therefore it is that while I would doubt the wisdom of making any change at all, yet I am willing to vote for the House joint resolution with the amendment added to it that has been proposed by the Senator from New York, for then I know that it will be unquestionably in the power of Congress to prescribe the same qualifications for voting for United States Senators in each and every State of the Union, and to enforce such right; but I would be unwilling to vote for it without that.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if there is not to-day a difference in the States in the qualifications, especially as to age, of those who compose the legislatures?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly there is.

Mr. CLAPP. Then to-day under the present system all the Senators are not elected by men who possess a uniform qualification throughout the Union.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it is true, as suggested——

Mr. CLAPP. Now, I want to ask another question.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to answer that one.

Mr. CLAPP. All right; I beg your pardon.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator if he prefers to ask both questions; that is all right.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. FORAKER. It is true that there is a different qualification for voting for members of the legislature in the different States, and that is objectionable. But while it is true that the legislatures in the various States are chosen by a different electorate, yet the fact remains that the legislature when chosen is the body representing the State and the same body in each and every State chooses the United States Senator. The difference in selecting legislatures is now beyond control, but if we make any change let us strive to secure uniformity. The nearest approach to uniformity at present is that which is prescribed by the Constitution.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, let me ask the Senator another question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Suppose that in a State to-day there is a vote of 25,000 men that is suppressed, and in that State a legislature is elected upon a vote wherein there is a suppressed vote of 25,000, we will say. The Constitution is changed, and the electors of that State vote directly for a President with still 25,000 votes suppressed, except in the possible character of the individual who gets the result of that suffrage would it make one whit's difference so far as representation goes from existing conditions?

Mr. FORAKER. Well, Mr. President, there might be a difference of opinion in regard to the point the Senator makes, as I understand the point. But it seems to me, if we are to make any change at all, we ought to make perfectly clear what it is we desire shall be the electorate in each State in the selection of United States Senators, and it is in our power to do that; and we should make it possible, not only to have uniformity of qualification, but also power to enforce it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not rise to make an inquiry of the Senator from Ohio, but I desire to cordially join with him in saying that whatever is done in this matter shall be so plainly done that nothing may be left to inference or construction. I apprehend that when this question comes before the Senate the Senate will find itself very much in the attitude of the committee. A majority of the committee are hostile to any change, but one or two are willing to a change in the manner of electing Senators, provided that change shall be coupled with a Federal power over the qualification of voters. When that proviso was adopted then those of us who desire a change in the manner of electing Senators were opposed to the proposition as a whole, and I apprehend that the result will be the same when that resolution comes to the Senate. The majority here will join the Senator from New York in adopting the amendment which he has proposed, and every gentleman in the Senate opposed to the change will vote for that amendment, simply because they know that when that amendment is adopted all men of my belief will vote against it.

Before resuming my seat, I want to say to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] that if his construction of this amendment is right and its adoption would confer upon Congress the power to determine the qualification of the electors for Senators, I would no more support it than I would invite a pestilence.

Mr. FORAKER. I appreciate very much what the Senator from Texas interrupted me to say. He has truthfully stated that in the committee we had the difficulties he has mentioned. I do not know when I ever saw a proposition that had been sent to a committee more conscientiously considered. It was considered in good temper; it was considered with all the other propositions that its consideration started, and they were not a few; they were many. We had differences; we had honest differences. We dealt with the question as best we could, and if the joint resolution should come into the Senate you will find differences of opinion developed here beyond what anybody anticipates, for it is a great, broad question.

But what I rose to say I have, perhaps, stated sufficiently, yet I want to repeat, in a word, that I am opposed to the House joint resolution as it came to us, but I am willing to vote for it at any time with the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York added to it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rose to ask the Senator from Oregon a question, suggested by his question. He asked the Senator from Ohio whether he did not believe that if this amendment were adopted as it came from the House Congress would have power to determine and prescribe the qualifications of voters for Senators. Now, I want to ask him if he believes what he asked the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do believe that Congress would have the power.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL. Without any additional amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to this fact. I understand that one eminent Senator, an earnest advocate of this proposition, thinks that if the constitutional amendment be adopted as proposed by the House we have the right, without further constitutional power, to prescribe the qualifications of electors of Senators in different States.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is to say——

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. Now, I was going to ask the question.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not my opinion. The Senator means the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOAR. I understand. Now, I desire to ask the Senator from Texas if in the face of the opinion of so eminent and admirable a lawyer who has studied this question so many years as the Senator from Oregon, he is willing to take the risk?

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to reply to the Senator from Massachusetts. I want to tell him I would not take the risk. But I really think there is no risk in rejecting the opinion of the Senator from Oregon upon that particular point. I would hesitate to reject it on any other point.

Mr. MITCHELL. My opinion was based upon the proposition that our present Constitution should be amended so as to provide for the election of United States Senators by the people.

Mr. HOAR. I understand.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, this debate has taken a very unusual course. The transactions in the committees have heretofore been regarded as things that were not to be detailed.

I only arise for the purpose of stating my own position in reference to this question. I do not care to detail what occurred in the committee.

This Constitution was formed, as it is oftentimes said, that the majority may govern. In part that is true. But it was formed mainly that the rights of the minority might be protected.

I live in a section of country that has been for many years the minority section. I have thought over this question time and again, and since it has been in that committee I have studied it carefully.

The amendment of the Constitution of the United States to some Senators even seems to be of little more consequence than the amendment of a law by which a bridge was built over some creek in the United States.

Mr. President, the section of country in which I live has no hope except in the Constitution of the United States and the restrictions that it imposes upon the majority of legislators and rulers and courts. It has no hope except founded in the principles of that Constitution, and for myself individually I have made up my mind to hold on to the fragments of that Constitution as long as one of them remains.

We are told by one of the highest officers in this Administration that the trend of thought is ever to a central government, and that is in a large part true. It is almost universally true for the last forty years. We are told that the United States itself in the olden time and by the men who framed it was in the plural; that the United States was a plural number, but since Appomattox it has become a singular number. I am afraid there is a great deal of truth in that, too.

But I want to say that I am opposed to the joint resolution as it came from the House in all its parts. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] in all its parts.

Mr. President, we have lying now on the table of that committee divers propositions to change the Constitution, and I am afraid some of them will be passed. One proposition is simply to elect the Senators by the people; another proposition is to elect the Senators by the people, and that Congress shall prescribe and settle the qualifications of all the voters in all the States voting for Senators. There is another proposition to give to each State Senators in this body in proportion to the population of that State; in other words, to give to New York 14 Senators, to give to Pennsylvania 12 Senators, to give to Illinois 9 Senators, to give to Ohio 8 Senators, and so on down until you get to the lowest, which has 2.

Mr. President, we seem to have lost all respect for the works of our fathers. We seem to have lost all respect for the Constitution of the United States. It is nothing more than a trifling law, which, as one Senator said, had served its purpose. Now, I tell Senators, without disclosing anything that was in the committee, I am opposed to all of your amendments of every sort, and I intend to cling to the fragments as long as one is left. Do you as you please for yourselves.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to express my very hearty concurrence in every word that my colleague [Mr. PETTUS] has so well said, and to announce to my own constituency that I will stand on the ground he occupies on this very long vexed question.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] says the question has been up for a hundred years. After a hundred years of assault if this principle of the Constitution has stood firmly, it is very wise in us not to hastily disturb it. The people must have been very much attached to it in their sober moments, and the States must have been fondly wedded to it in their long action in this Union to have maintained it against these assaults for a hundred years. This feature of the Constitution is not only fundamental, but it is radical. When we have adopted the change that is proposed in the House joint resolution, if it is ever adopted, I can see that there are other very serious adjustments to be made in the constitutional system to make it work harmoniously.

I think that this committee though, under the present circumstances, ought to go very slowly in this matter for another reason. The State of Delaware voted against the ratification of the fourteenth amendment and the fifteenth amendment, and she has no voice on this floor. She is dumb, as if the State had been stricken from the roll of States and expelled from the Union. She has the right to express her present view upon any necessity that is supposed to have arisen out of the adoption of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.

But, sir, she is not here to vote. We may say that is her fault. That may be. I do not believe it. But at all events it is a great misfortune to the country. If the House joint resolution should pass the Senate at this session by a two-thirds majority it would have to be submitted to the legislature of Delaware for its ratification or its rejection. The State is not dead in the constitutional sense, although it is voiceless and virtually dead in the Senate.

Now, sir, I shall object on all occasions that it is transcending the constitutional prerogatives and powers of the Senate to amend the fundamental law of the Union while a State of this Union has no voice upon this floor, no representative here, particularly a State like Delaware, to express herself negatively to the ratification of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, which appear to be, and I really believe are, the sole cause of this new movement for the amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Besides that, we have three States knocking for their admission into the Union to-day, and with the probability of being admitted at this session of Congress. It would be unwise, Mr. President, and unjust on our part, if we expect to admit those three States into the Union at the present session of Congress, to pass a joint resolution for the purpose of amending the Constitution in this organic, radical, fundamental proposition without waiting for their arrival in legal form in this body to pass upon the measure.

These Territories may not have rights now, but they are urging their rights to statehood here, and, so far as the Territories of this continent are concerned, there appears to be very little opposition to that right, which has been withheld at least from two of them now for more than sixty years after we have promised them statehood under a treaty with Mexico, which made the express provision that they should be admitted as States into the American Union, just as the Louisiana treaty made provision for the admission of States into the American Union.

So I think this committee will act wisely; I think it will act patriotically; I think, Mr. President, it will conserve the very best interests of the present generation and of all generations to come if it shall at least wait before the organic law is changed in this radical respect until statehood has been established and fully completed at least on the continent. I am not including Alaska, although I might very well do it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I venture to detain the Senate for a moment. In view of the statement of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] that in his judgment the House joint resolution would warrant Congress in prescribing the qualifications of electors for Senators, and as I have said I would not vote for any proposition that gave Congress such a power, and in view of the further fact that I have voted for this resolution, I desire to incorporate in the record of these proceedings the third section of the House joint resolution:

SECTION 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, who shall be elected by a direct vote of the people thereof, for a term of six years, and each Senator shall have one vote; a plurality of the votes cast for candidates for Senator shall elect, and the electors shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

In other words, upon the subject of the qualifications of electors for Senators, this resolution adopts the exact language of the Constitution in reference to qualifications of electors for members to the House. I assume that neither the Senator from Oregon nor any other Senator will contend that Congress possesses the power to control the qualifications of those who vote for Representatives in Congress; and I can not comprehend how they can insist that the same words in this resolution can confer a different power.

I venture to say that my distinguished friend from Oregon, who is, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, a most excellent lawyer, when he rereads the language of this joint resolution, will withdraw his statement that under it Congress could prescribe the qualifications of electors.

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is withdrawn.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Yesterday in the course of the debate a passage occurred between the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] and myself, in which I used some harsh and unparliamentary language. Upon being very properly called to order by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] I subsequently withdrew the language complained of.

Upon further consideration, and without any suggestion except from my own sense of propriety, I feel that I ought to have done what I now propose to do, to express my regret at having used language which I believe was unjust to the Senator from Iowa and to offer my apologies to that Senator.

The personal relations between the Senator from Iowa and myself have always been of the most friendly and cordial character. I trust that they will not be interrupted by anything that has occurred in this debate.

Now, that I am on my feet, Mr. President, I will say that I drifted yesterday into a long discussion without any intention whatever of doing so when I took the floor. Under an honest and genuine sense of outrage and indignation for many things that have occurred I used some language and some epithets which I recognize were not proper to be used. Whatever may be my opinion of Smith, or of Bell, or of Funston, I recognize that it adds nothing to the force of a statement to denounce them in harsh, bitter, and severe language. Just and proper comment upon any conduct of theirs is entirely right, but I recognize that whatever may have been their actions in the Philippines or elsewhere it is not proper to apply to them harsh and offensive epithets. I wish to express my regret that I have done so, and in the future, whatever may be the stress of this debate or the intensity of my own feelings, I shall attempt to refrain from the use of any such language.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, it is only proper for me to add to what the Senator from Tennessee has said that I was drawn yesterday by the accident of the controversy into the debate. I have known the Senator from Tennessee for many years, and our relations have been of such a character that I had surely no intention to disturb his feelings. Everything that I said was intended to be playful and cheerful, and was intended to add, if anything, a little gayety to the discussion.

If I wounded the Senator's sensibilities, I express my regret, and I desire to personally acknowledge the statement which he has made.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2295.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment——

Mr. COCKRELL. What bill is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Philippine government bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. One or two Senators have already given notice that they intended to speak, and there are a number in the Chamber——

Mr. LODGE. I am aware that notice has been given by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that he would speak. If a vote can be reached on this bill I am certain that he will not interpose any objection. All I desire is to have the bill debated or voted upon or a time fixed to take a vote. I do not like to stand in the way of all the business of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I was otherwise engaged for the moment, but I have heard some reference to myself. I do not know what it was.

Mr. LODGE. The Chair was presenting the parliamentary condition of the bill to the Senate. The Senator from Idaho made objection that several Senators had given notice of speeches. I merely wanted to explain what I think is true, that if we could have a vote on the bill the Senator from Ohio would interpose no objection.

Mr. FORAKER. No.

Mr. LODGE. I was not aware of any other notice, but I am aware that there will be more debate on the bill, of course. I do not want to waste the time of the Senate, and I think we ought to continue the debate. There are a lot of amendments here that can be dealt with. I will ask unanimous consent that on the 21st day of May—that is, a week from next Wednesday—at 4 o'clock, the vote be taken on the bill and amendments.

Mr. DUBOIS. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. Is there any day that the Senator will suggest?

Mr. DUBOIS. I thought I had the floor. I had not completed my statement.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not know that he had the floor.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator interrupted me.

Mr. LODGE. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator. I thought he had concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS. I know of Senators on this side of the Chamber who intend to debate the bill. I think I know of some on the other side. Now, no one is more aware of the fact than the Senator from Massachusetts that the debate has been almost continuous on the bill. I never have known during my term in the Senate where a bill was so continuously debated as this measure has been. There has been scarcely any other measure of legislation to interrupt it. Of course the debate must cease in time, and the Senator from Massachusetts will get along faster if he does not insist on some time for a vote until after a few more speeches have been made.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, Mr. President, if the proposition I make is objected to and no proposition of a time will be offered by the opposition, of course it is plain that no limit to the debate can be obtained. Under those circumstances, as we have been debating the bill now for nearly two weeks, nothing remains for me to do except what I dislike extremely to do—to lengthen the session and increase the time for debate. That is my duty under the circumstances. I do it very reluctantly, but I have nothing else that I can do. The bill is before the Senate, and I think we ought to vote or amend it or do something.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Massachusetts is in charge of the bill, and he has a perfect right, of course, to take any line which he desires. I wish to warn the Senator from Massachusetts, however, that if he resorts to unusual measures, which are not justified at all, this having been an almost continuous debate, he will not make any progress with the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is not necessary to threaten. I made no threats at all. All I said was what I conceived to be my duty. I have assumed all along that Senators on the other side were ready at a proper time to allow us to take a vote on the bill. I have made the usual request at the end of a considerable period of debate. That request is not granted. If I can not get the opposition to suggest even a time when they will be willing to close the debate, I am forced back on what I am most unwilling to do, to ask for a longer time each day to be devoted to the bill.

I have no right, in charge of the bill, to stand in the way of the other business of the Senate. It is my duty to try and get a vote on the bill as soon as possible in order to clear the way for other business and to enable Congress to adjourn, if possible, before the hot weather comes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think no one can complain as to the way this debate has been conducted up to this time on this side of the Chamber. There has certainly not been anything to suggest any effort at unnecessary delay. There has been no time taken that was not devoted to legitimate discussion and fair debate.

It seems to me that the Senator from Massachusetts hardly has any occasion to propose longer hours than the Senate has been sitting up to this time. I believe that when there has been a reasonable discussion, when the Senators on this side who desire to discuss the bill have had an opportunity to do so, they will vote without any trouble and there will be no unnecessary delay. But Senators on this side have a right to discuss the bill in reasonable hours, and I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts ought to resort to any means of this sort, at least not under the circumstances that exist up to this time.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, I do not wish——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator noticed what I said, I said I had assumed that Senators on the other side were perfectly ready to allow us to vote on the bill when the debate was exhausted, but that unless I could get some agreement of a limit I was bound to keep the bill before the Senate. I have no other choice. I can not do anything else. Nobody, I think, ought to expect me to do anything else. I have not only offered a time myself, but I have asked to have a time named. There must be some time when it is possible to agree that we shall vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But what I was objecting to was the Senator's statement that he would ask the Senate to sit longer hours than had been done heretofore. The Senate has been holding reasonably long sessions. It has been sitting every day in the week except Sunday, and the debate has run along very reasonably.

I have no objection to the Senator keeping the bill constantly before the Senate and all the time up to the period when the Senate gets through with the discussion, but I do not think there ought to be any effort to resort to longer hours now. There is no reason for that to be done, as far as I can see, and I do not think it will facilitate the passage of the bill, or final action on it, at all to resort to such methods.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Arkansas understands perfectly that I have no desire to resort to——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I only want to remark that I do not understand the Senator from Massachusetts is now asking that we sit longer hours. He only remarked that he hoped it would not become necessary that he should make such a request.

Mr. LODGE. That is all I have said.

Mr. FORAKER. All I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts in this connection is that the remark made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] was, I thought, entirely justifiable under the circumstances. His remark was (a part of it that I think the Senator from Massachusetts probably overlooked) that they could not at this time suggest a day, but after two or three more speeches were made he thought they would be able to fix a time.

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the Senator from Idaho say that.

Mr. FORAKER. There is so much literature on this subject that it is a good deal of labor for a man to turn aside from other questions that he has been considering to get ready to make a speech upon the pending bill, and I do not wonder that some of the Senators who want to speak are not ready to go on.

Mr. LODGE. I did not so understand the Senator from Idaho. He knows very well that I want to be as reasonable as possible.

Mr. DUBOIS. I think the Senator from Ohio slightly misunderstood me. I am in no position to speak for this side of the Chamber or for the minority of the Committee on the Philippines, of which I am a member. I would not pretend to get up here and speak for the minority of the committee, much less for this side of the Chamber. I did say that, having in view the fact that we have met on Saturdays as well as every other day of the week and the debate has been going on constantly, it has been very difficult for Senators to prepare to make a speech. I myself would like to make a speech on this bill, but I am in the condition of a good many other Senators. Attending the committee meetings every morning and being in constant attendance here, it has been extremely difficult to settle down and prepare to make such a speech as a Senator should make on such an important bill. Other Senators on this side of the Chamber, I know, are in the same position. I believe that after the debate has gone along reasonably, not under the lash, especially not under extraordinary hours, we can then discuss an agreement to vote or come to a vote abruptly.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the bill is before the Senate. There are amendments pending. I see no reason why the time this afternoon should be wasted. I can not see why we can not deal with some of the multifarious amendments that are here.

Mr. MORGAN. Has any amendment been offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. LODGE. A number of amendments have been laid on the table. None has yet been moved.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I suppose of course there will be no special objection to any formal amendment, but amendments such as have been offered from this side are amendments of a fundamental character, which necessarily involve the consideration of the general features of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the Senator can have examined with care the amendments offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], for they are amendments directed to perfecting certain sections of the bill. They are very important amendments, going to the details of the bill, but not fundamental amendments at all.

Mr. BACON. I think, if I recollect them aright—I only heard them read—they are much more than mere formal amendments.

Mr. LODGE. I have read them with great care and examined their application in each case.

Mr. BACON. I am very frank to say that I am not prepared to vote upon those amendments.

But I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator. Of course, there will be no possible disposition to interfere with the Senator reaching a vote on the bill, but I think we should be somewhat warned by the experience which was had when the Philippine tariff bill was before the Senate. The Senator will remember that when he asked that there should be a date fixed for the vote the statement was made by himself that he did not know of more than one Senator, I think possibly two Senators, on that side of the Chamber who would desire to speak, and the time was fixed within a limit which had that statement in view. Yet it so eventuated that when the time was fixed a great many Senators on that side of the Chamber were heard thereafter and occupied a very large part of the time.

Mr. LODGE. They occupied exactly one-half of the time. I kept an exact memorandum of it here at the clerk's desk.

Mr. BACON. There was no more time occupied than ought to have been taken. The Senator will not misunderstand me on that point. My complaint was that Senators in favor of the bill did not give as much time to the discussion as I thought they ought to give to it; but the Senator will mark the application which I make, that in consequence of the much larger number speaking than the Senator himself anticipated the time which was left, although equally divided, did not afford an opportunity to some on this side of the Chamber who desired to speak.

This is certainly a most important measure, very far-reaching, and so long as it is confined to legitimate discussion it might well consume more time than that to which it is entitled. I think the Senator will agree that so far as the practical questions and details of the bill are concerned there has not been a discussion of them by the Senators who occupy the affirmative, and upon those details we would be very glad to hear discussion. It is with the view that we may ascertain what will be the amount of work required in reply to Senators that we prefer to hear Senators on the other side before we are called upon to fix a time. I certainly would not desire that one single moment more of the time be occupied than is necessary for Senators to be heard who may desire to be heard.

Mr. LODGE. In any proposition I would make for fixing a time I should want it to be in such a form that there should be an equal division of time between the two sides. Whenever the proposition is made I shall ask it in that way. But as to discussing the bill, I tried myself to explain its provisions. I thought I did. I now find from the Senator from Georgia that I did not explain them at all.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] also explained them; at least I thought he did. I listened to him and it seemed to me a pretty lucid explanation. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON] devoted considerable time to them, and I now find from the Senator from Georgia that he has not said anything about it either. Of course we can not hope to satisfy the Senator from Georgia by any reply; I do not flatter myself with that expectation, but we shall try.

Mr. BACON. It is doubtless my fault.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all.

Mr. BACON. Nobody can attribute it to any lack of ability on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts. I take all the blame to myself in that unfortunate condition of affairs.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I would suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that if there is no one present prepared to proceed on the pending bill possibly it would be well to take up the Calendar, temporarily laying aside the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say a few words upon the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator with great pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the discussion has gone on upon the general policy and principle of the bill. I wish to make some objections to the bill itself, if I can get the attention of the Senate long enough.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] day before yesterday complained that nobody had discussed the bill. I think that is a pretty fair charge to make, and that he might not be out of sympathy with the rest, he himself followed the precedent and proceeded to discuss everything else but the bill, except to tell us, in a few laudatory words, what a good bill it is.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to some things in this bill which it seems to me to have been put in here ex industria. I can conceive of no purpose in inserting the clause I shall read unless it was to make the bill objectionable to some of us who have not been in accord with the policy of the Administration in reference to these islands. The first section contains the following:

> That the action of the President of the United States in creating the Philippine Commission and authorizing said Commission to exercise the powers of government to the extent and in the manner and form and subject to the regulation and control set forth in the instructions of the President to the Philippine Commission, dated April 7, 1900, and in creating the offices of civil governor and vice-governor of the Philippines, and authorizing said civil governor and vice-governor to exercise the powers of government to the extent and in the manner and form set forth in the Executive order dated June 21, 1901, and in establishing four executive departments of government in the Philippine Islands as set forth in the act of the Philippine Commission, entitled "An act providing an organization for the departments of the interior, of commerce and police, of finance and justice, and of public instruction," enacted September 6, 1901, is hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed, and until otherwise provided by law the said archipelago shall continue to be governed as thereby provided, and all laws passed hereafter by the Philippine Commission shall have an enacting clause as follows: "By authority of the United States be it enacted by Philippine Commission."

I wish to say that that is a most remarkable provision to insert in a proposed law. Did the President of the United States have authority to appoint this Commission? If he did have authority, what is the purpose and object of approving it and ratifying it and confirming it? If he did not have that authority, the act having been performed, is it good legislation for us to approve it, and can we approve what he had not any authority to do? If it was the purpose only to ratify an act that might be doubtful and set at rest any question, that would be one thing. But here, as I said, ex industria, the committee provides not only that it is ratified and confirmed, but it is approved. We are asked to say that the act was not only lawful and regular within his constitutional prerogative, but we are glad that he did it, because it was the right thing to do.

Mr. President, I doubt very much whether you will find another statute or proposed statute anywhere in the country of that kind, although in these modern days I have grown a little suspicious of putting out a challenge as to the regularity and constitutionality of proposed enactments, for we have had almost everything proposed here of late, without much reference to law or reason. But it seems to me that this is one of the most vicious, uncalled-for, and indefensible propositions I have ever seen.

If I believed that the President of the United States had the authority to do everything he did do, I should not be willing to stand up here and say that I approved of it, for I did not approve of it, and I have been criticising it more or less for some time. Many of my associates in this Chamber, and not entirely all on this side either, have been doing the same thing. The committee apparently wanted to make sure that they would not get any aid from this side of the Chamber. If there is any great merit in this legislation, I suppose the committee want to have it all on their side. As far as I am concerned, Mr. President, they can have it. I shall never vote for any proposition, even if all the rest were in accordance with my views, asserting that I approve of everything the President did. Neither should I agree to that if I knew he had the constitutional power to do everything that he did.

We are not only to approve what he did under his war power, which was more extensive, in my judgment, than any we could confer on him by law, but we are to approve of the exercise of his power under what is called the Spooner amendment or the legislation which took place here. We are to approve his action "in creating the offices of civil governor and vice-governor of the Philippines, and authorizing said civil governor and vice-governor to exercise the powers of government to the extent and in the manner and form set forth in the Executive order dated June 21, 1901."

Mr. President, I am not going into that at all. I am not going to discuss that question. I think he authorizes the Commission to do things he had not any power to authorize it to do. That is enough for me. That cuts me out from voting for the bill. I wish to repeat, if his acts were lawful and proper and not in contravention of law, either statutory or constitutional or common law, which governs us to some extent, then there is no necessity here for ratification or confirmation, certainly not for approval.

The provision which follows reads:

> And all laws passed hereafter by the Philippine Commission shall have an enacting clause as follows: "By authority of the United States be it enacted by the Philippine Commission."

I should not like very much to vote for that provision. I have always understood that under the Constitution the power of the enactment of laws rested in Congress, with the approval, of course, of the Executive. I want some constitutional lawyer to tell me where we get the authority to turn this legislative power over to this Commission? It is not a legislative body; nobody calls it that; nobody pretends that it is a legislative body. But we have been asking these conundrums day after day, and we get nothing in reply except that some Senator gets up and tells us we are a syndicate of vituperation, etc. These things do not seem to be of sufficient importance for the majority of this body to pay any attention to them.

I am not going into this matter very much in detail. There are some things in this bill which trouble me. There are some things that are so unusual and so extraordinary in the bill that I do think I shall take a little time, if nobody else does, to call the attention of the Senate to them. I do not suppose that Senators on the other side will take up this bill in detail. Nobody, at least, has as yet done so. While the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to some extent did that, yet it was very hastily and very imperfectly done, it seems to me, so far as details and explanations were concerned.

I wish to call attention to section 4 of the bill, which reads:

> SEC. 4. That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in the Philippine Islands—

I do not know what becomes of the Spanish subjects—they were all Spanish subjects—and of the Filipinos who happened to be temporarily absent—> and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands and as such entitled to the protection of the United States, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain entered into on the 11th day of April, 1899.

Mr. President, if any lawyer in this body or anywhere else will tell me what the legal status of those people is, I should like to have him do so. They are citizens of the Philippine Islands, the bill says. They are inhabitants of the islands, I know. Are they citizens of all the islands, or are the people who live in Luzon citizens of that island, and those who live in another island citizens of that other island? There seems to me to be a remarkable degree of looseness about this proposition. I do not believe the committee could have given this matter any careful attention. I do not know who drew this section, but I know one thing as a lawyer—and every lawyer here knows it—that the inhabitant of an island can not be a citizen of the island unless there is a government in the island, a sovereignty. There is not any such thing possible under the law as that a man can be a citizen of other than a sovereignty. As I said the other day, it may be a qualified sovereignty, but there must be a sovereignty and there must be a government.

Every Senator on the other side of the Chamber who has spoken in defense of the bill has declared that there was not any government there at all in any shape or form, except ours, but the Filipinos are not citizens of our Government; they are not citizens even of this Commission's government; but they are, it is said, citizens of the Philippine Islands. If there had been an island there that had only 10 men on it, where the Government of the United States never exercised the slightest power, then those men would be just as much citizens of that island as the population of four and a half millions are citizens of Luzon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says they are not citizens of the government of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. TELLER. I have not said that they were citizens of the government of the Philippine Islands. If I had, that would be another thing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says that there can not be citizenship without sovereignty and government. There is sovereignty and government there, and the Filipinos are declared to be citizens of the Philippine Islands. Since both the conditions which the Senator names are present, why can they not be citizens?

Mr. TELLER. Because ex industria, as I said in the other case, they are limited to being citizens of the Philippine Islands. The bill does not say "citizens of a government presided over by the Philippine Commission;" it does not say "citizens of the United States" nor "citizens of a province or a Territory of the United States." It simply says they are citizens of the Philippine Islands. I insist that that in law absolutely means nothing at all except a legislative absurdity.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator said that the phrase was meaningless because there was no government there and that we had all declared that there was no government there. But there is a government there. Therefore the condition, which the Senator says is necessary to vitalize their condition into citizenship, exists, as I understand.

Mr. TELLER. There is not a government that is in control, or that has sought any control, or that has attempted any control over a good portion of those islands, unless it be the government of the Mohammedan chieftains down there. But if it is the purpose to make these people citizens of the government of the Philippine Islands, then I shall want to inquire what kind of a government that is. Is it a government subject to the United States? Is it a government of the United States or a Territory? Is it a province or has it some unknown relation to the Government of the United States? I understand that if there is a government there at all, it is a Government of the United States, and not a government of the Philippine Islands. If it is not a Government of the United States, there is not any government there at all. But it is not a government of the Philippine Islands. We are not a government of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, I will skip some of the provisions of the bill and I will come down to section 7:

SEC. 7. That the Philippine Commission meantime are hereby authorized and directed, in their discretion, to continue to establish additional municipal and provincial governments in the Philippine Islands with popular representative government so far and so fast as communities in such civil divisions are capable, fit, and ready for the same, the qualification of electors in elections in municipalities and provinces to be the same as now provided by law for electors in municipal elections; and said Philippine Commission whenever they find other male inhabitants of lawful age in such municipalities and provinces capable, fit, and ready for such extension shall include the same among the electors, with the purpose of gradually extending to municipalities and provinces permanent popular representative government.

I want to know if there has been any restriction put upon this Philippine Commission? They were authorized, if they were authorized to do anything at all, to create these municipal governments. They have been doing it; and now it seems simply a waste of paper and a waste of words to say that they are to continue. Is this to give them any additional authority? That may not be a very serious objection to the bill, but there is a great portion of this bill which practically means nothing at all though sounding well when read and not considered in connection with present conditions.

Now, I come to an important provision, which is contained in section 8. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to this section, for it seems to touch upon what I have been referring to.

SEC. 8. That the President of the United States, during such time as and whenever the sovereignty and authority of the United States encounter armed resistance in the Philippine Archipelago, and until otherwise provided by Congress, shall continue to regulate and control commercial intercourse with and within said archipelago by such general rules and regulations as he, in his discretion, may deem most conducive to the public interests and the general welfare.

The President is authorized to do these things. How far that is a delegation to the President of the United States of legislative power I do not know, and I shall never know until I know what the President undertakes to do under it. Perhaps he will never do anything; but he may do some things which come within the general regulations of the provisions of existing law, and he may do a great deal more than he is authorized to do by law. But that is a declaration at least that sovereignty is not in the Philippine Islands and that those people are only citizens of the Philippine Islands. If they are only citizens of the Philippine Islands they are not citizens of a sovereignty at all. There can not well be a sovereignty over there. That is the trouble now. The Filipinos want to establish a sovereignty of their own. But they have not yet established that, I will admit, under present conditions. So the Filipino must be left floating around, uncertain whether he is a citizen of the United States or whether he is a man without a country.

I find this provision in the bill:

and as such entitled to the protection of the United States.

I suppose that is a declaration not that they are citizens, but that we have some obligation upon us to discharge, which we are discharging by sending our Army there and by committing the crimes against those people which have been complained of.

There is a provision in the bill authorizing the Government of the United States to exercise the power of eminent domain and to condemn land now owned by the friars. I want to ask any lawyer in this body where the Government of the United States will get the authority to condemn this land and do what the bill declares must be done with it; that is, to put title in itself and proceed to sell the land?

I am sorry that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who deals with these subjects somewhat, is not here. I might, perhaps, get some information from him regarding it. I do not hope to get very much information from the committee on the subject, but will anybody tell me how the Government of the United States is to exercise the power of eminent domain for its own benefit, to seize these lands, and then sell them? I want to know where that power comes from. I do not believe it exists, Mr. President.

There may be a method by which the Government of the United States can dispossess the friars, but it is not under the power of eminent domain; it is under that power that governments have, where they have seized ecclesiastical property, whenever some religious organization has held land to the detriment of the people, put it up and sold it, the proceeds to go to the benefit of the ecclesiastical body and not to the government itself. That is the doctrine of mortmain that we have so often heard about. Perhaps there you might get the authority; but I think it would be better for the committee to go to work and see if they can not find the power to deal with this question of the friars' land. That, I think, is the most important question touching these islands we have now got to deal with; but this is an attempt to do what every lawyer, I think, will admit is an impossible thing—to take these lands under the power of eminent domain.

Mr. President, I am one of those who are exceedingly anxious, as the Senate will recollect on various occasions I have stated, to get rid of the friars. I know they are a source of everlasting friction over there. Those who are friendly and those who are hostile to the Filipinos all alike bear testimony to the fact that those people are a source of much complaint, and that there can be no peace between the people of these islands and any government that recognizes the friars and protects them, as we must do, I have no doubt, under our treaty with Spain. So long as the present status of the friars exists we shall have this same trouble. I suppose the Government will treat with the friars and buy their lands. I hope so, and I hope we shall get rid of them and get the friars out of that country. But this provision here in the bill is of no earthly account. The only method by which the Government could possibly seize these lands, if they can not contract with the owners, has been left out of the bill.

Mr. President, briefly, I want to call attention to the land system over there. I do not care about saying anything whatever about the provisions in reference to mining claims.

I will admit, considering the nature of the debate for the last two weeks, that I am probably out of order in speaking to the bill, and I have received a mild suggestion of that kind from one of our friends here; but I really started out to speak for only a few minutes about the bill, and possibly I may suggest an amendment, though I am not certain as to that.

There are some features of the bill, the mining provisions, that I do not approve of, but I do not care enough about them to make any opposition to them, or even to discuss them. I should not have drawn them in that shape if I had had the opportunity to draft them, but as they were drafted by gentlemen who have the control of this matter, I am not going to say anything regarding them.

There is a provision in the bill for allowing the people over there to secure a good title to land in moderate quantities, but 160 acres, in my judgment, is a good deal more land than ought, in a tropical country, to be given to any individual. However, that may not be a very serious objection, but I think half of that amount would be sufficient, and in most places 40 acres would be ample.

But here is one objection, Mr. President, that I am going to make which, in my judgment, is very serious, and I hope the Senate will get rid of it; that is, that while an individual can only hold 160 acres, a corporation may hold 5,000 acres. I do not like to say anything harsh about this bill or about the people who have drafted it or those who are supporting it, but that is a provision which, even if every other provision in the bill should meet with my approval, I would vote against. Will anybody tell me why we should give a corporation the right to take 5,000 acres of that land over there? I have asked one or two Senators in relation to it, and they have said, "You can not carry on great agricultural enterprises over there without having large tracts of land."

Mr. President, do we want to carry on any great agricultural enterprises over there? Is that any part of our business? According to the professions, at least, of some of those who support this bill, we are over there, as some believe, by the hand of Divinity, or, as others believe, by the hand of destiny. It is claimed that we are there for the purpose of putting those people on a higher moral and intellectual plane. They have been agriculturists for thousands of years. They are a people, Mr. President, who maintained a government of their own for hundreds of years before any European went there, and I defy any Senator to show me that the advent of the Spaniards increased either the civilization or the happiness of those people, except in the fact that they became Christians and accepted the belief of the great Romish Church. Aside from that, no considerable change can be shown to have been made in them. There has been some improvement, I will admit, but comparatively little from what their original position was when the Spaniards went there, soon after the discovery of America.

I want some one to tell me why a corporation should be permitted to take 5,000 acres of land there? If one corporation may take 5,000 acres, ten corporations may each take 5,000 acres, and a hundred corporations may each take 5,000 acres. There is no limit to the number of corporations that may go there; and, after they have taken the lands and got their title, if they should conclude to form a combination, they could do that, I suppose, although there is a provision here which says:

> And this provision shall be held to prevent any corporation engaged in agriculture from being in any wise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture.

That, I suppose, was put in the bill as a sort of sop to the people who might be afraid of consolidation; but there is not a man living in these days who has given any attention to the affairs of our country for the last two or three years who does not know that it will amount to absolutely nothing; and that if 50 corporations having each 5,000 acres should conclude to enter into a combination, they could do it in spite of all the Filipinos and all the United States besides.

Mr. MONEY. They do it here.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, they do it here in spite of law and reason and everything else. I am not going to discuss that at length. I am calling the attention of the friends of the bill to the matter; and if they do not take that provision out after having their attention called to it, I mean to return to the question of this violent and indecent absorption of the lands by corporations, who have not any title now, who go there only for the purpose of exploiting the country, and who will confer no benefit on the islands by their presence there, upon the Filipinos, or upon us. I leave that now, but I do not believe there is a Senator here who does not know that that provision should go out of the bill; and there is not a Senator here but will have to vote on the proposition whether or not it goes out if the committee does not take it out.

I have wasted a good deal of time on this bill. Probably I have given more time to its details than anyone else, except, perhaps, the members of the committee when it was in committee. There are a good many things in this bill which ought to be discussed.

The bill proposes that we shall enter upon a system of bond making, of debt creating in the Philippine Islands—a debt to be created not by the Filipinos, but by the men who are sent there and who go there to exploit the country. You are going to repeat by that bond system just what was done in the South at the close of the war, and before you get through with it you will have a scandal that will grow burdensome to you who have favored this system.

Why do you need provide for the expenditure of four and a half million dollars in Manila for sewerage and for drainage? The people have lived there for three hundred or four hundred years without it. They have never indicated in the slightest degree to you or to anybody else that they wanted your interference, and if we will give them the control that every other people on the face of God's earth are entitled to have of their own affairs, they will have sewerage if they want it and need it. We have no business to declare that every municipality in the whole island of Luzon, or any other island that has a sufficient population, to get together and issue bonds, shall, under this bill, have authority to do so.

Then it is provided that these bonds shall be paid in American money. It is provided, in addition, that they shall never pay any taxes either in the Philippine Islands, in the United States, or anywhere else under the sun where we have control. These bonds may never come to the United States; but if they do, I do not know why they should not pay taxes. Every municipality in my State which issues a bond and sells it in New York pays taxes upon it.

I do not know that these things are worthy of the attention of the American Senate in these days. I should know more about it if I knew what our relations to these people were. But I find in this bill that they are entitled to our protection. What kind of protection is that? They are all excluded from the franchise, or nearly every one of them. You have not got 5 per cent of the people there, I suppose, who are entitled to exercise the right of suffrage. If you had 20 per cent—which nobody will pretend you have—of the population entitled to vote, you have made an arbitrary rule about the suffrage that does not select the best people of the islands necessarily for suffrage. But a limited number may go in there and constitute themselves the municipal authorities. Then they may sell bonds, put them on the markets of the world, and use the money, if they see fit, for the purpose for which they professedly issued them, and if not, for any other purpose they see fit.

When men have been persuaded to buy those bonds—and the bonds will be sure to turn up in a little while in the hands of some American holders—they will come to us and say, "You provided for the issue of these bonds; we are not responsible for the direction which the money took, and if those who issued them swindled the municipalities and stole the money"—as they may do—or if they used it extravagantly—as they may do—and then find they can not pay, the first thing you will be asked will be to pay these bonds, so as to protect your citizens from the loss. They will tell you that you have made these bonds payable in American coin, and, of course, they will expect you to pay them; that you have exempted them from American taxes, and therefore they will say, "We, under the strength of that fact, thought you were about to incorporate these islands into a community of the United States and we bought those bonds."

Mr. President, that is all I am going to say about this bill, and I expect, under the circumstances, I ought to apologize for having said so much. I shall say more about it if, after the attention of the Senate has been called to it, somebody does not propose to make some suggestions of amendments, which I think ought to come from the other side and not from this side. I would offer amendments, but I hope somebody may be found on the other side who will be able to agree with me that it is not wise to give any corporation 5,000 acres of that land.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the bill say "give the land?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator does not mean by the word "give" that they get it without paying for it, of course?

Mr. TELLER. No; I do not. I meant to say give them the power to get the land.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator used the word "give."

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what they will pay for it. I know one thing, however, and that is, that they will not pay any more than it is worth.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They will pay the price which the Commission fix.

Mr. TELLER. They will pay the price the Commission fix.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or the price fixed by the owners from whom they buy.

Mr. TELLER. They are not going to buy it from owners; it is government land, unless they take the friars' lands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is nothing to prevent a man buying land from another man except one provision in the bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. Of public lands there are 67,000,000 acres. There are only 5,000,000 acres which are in the holding of anybody.

Mr. TELLER. Those are the friars' lands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; there are 500,000 acres held by the friars.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; the friars own about four or five hundred thousand acres of that land.

Mr. President, I will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in a tropical country like the Philippines, as to the good land in that country, of which there is a large amount, 5 acres will support a family in comfort. It was recently declared by an English officer who had been in the Tropics that, in Jamaica, I think it was, 2 acres would support a family in absolute comfort. There is some little question now whether, the price of sugar having gone down, if we should extend our tariff to them as we are about to extend it to Cuba, if we should take in the poor sugar maker of Jamaica and release him from taxation, a man would be able to live comfortably on 2 or 2½ acres of ground.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator then offer an amendment to the bill to authorize the natives to be allowed 10 acres instead of 160 acres? That would be four times more than enough, according to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. It is not my business to correct this bill. I have never been consulted about it, I am not on the committee, and I know very well it is useless for me to make a proposition of any kind regarding it. As I stated before, if I had had my way I should have limited the amount to 40 acres unless in connection with it there might be some land which was not arable.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Forty acres would be twenty times what you say is necessary.

Mr. TELLER. If you are four times more liberal than I think you ought to be, and if you are sixteen times more liberal than you ought to be, you had better take this bill back in committee for a while.

Mr. STEWART rose.

Mr. TELLER. I see the Senator from Nevada has got on the floor, and I will wait to hear what he wants to say.

Mr. STEWART. No; I will not interrupt the Senator now. I will wait until he gets through.

Mr. TELLER. I am not through yet; and you may save your strength by sitting down.

Mr. STEWART. I will. I want to make a few remarks at some time when there is a lull and no one else wants to get the floor.

Mr. TELLER. If I thought that anybody wanted the floor I should have left it myself.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want to say very much.

Mr. TELLER. If some Senator on the majority side does not move an amendment, I do not want to do so, because I know the prejudice on the other side against our moving amendments on this side, but I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] will really agree with me that there is not any reason why a corporation should go over there and get 5,000 acres of land, I do not care what they pay for it, or what they want to do with it. They ought not to have it. If the land is wanted for sugar plantations, they have not any business with 5,000 acres. Let the small farmers raise the sugar cane and take it to the sugar houses.

Mr. President, I have made some examination in order to ascertain what these islands may be capable of doing in the way of producing sugar. In 1895 they exported, according to an authority that I have here, and I think it is right, though I do not know, 450,000 tons of sugar. During the last two years, I understand, they practically did not export anything, or very little, owing to the "pacified" condition of the country of which we hear so much, and having not produced much sugar.

Those islands are capable of producing—if they were allowed to have the labor that they would like to have, and which I hope they never will have—probably almost all the sugar of the world. I suppose they could produce more sugar over there each year than the United States could consume in fifty years.

We have started an industry in the United States called the beet-sugar industry, which is doing very well. We produced last year about 200,000 tons of beet sugar, and we shall probably, if the people who have been intending to go into the beet-sugar business are not frightened out of their intentions by the proposed legislation, double that in the United States next year. The people who have given attention to this matter believe that we can do what Germany has been doing, that we can become the exporters of sugar, and that in time, even with free trade, we can compete with any part of the world in sugar production, Cuba not excepted. We can not do it now, but in ten or fifteen years, I think, we shall be able to do it.

We bought last year $125,000,000 worth of sugar and we will buy next year $150,000,000 worth. It will not be long before—and Senators who are here now, before they serve out their terms, will see it—the United States will be paying $200,000,000 a year for sugar. Every particle of that can be made in the United States if the sugar industry is properly fostered and protected. All you need to do to give to the United States the ability to produce its own sugar, and that within the next ten years or within a few years, and to make it a sugar-exporting country, is to leave the law as it is now on the statute book. The sugar men ask no special protection that is not accorded to every other industry in the United States. They are prepared and ready, if it becomes the policy of the party in power to reduce the tariff, to accept a reduction in proportion to every other reduction that is made.

I do not want to largely increase the production of sugar in the Philippine Islands, and we certainly do not want to establish a great number of American sugar plantations over there of 5,000 or 10,000 acres each, or any other number of acres, because, as I said before, the limit of 5,000 acres does not amount to anything. No corporation should be allowed to buy an acre of land unless it be for a building or for the immediate necessities of some business that it is carrying on.

I know, Mr. President, that the American farmer is not going over there; but there are ten or twelve million people there now, and if you ever get a decent government there, which I hope some day there will be, those people will increase in numbers. That territory can readily sustain a population of fifty or sixty millions. They are entitled to have the land held for them, and if we have got any relation to those people at all that God Almighty has had any hand in thrusting upon us, it is that we are to protect them in their rights, to see that they are not robbed by the American speculator.

I did not rise to make any extended remarks on any of these subjects. I was not here yesterday, but I have looked over the RECORD, and I am free to say I do not feel very sorry that I was not here; but I was here the day before yesterday, when everybody on this side of the Chamber during the entire debate was charged with being engaged in traducing the American Army.

Mr. President, I resent that. We have not traduced the American Army. We have told of some of the outrages perpetrated by American soldiers, not by the American Army; and I think that some of us have said—and if we have not I want to say it now—that the very policy of this Government in its dealings with those people is calculated to make a cruel and vindictive soldiery, and such a result is as certain to follow as the daylight follows the rising of the sun. We sent our troops over there; and there are thousands and tens of thousands of American troops who know they have no business there doing what they are doing. In a little while some of them lose all conscience.

It is not worth while for anybody to pretend that there have not been cruelties there. If you examine the report of the committee you will find a letter from the War Department where the Department declared that there were cruelties being practiced over there, called the attention of the officers to them, and directed that they should right the wrongs as far as they could. Oftentimes they can not do it.

It is said every time anyone on this side gets up and makes a speech on that subject that we are fighting the Army, and yet the War Department has made the same statements, and they are contained in official documents read by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. They can be found here in these reports and in other public documents.

There is not any possibility of the party in power escaping responsibility for the unfortunate conditions existing over there by their representatives standing up here and saying that we are moved by a desire to slander the Army.

I listened with some surprise the day before yesterday to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] who is not here now, and consequently I will not comment on his remarks to any extent, who labored with great effort to show that all we on this side were trying to do was to blacken the name of the American soldier, and he then entered into a eulogy upon the American soldier.

Mr. President, I think we know as much about the American soldier as does the Senator from Maryland, and that we have as much love and affection for him, and I suppose I ought to say now that he has as much hatred for cruelty over there as I have; but I noticed that the Senator did not find time to say anything about it until somebody on this side had called his attention to it. Probably he felt badly about it; but he thought it would hardly do to mention the subject.

Nearly fifteen months ago, at any rate fourteen months ago, I presented to this Senate unquestioned evidence of the practice of the water cure in the Philippine Islands by American soldiers and by the Macabebes, who were being paid by the Government of the United States for their services, and I suppose, therefore, may be called American soldiers. The statement was denied absolutely. It was said that nothing of the kind had ever happened. However, it is no longer denied. Of course these cruelties are minimized, and Senators on the other side try to make as light of them as possible.

We are told that an era of peace is fast approaching; and yet when a civil governor like Major Gardener sends to the War Department a statement of the conditions over there—I am not going to dwell upon that—it did not get to the public at once, but it did get out after a while, and Major Gardener comes in for the criticism of Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and they say it is a remarkable thing that a governor of a province should write an article of that kind. I should like to know what his business was if it was not to keep the Government of the United States advised of the real condition over there? If some optimistic citizen of the United States over there holding an office should think there was a different condition and report that to the Government, was it not the duty of this civil governor and of other governors to inform us of the facts?

That is what Major Gardener did, and he was promptly removed as civil governor, as I understand. He was called upon to itemize his charges. If any one will take his report and read it, he will find that they are not charges of individual misconduct, but charges against almost the entire military force over there; I do not mean with cruelty, but with conduct which he said was calculated to alienate the Filipinos, to make them distrustful of the Government of the United States, and to put them in opposition and antagonism to us.

I read from page 883 of the hearings in relation to the affairs in the Philippine Islands, from a communication from Maj. Cornelius Gardener, Thirteenth Infantry, United States Army, provincial governor of the province of Tayabas, to the civil governor of the Philippine Islands, dated December 16, 1901. He says:

> The treatment of the peaceable natives by the incoming troops was, however, much different from what it had been at first. The provincial government was organized on March 12, 1901. By July of that year all of the 23 pueblos had been organized into municipal governments with the single exception of the pueblo of Dolores, which pueblo had been burned by order of General Hall, and there was no town in which to organize a government, every building having been burned in the town proper, except part of the church. Five pueblos had been organized prior to March 1, 1901, under General Orders, No. 40.
> The revenues in all the pueblos have been collected regularly since organization, and on November 1 of this year schools were in operation in every organized pueblo, and English was being taught by American teachers in every pueblo but three.
>
> The people of the barrios, while very observant of their religious duties, and a moral, hard-working population, are very ignorant and superstitious and easily imposed upon, for personal gain, by priests religiously and insurgent sympathizers politically, and I have therefore in every way encouraged the establishment of barrio schools where children could be taught elementary knowledge by native teachers in the Tagalo language.
> At present there are of such over 100 in operation in this province, the teachers being paid by the pueblos.

Owing to this situation, of which he speaks, the entire province is now practically under military rule and has been treated as an insurgent province, the civil procedure and the writ of habeas corpus actually suspended. That is the province as to which we had a statement here from some civil governor that it had become peaceful and orderly.

If you will read this report you will find that there is a general charge of misconduct of the troops; and then Major Gardener, when called upon, did furnish some specific complaints. I do not know what they are, and I do not intend to deal with them now.

One of the Senators who spoke the day before yesterday complained that we on this side did not have any policy. I do not intend to go over that; but I have at least declared what is my policy. I declared it before the treaty with Spain came to the United States, and I have repeated it, I have no doubt ad nauseam to the Senate, again and again.

I believe in giving those people the power of self-government. I believe they are capable of self-government. I so said then. I said that on the authority of Admiral Dewey; I said it on the authority of practically every officer who was in the Philippine Islands until after the fight began; I said it upon the authority of private letters received by me, one of which I mentioned here, and I said it upon the authority of a personal interview with an officer of the United States who went with General Young from Manila to the north end of the island and back again. He told me that in every town he found a municipal government exercising all the powers of a civil government without any assistance from us, everywhere keeping order and protecting property and person. They may not have a national government, Mr. President, but they have to-day practically local government over all those islands.

I have said again and again that I did not expect them to have such a government as we have; but after I listened the other day to the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] I made up my mind that if he was correct in his statement of what were the conditions in North Carolina there was not any question but what the Filipino could maintain as good a government as the Senator said existed in North Carolina. I do not know that I should want to give the Senator from North Carolina credit for impartiality in the matter; he may have seen conditions down there differently from other people because of his hostility in a political way; but I could not help thinking, considering what he said as to the crimes which were being perpetrated there, that we could not expect much worse in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, I want to say to what few Republicans are here in sight that I wish to put into the RECORD—and I want to put it in the RECORD, where it shall go down to the next generation, if this generation does not look at it—that you can not escape the charge of misconduct in the Philippines by getting up and saying that we are abusing the American Army, nor can you escape it by simply ordering a court-martial of one man without any condemnation of him, nor can you escape it by a mild dissent and by saying that you regret that these things occur, and then finding some excuse, some palliation for them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator having addressed himself to the few Republicans present, of course I feel at liberty to ask him to allow an interruption. The Senator has just said that he is in favor of giving up the Philippine Islands to the people of those islands. It is possible that the Senator has been misquoted, but in the New York Sun of yesterday I find an extract from a speech delivered by the Senator from Colorado in the Senate of the United States on December 20, 1898, and, with the Senator's permission, I should like the Secretary to read an extract from that speech.

Mr. TELLER. I am quite willing, Mr. President. I have the speech here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the Senator allow the Secretary to read the extract I send to the desk.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> I do not want to give up these islands. I do not want to surrender them to anybody in the world. I do not want to govern them in the spirit of the colonial governments of Europe or as many of them are being carried on. I do not want to give them up, because to give them up would be to leave those people in a worse condition than they were when we took away the power of Spain. We may leave them a prey, perhaps, to their own vices. We leave them to be a prey of all Europe. We must stand for them. We have put up our flag. There it is going to stay.

Mr. TELLER. Is that all?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all; and I think that is enough.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, that suggests to me the reading of something in addition. That is the condition which has existed here. I do not charge it on the Senator, but I say that you have taken—that is your argument, that is your defense for your misconduct—an extract from some man's speech, read a few lines of it and not read that which explains the whole of it. I am not addressing myself particularly to the Senator from New Hampshire, but I am addressing myself to the party of which he is one of the representatives.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have not participated in this debate, and of course no accusation against me that I have sympathized with or apologized for anything that is going on in the Philippine Islands would apply. I said to the Senator, before the extract was read, that possibly he was misquoted or misrepresented by the New York Sun. I have not had time to read his entire speech. I have always listened to him with great pleasure, and I have great confidence in his integrity and high purpose to do right; but it did seem to me, in reading that extract, that the Senator had changed his attitude on this question.

Mr. TELLER. That was the speech I made on the 20th of December, 1898.

Mr. GALLINGER. So I stated.

Mr. TELLER. I have repeated the substance of that speech several times. I have never supposed, and so stated then, that we were going to give up these islands in the sense that we were going to totally withdraw from them. I made that as clear as I could on that occasion, and I have done so repeatedly since. To have given them up then would have been to turn them back to Spain, which everybody pretty nearly here objected to, or if we had not turned them back to Spain they would have been open to be seized by Germany, that had her ships of war in that harbor at that particular time, or to have been seized by Russia. The Senator from New Hampshire probably was not present when I made the speech.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I was.

Mr. TELLER. I will not weary the patience of the Senate by reading all of the speech, for it was quite a lengthy one, but I want to call attention to my attitude on the subject. I said:

> Now, Mr. President, we are coming to deal with the greatest question, in my opinion, that the American people have dealt with since the contest of 1861. I am not one of those who would be understood as feeling satisfied that this question is not a troublesome one. I anticipate much difficulty and embarrassment to us in the handling of this question. From the very beginning I have felt that this was a question that would seriously embarrass the American people; and yet I have not felt that distrust and that fear which seem to prevail in some sections of the country and among some of our countrymen. I have more confidence in the good sense of the American people than to believe we are about to adopt a policy in dealing with these countries that threatens the death of the Republic or even great danger to it.

I will state that we had not yet ratified the treaty and had not got it yet; it was on its way from Europe.

In the first place, I believe to-day that we are hardly prepared to pass upon what ought to be the character of government that we establish over these countries. I do not think I am sufficiently advised as to what should be the details of the administration of public affairs as applied to them—the form of government best adapted to their condition. Mr. President, I believe in the principle which was enunciated in the fourth clause of the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898.

Then I read that resolution, which I will read now:

That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

I will say that I drew that resolution and offered it to the Senate, and it is exactly as I drew it, with the exception of two words, one being a grammatical mistake and the other the word "sovereignty." It was inserted on motion of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Mr. Davis, just previous to the word "jurisdiction." It was a declaration even stronger; and it had the approval of the committee and was offered as a committee resolution with my approval.

That is a declaration—

I said then—solemnly made by the people of the United States when it was apparent to us all that we were going to war. We said to the world, "We are not going to war for conquest; we are going to war in the interest of freedom; we are going to war to relieve a people laboring under the plague of bad government; and when we have relieved them from this great burden and have secured peace in their borders we are going to leave to them the management and control of their own affairs. But not until we have secured the pacification thereof are we to abandon them to their own efforts."

That in terms only applied to Cuba, but in principle it applied to every possession of ours acquired during this war. If any Senator had suggested that in addition to Cuba there should be added the words "or any other possession we may acquire during this war," it would have met, as this joint resolution met, I believe, the unanimous support of this body and of the other, and also of the President of the United States, as is suggested to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. These words would have been added to the joint resolution with the approbation of all.

But are we any less bound to-day because we did mention this to treat these new possessions in the Asiatic seas under the same principles that we are to treat Cuba? If we are to take that position, and if the American people will say to these islands, "We intend, if you are capable of self-government, to treat you as entitled to it," we will not need 50,000 men for the Philippine Islands nor 50,000 men for the island of Cuba. That is the only way, in my judgment, Mr. President, that we can maintain peace and order in these new possessions; it is the only way we can escape the great embarrassment of maintaining a large army on what heretofore has been foreign soil, at great expense and at a great distance from our own land, absolutely in contravention to the great fundamental principles of a republic, that the fighting force of the nation should not be a standing army, but should be the militia of the country, the people themselves.

I am not one of those who would turn these islands back to Spain; I am not one who would give them up to any other nation in the world—

Now, I come to what the Senator read—nor would I give them up to the people of those countries under present conditions.

We had not yet got our treaty.

I believe we went into this war in the interest of human freedom, in the interest of good government; that we went into it as no other people in the history of the world ever went into a war. We have stood before the world presenting a spectacle and an example unheard of in history, ready to pour out our money and sacrific life in the interest of those strangers.

Now, skipping some, not reading all, I said:

As I look upon it, Mr. President, we have a great obligation resting upon us. We are on trial. Are we going to be able to handle this question safely for ourselves and safely for the people whose interests we started out to protect?

That was more particularly in reference to Cuba.

I will admit that that is a difficult question, and if I should now outline at this moment my idea of what ought to be the policy of the Government it may be, and very likely will be, subject to change when we are better informed about those people. But there are some underlying principles which we must keep in view, and one of those is that we can not govern these colonies, these provinces, as England governs India; we may govern them as England governs Canada and her other English-speaking colonies. What shall be the policy must depend largely, in my judgment, upon the character of the people with whom we are to deal. I think in the island of Cuba, with a little assistance from the Government of the United States, there can be established a government of proper character to take care of all the local interests of that country.

I confess that I am not willing to see the people of Cuba to-day turned out to take care of themselves so far as international affairs are concerned. I should be afraid of interference by some foreign power with that new government. I think we should say to the world, and say it so that all could understand it, We intend to give to those people, so far as it can be done, self-government; but we do not intend that they shall become the prey, either by conquest or by treaty, of any foreign power. In all their international relations I believe, for many years to come at least, the Government of the United States must speak to the world for Cuba. In so doing I deny that we violate any principle of the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution of the United States, or that we should be disregarding the great fundamental principle, which I recognize, that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, or that it will be in violation of the spirit and letter of the fourth resolution of April 20, 1898.

I said some other things in connection with this subject. I said:

Mr. President, if you could poll the American people, you would not find 1 per cent of them who want to do that—

I asked if we wanted to hold them against their will—you would not find 1 per cent of them who want to do that, and if you should take the vote now you would not find 1 per cent of them who believe it will not be better for these new possessions of ours that our flag shall float over them, not simply as the emblem of power, but as the emblem of good government, of protection to them, as it is protection to us.

Then I go on to say that our flag will stay up there until we are prepared to give them something better for them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have been very much interested in the speech of the Senator which he has read, and which I had not before heard or noticed; and, as the Senator has read it, I think this question is a proper one. Does the Senator stand by the utterances of that speech now?

Mr. TELLER. I stand by them so far as I made them then. I thing the conditions have somewhat changed. I think I could have been a good deal more in accord with the Administration than I am now if they had kept the spirit of my declaration here, which they did not do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator stand by the following declaration——

Mr. TELLER. Read anything you have there and I will tell you whether I do or not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator made the following declaration in that speech:

We have put up our flag. There it is going to stay.

Is that the Senator's position now?

Mr. TELLER. I said that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know.

Mr. TELLER. I said in addition to that——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But my question to the Senator is whether he stands on that position now?

Mr. TELLER. I said in that speech we had put up our flag and it would stay up there until we could get something for them better. I meant by that we were going to say to the world (and I made that as clear as can be) that we were going to protect these people and do what everybody here then thought we intended to do—give them a government of their own and say to the world "keep your hands off."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The extract from the Senator's speech, Mr. President, which I hold in my hand does not contain such a qualification as that. It is the end of a paragraph; the end of the paragraph which has been read by the clerk: "We have put up our flag. There it is going to stay." I was very anxious and solicitous to know if the Senator still retains that view.

Mr. TELLER. I have not time to look; but there is a sentence here, to which I call the Senator's attention, that we would stay there until we could do something better for them. I knew, and I have said repeatedly, we were not going to disconnect ourselves from those islands entirely. I could not see myself how we could do it, but I could see how we could give them a government under this proposition we made to the world as to Cuba, which I say to-day binds us in morals.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I now understand that the Senator says, or did I hear aright when I understood him to say, that we could never entirely disconnect ourselves from those islands?

Mr. TELLER. I do not think we can. I do not think we can ever disconnect ourselves from Cuba. We have not been able for eighty-odd years to disconnect ourselves from the great number of republics in South America. We have exercised a limited protectorate over every one of them under the Monroe doctrine. Does anybody suppose that there would be 15 or 16 republics down there if we had not made the declaration that any interference with them would be an interference with us? We could say as to these islands just as we said to the world, and we can do that now. To-day I would give those people a government of their own. When the Senator from Indiana tells me that they are incapable of self-government, I tell him that all the facts connected with the history of those people belies that statement, and it is not true. They are capable of self-government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TELLER. I will yield in a minute. Admiral Dewey so declared. I repeat that every officer of the United States up to the hour we had the war declared they were capable of self-government. I repeated it here in the Senate that in my judgment they were capable of self-government. Over and over again I declared it. I believe to-day they are as capable of self-government as any republic in South America. I believe they are as capable of self-government as are the people of Cuba. I believe the people of Cuba are capable of self-government, and the government they are to put into operation on May 20, I predict here, will be a government of law and a government of order, unless there is an interference on the part of the United States in a degree that we ought not to interfere. If we let them alone, there will be a government there that will protect persons and property and lives, and that is all we have a right to ask. I will now hear what the Senator from New Hampshire has to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I certainly do not take issue with the Senator as to Cuba. I did not vote for his resolution, which he says received the unanimous support of the Senate. He has a right to believe that, because there was not a recorded vote, but I took occasion to vote "no" on that proposition. I did not believe in it then, and I do not now. But, notwithstanding that, I take no issue with him as to the ability of the Cubans for self-government. The Senator has gone further than that in the discussion of this question and contends, as I understand him, that the Filipinos are fit for self-government.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I thought so on the 20th day of December, 1898, and everything that has occurred since proves to me that they are.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just a word more. I have been put in possession of a good deal of information from the Philippine Islands, from friends of mine, who are there in an official capacity, gentlemen in whom I have the utmost confidence, who do not feel that way. I have here a statement from Mr. Simoney, of whom——

Mr. TELLER. I will let the Senator put that in in his own time.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take but a moment.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know who Mr. Simoney is; and I decline to yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was going to tell the Senator, if he will give me an opportunity.

Mr. TELLER. I decline to yield. Let the Senator put it in in his own time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will put it in in my own time.

Mr. TELLER. I could fill the RECORD full of letters which I have received from people concerning the islands. I have never brought them here, because a letter is the expression of one man, but we have official documents enough.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply desire to ask the Senator if, considering the courteous manner in which this debate has been conducted, he prefers to refuse me the privilege of occupying one moment in putting in the RECORD a statement that I think is important?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator comes here with a statement of somebody I do not know anything about, and upon which he relies.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was intending to tell the Senator who Mr. Simoney was.

Mr. TELLER. Well, put it in. It is a pretty slim thing to stand on, but put it in.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is quite as stout as some of the Senator's statements, I can assure him. Mr. Simoney was for the past two years in charge of the United States post-office division for the island of Samar. So he is identified. He says:

> From my experience with the Filipinos I do not believe they will be fit to govern themselves in the slightest degree for at least several generations. Many of them are intelligent in a way, but they have no conception of a just government, in which all the people participate equally. Centuries of Spanish oppression and official corruption have instilled in them the idea that no rule can be just and honest and that no official will refuse a bribe.

That is all I desire to put into the RECORD.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. In reply to that statement, I will read what Professor Barrows says upon the subject. He does not agree with the statement that has just been read. I understand that Professor Barrows is assistant superintendent of education in the Philippine Islands, has been all through the islands during the last two years, and is thoroughly conversant with the condition of affairs in those islands. In testifying before the committee here is what he said:

> They are keenly ambitious—ambitious for education, ambitious for participation in the political affairs of the islands. They are willing to make large sacrifices in order to secure what we must all, I think, regard as a legitimate field for their aspirations. They are exceedingly hospitable; they are an exceedingly pleasing people; they will entertain you, not only royally, but with sincere hospitality. They are among the most charming people I have ever met. I think they will compare favorably with the similar class in Japan, at least in the matter of intellectual qualities.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the leave of the Senator from Colorado to make one suggestion which seems to me to dispose of the witness of my honorable friend from New Hampshire.

The majority of the Committee on the Philippines, with the assent of the present Administration and the assent of the Philippine Commission, of which Governor Taft is chairman, propose to commit to these people forthwith large legislative and administrative powers and to make a government wherever there is peace, in which these people shall have a large control and share. To say that they are so degraded and base as a people that not one official will refuse a bribe seems to me to be a very queer thing for this postmaster to certify to in the face of this purpose on the part of our Government. Are we asked to vote for a bill next week or the week after which is to commit the people of the Philippine Islands to a government of officials at least nine-tenths of whom are so degraded that they wold not refuse a bribe on the very birthday of their nation?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. I wish to know what the Senator wants. If the Senator proposes to do what he did the other day, to take possession of the floor, as he did when he interrupted the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], I decline to yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not take the floor the other day at all. I rose to get it before the Senator from Utah had the floor. On the contrary, the day before the Senator from Utah declined to allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. TELLER. Go ahead.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What I desire to do at this time, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, is to read the rest of the testimony bearing directly upon this point which was given by Professor Barrows before the committee. The only reason why I am impelled to do that is because my good friend the honorable Senator from Georgia read a part of it not bearing at all upon the particular question which we are discussing. Now, here is what Professor Barrows——

Mr. TELLER. Go on and read it without quite so much delay.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, Mr. President, I think the RECORD will show that I have not used very much time or caused very much delay. If the Senator is not willing to allow me to read it, all right, but if he yields, I must read it in my own way.

Mr. TELLER. I am perfectly willing for the Senator to read it, but not to make comments on it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not surprised——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator is going to read what Professor Barrows testified, I want to hear what Professor Barrows said.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not surprised that the Senator does not want to hear comments on it. This is the conclusion of the testimony of Professor Barrows that the Senator from Georgia did not read.

Mr. RAWLINS. On what page?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Page 718.

Mr. TELLER. Read it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is as follows:

> Senator BEVERIDGE. Just one other question, and then I shall have no more. I have been impressed by your clearly acute observations of these people and their conditions, and that, too, from a favorable point of view to them. What have you to say about the present or the immediately near capacity of those people for self-government, as that term is understood in America? Are they capable of such at the present time?
> Mr. BARROWS. That is the whole question, I suppose, Senator. I would say this, in speaking upon it for a moment or two, I think the last twenty-five or thirty years in the Philippine Islands, which are the years that have seen the introduction of the Filipino to superior education and to superior advantages, have been very encouraging as revealing his aptitude and intelligence. He has been within that period of time admitted to the learned professions and to journalism and to travel to a certain extent; and notwithstanding the fact that there was great repression used, as I really believe, by the Spanish Government, and that a very few individuals out of the whole community really secured the advantages of superior education, the Filipino has done a great deal. He has shown aptness in scientific lines, in professional lines, and in a great many other lines in a way to encourage us; and I believe that under the régime we are trying to inaugurate there, which is favorable to cultivation, favorable to study and enlightenment, we may see a great acceleration of that movement. But this, of course, is to be remembered, that political self-control and political experience sufficient to govern a great population, and including a great number of tribes lower than the Christianized Filipino is himself, is about the last thing that a man or a race attains. I look forward with some confidence to a time in the near future when the Filipino will be making researches in science and will be making contributions along different lines, much as the Japanese are, but I do not see any immediate prospect, and I never expect to live to see the day when he can govern.
> Senator BEVERIDGE. Just a question cognate to that. What would you say would be the result on the islands and the people themselves if a system of self-government was put upon them and they were left to themselves?
> Senator ALLISON. Do you mean locally or nationally?
> Senator BEVERIDGE. Locally or nationally.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole thing.
Senator DIETRICH. With absolute independence.
Senator BEVERIDGE. What would be the effect of that? You may couple it, if you please, with the proposition upon our part that as to the external world we will protect them; I mean to say by our navies, etc. What would be the effect upon the people of the islands?
Senator BURROWS. If the United States should move out?
Senator BEVERIDGE. I mean the proposition of the minority here.
Mr. BARROWS. It is very hard to prognosticate. The Filipino has got beyond the tribal stage. There is a stage in the social development of a race when large bodies can be governed through tribal adherence. But the Filipino is beyond that.

He goes on with something that is not germane, and then comes the following:

Senator BEVERIDGE. What would be the effect upon their social and industrial conditions?
Mr. BARROWS. Their culture would have to sink with it.
Senator BEVERIDGE. Retrograde?
Mr. BARROWS. Retrograde.
Senator BEVERIDGE. What would be the industrial conditions as the result of such action?
Mr. BARROWS. It would interfere with commerce It would destroy everything except small native bartering.
Senator BEVERIDGE. I understand you to say that you never expect to live to see the day when the Filipinos would be capable, as a people, of self-government, as we understand it. Is that understanding of your answer correct?
The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean internationally?
Mr. BARROWS. I do not think the Filipino is yet born who will control, to say nothing of governing justly, the Philippine Islands.

That, Mr. President, is the conclusion of the testimony of Professor Barrows, which the Senator from Georgia did not read.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Barrows made a statement of facts. He may draw a very different conclusion from what he said from what I draw. The facts are what we want. The Senator from Georgia wants to add something, and I yield to him.

Mr. CLAY. I think my friend from Indiana read only a part of the testimony of Professor Barrows.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I certainly did not read all of it.

Mr. CLAY. No, you did not; I am aware of that fact. I am sure that the superintendent of education, who has been in the Philippine Islands for the last two years and who has visited almost every province in those islands, has recommended that the American Congress shall do for the Filipino people what the Democratic party has been trying to do for the last two years. Professor Barrows testified as follows:

Mr. BARROWS. The declaration on the part of Congress that a liberal policy toward them was not to be followed would certainly disappoint them very much, and would alienate them, I think, to a considerable extent.
Senator CARMACK. Suppose Congress should fail to make any declaration at all and just let things drift along?
Mr. BARROWS. I think it would disappoint them very greatly. I do not think in that case they would fail, however, to cooperate with us as they have been doing, but in all the declarations that have been made there, the declaration of the Federal party, to give an example, the manifesto of the present Peace party, which was called together last November, they express the hope that Congress will take some action defining their political status and giving them, if possible, some assurances.
Senator CARMACK. And if Congress does nothing to define their political status or to indicate definitely what it intends to do with respect to the Philippine Islands it will be a great disappointment to the people?
Mr. BARROWS. I think it will be a great disappointment to the people, and by "the people" I mean the educated who are politically interested and who are politically aggressive.
Senator CARMACK. It will tend to create distrust and to alienate them. Will it not have that tendency? Disappointment would naturally tend to have that effect.
Mr. BARROWS. I think it might possibly alienate them. They have been looking forward with great hopefulness to this action of Congress, but they have realized that the persistence of hostility, etc.—

has probably kept anything from being done.

He says again:

In other words, I doubt, I very decidedly doubt, whether we can continue to rule that people, with their strong ambitions, with the tendency there to develop a constantly more enlightened class, without a liberal policy being entered upon.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. Go ahead.

Mr. CLAY. But that is not all.

Mr. TELLER. Read on.

Mr. CLAY (reading)—

Senator CARMACK. You say they are an ambitious people, a people who are aspiring, and especially in a political way, are they not?
Mr. BARROWS. Yes, Senator.
Senator CARMACK. It has been said that one of the dangers of giving them any sort of representative assembly would be so to encourage their political ambition that they would ask for a great deal more than they could get; in other words, such agitators, as the expression is, would take advantage of it to ask for more and more political rights and more than the United States would be willing to give. Do you apprehend any danger of that sort?
Mr. BARROWS. I think not. I think the result of intrusting them with a limited amount of political activity, intrusting them with public office, is educative in its effect, and that as they become more educated, and as they come to understand us and our purposes better, our position becomes securer and the whole situation becomes safer.

Mr. President, I say that Professor Barrows is not the only witness who said that we ought to show a liberal policy toward those people, but Governor Taft himself said that those people ought to be given a general assembly, and that in the question of the raising and levying of taxes and in the question of the distribution of their lands they ought to have a voice. He recommended that they be given a general assembly, and this bill contains nothing of the kind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will you read the rest of his testimony?

Mr. CLAY. My dear sir, I could read a good deal more of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought you would.

Mr. CLAY. I am not occupying my own time; I am simply occupying the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Colorado. At a later day I will probably address the Senate, and I will read, I hope, to the satisfaction of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I always listen with a great deal of pleasure to the Senator from Georgia, as he well knows. I hoped he would read the whole of it when he began.

Mr. CLAY. You read only a half of a page.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And you read only a quarter of a page.

Mr. CLAY. My dear sir, you did not touch the question really pending here.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The question which was raised, but not that you read about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to continue with some remarks of mine made a long time ago, in 1898. I wish the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to be able to have some knowledge of what my position was then, and I say to him that my position is the same now. I said:

I have some delicacy in suggesting what the form of government there should be, because the conditions may change; but I should say it is our first duty to consult the Filipinos and to aggregate in a body politic as many of them as we can who are capable of government.

I wish to say here now that there has never been an effort on the part of the Government to do that. You have steadily declined to do it.

If one-half of the people of Luzon are capable—I believe more than that number are capable to-day—of managing their affairs in a fairly good condition, I would say to them, This is the line that we think your Government should be inaugurated upon; and then I would ask them to inaugurate a government in entire accordance with republican sentiment and republican principles.

I wish it understood that I did not mean Republican party principles, but republican principles.

I am aware that they know nothing about free government, I am aware that they are incapable of establishing, without our advice, without our moral support, and possibly without our physical support, a government such as we should be willing to see established in those islands—a government which would give protection to person and property and ultimately lift those people up to a higher plane than they now occupy.
I do not believe that they can manage a government like that which is maintained in some of the States of this Union, or, I may say, in all of the States of this Union; but here is a fundamental truth recognized in republican government—

I want the Senators on the other side to say whether they challenge this proposition or not—that a people are entitled only to such government as they can maintain. Any government which they can maintain, which brings order and peace to the people, is the government which they have the right to have and ought to have, and we have no right to interfere and say to them, "Unless you can maintain a better government than you now have, one as good as ours, you must let us manage your affairs, and we will give you a better government." A government of the people and by the people may not always be the highest order of government, but if it brings peace and protection to the people, and is the best they can do, it is all that we can demand of them.

Mr. President, when any man stands up here and tells me that he insists that the Filipinos shall be governed by us until they shall reach as high a plane intellectually and morally and become as acquainted with the intricacies of government as we are, he declares that those people are ever to be the serfs of the United States. A thousand years will not make those Asiatics the equal of our people, and all the money and all the effort that the 80,000,000 people of the United States can exercise on ten or twelve million will never do it.

Are we to take charge of all the dark races of the world? Are we to put up a standard for every nation of the world and say, "Come to this or we will run your government?" You would have to take possession of the greatest portion of the governments of the world. Not one-half of the European governments are such governments as we think ought to exist.

But this is the principle. If the people can maintain a government that is suited to their intellectual and moral standard, it is their right, and I say that it is tyranny for the greatest and wisest government in the world to say to them, We can do better with you, and we will do it whether you want it or whether you do not.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two about those people. I mentioned it the other day and I want to repeat it. I can pile up mountain high the testimony of men who are not moved by partisan feelings, who do not think it is their duty to lie in order that they may sustain the Administration to which they belong. That statement is not out of parliamentary order either, for they do lie, some of them at least.

The persons to whom I refer have testified again and again to the condition of those people, their learning, their ability, their love for independence, and their capacity, and they have given testimony enough to justify any man living in saying that the Filipinos can take care of themselves. They did take care of themselves for hundreds of years before the Spaniards went there. When they came in contact with European civilization they improved somewhat, yet there is not any reason to suppose that the Spaniards gave them a better government than they had before the Spaniard put his foot on the islands. On the contrary, there is every reason to suppose that they had a better government before than they had under Spanish domination.

Mr. President, those are a religious people. They are a people who recognize their obligations to Almighty. They are a Christian people. They may not be as learned and as wise as we are, but they have great affection for their church and for their religion. I wish to read from Worcester. I read some of it the other day, and I am going to read it again. I want to say now—I do not know whether I said it then (if I happen to repeat it it will not come amiss)—Professor Schurman, who went there, who knows more about them than anybody in this Chamber from actual contact with them, has repeatedly said in public on the rostrum that the Filipinos could maintain a better government in the Philippine Islands than it was possible for us to give them or for us to maintain for them. So I say they can, for you can not maintain a good government anywhere if you deny the people a participation in the affairs of that government, as you have done up to the present time.

Now, you propose to open the door and give them some control, not such control as you ought to give them, but allow them at least to handle the finances of the country; and yet you tell us that they are utterly incapable of self-government. The inconsistency of the position of the party in power is not exceeded by anything except by its cruelty and its wickedness.

Mr. President, it is a slander to say that any people who are a religious people, who are members of one of the great Christian religions of the world, are incapable of self-government. I repeat, it may not be the best government in the world. It will be as good as some European governments I could mention. It will be as good as some Asiatic governments that I can mention, which we recognize.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have in my hand a letter recently written by a prominent Filipino who has been friendly to the United States and who speaks, I think, the sentiment of his people with reference to the measures now before Congress. I do not want to inject it into the Senator's speech, but at some time I should like to have it read. It is in the line of what the Senator is saying, though.

Mr. TELLER. All right.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to read from Professor Worcester, and if I should read something that I read the other day it will not come amiss. I have read it once or twice before in the Senate. It comes from a source that the Senators on the other side have not any right to challenge, because it was written before there was any partisan feeling in this matter, long before anybody was exploiting certain political ideas and political principles:

Children are orderly, respectful, and obedient to their parents. Wives are allowed an amount of liberty hardly equaled in any other eastern country, and they seldom abuse it.

This is from Worcester. I want to read and to call the attention of the Senate to the following:

At vespers in the evening there is always a pretty scene. An instant hush comes over the busy village. In each house father, mother, and children fall on their knees before the image or picture of some saint and repeat their prayers. The devotions over, each child kisses the hand of his father and his mother, at the same time wishing them good evening. He then makes an obeisance to each of his brothers and sisters, as well as to each guest who happens to be present, repeating his pleasant salutation with each funny bow. Host and hostess also greet one in the same way, and in remote places, where white men are a rarity, the little tots often kneel to kiss one's hand.

Savages! Men we are to govern because they are incapable of governing themselves!

The civilized native—

Mr. President, the entire population, with the exception of very few in the hills in Luzon, are civilized—

The civilized native is self-respecting and self-restrained to a remarkable degree. He is patient under misfortune and forbearing under provocation.

I skip some of it because it is of the same general tenor.

He is a kind father and a dutiful son. His aged relatives are never left in want, but are brought to his home and are welcome to share the best that it affords to the end of their days.

Among his fellows he is genial and sociable. He loves to sing, dance, and make merry. He is a born musician, and considering the sort of instruments at his disposal, and especially the limited advantages which he has for perfecting himself in their use, his performances on them are often very remarkable.

He is naturally fearless, and admires nothing so much as bravery in others. Under good officers he makes an excellent soldier, and is ready to fight to the death for his honor or his home.

Mr. President, it is useless for anybody to tell me that people of that class are incapable of self-government. Half of the population of the world are not any better than those people. Why is it that since the trouble began there all the Republicans everywhere are claiming that those people are incapable of self-government? It is because they dare not justify themselves before the world in imposing upon those people a government except upon the pretense that they are incapable of self-government. I say pretense, Mr. President, and it is a pretense. I can produce Republican authority almost without measure testifying to the ability of those people to maintain a government for themselves, and if you would not set up a standard that was never set up for any Asiatic people before, and can never be secured by any Asiatic people in the world, you would have to admit that those people are capable of self-government.

Mr. President, it will not do for the next Republican speaker who gets up in the Senate to say that I have been abusing the American Army and then go into a eulogy of the American soldier, or to say that I have been complaining of the Administration and then go into a defense of that. I have made no attack upon anybody. I simply say that the policy outlined in this bill is a vicious and wicked policy, a policy that is not dictated by patriotic motives, a policy that has its foundation in greed and in avarice and in the love of dominion and power.

I will measure my words, Mr. President. I do measure them. I repeat, our administration of affairs over those people, whether it be cruelly done or whether it be otherwise, is a violation of the great fundamental principles which underlie a free government and which should be adhered to by a free people. I do not wonder that the Republicans want to dodge the issue. I do not wonder that you want to talk about something else than that which is before you. The great question to be considered is not whether you are going to give up those islands, but whether you are going to do justice to the people in the islands. While I do not want to give them up, because I believe they would fall under the control of some other power very speedily, I should infinitely prefer to give them up to continuing the present system over there, and holding those people in a state of servitude, as they are now being held.

Mr. President, the people of the country have not waked up very much to this question. They will; and when they do, when the party in power hears the voice of the people, it will be rushing to get under cover pretty rapidly. We have criticised your conduct here and you complain of it. You are being criticised all over the country, not by Democrats alone, but you are being criticised by Republicans. I have a large correspondence from Republicans—active Republicans, influential Republicans, national Republicans—saying to me that our course here is the course of patriotism and of wisdom. Men who have sat in this Chamber, men who have filled Cabinet positions under your Administration, more than one of them, are publicly proclaiming the folly and the wickedness of your system over there. They are in absolute accord with you upon every other great question touching our affairs—upon the financial question, upon the question of foreign policy, upon your domestic policy—but they are against you on this question.

You have no right to complain because I, sitting on this side of the Chamber, enter my protest against what every man in this Chamber would have protested against in the fall of 1898 if he had believed it was possible that such a condition should ever come. There was no Senator here who would have dared to have stood on this side of the Chamber and told you that you would be doing what you are doing now. He would have felt that he was insulting you, and would have felt that he was doing that to a greater degree than the rules of this body would allow.

I voted, Mr. President, for the ratification of the treaty, and now I am told on the other side that because I voted for the ratification I am bound to acquiesce in every wicked thing that you do over there; that I ought to have known you were going to do it. Mr. President, the history of that period did not justify any man then in charging you with the atrocities which you are committing now. Your history had not been of that character. Every man had a right to suppose that when we had ratified the treaty and the Government of the United States had control we would do the right thing with those people over there.

Mr. President, I think that the signs of the times are encouraging. My correspondence encourages me. I like to get a Republican letter commending me for what I have said here and condemning you for what you are doing; and I like to see at the bottom of it, because I know then it comes from a man's heart, where he says, "I have always been a Republican. I went into the party when it was organized. I have never voted anything else, and I expect to vote for it because I expect that you will compel the Republican party to do the right thing before you get through with them."

Mr. President, they have more hopes than I have. They are more optimistic than I am. I do not hope to compel you to do the right thing. I expect that this bill will become a law with all its enormities, with its provisions that ought not to be in it, and provisions left out that ought to be in it.

I have an article here in a Republican paper that I want to read. I will say that within a few days I have come in contact with some pretty leading Republicans in the United States, men who expect to vote your ticket, no matter what you put up, men who expect to vote it no matter what you do, who say the blackest spot upon your escutcheon that ever has been put there is this attempt to maintain a government over 12,000,000 people without their consent.

This is a Republican paper. It is the Washington Post. It has not said much good for this side of the Chamber. When I have read this article I am going to read another from a Republican paper. Day before yesterday, May 7, this is what the Post said:

Administration orators and organs will not succeed in smothering public disapproval of the Philippine scandal by the impudent pretense that such disapproval is equivalent to "abusing the Army." It is evident that this policy has been adopted. The keynote has been struck, and of course the chorus will soon be in full voice. But the expedient will prove a disappointment to its authors. The American people are not fools.

In the first place, nobody has abused or dreams of abusing the United States Army. It may please the apologists of our Philippine policy to reply to specific charges of wickedness and imbecility by reciting the glorious achievements of American arms, from Lexington and Chalmette down to Guasimas and San Juan Hill, but it will please no one else. The subterfuge is too transparent. It has not even the charm of originality or of intellectual merit.

The people here at home who criticise and deplore the Administration's blunders in Luzon, Samar, Mindanao, and others of our new island possessions are perhaps quite as familiar with the courage and devotion of the American soldier as any of the gentlemen now vociferously engaged in reminding them of those high qualities. The men who saw war at Antietam, Missionary Ridge, and Gettysburg are not likely to forget the claims of their compatriots to everlasting honor and renown. There is a species of insolence in this attempt to silence public opinion by appealing to the chronicles of our military exploits in the past. It is as insolent as it would have been some eighteen centuries ago to quote Scipio Africanus in defense of Nero.

Our soldiers are as fine and gallant fellows as carry muskets anywhere in the world. We are proud of them. We hold the Army in gratitude and affection and need no special pleader to speak to us for them. This issue is not to be beclouded by cheap oratory.

Nor is it less absurd for gentlemen on the floors of Congress or in the editorial columns of Government organs to claim that the hostile commentators on our Philippine policy are mere reckless partisans attacking the Republican party for campaign purposes. Such a device might impose upon children under 10—the limit fixed by Gen. Jacob Smith in his order of extermination—but it excites only pity and contempt in the minds of thoughtful men. The Administration should pray to be saved from its champions. The Republican party should repudiate the attempt to identify it with the torture chamber and the shambles. This is a question of fact, not of party politics; it is a question of humanity, of civilization, of common intelligence and mercy, not of the courage and patriotism of the American soldier. The Administration and its policy are on trial, not the troops who endure the perils, the hardships, the death, and the agony of the campaign.

Let no Administration advocate delude himself with the idea that he can obtain respectful recognition as an impassioned defender of the Army. We repeat: The American people are not fools!

Let me say, Mr. President, that nobody can obscure this issue by getting up and referring to the cruelties that happened during the great civil war. Nor can anybody obscure it by referring to the wicked conduct of some officer in some other war either. The Senators who get up and attempt to palliate these cruelties by showing what was done at a certain time, and that if it was not as bad it was nearly as bad, can find a great deal worse cases than they have yet mentioned if they are readers of history. I can cite to them a great number of cases. I need not go further back than the Duke of Alva. I can see that he was more wicked and cruel in some respects than even Jacob Smith, and yet I do not believe that he killed any children of 10 and 12 years of age. I believe he confined himself to fighting men, and not boys of 10 and 12, and women. If you search history you can find plenty of defense, if it is a defense to show that somebody committed atrocities quite as great as these of which we complain.

Mr. President, I have one other extract that I want to read. I know the Republicanism of the Post is sometimes questioned, but I have been a pretty careful reader of it, and if the Administration anywhere, with perhaps one or two exceptions, has a more intelligent defender than the Post, I have not been able to find it. They have been pretty nearly equal to the task of making black appear white and making wrong appear right. They have some able writers down there, but Jacob Smith's order was a little too much for their stomachs, and they expressed themselves in the way I have read.

There is a paper published in New York City that is a Republican paper par excellence. It is absolute heresy on the other side of the Chamber to doubt it, and I speak with knowledge of that paper, which I commenced to read when I was a boy. It is the first newspaper that I ever in my life subscribed for. It was a Whig paper in those days, but it became a Republican paper just as soon as there was a Republican party to which it could go. I refer to the New York Tribune. I know there is no one who will dare to question its Republicanism, so I shall not waste any time on that point. I read from an article published in that paper on the 1st day of the present month. It is as follows:

THE CAMPAIGN IN SAMAR.

Final judgment upon the campaign in Samar or upon the plan of it must await fuller information. At this time, however, it seems fitting to say that a widespread and profound disappointment is felt at the failure of General Smith promptly to repudiate and to refute the astounding charges which were made by some of his subordinates. It was hoped that we should be spared the pain of knowing that a high officer of the United States Army had given a formal order worthy of Pappenheim or Tilly. We all know that "war is hell;" that it sometimes involves dreadful acts of retaliation, and that commanding officers have at times found it expedient, perhaps necessary, tacitly to condone acts committed by their subordinates in excess of the stated rules of conflict. But that a general officer should deliberately issue a formal order such as that which General Smith is charged with having issued in Samar—let it be hoped it will for all time stand unique and solitary upon our military annals.

The issuing of that order seems to be admitted by General Smith and his friends, and to be defended by them upon the grounds partly that it was legitimate and necessary, and partly that it did not fully mean what it said. We can not regard either of these grounds as satisfactory. To devastate a country with fire and sword, to make it a "howling wilderness," to slaughter its inhabitants indiscriminately, noncombatants as well as combatants, women as well as men, is not legitimate. It is not war. War is hell, but it is not that kind of hell. The Japanese did not do so in their war with China, though they had dreadful provocation. Our troops did not do so in our Indian wars, though the provocation there was incomparably greater than any that has been offered in the Philippines. The British did not do so in India, not even after the nameless horrors of Cawnpore. To legitimize such an order now would be to turn back by a century and more the hands upon the dial plate of time.

If such an order was not legitimate, neither can we concede that it was necessary. To say that civilization must fight savagery with equal savagery would be to declare civilization a failure. There is a strong and respectable belief that civilization ought to be able to do something better with even the worst individual criminal than simply to kill him. Certainly it should, it must, be able to do something better with a whole people than to exterminate it. Burke did not know "the method of drawing up an indictment against a whole people." Who shall venture to draw up against a whole people not merely an indictment, but a death warrant? We did not find it necessary to exterminate the Sioux or the Apaches. Neither can we be persuaded that it was necessary for a civilized nation of nearly eighty millions to exterminate, or to menace with extermination, a people of half a million. Strength can and must master weakness by other means than annihilation.

The plea that the order did not mean what it said is not satisfactory. The English language is not ambiguous. It is a pretty direct and explicit vehicle of expression. An order to "kill and burn" does not mean to spare life and property. An order to kill "everybody over 10 years" does not mean to spare women and children. An order to make a country "a howling wilderness" does not mean to leave it habitable by women and children under 10 years of age. As a matter of fact the order was worse than its terms, for the killing of all over 10 years of age meant surely that all under that age would perish, too, of starvation and neglect. Herod was more merciful. He killed only the children, leaving the parents to live. Under General Smith's order the parents were to be killed, leaving the children to die. The exception of those under 10 years was not merciful.

It may be that the order was effective. So was the sacking of Magdeburg. It may be "without General Smith's drastic measures the war there would not be ended yet," though we do not believe it. But even so, it would have been better to have a year or two more of civilized warfare than even a day or two of such a campaign as this order prescribed. We would not anticipate the verdict of the court-martial at Manila or the ultimate disposition of the case by the War Department and by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, but in the name of the American people and of the civilized world it must be hoped that never will supreme sanction and approval be given to universal slaughter as a means of warfare.

Mr. President, I have not any doubt that that Republican newspaper really speaks the sentiment of the great body of the Republican party of this country. I do not believe that they find any excuse for cruelties of this kind.

I could put into the RECORD the denunciations of a great number of newspapers in this country; I could put into the RECORD the open denunciations of a great number of men connected with the Republican organization to-day; I could put into the RECORD, as I said before, the protests and denunciations of more than one man and more than two men who have represented the Republican party in the cabinets of Republican presidents; I could put into the RECORD denunciations of men who have held high positions in the Republican party within my day and within yours, of these cruelties which have been practiced in the Philippines. When we stand here and protest against such things it is no answer to the American people for you to say: "Oh, you are on the Democratic side now." It would not be an answer to say, even if it were true, that I have changed my mind on the question; that I had once been in favor of holding the Philippine Islands, and that I am not now in favor of holding them.

Mr. President, if we can hold the Philippine Islands with honor, with decency, and with advantage to those people and advantage to ourselves—nay, I will put it the other way, and say if we can hold those islands with honor, with decency, and with advantage to those people, and even with injury to ourselves—I am in favor of holding them; but I am not in favor of holding them under the dishonorable conditions we are now holding them. I am not in favor of holding them by denying those people the right to the freedom for which they are fighting. I am not able to bring myself to the point of saying that those people, because they resist our domination, are not capable of self-government.

I am not able to bring myself to the condemnatory point of finding fault with them because they resist the system of government that you dare not to-day tell them what it is; that you dare not to-day say when you intend to close it up; that you dare not say what their ultimate condition is to be, or if you dare to do so, you decline to say it, and leave them in the dark. They have every reason to fear, knowing but little of us, that what the Spaniards did we intend to do; and the President of the United States has said by what we have done they may see what we are going to do. So they may, Mr. President. And if any people under the sun were ever justified in resisting the domination of a foreign power, judging from what that foreign power has done, these people are justified in resisting us.

If their resistance has got to such a state that 10-year-old boys have to be slaughtered because they are soldiers in arms it is time for us to get out of the islands, for we can not stay there with honor and with decency; we can not stay there without deserving and receiving the contempt of mankind under the profession that we have made for the last one hundred years, and that you find no difficulty in making now, but doing one thing and declaring another. You have got to face this proposition and give to those people self-government or declare your determination never to do so. Your military men, your Funstons, and others are proclaiming to the world that those people are never to have a free government of their own. I hope that they are false prophets; and yet I see nothing which, it seems to me, would justify a Filipino in believing that we were to give him what we have declared all mankind are entitled to—the right to command himself and to govern himself and not to be governed by another. Whenever you shall have taken your stand and said, "this is our policy"—which you say you can not afford to do—we shall know where to meet you; but until you do that we have a right to suppose that what you are doing now you intend to continue to do for all time.

A Senator said to me, "We must have peace, and the first thing to do is to get peace." That is what the Englishmen said to us. "The first thing is you must lay down your arms and declare your allegiance to our King, and then we will deal with you as Englishmen ought to deal with Englishmen." We did not lay down our arms, and the Filipino will not lay down his arms. If you trample him out, if you force him to retire to the hills or to take a hypocritical attitude and assert that he is your friend, you will find, when the opportunity arrives, that he is still your enemy.

The declaration that is made day after day that the Filipino does not respond to kindness is denied by every writer who has written in regard to that people previous to the present condition. It is denied by the declaration of men who have lived with them for years and who know them as a race. It is said that they are not the kindliest and the gentlest people in the world. I know that, but they are a liberty-loving people; and if Worcester does not lie, and if many others do not lie, they have qualities which commend them to us and which should endear them to us, and we should stop and consider whether the Almighty has put this burden on us or not.

Mr. President, if we listen to the voice of mercy and kindness and not to the voice of avarice, greed, and ambition, we will answer: "We will not, unless you consent, attempt to lift you to a plane that you say you do not intend to occupy and can not occupy." We will recognize in that way the great republican principle without which no republican government can exist, that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed. I repeat, nobody need longer come here and say we do not apply that principle because those people are incapable of giving consent. I say the testimony is overwhelming that what South Americans, Spaniards, and Portuguese could do these people can do, and do it quite as well; and that we can cite, not only Dewey, but many other American officers who have no hesitation in declaring that the Filipinos were better prepared for self-government than the people of Cuba, where I hope we are within a few days to inaugurate a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter written from Manila on the 12th day of March, 1902, to Mr. William C. Dix, of Merchantville, N. J. It is the voice of a Filipino of prominence. As he undertakes to speak the sentiments and aspirations of his people and is friendly and has been friendly in his attitude toward the Government of the United States, I ask that the latter may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Copy of translation.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PHILIPPINE CIVIL SERVICE BOARD,
Manila, P. I., March 12, 1902.

Mr. WILLIAM C. DIX.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of January of this year. From them I see the course of American politics in relation to these islands sums itself down to the following two expressions:

First. The Republican party, now in power, wishes to administer at a distance of 11,000 miles our local interests, both private and public, giving us as little as possible participation in the same.

The Democratic party, now out of power, also wish to administer, from that immense distance, with the promise of eventual independence. The idea of annexation is completely abandoned. The practical result of this condition is uncertainty of permanence in conditions, because there is no precedent in the history of America which would assure us of a good colonial government at a distance. Moreover, the natural suspicion and lack of confidence of the Filipinos to all colonial systems after having had the experience of the Spanish colonial system will continue latent and will necessarily be very important factors in our mutual relations, and very harmful factors at that, because they will produce obstacles more or less grave to the intentions of the American authorities, producing, in fact, a false, hypocritical, and irritating condition of things. My loyalty to the American people and my deep knowledge of the Filipino problems oblige me to tell the truth in these solemn and serious moments when the bonds of union are being formed between America and the Philippines. For this reason I beg you to allow me to express my reasons for arriving at this sad conclusion.

The Army, also all the American civilians who have come here and who are residing here, have made an active propaganda of the Constitution of the United States. General Otis and General MacArthur have presented to all the provinces more than a thousand copies of the Constitution. The dealers in American books have done the same, as well as the American newspapers. But the most important propaganda has been that of the 825 schoo-lteachers, who have distributed more than 2,000 books, giving the principal ideas of the Constitution. Therefore, the Filipinos, both old and young, know something about said Constitution and consider it a book as sacred as the Holy Bible. Now, then, dear sir, what can I answer my people when they ask me the following questions?

Does the Constitution follow the American flag in these islands? Are we American citizens or not? Sir, I myself am willing to accept the supreme commands of Congress, but I can not answer the same for all my people, who, seeing they are neither American citizens nor enjoy the protection of the Constitution, will be filled with profound sadness and disgust. For all these reasons I beg you, Senator HOAR, Senator LODGE, Congressman COOPER, and all the honorable members of Congress, to kindly take into consideration the above-mentioned reasons for declaring annexation.

My country is passing through a critical and great prostration in view of the uncertainty of the future. This prostration results in a lack of confidence of the people toward us, the leaders, because they see us impotent to draw them out of this uncertain condition. For this reason they even deny us the necessary funds to represent their interests there.

I am not in sufficient good health to withstand the cold of the winter there, and for that reason did not care to go this winter. Some days ago I applied for a permit to leave here on the 1st of April. The acting governor, General Wright, who leaves to-day for the southern provinces, asked me to await his return, and I fancy he does not feel much like granting the permit. This causes me great sadness, because it deprives me from aiding there all the good Americans who love the Philippines in their endeavors to bring about annexation (constitutional) as the only certain and durable bond of union between America and the Phillppines.

I wish to conclude, dear sir, summarizing the situation. Here, a Filipino people very anxious for annexation under the Constitution, with a territorial form of government.

There a Congress who refuses annexation, producing in our loyal and sincerely American mind a feeling of terrible anxiety, because we feel that outside of your Constitution there is nothing left but the judgment of humanity and its accompanying uncertainty.

May God, in whose hands is the final disposition of the destinies of the world, illumine the American Congress, so that it may be just in its disposition of the Philippines.

May God also keep you and all the lovers of the Filipinos in good health, and especially our President, Mr. Roosevelt, and you may count on my eternal gratitude.

Respectfully, yours,

FELIPE BUENCAMINO.

ANNA ELIZA ISABELLA VON HEMERT.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5587) for the relief of Anna Eliza Isabella Von Hemert; a short bill, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia and unanimously recommended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to pay to Anna Eliza Isabella Von Hemert $5,167.05, in refundment of the money inadvertently paid by her for the discharge of the special assessment against the Walton W. Evans tract of land, represented by lien certificates Nos. 8 and 38 of the series issued for the cost of improvements upon the street connecting Columbia road with Connecticut avenue extended and thence along said avenue to the District line, which certificates have been declared by the supreme court of the District of Columbia to have been illegally issued; and appropriates the aforesaid sum of money, one-half of which is to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PARK IN OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4393, which is very short.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4393) reserving from the public lands in the State of Oregon, as a public park for the benefit of the people of the United States, and for the protection and preservation of the game, fish, timber, and all other natural objects therein, a tract of land herein described, etc. It provides that the tract of land bounded north by the parallel 43° 4′ north latitude, south by 42° 48′ north latitude, east by the meridian 122° west longitude, and west by the meridian 122° 16′ west longitude, having an area of 249 square miles, in the State of Oregon, and including Crater Lake, shall be reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or sale under the laws of the United States, and dedicated and set apart forever as a public park or pleasure ground for the benefit of the people of the United States, to be known as Crater Lake National Park, etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5467) to remove the charge of desertion against William Persons.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That William Persons, late of Company I, Second Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry Volunteers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service in said company and regiment on March 24, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue to him by virtue of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of William Persons."

WAGON AND FOOT BRIDGE AT LITTLE FALLS, MINN.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 5434) to authorize the city of Little Falls, Minn., to construct a wagon and foot bridge across the Mississippi River within the limits of said city.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 2, on page 2, line 3, after the word "plans," to strike out "and specifications;" and in line 6, after the name "Little Falls," to strike out "and approved by the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the said bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and constructed upon plans to be approved by the Secretary of War, and shall be subject to the free use of the public under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the city of Little Falls.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That said bridge constructed and maintained under this act shall be a lawful structure and shall be known and recognized as a public highway and post route, and the United States shall have the free right of way over said bridge for postal, telegraph, and telephone purposes.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 3. That said bridge shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post roads in the United States; and no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the road or roads leading to said bridge. Equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes, and all changes in said bridge required by the Secretary of War at any time, or its entire removal, shall be at the expense of the corporation owning or operating said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 2, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 5. That this act shall be null and void unless the bridge authorized is commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A bill (H. R. 11850) granting an increase of pension to Susan A. Volkmar.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE OF CUBA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13996) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the republic of Cuba; which were read.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be permitted to lie on the table for a time, so that we may see whether we can agree without a conference.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

ADMISSION OF OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair) and resumed the consideration of House bill 12543.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon an amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask that the amendment which I proposed just before the committee rose last evening be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 19 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 19. The inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as at present described may become a State under the name of Montezuma, or such name as may be finally determined by the convention to be elected under this act."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to consolidate the two Territories of Arizona and New Mexico and admit them as one State. The amendment is offered with the view of benefiting the people of those two Territories, as well as bringing them into the Union upon such a basis as will make their representation in Congress bear some fair relation to their population. The actual population of the two Territories of Arizona and New Mexico is to-day, as shown by the census report, more than 100,000 less than that of the Territory of Oklahoma. The aggregate area of Arizona and New Mexico is less than the area of the State of Texas. It seems to me, therefore, that the consolidation of these two Territories and their admission as one State will give us a State with a population in proportion to the area of the State, and will still leave that State on a fair basis with respect to the other States of the Union.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that a mistake which an earlier Congress may have made by the admission of a State with a small population, with the possibility of that population lessening, will not justify a mistake of similar kind by this Congress. The State of Texas, under the authority granted at the time of her annexation, would be permitted to-day to divide her territory into five States, giving her ten instead of two Senators, and yet the people of that great State, appreciating the power of a great State rather than to reduce their power by five separate divisions, have never intimated their intention to carry out the authority in the terms of the annexation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I admit you are correct in the division of the State of Texas, because we have no natural barriers there to separate the State, and no man in Texas would be in favor of dividing it. We are all proud of the State, we are proud of its size and condition; but there is a natural barrier between Arizona and New Mexico in this, that the Rocky Mountains form two different, separate territories, and that the one watershed has a center of population in Arizona hundreds of miles away from the center of population in New Mexico, and there is no place where a capital could be located that would be convenient to both of those peoples.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman has given evidence in support of the proposition which I was about to express, which was that there would not be a voice raised to-day in the State of Texas favoring her division, and I believe faithfully, Mr. Chairman, that if the people of the two Territories of Arizona and New Mexico could follow the example of the people of Texas and within ten years be given an opportunity to express themselves they, too, would refuse a division of their territory. The area of these two Territories contains more waste land, untillable land, than the State of Texas to-day contains. The Territory of Arizona was, until within recent years, a part of the Territory of New Mexico. Gentlemen object to such consolidation on account of the mountainous conditions, and yet there are States, like the State of Washington, which are already divided by that same mountain range.

Gentlemen further complain that it would require distant travel to the courts, and to the seats of government. That same travel will be necessary if the two Territories are given two distinct separate governments. The courts go to the people and not the people to the courts, and if you have one State instead of two carved out of this area, the courts would still be established in those localities where the business of the people justified their creation. If two State governments are to be maintained by these people the expenses alone incident to their cost would justify the consolidation, so as to eliminate one-half of those expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the same advantages which will be granted to the people themselves by two separate State governments would still be enjoyed by the people under one State government. We are carrying out every pledge that either party has ever made in giving to these people the privilege of home rule and of self-government under the rules governing State organizations. There is not an advantage which has been enumerated by the most enthusiastic friends of this measure which they will not enjoy under this proposed amendment. They will escape the disadvantages of increased expenses, and enjoy the same advantages under one form as under two distinct forms of statehood. The only additional plea which any man can suggest is that it doubles the number of offices to be held by her citizens.

The people who will pay the taxes and discharge the obligations of their State are not to be denied the right of reduction of those expenses under fair and favorable conditions. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the total population of these two Territories will not make a State any larger in population than is necessary to carry on the internal improvements which they will enjoy. It is fair to say that the distribution of the burden of the obligations of the two Territories should be equitably adjusted, but that is a detail of legislation which can easily be carried out. If, therefore, Mr. Chairman, you will take into account the real interests of the people of these two Territories, looking at it from a plain business standpoint, surrounded by the circumstances under which States are ordinarily admitted, you will be forced to the conclusion that the consolidation of these two Territories into one State is the wise thing to do. [Applause.]

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], while he is a devotee of sound money, is not, evidently, an advocate of sound politics. As I understand, all the political parties, especially the two great political parties—the Republican and Democratic—in their national platforms have promised statehood to the Territories of Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona. The gentleman from Indiana now announces the novel proposition of combining two of these Territories and admitting them as one State.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] has had a great deal to say about the bad faith of redeeming our obligations in 50-cent dollars; but doubtless he thinks that to keep a Republican platform promise at 50 cents on the dollar is more than ought to be reasonably expected of his party.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the admission of all these Territories as States. They have sufficient area, their population justifies it, the character of their citizenship warrants it, and the standard of representation they have always had upon the floor of this House justifies us in saying that the best interests of our country and the general welfare of all the people will not be menaced by giving statehood to these Territories.

A great deal has been said about the injustice to great States like New York, Pennsylvania, and Texas as the result when these Territories, with comparatively limited populations, are admitted to equal voice and equal vote upon the floor of the United States Senate. But, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, the country will not suffer by the infusion of the hardihood, patriotism, and the manhood that will come from those Territories to the Senate of the United States when we have admitted them as States. The country west of the Mississippi has never suffered by comparison of its Senators with the representatives upon the floor of the United States Senate coming from the great populous States of the East. It is true that this Western territory has never resurrected from the crustacean period and sent to the Senate a creature of the corporations to perpetrate stale jokes upon the members of that body when no longer adapted to banquet halls and when age is a barrier to activity as a lobbyist and late hours.

No man has come through the "providential" route into the United States Senate from States carved from the Territories in the West. No Western State, however small, has representation in the Senate inferior to the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. Gentlemen lose sight of the fact that it is not a question of pro rata population when representation in the Senate is considered. The preservation and protection of the sovereignty of the States was the consideration which prompted the "fathers of the Republic" to give to little Rhode Island and to Delaware equal representation in the Senate with the greatest and most populous Commonwealths. Delaware, to her credit, refuses to accept the methods by which some of the States have elected Senators, but prefers to be unrepresented upon the floor of the Senate rather than to have Senators elected in the manner that has characterized some of the greater and more powerful States. Six Senators will come from these Territories as the representatives of the sovereignty of their States, and there can come no harm to this country in having the body at the other end of the Capitol swelled by an infusion of the manhood and patriotism that come from beyond the Mississippi River. The standard may be raised there; it can not be lowered. Texas is not jealous for fear her importance will suffer by giving statehood and Senatorships to the Territories. Texas does not choose to divide herself up, because her history is common to us all, and we glory in a patriotic citizenship having common interests and harmonious relationships.

Texas was a republic before she sought entrance into the sisterhood of States. Our public domain and common-school funds are a joint heritage, and as the years go by and population justifies, we are satisfied to have the advantage upon the floor of this House that comes from a large membership, such as the States of New York and Pennsylvania have; and so far as we are concerned, we are not afraid to give New Mexico and Arizona and Oklahoma the right of statehood, no matter what the politics of their Senators may be. Capital will then go there and develop their resources, and their citizenship will realize the fulfillment of long-delayed promises. In violation of the treaty obligations of the United States when the Territories were acquired, they have been kept from the statehood to which they have long been entitled and which the political parties of this country have promised them time and again. I know that, so far as the gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber are concerned, we believe in keeping our promises that we make to the people. The Democratic party stands here ready to carry out that platform promise, and pledged to give its solid vote for the admission of these three Territories as three sovereign States, and we are not going to put them off with Trojan horses, such as the gentleman from Indiana offers because he is not in favor of statehood for those Territories; and it would be more manly if they would all adopt the frankness of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who opposes the bill because he is afraid that perhaps some of the new States may go against his political party, and therefore he is against their admission.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the admission of the region covered by New Mexico and Arizona into the American Union as a State. I think they should constitute one State, but would vote for the two States if the bill can not be so amended. They have had the tutelage of Territorial government long enough. Both political parties have in their platforms pledged themselves to the admission of these Territories; but the question as to how it shall be done is a matter for Congress to decide upon, and the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] is more in the interest of Arizona than the original bill as reported by the committee. Take the State of Texas, for example. In order to admit Texas into the Union in 1845 the pledge had to be given to permit her division into five States; and yet to-day there is not a man, woman, or child in Texas who would consent to the setting apart of a single additional State out of that vast area. Texas has 30,000 square miles more territory than New Mexico and Arizona combined—235,600 square miles in both Territories, as against 265,780 square miles in Texas.

New Mexico and Arizona had to be divided into two Territories for governmental purposes when there were no railways, when they were inaccessible to each other. To-day those two Territories are closer together and more conveniently accessible than the different parts of the small State of Connecticut were when, in the days of slow transit, that State was constituted a part of the Union. You can now go from one corner of New Mexico to the opposite corner of Arizona in a few hours. It is said that the Territories are separated by mountain ranges. The mountains do not divide those Territories, but rather they unite them. They are not in the way. The railways open up and intersect the entire country, making it easily and speedily accessible to all. We had the same question years ago in regard to the capital of the nation. It was argued that it must move west in order to be near the center, but the railroads have destroyed distance and made time no longer a serious matter in going from the confines of our land to the nation's capital. So the railroads have annihilated time and space in New Mexico and Arizona.

They tell us that Arizona is ready for separate admission. There are only 98,287 white people in Arizona, according to the census of 1900, and 24,644 Indians untaxed. The Indians are not an asset; they are a liability. Take the entire population of Arizona and New Mexico, and leaving out the Indians not taxed, they lack 5,000 of having as many people as there are in the city of Milwaukee. Who would think of giving to Milwaukee four United States Senators? The proposition now is to give Arizona two Senators. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] cites Delaware as an example. Yes; look at Delaware! You must ask the proprietor of the gas works whether Delaware can be represented in the Senate at all. That is a striking instance of the disadvantages of a small State, a State about which Senator Ingalls once said at low tide it had three counties and at high tide it had only two. [Laughter.] Now, we do not want any more of these little boroughs that a couple of corporations will divide between them into two Senatorial districts, but give us New Mexico and Arizona together, and let them be made into a State and elect the present Delegates as Senators and they would make a magnificent pair.

Mr. RODEY. To draw to. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman says "to draw to." [Laughter.] I do not know exactly what he means by that [laughter]; but gentlemen know that the people out there would have no need of additional Senators if they should have these two. Then we would have a really splendid State. You must remember that they have a great deal of "area" and not enough land in Arizona and New Mexico. Much of it does not rise to the dignity of being called land. I have frequently visited both Territories. I went through Arizona the first time some years ago, and when I looked out of the car windows while we were going through the worst part of that Territory I said to an Arizonian behind me: "My friend, what did God make this country for?" He replied: "Stranger, that is where you are off. God Almighty didn't never make no such a blankety blank country as this." [Laughter.] But another sitting behind me said: "There is where you are mistaken. God did make this country. This country was necessary in order to hold the world together. It had to be here, and if it had not been made the world would have broken in two at this place." [Laughter.] That was a legitimate illustration of the condition of the waste parts of Arizona; and yet Arizona has some places that are so fair to look upon that paradise itself would scarcely be an improvement. Arizona has some rich land and the most delightful climate the lungs of man ever inhaled. It has a vast area. Area is what is the matter with it. That is not an element of strength. The gentleman from Arizona tells us that there are 75,000 settlers so scattered out in that Territory that they could not be found by the census enumerators.

Joaquin Miller, a lover of Arizona, pictured some of the desolate regions to which I refer:

How broken plunged the steep descent!
How barren! Desolate and rent
By earthquake shock, the land lay dead,
Like some proud king in old time slain,
An ugly skeleton, it gleamed
In burning sands. The fiery rain
Of fierce volcanoes here had sown
Its ashes burnt and black and seamed
With thunder strokes and strewn
With cinders.

In his graphic way he describes old ruins of prehistoric ages on the shores of extinct seas:

Of ruins older than the East
That time had eaten, as a bone
Is eaten by some savage beast.

It is the great area of land that may not be irrigated that must in future hinder the growth of this vast region, and we must look at the facts as they really are in carving a new and sovereign State out of this territory. The fertile and irrigable valleys will be occupied. The minerals will give employment to many miners; the arid grazing land will furnish food for many cattle, horses, and sheep. But it is a mistake to assume that these dry and elevated regions will be populated like Oklahoma. The population of necessity must always be widely scattered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes; but I wish to be permitted to state that I was admonished by the Speaker that we were trespassing upon the time of the Pensions Committees, and so far as possible it is our desire to have a vote upon this bill as early as we can. If I had the time, I would be glad to extend the time unlimited for debate, but in this instance I will ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition is in the interest of Arizona. It is for the good of Arizona more than it is in the interest of anybody else. Arizona is now readily accessible to New Mexico. The two were formerly associated together as one Territory. They do not have the population to-day sufficient to make it desirable to erect them into two States. They have population enough for one. To admit Arizona now into the Union as a single State, the population is too small and the expenses of the State government will fall too heavily upon her. The same thing is true as to New Mexico, although not in so great a degree. There are no politics in this proposition. One of these Territories is Democratic and the other is Republican. And, indeed, it will be an even question as to which of the old political parties will control the single State. If Arizona is not taken care of in the present bill, it stands here as a constant menace to the Senate of the United States, demanding two Senators with only about a hundred thousand people. In this proposition neither New Mexico or Arizona is named, and the name of New Mexico is dropped. They want to get rid of the word "Mexico," and Arizona would be glad to get rid of the word "Arizona," because it means a "dry zone or place."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Where did you get all that?

Mr. LACEY. By long association with my friend from Arizona. The word "Arizona" as a name is a bad advertisement. You get rid of the word "Mexico" on the one hand and "Arizona" on the other and bring in a grand, splendid State of "Montezuma," one that would be a good companion piece to her next-door neighbor, the great State of Texas, instead of having slenderly populated boroughs, where capital could select and make United States Senators; in which you would have a single State great enough and strong enough to become a potent factor in the affairs of the nation.

I know that my friend here [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] would prefer a division. His personal ambition may be gratified, and if the State is admitted into the Union it will be and ought to be gratified, for a more able gentleman in the Territory could not be found to represent it. [Applause.] But it does not necessarily follow, as much as we love him, that we should, for all time to come, have another Nevada in the American Union, a Nevada that was admitted full of promises and hopes, and yet to-day it has only 42,000 people and they have one Congressman and two Senators in the United States, able and estimable gentlemen, I grant you, but what and whom do they represent? Area! Aridity! Area! One hundred and ten thousand seven hundred square miles of area and aridity. It should not be a question of mere area. When you admit a large area of country you must take into consideration what are the future capabilities of that area, and that it is an element of weakness in this proposition in making two States out of these two countries.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman wish to go on record that New Mexico and Oklahoma will ever become States in the condition of Nevada?

Mr. LACEY. I think and hope not; but we ought to take due care that we do not make that mistake again. This State, composed of two Territories, would make a powerful and splendid State, and these gentlemen should not be here apologizing and claiming that in each proposed State there were 75,000 people who were not enumerated, because they were so badly scattered that they could not be found by the census takers. That is the explanation made as to the small population of these two Territories. They say there are many more people in them, but they were so widely scattered that the census takers could not find them at 3 cents apiece. At $3 apiece they could not find many more.

Mr. Chairman, here we have a plain proposition in the interest of both of these Territories, to lighten the burdens of statehood by allowing one State instead of two. They have the whole country gridironed with railways.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman speaks of the omission in taking the census in Arizona and New Mexico. Does not the gentleman from Iowa know that the enumerators were paid $5 a day there instead of 3 cents apiece?

Mr. LACEY. I was not aware of that fact, but even at $5 a day a man could not afford to carry his supplies with him in some parts of that country and beat about the bush in search of population. It is not to be wondered at that many escaped the census taker. I have no doubt the figures are somewhat inadequate, but the fact remains that the area we have heard so much about is the worst thing that we have to contend with. There is too much barren area and too little population. They would conserve their own best interests by coming in as a single State. The new State of Montezuma would only have about 50 per cent more area than California or Montana. Montezuma would have 235,600 square miles; Montana has 146,080 and California 158,360 square miles. Colorado has 103,925 square miles, Oregon 96,030, Nevada 110,700, and Wyoming 97,890.

Let us provide for a strong and wealthy State instead of two feeble ones. Let us profit by the mistakes in this respect made in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Chairman, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona ought to know more about what they want than the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Iowa. The Delegates from these two Territories ought to know better what the people of these two Territories want than do the gentlemen named. We ought also to know the topography of the country, and the conditions there. With the permission of the House I will state some of them. We also ought to know the sentiments of the people on this question.

Arizona does not want to be joined to New Mexico. It has forty years of its own history behind it; it has its own county debts; it has its own municipal debts; it has its own Territorial debt. It has an area as large as New York and New England combined, and you can throw New Jersey in when sizing up to the area of New Mexico.

The surface ground of New Mexico is more like the State of Colorado, only it has more fertile valleys in it. It is not the class of country that the gentleman from Iowa has referred to. When people go out over that country, they, like the gentleman from Iowa, go over the northern end of Arizona, and see the worst end of it. They never look down into the vast green valley where Phoenix is situated, the like of which can not be found in the Union. When they travel over New Mexico they see only a glimpse; they never go down to the valley of the Rio Grande; they never go down into the valley of the Pecos, where there are tracts as large as any Eastern State that is splendid farming ground, but, because, forsooth, they have traveled over the arid portion in one corner of the Territory they say: "Oh, it is a desert."

Why we have timber tracts in New Mexico bigger than some of the States. Now, New Mexico does not want to be tied to Arizona, and its people are opposed to this amendment. We would never adopt a constitution under such a bill. We have fifty-six years of American history behind us in New Mexico, and one hundred and fifty years of history before that, during which the Territory was not disfranchised either. We do not want to be tied to Arizona, with the Rocky Mountains between us. Arizona is on the Pacific slope, New Mexico is on the Atlantic slope of the continent. We admit that it is easier to travel in these Territories now than in former times, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa, but it takes twelve or fifteen hours of railroad travel to get to the capital of either Territory from most parts, and days from other parts.

You gentlemen living in New England can go in a night from this capital to your homes in your district, but in New Mexico to travel to the capital of Arizona you can not do it in much less than thirty-six hours, even now, because there is only one railroad through that region either way—the Santa Fe Pacific on the north and the Southern Pacific on the south. In going from one of these Territories to the other, from New Mexico to Arizona, you must either go via Prescott Junction or the other way, from Maricopa clear around by Deming. Either way it is a great distance from one Territory to the other. The conveniences for making the transit are scarcely more now than they were in 1863, when Arizona was cut off from New Mexico. It is utterly impossible to have convenient communication between them; at least it is so now.

Gentlemen tell us about the census of New Mexico and Arizona. I have tried to make that matter plain to this House. I have shown that the census was not correctly taken either in New Mexico or Arizona. The gentleman from Iowa admits there are errors to a small extent; that there are perhaps a few more people there than the census shows. I contend that there are nearly twice as many people in New Mexico as are shown by the census. As I stated on this floor the other day, the last report from the registration of voters, two years ago now, showed 60,000 registered voters, and a recent school census shows 70,000 pupils enrolled in the public schools. Yet they give us only 195,000 people in the census books. Why, sir, the parents of those 70,000 pupils if they had but one child per family would number about 140,000, making, with the pupils themselves, 210,000 people. The rule that you can count five people to one voter, I state from personal knowledge, is as true in New Mexico as anywhere. Such facts as that prove our contentions.

To this bill the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] proposes to tack this amendment. Surely he has never looked at the bill or he would not make such a proposition. Adopt this amendment and you kill the whole bill then and there. It is not adapted to any such amendment. It contains any number of sections that have no application to any such a proposition, If such an amendment were adopted, you would have to remodel the whole bill from beginning to end. Surely the gentleman has never read the bill or he would not have attempted to secure the adoption of such an amendment—an amendment the only effect of which must be to kill the bill; nothing else. That must be the object of the gentleman.

Gentlemen talk of the great State that the adoption of this proposition is to make out of us. Why, sir, there are in the United States Senate to-day gentlemen with whom I have had communication within a year past with reference to this measure and who advocate strenuously the proposition to divide New Mexico into two States and Arizona into two more, and they will urge that proposition when this bill goes over there. That is their project, to make two States out of each of these Territories instead of one out of the two.

The continental divide runs between New Mexico and Arizona, north and south. There is nothing in common between the people of the two Territories save their splendid Western spirit of enterprise. Such a provision as the gentleman from Indiana proposes would mix the conditions of these people in such a manner that they never could extricate themselves. I repeat, the adoption of the amendment would kill the bill. That is all there is about it, and I ask every friend of the measure on this floor to vote against it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I wish just a word, and then I am ready for a vote. I shall not allow myself to be led astray by the gentlemen who have preceded me in undertaking to impugn my motives in the proposition I have suggested. This amendment has been offered by me in absolutely good faith. I shall not take up the time of the committee to try to defend my motive. It is not argument for gentlemen to charge insidious effort to defeat a measure; it is not argument to state we can not perfect this bill if this amendment should prevail. I have examined this bill very carefully, and in my four terms of experience I have had something to do with the drafting of laws; and I undertake to say in all fairness and belief that I am ready to put the statement to the proof that this measure, from the nineteenth section to its conclusion, can be amalgamated and whipped into shape after the passage of this amendment within less than an hour's time additional to that which would be required if you only read the bill and put it upon its passage. It is not a difficult matter to amalgamate the different sections of the measure relative to these two Territories, and therefore that is not a serious nor an important criticism.

Gentlemen talk about the census not recording the number of their inhabitants. I have never heard of a community yet which has been entirely satisfied with the census returns concerning its own population, from the smallest hamlet in the country to an entire State. There always is a criticism that they have not been given all the credit which their population deserves. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not an argument that there are distances in that section of the country. Those distances were there before these two Delegates moved to those Territories, and they will be there after these people are given statehood. Distances will not he changed by any law which we may make. I put the plea upon the basis that it is better for those people that they eliminate the double expense incident to two forms of statehood and that they take example from the great empire of Texas, which comes into this Union with more power by far than five States would bring if she should divide herself, as her constitution now prescribes.

Mr. Chairman, the very fact that we, undertaking in a fair way to give to these people what they are entitled to, notwithstanding the imputation of gentlemen that we are not meeting the pledges that we have made, to my mind is sufficient argument and reason why this amendment should prevail. It is not the States nor the Territories that your bill seeks to aid; it is the inhabitants of those sections which we seek to benefit by granting the right of statehood; it is the people of that section of our Government whom we propose to accommodate in the pledges of both parties to give them statehood. I have no intention to oppose this bill. It shall receive my support, but this amendment would leave it in a more perfect condition to the people of the two Territories. We shall not undertake to question the motives of these gentlemen who are insisting for two States, and it is unfair and unbecoming in them to impugn the motives of those of us on this side of the Chamber and some upon that who really believe that it will be an improvement upon the Government and upon the flag that these people come into this Union united into one State rather than to be divided into two.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think that the State of North Carolina and the State of Tennessee could be joined together without question, on account of the mountain range?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is past. It could have been done. It can not now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Where would have been the capital, on the Atlantic coast or in the Mississippi Valley?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The question of capital is always one people interest themselves in. I am speaking for those people, and not for the prospective Senators or sites for capitals. The capital of Arizona, which she has builded, and that of New Mexico, which she has constructed, will be of material use in the arrangement of the new State for their State institutions.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I agreed with the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], who presented this amendment, that he should have the time that has been given him, and after a very few words to the committee I shall ask for a vote. I submit to the Republican side that here is this important proposition to consolidate two of our largest Territories, to take away the name of Arizona, to wipe that Territory from the map after a generation of existence as a Territory, set off from New Mexico by Congress upon solemn consideration more than a generation ago. During that time the people of Arizona have fought battles with the most savage tribes upon this continent; they have founded homes there; they have built institutions of learning; they have, architecturally, the most elegant statehouse at Phœnix that there is in the country; they have learned to take pride in the name of Arizona, and the people of New Mexico have learned to take pride in that name.

Now, I submit to every man upon this floor, is it fair to those people to take away their name, to wipe out their history, to join one with another without giving them a chance to be heard? This matter of statehood for these Territories has been pending and talked about here in Congress ever since last December. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] have never intimated to the committee that there was to be any propositition to unite these Territories. They have never given us a chance to hear the matter. They have never given us a chance to frame a bill for it. They come in here within two days with a proposition so radical that, while I do not charge for a moment that the gentleman from Indiana would offer an amendment for the purpose of destroying the bill, because I know him too well and I have too high a respect for him to believe that, yet the effect of the amendment must, it seems to me, be to defeat the bill.

Now, there is continual talk, and the gentleman from Iowa

[Mr. LACEY] has made a continual talk about Democratic Senators from Arizona and New Mexico. Such a course as this, if anything, would make Democracy triumphant forever in those Territories. [Applause.] Are you to say to the Republicans of Arizona and New Mexico, who have fought the battle of Republicanism in those two Territories and sent two Republican Delegates to this Congress, when they come here and ask for statehood, "You shall not have statehood and you shall not keep your Territory; we will wipe you off the map." Is that a fair return when they come asking bread? Oh, do justice to Arizona; do justice to New Mexico. If you can not give them statehood, then refuse it in a direct way. I agree that there are men in this House who oppose statehood for these Territories, and I respect their opinion; but the way to express that opinion is by voting against this bill, by voting against some one feature of it, by voting against Arizona, by voting against New Mexico. I agree there are two sides to this question, and I entertain the highest respect for the men who do not believe that the present is the time when these two Territories should come in; but do justice. Do not wipe the two Territories off the map simply because you do not wish to give them a State form of government.

Now, the people of Arizona and the people of New Mexico are entitled to some hearing. How is their voice expressed in this Congress? By two Delegates. Are we not bound to believe that they express the opinion of the people there when they say that the question of the uniting of these two States has never even been discussed there? There are a hundred daily publications in those Territories, all asking for statehood. In no single one of them has the project ever been broached of uniting the two into one State. Why, when this thing was started, about two days ago, my friend from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] wished to get a caucus of the Republican party and then a conference. Some say the conference was held. Some say it was not. I do not know. I was not invited, but the result came about in suggesting Montezuma.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this amendment be closed.

Mr. KNOX. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist on his motion?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No.

Mr. KNOX. Now, that ancient and romantic ruler of the Aztec race has been resurrected from his grave where he has rested for centuries, and it is proposed that the attraction of his history and his name shall be the means of depriving these two Territories of the boon of statehood.

It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that it offers no solution of the difficulty whatever to say that there will be too great a representation in the Senate from these two Territories. Now, we make a great mistake in talking about the increased representation in the Senate. Gentlemen seem to suppose the Territories are to stop where they are, that they are to have no future, no increase, and have no more population. Why, these two Territories are as large as the whole of New York, New England, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, and North Carolina. When that Territory becomes peopled, as it will in twenty, fifty, or perhaps a hundred years from now, you may say while these two new States will be represented by four Senators they will be as large, and perhaps more populous, than other States in the United States represented by 24 Senators and more than 100 Representatives. [Applause.]

There is where the disproportion is likely to come. I think gentlemen make a mistake when they act upon the assumption that admission to statehood is the end of progress. When the Territories are admitted they go forward and grow in population. That is one of the great purposes of statehood; and, with the exception of Nevada, there is no instance in the history of this country but that after statehood has been granted to a Territory it has enlarged, expanded, and progressed. Now, I have nothing more to say. I hope the House will extend this boon to these Territories, and if we do not, let them at least go back and preserve their names, preserve their history and their love of locality. I ask for a vote. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. OVERSTREET; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 28, noes 106.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That all qualified electors of said Territory are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention in said Territory. Such delegates shall possess the qualifications of such electors. The said convention shall consist of 36 delegates, apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the proposed State as follows: Apache County, 2 delegates; Cochise County, 4 delegates; Coconino County, 2 delegates; Graham County, 3 delegates; Gila County, 2 delegates; Maricopa County, 5 delegates; Mohave County, 2 delegates; Navajo County, 2 delegates; Pima County, 3 delegates; Pinal County, 3 delegates; Santa Cruz County, 2 delegates; Yavapai County, 4 delegates; Yuma County, 2 delegates; and the governor of said Territory shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid in said Territory, to be held on such day as he may in such proclamation designate, not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after the issuance thereof; and the boards of supervisors of the counties of the Territory shall, immediately upon the issuance of the governor's proclamation ordering the election of delegates to a constitutional convention as herein provided, authorize and require a supplemental registration of the male citizens of the United States over the age of 21 years who will have resided in the Territory for six months next preceding the date fixed for said election, whose names shall be added to the great registers exhibiting the names of the qualified voters of the Territory at the last general election held therein, which shall qualify them to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention; and such election for delegates shall be conducted, the returns made, and the certificate of persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said Territory regulating elections therein of members of the legislature. Persons possessing the qualifications entitling them to vote for delegates under this act shall be entitled to vote on the ratification or rejection of the constitution, under such rules or regulations as said convention may prescribe, not in conflict with this act.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am heartily in favor of the admission of each of these Territories as States of this Union. Both their population and condition justify the passage of this measure, and hence each of these Territories has the "right" to demand admission already too long and causelessly delayed.

Let me first state the law governing the case.

I read the law first from the Supreme Court of the United States, in Shively v. Bowlby, 57 U. S., 153, where the court declared:

Upon the acquisition of a Territory by the United States, whether by cession from one of the States, or by treaty with a foreign country, or by discovery and settlement, the same title and dominion passed to the United States for the benefit of the whole people and in trust for the several States to be ultimately created out of the Territory.

The Territory is held in "trust" for the "future State."

Again, on page 49, in the same case, the court says:

And the Territories acquired by Congress, whether by deed of cession from the original States or by treaty with a foreign country, are held with the object, as soon as their population and condition justify it, of being admitted into the Union as States upon an equal footing with the original States in all respects; and the title and dominion of the tide waters and the lands under them are held by the United States for the benefit of the whole people, and, as this court has often said, in cases above cited, "in trust for the future States." (Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How., 212, 221, 222; Weber v. Harbor Commissioners, 18 Wall., 57, 65; Knight v. United States Land Association, 142 U. S., 161, 183.)

Mr. Chairman, the law is here well and clearly stated, and has been thus announced since an early day, that when the "population and the condition justify," then the Territory has the "right" at once to be admitted into the Union. Are these Territories in this "condition?" Mr. Chairman, it is shown that the population of Arizona is 125,000, Oklahoma 398,331, New Mexico 195,310 by the last census.

I have the population in 1790, a few years after the adoption of the Federal Constitution by the old or original States. It was by States as follows:

Connecticut	237,946	North Carolina	393,751
Delaware	59,096	Pennsylvania	434,373
Georgia	82,548	Rhode Island	68,825
Maryland	319,728	South Carolina	24,073
Massachusetts	378,787	Virginia	747,610
New Hampshire	141,885
New Jersey	184,139	Total	3,929,214
New York	340,120

We see the "condition" as to the number of population of the old States. These constitute one and the first class of States of the Union. Take these now admitted after the Constitution was ratified. Now what was the population of the following States when admitted?

Ohio, when made a State in 1802, had 45,365 population. Kentucky was admitted in 1792 and had a population in 1800 of 73,670. Tennessee was admitted in 1796 and had in 1790 35,650 population.

When one of the original States, South Carolina, was admitted her population was about 24,000; Delaware, about 59,000; Georgia, about 82,548; New Hampshire, about 341,000; Rhode Island, about 68,000. Here are examples of States—the thirteen original and those admitted since 1787. Here are ancient constructions of the words "condition fit" to be made a State as to population. Let us go a little further on in actual or practical constructions of this kind along another line. Let us get down to the business condition of States admitted when admitted.

Let us take the State of Vermont, which was the first State admitted, carved out of the State of New York. Let us see what that State amounted to as to one business—I can only take one. Vermont was admitted in 1791. What was her population in 1790? Population, 85,425; area, 10,212 square miles.

KENTUCKY.

Kentucky was formed from the territory of Virginia and was made a State by consent of the Virginia legislature by act of December 18, 1789. See Senate Journal December 9, 1790. Application of the convention of Kentucky for statehood received December 9, 1790.

Her constitution was not then formed. Application for admission into the Union was on June 1, 1790, and was approved February 4, 1792. Entitled to two Representatives by act of Congress February 25, 1791. A copy of the constitution formed for the State of Kentucky laid before Congress by the President on November 7, 1792.

Area of Kentucky, 37,680 square miles; per cent of total area, 1.28; rank of States and territorially, 28.

Kentucky in 1802 had one bank, with a capital stock of $150,000; in 1804 another bank, capital stock, $1,000,000.

Take my own State of Tennessee. She was admitted into the Union in 1796. She had 45,600 square miles, or 1.55 per cent of total area, and ranked 25 among the States. What did she then have as a banking capital? Only one bank, with $200,000 capital. When the State of Iowa was admitted she had one little private bank.

Now, take the State of Ohio, formed out of the Northwestern Territory, the cession of which was made in 1784, conditioned that this Territory should be made into States of this Union. An act was passed April 30, 1802, allowing this Territory to form a constitution and State government by which Ohio was allowed one Representative in Congress. November 1, 1802, the constitution was formed and presented to Congress. November 29, 1802, she was admitted as one of the States of the Union.

At that time Ohio only had 39,964 square miles and stood No. 27 amongst the States. So you see how quickly the great State of Ohio took advantage of this condition of the cession from the State of Virginia and sister States to get out of what she then termed her "colonial" condition and get into the Union of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I agreed that the gentleman from Tennessee might have some time, and I ask to have his time extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Let us go further on with the State of Ohio. That State is here represented in part by the most vigorous opponents of this measure. What had she in banks in 1803? In 1803 she had one bank, with a capital stock of $200,000. In 1811 she had four banks, with a capital stock of $895,000. In 1815 she had twelve banks, with a capital of $1,484,719. In 1820 she had twenty banks, with a capital of $1,797,463, and so on. So you see, Mr. Chairman, here is the State of Ohio represented by the gentleman [Mr. GROSVENOR] who makes objection to this measure after the rights of these people have been denied for years and years—makes more objection to this bill than any other Representative on the floor of this House. And yet Ohio was insignificant in 1802, when made a State, as compared to any one of these Territories. I say here we have the State of Ohio that as soon as an opportunity was presented she improved that opportunity in the manner I have stated, and did what? She appealed to Congress, Mr. Chairman, to relieve her from her "colonial condition," as she then termed it. Let me read from the Congressional Annals of 1802 what the people in Ohio then said on this question. On December 23, 1802, while Thomas Jefferson was President, at page 290 of the Annals of Congress we find the following:

The Speaker laid before the House a letter from Edward Tiffin, president of the convention of the State of Ohio, inclosing an address to this House from the said convention approving "the prompt and decisive measures taken by Congress at their last session to enable the people of the Northwestern territory to merge from their colonial government and to resume a rank among the sister States;" also expressing "their unequivocal approbation of the measures pursued by the present administration of the General Government, and of both Houses of Congress, in diminishing the public burdens, cultivating peace with all nations, and promoting the happiness and prosperity of our country."

Let us "emerge from this colonial government," said the Ohio people in 1802, when they wanted statehood. Why not allow the people of these three Territories the same right?

Yet, Mr. Chairman, these three little Territories that have been kept in what Ohio people in 1802 termed their "colonial condition" since the day these Territories were ceded to the United States, met yesterday with vigorous and trenchant opposition from the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Ohio at the time she was admitted as a State of the Union had less population, less possibilities, and less banking capital than any one of the Territories that are knocking here to-day for admission into the Union and for justice to be done them.

Take the little State of New Jersey. She ratified the Constitution of the United States December 18, 1787, and became one of the thirteen original States. In 1805 she only had 2 banks, with a capital of $1,000,000. In 1811 she had 3 banks, with a capital of $789,740. In 1815 she had 11 banks, with $2,121,932. In 1820 she had 14 banks, with $2,130,949. And yet yesterday, with his usual force and ability we find the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] trying to keep these little Territories out of the sisterhood of States when any one of the Territories asking for statehood has more population, more capital, and greater possibilities than the State of New Jersey had when she came in as one of the original thirteen States.

Now, take Wisconsin. She was admitted into the Union in 1848. Her first bank was established in Milwaukee in 1851 with a capital of $225,000. Her area in square miles was 53,924; per cent of total area of United States, 1.84, and rank of States, No. 17. I have already stated that Iowa was admitted in 1858 and was destitute of banks except one little private concern.

Take the State of Michigan, which was admitted into the Union in January, 1837. In 1838 there were 11 banks, with an aggregate capital of $1,400,000. Its area in square miles was 56,243.

Take Indiana, represented here to-day by the gentleman who has proposed an amendment to amalgamate two of these Territories as a State. Indiana was admitted into the Union in 1816. In 1820 it had two banks, with a capital stock of $202,857. Its area in square miles was 33,809. In 1800 she had a population of 5,641, while Arizona has to-day 125,000, Oklahoma 398,000, and New Mexico 195,900. And banking capital—a good index—far beyond any of these States when made States.

Now, take the State of Illinois. She had in 1813 only 1,500 inhabitants. In 1818 she was admitted into the Union. In 1820 she had 55,600 population, In 1813 she had only one bank, at Shawneetown. Her area in square miles was 55,405.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on and refer to all the States——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PEARRE). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask only a moment more.

Mr. KNOX. The gentleman can extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Only one moment more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and he can not continue his remarks without the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I only want a minute more.

Mr. KNOX. I will yield the gentleman a minute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if we apply the same rules to these three Territories that have been applied to the old and new States, we must pass this bill and admit these Territories as three separate and distinct States of this Union. Justice, right, and the law demand as much.

The Clerk read as follows from section 21:

SEC. 21. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government of said Territory on the third day after their election, and after organization shall declare on behalf of the people of said proposed State that they adopt the Constitution of the United States, whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State government for said proposed State. The constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said convention shall provide, by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State—

First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

The following amendment reported by the Committee on the Territories was read, and agreed to:

In line 2, page 18, strike out "day" and insert "Monday."

Mr. ROBERTS. I move to amend by adding, after the word "worship," at the end of line 17, page 18, these words: "Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited."

Mr. KNOX. We make no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. That 100 sections of the unappropriated public lands within said State, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions as provided in section 4 of this act, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said State for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said State and payment of the bonds issued for the erection of the capitol.

Mr. KNOX. On behalf of the committee I move to amend by striking out the word "four," in line 20, page 22, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph of section 39:

First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Mr. RODEY. I move to amend by inserting after the word "worship," at the end of line 6, page 33, these words:

Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

Mr. KNOX. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 43. That upon the admission of said State into the Union, in accordance with the provisions of this act, 50 sections of the unappropriated lands within said State, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions, as provided in section 6 of this act, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said State for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said State, when permanently located, for legislative, executive, and judicial purposes.

Mr. KNOX. I move to amend by striking out "six," in line 12, page 37, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty-eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 44. That additional lands to the extent of two townships in quantity, as authorized by the sixth section of the act of July 22, 1854, to be reserved for the establishment of a university in New Mexico, are hereby granted to the State of New Mexico for university purposes, to be held and used in accordance with the provisions in this section; and said land may again be selected by said State. That, in addition to the above, 100,000 acres of land, to be selected and located as provided in section 6 of this act, are hereby granted to the said State for the use of said university, and 100,000 acres, to be in like manner selected, for the use of an agricultural college. That the proceeds of the sale of said land, or any portion thereof, shall constitute permanent funds to be safely invested and held by said State, and the income thereof to be used exclusively for the purposes of such university and agricultural college, respectively.

That the schools, colleges, and university provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of said State; and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes, or of the income thereof, shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college, or university.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, in line 20, page 37, the words "of New Mexico" should be stricken out and the word "said" inserted before the word "State" in the same line. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOX. I move to amend by striking out, in line 25, page 37, the word "six" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty-eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 47. That in lieu of the grant of land for purposes of internal improvement made to new States by the eighth section of the act of September 4, 1841, which section is hereby repealed as to said proposed State, and in lieu of any claim or demand of the said State under the act of September 28, 1850, and section 2479 of the Revised Statutes, making a grant of swamp and overflowed lands, which grant it is hereby declared is not extended to said State, the following grants of land are hereby made to said State for the purposes indicated, namely, for the establishment and maintenance of an asylum for the insane, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a school of mines, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of an asylum for the deaf and dumb, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a reform school, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of State normal schools, 100,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of an institution for the blind, 50,000 acres; for a miners' hospital for disabled miners, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a military institute or school, 100,000 acres; for the enlargement and maintenance of the State penitentiary, 50,000 acres.

Mr. KNOX. I move to amend by inserting after the word "schools," in line 2, page 40, the words "as now established in said Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill No. 12543 and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [A pause.] If not, the Chair will submit the amendments in gross.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSION BUSINESS, ETC.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special rule.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. CAPRON in the chair.

ABBIE BOURKE.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11196) granting a pension to Abbie Bourke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Abbie Bourke, widow of David Bourke, late private of marines, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out all in the bill after the words "pension roll" in line 4 and substitute the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abbie Bourke, widow of David Bourke, late master-at-arms, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said David Bourke until he reaches the age of sixteen years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I notice that on the Calendar to-day, to be acted upon by the Committee of the Whole House, there are 98 bills, if I count correctly. Of those 98 bills, if I have made a correct count of them, 28 are asking for original pensions, where no pension has been granted, 54 of them are for increase of pension, and 16 for removal of the charge of desertion or the correction of military record, and the setting aside of the verdict of military courts, and so on, making a total of 98. Now, it does seem to me that in considering these bills those soldiers or claimants who have never received any pension at all should receive the first consideration of this committee—that is, their bills ought to be first taken up and considered. Those who are receiving pensions and asking for an increase can better afford to wait a while than those who have never received any pension at all, and those who are asking for the removal of the charge of desertion ought not to receive any consideration whatever, as a matter of course they ought not, because they have deserted the flag; but I ask unanimous consent that we first take up the bills asking for original pensions, and then that we take up the bills asking for an increase, and then take up and consider those which are for the removal of the charge of desertion, etc.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, there are only about 70 bills here reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions. With the bills dealing with military matters neither of these committees have anything to do. Here are only a few bills and I think we better take them up in their order and dispose of them. There are only a small number of bills, and I think we can get through the whole of them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to considering last the third class which the gentleman names, but I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the second class; that is, those who ask for an increase of pension. They are often entitled to more consideration than those who seek original pensions. If the motion be stated in that way, I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. TALBERT. I think we can get through them all, but I think it is a reasonable request that I make, and I hope that no one will object.

Mr. BROMWELL. Do I understand that the gentleman from Indiana does object?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do if the whole of them are included in the request.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, then I change my request to a motion, and I move that we take them up in the order that we have designated—first, those asking for an original pension; second, those for an increase, and third, those for the removal of the charge of desertion, etc. I make that motion, and I hope that the House will vote favorably upon it,

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House take up, first, those bills providing for original pensions; second, those for the increase of pensions, and third, those asking for the removal of the charge of desertion and other bills from the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that motion will not prevail. We have but 13 bills from the Pension Committee on this Calendar——

The CHAIRMAN. I would state to the gentleman from Ohio that this motion is not debatable, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROMWELL. Then I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the committee on this motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to address the committee on the motion before it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] has well said, there may be many cases where increases of pension are far more meritorious than the cases asking for original pensions. They are really the same class of cases. They are for the purpose of going above or beyond the decision of the Pension Bureau in regard to each of these cases and extending such relief as the House has been in the habit of extending to cases where the applicant for a pension has not been able to establish a right to a pension, in the first place, or where the limits of the law prevent giving an adequate pension beyond what is already given by the Pension Bureau. Now, it will take only a few minutes anyhow to go through with this entire Calendar, if we pass these bills as we have been in the habit of passing them. There are only 86, of which 13 are from the Pension Committee and 73 from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. By taking them up in their order we can keep track of them, and it gives advantage to those who have been industrious in getting their bills before the committee, and I do not see any real reason why we should change this rule.

Mr. TALBERT. I withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Baker, late of Company A, One hundred and forty-seventh, and Company C, Ninety-first, Regiments New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to hear the report in that case read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk began the reading of the report (by Mr. APLIN), which is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13529) granting an increase of pension to Francis C. Baker, submit the following report:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of this soldier from $12 to $30 per month.

It appears from the records of the War Department that Francis C. Baker, the soldier named in this bill and now 55 years of age, served as a private in Company A, One hundred and forty-seventh New York Infantry, from September 21, 1863, to July 3, 1865, when honorably discharged as of Company C, Ninety-first New York Volunteers, to which organization he was transferred on June 17, 1865; that his company and regiment were in action at Mine Run, Va., November 9, 1863, and at Appomattox Court-House, Va., on April 1, 1865.

His claim to pension under the general law, filed on June 21, 1889, and based upon shell wound of the left thigh, received at the battle of Mine Run, and gunshot wound of the right ankle, received at Appomattox Court-House on April 1, 1865, was rejected October 4, 1901, upon the ground that a ratable disability from these wounds had not existed since the filing of the claim.

The records of the War Department do not show that the soldier received the wounds alleged by him in his application or that he was under treatment at any time during his period of service, and he filed no proof in corroboration of his allegations in his claim under the general law.

He is now a pensioner under the act of June 27, 1890, at the maximum rating, namely, $12 per month, on account of these gunshot wounds of left thigh and right ankle and rheumatism, and this notwithstanding the fact that the Pension Bureau held in his claim under the general law that a pensionable disability from the wounds had not existed.

When first examined, on June 11, 1890, he stated before that board of surgeons that he did not go to the hospital for either of his wounds, but was excused from duty and stayed with his regiment; and that board of surgeons described his condition as follows:

"Gunshot wound of right ankle: A minie ball was embedded in the muscles nearly to the bone. Cicatrix not adherent. The limb at site of injury becomes sore and painful when walking or hard work is performed.

"Wound of left thigh: There is a large scar on the left thigh—a flesh wound. Has the appearance of having had a portion of the cuticle or fascia scooped out.

"Rate for gunshot wound of thigh, $4; for wound of ankle, $2."

The last certificate of medical examination, made on April 3, 1901, described the ciciatrices of the wounds as neither adherent nor tender, but found rheumatism, with swelling, enlargement, tenderness, and stiffness of both kneejoints, the kneejoints being surrounded by an organized mass of exudate; that it was impossible for the claimant to extend the legs fully, the limitation of motion being one-third; that he is unable to stand erect, and that there was contraction of the flexor tendons of thigh as a result of the inability to straighten the legs; that the case was one of chronic arthritis with occasional acute epacerbations; that the metacarpophalangeal joint of the left thumb was inflamed, tender, and enlarged; the left elbow joint inflamed and tender, but not swollen, and that the claimant's condition was such from rheumatism that the assistance of another person was required at the time of this examination.

There has been filed with your committee the statement of the postmaster of East Tawas, Mich., setting forth that the beneficiary was employed by him building a dam on Hope Creek twenty-five years ago; that he was then suffering from wounds received in the war; that he was wounded at Mine Run and at Chapin's Farm; that he was wounded by a partially spent ball in the right ankle; that after the action he dug the ball out of the wound with a case knife and put a chew of tobacco in it and continued on duty; that this illustrated the sort of stuff of which he was made; that he now has a ragged scar on the upper third of the left thigh caused by a shell wound, and by reason of the contraction of the muscles in healing he can not wholly extend the left leg; that by reason of said wounds and the advancing infirmities of age he is nearly paralyzed and can not walk without crutches; that this condition is not consequent upon vicious habits, as he has never used liquors as a beverage, and that he has no income from any source except his pension.

It being shown that this soldier is now so disabled from rheumatism and the wounds received by him during his service that at times he requires the assistance of another person, your committee, following established precedents, recommend that relief to the extent of increasing his pension from $12 to $24 be granted, and the bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass after the same shall have been amended.

Mr. GIBSON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will now be satisfied by the showing of the excellent record of this man. He served from September, 1863, until July, 1865, and was wounded in battle. He has a splendid record and is now disabled, and he needs the attendance of another person.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Collier, widow of George W. Collier, late lieutenant-colonel, United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to have the report read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER), as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4506) granting an increase of pension to Ann E. Collier, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass with an amendment:

The bill is accompanied by Senate Report No. 924, this session, and the following facts bearing upon the merits of the bill are taken therefrom:

"It is proposed by this bill to grant an increase of pension to Ann E. Collier, widow of George W. Collier, late lieutenant-colonel, United States Marine Corps.

"It appears from the records of the Marine Corps that George W. Collier was commissioned a second lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps September 5, 1860, and joined his command in this city on the 9th of September, 1860. He was promoted first lieutenant September 1, 1861, and captain November 20, 1862. He served all during the war of the rebellion and subsequent thereto rendered service on several vessels and at the several stations of the Marine Corps. He was promoted major April 18, 1880, and lieutenant-colonel August 18, 1889. He was retired from active service October 23, 1889, and died at Hagerstown, Md., December 23, 1892. The cause of his death was disease of heart and lungs.

"Ann E. Collier, the widow of this officer and the claimant under this bill, is now receiving a general-law pension of $25 per month, her husband having held the rank of major at the time his fatal diseases were incurred. She is 64 years of age, and was married to the officer May 18, 1864. She resides at Greencastle, Pa.

"Mrs. Collier is in straitened circumstances. She has no property, and her income aside from her pension is only about $100 per year. In view of her advanced age, her poverty, and the long and honorable service of her husband, your committee are of the opinion that an increase of her pension would be both just and proper."

Your committee believe with the Senate that the case is a proper one for the allowance of an increased rating, but following the precedent established in many similar cases it is recommended that the rating be fixed at $35 per month, and that as amended the bill do pass.

Her pensionable rank is that of a major's widow and $35 per month is the maximum rating recommended by your committee for that rank.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wants any further information I will say that the limit fixed by law is $30 for the rank of lieutenant-colonel. The Senate fixed this rate at $40, and the Committee on Pensions fixes the rate at the limit for rank of major, which was the rank he had at the time the disabilities were incurred, the maximum rate being $35. We are following the line of precedent, and have cut the Senate bill down from $40 to $35. He had a long and valuable service.

Mr. TALBERT. Was he receiving a pension when he died?

Mr. BROMWELL. No; he was not receiving a pension for the reason that he was on the retired list, and under the law could not receive a pension.

Mr. TALBERT. His widow was receiving $25?

Mr. BROMWELL. His widow is entitled to $25.

Mr. TALBERT. Then why give her the maximum? Would it not be well——

Mr. BROMWELL. She gets $25 from the Pension Bureau. This is in line with what the Pension Committee, both Pension Committees, have done where there are peculiar circumstances of age, poverty, and a good record of the husband, to increase the rate over the amount allowed by law, and that is all there is in it. We give that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN COOLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3279) granting a pension to John Coolen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Coolen, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to ask of the gentleman having charge of this bill why this man has never received a pension before, and why he could not get a pension at the Bureau?

Mr. BROMWELL. This is a Senate bill. The report shows that the claim was rejected November 19, 1901, and again January 8, 1902, on the ground that there was no record or other satisfactory evidence that the disability was of service origin. Now, as against that, it appears from the evidence of his neighbors that the claimant has complained of heart and lung trouble ever since his return from his Army service. He has been troubled with cough, shortness of breath, and other symptoms of chest disease, and has been largely incapacitated for manual labor. The physicians who treated him prior to 1896 are dead, and no evidence of his condition prior to that time can be furnished. Two of his comrades, however, testify positively that he was sick with lung trouble in the fall of 1869, and the muster rolls of his company show that he was in the hospital. Now, while there is no hospital record and no medical testimony in this case, yet the testimony of his comrades shows that he was at times very sick with the trouble of which he finally died.

Mr. TALBERT. What would have been his pensionable status if his disability could have been traced to service origin?

Mr. BROMWELL. It would have been what the bill gives him—$12 a month.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ETTA ADAIR ANDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2036) granting an increase of pension to Etta Adair Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Etta Adair Anderson, widow of J. Patton Anderson, late lieutenant-colonel Battalion Mississippi Rifles, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. TALBERT. As I understand, this widow who is now receiving a pension of only $8 is a poor woman, and why is it she can not have a little larger increase than that proposed in the bill? Why not raise her pension from $8 to $20, or at least to $16? I thought the Committee on Pensions had adopted the rule of doubling the pension where the widow is dependent and very poor? I recollect that this was done in a case of which I had charge—the case of the widow of a soldier in my neighborhood. I simply suggest that the pension in this case be increased to $16, instead of $12. Is there objection to that?

Why, gentlemen, you run wild when you come to consider the pension of an officer or his widow, but you seem to grow dull when you come up against the poor private and his widow and his children.

Mr. BROMWELL. I shall have to object. The cases which the gentleman from South Carolina has in mind were cases where the pension was granted to the soldier himself. Under certain circumstances the Pension Committee has recommended an increase of the soldier's pension to $16, and in some cases to $20, where his disability was such that he required constant attention, and where he was very poor and infirm, unable to work. But in the case of widows' pensions, where there was nothing in the case except the service of the soldier, where he was not wounded and did not die of disability incurred in the service, we have fixed the maximum at $12, the amount allowed by law being $8.

This bill is in accordance with all the bills reported from our committee in similar cases. In some exceptional cases, where the pension was granted to the soldier himself, we have allowed $20, but never more than $16 in the case of a widow.

Mr. TALBERT. Of course I do not wish to infringe upon the prerogatives or rights of the committee. I know that their action is, in general, judicious and sometimes wise. But I do submit that there is often too much discrimination made between the widow of a private soldier and the widow of an officer. In this matter of increases there is often, it seems to me, too wide a difference. For instance, we have just passed a bill increasing the pension of the widow of an officer—a major in the Navy, I believe—from $25 to $35, an increase of $10. Now, it does seem to me that this widow is as much entitled to an increase of at least $8 as was the other widow, in whose case the pension was larger and who receives an increase of $10.

I move, Mr. Chairman, to amend the bill by striking out "twelve" and inserting "sixteen." I hope that the committee will pass the bill with the rate of pension which I propose, and let this poor old woman receive only what is right.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that Mrs. Anderson, the beneficiary in this bill, is an aged lady, a resident of my town, as good a woman as ever lived. She is without property or means of support, except as contributed by her sons and daughters. Her husband, Mr. Chairman, was a lieutenant-colonel in the Mexican war, and as gallant a soldier as ever drew a sword. This aged widow, as I have said, is without property. She has two grandchildren residing with her, and, in a measure, dependent upon her. I know her well, because she is my neighbor, and I trust this committee, in its liberality, will adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, of course it is not a gracious task, on the statement of a case like that, to oppose an amendment of this kind, and yet, as representing the Committee on Pensions, I feel it is my duty to suggest to this House that there ought to be at least some consistency, some uniformity, in this matter of fixing rates on these pensions. The mere fact that some pension applicant who has a bill before Congress can interest her Representative to make a special appeal in her behalf for a different rate, an increase of rate beyond what is given to the great ordinary class of pensioners of the same kind, it seems to me, ought not to appeal to this House, and that we ought to follow some consistent, uniform rule as far as we can. We must remember that every one of these increases is a matter of favor. There are thousands of pensioners who never get into this Congress who are drawing the rates of pension allowed by the law—$8—and picking out one individual case where the committee has reported consistently with all other cases of the same kind and as a matter of favor to a particular member of the House, yielding to his request for an increase, is establishing a bad policy.

I would be glad if we could give every widow of every soldier an increase of pension; I would be glad if we could give every surviving soldier a per diem pension, but under the present condition of things and under existing law it can not be done. Now, when we raise this pension from eight to twelve dollars we are increasing it 50 per cent, and that is a much greater increase than in the case referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT]. The law recognizes differences of rank; it fixes the rate of pension of a soldier and of the widow of a soldier according to the rank he held at the time of disability, in case he died from disability incurred in the service. It is not a question of choice or option with the committee; they are bound to recognize the law. But here is a case where a widow is entitled to $8. It comes before Congress, and upon the Committee on Pensions acting upon her bill, as a matter of charity, we give an increase of $4 a month. Now, to make that $16 a month is absolutely unfair to the hundreds of other cases we have passed through Congress with a similar increase to that recommended, and it is still more unfair to the thousands of cases of those who get only $8 a month. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the widow of a soldier who served in the civil war forty years ago pensioned exactly the same rate that this lady has been pensioned?

Mr. BROMWELL. Of course this is not a civil-war pension.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know; it is the widow of a man who, however, fought in our Army, and there should not be any distinction between the two—a civil or Mexican war pension.

Mr. BROMWELL. I will answer the gentleman's question. Under the act of 1890 she would be entitled to just the pension provided for.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who would?

Mr. BROMWELL. The widow of the civil-war soldier.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Upon what basis is that made $8?

Mr. BROMWELL. Dependence, and her husband having been in the service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think a widow of a Mexican soldier, who fought in the war in the fifties, would be far more dependent than the widow of a soldier, however brave he was, who fought in the war forty years ago?

Mr. BROMWELL. The soldier himself, under the law, is entitled to only $12.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You say this rate is fixed upon the basis of dependence. Now, age makes everyone more or less dependent physically and mentally. Here is this widow of a Mexican-war soldier so old that she has grandchildren, two of them in a measure dependent upon her, and yet this committee binds her down to a rule that does not bind down the widow of an officer or a soldier who fought in the civil war of forty years ago. Now, I submit, in all candor and frankness, to the distinguished gentleman, that there should be more leniency to a widow who is 60 or 70 years old, as I dare say this lady is, than one who is much less in age. That is what I want to impress upon the gentleman, showing that the rule that he applies to this case, that is, to the Mexican-war cases, is a hard rule that does not give to the widow of a Mexican-war soldier, who is presumably more dependent than the other widow, the same consideration that it gives to the widows of the civil war of 1861–1865.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I care to say anything more. The Mexican-war soldier himself is only entitled to $12, and it is only in rare cases that the Mexican-war soldier has had his pension increased beyond that. Now, why should the widow of a Mexican-war soldier be given a greater pension than the soldier himself?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why is the Mexican-war pension only $12.

Mr. BROMWELL. Because the law fixes it at that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why is the law that way?

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman can answer that question as well as I can.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why does not the gentleman change the law?

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman from Tennessee can at any time that he pleases bring in a bill changing the rate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have been trying five years to get a bill in changing that rate. I say that even when we had a Democratic Congress we have not dealt fairly with the old Mexican soldier, and I do not believe in this case that we are dealing fairly with this widow, who must be an old woman, with three dependent upon her, as we must conclude from the testimony given by the gentleman whose constituent she is. I have been in Congress for nearly five years now and every year I have undertaken to have something done in this matter. There are bills pending now, and I may add there is a bill here which has passed the Senate, and yet it slumbers in the committee room. Why is it, Mr. Chairman, in all conscience and in all fairness, that we have not given the same consideration to the Mexican war soldier that we do to one who has fought in the war with Spain or one who is fighting in the Philippines or one who fought forty years ago? Is it because there are no Mexican soldiers in Congress?

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BROMWELL. I have been a member of the Pensions Committee about six years. The gentleman says he has been trying nearly all that time to get Mexican war pensions increased. Now, I do not remember ever to have seen the gentleman before the committee either upon a general bill or a private bill. If he has been so earnest for this increase of pension for Mexican war soldiers, it seems to me he ought to have come before our committee to call the bill up.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to say that I have been before the committee when the gentleman was absent. I have in mind now the case then considered—of an old one-eyed Mexican soldier who to-day is a bankrupt, who carried the Stars and Stripes in the Mexican war, who is penniless, whose beard is as white as snow, who is unable to work, and who in the last four or five years has grown so feeble and old that, although I have known him since I was a child, I barely recognized him on the street a few days ago. He is a farmer and one of God's noblemen, and yet in his condition he only received up to last year a poor, little, mean eight-dollar pension from this great Government.

I went before the committee in the absence of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio and stated his case when there were but a few members present; but they repudiated a Senate bill that proposed to give him $20 a month and gave him the measly little sum of $12. Now, in all candor and in all frankness, with the greatest respect for the gentleman from Ohio, I say that Congress has not done fairly by these Mexican-war soldiers. It applies to both sides of the House alike. The Democrats have had charge of the Government once since the civil war, and if they did not raise the amount from nothing to something then they did not do their duty.

I do not believe we are now doing our duty if we do not raise the amount in this case. We are not doing our duty if we do not take up the Mexican pension bill that has passed the Senate and pass it here, and that, I dare say, the gentleman knows is before his committee, if he has been there to see about it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. You do not intend to charge that he has not been there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know whether he has been there or not. I presume he has. The natural course of things is always presumed, and I presume he has been there; but he has been absent, because he was absent when I was there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say this in all candor. I criticise the Democrats conditionally, just as I do the Republicans conditionally. I make no distinction. I am here to pass this pension bill, and all other just pension bills. I am here every pension day. These soldiers who carried our flag to victory in Mexico added Territory after Territory to this Union—a Territory for which this House to-day passed a bill to admit into this Union. They are good citizens. It looks, Mr. Chairman, very much like a simple question of favoritism, when we propose to give exceptional pensions to those who served in the Cuban and the Philippine wars and those who served in the civil war and overlook these few old Mexican-war soldiers that are scattered over the country who are allowed the little pitiful sum of $8. We turn to them deaf ears and cold hands, and give unusual pensions to others not as worthy. If this Government is to be charitable, it ought to be charitable to the soldier in his declining years, and we must know by age alone the old Mexican-war soldier is infirm and needs sadly a fair and just pension, more so than when young and able to work.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Just one word, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the amendment. It will not be claimed that there have not been any exceptions made, whatever general rule may have been pursued by the Committee on Pensions. There have been exceptions made, and if ever there was a case brought to the attention of this House deserving of an exception this is one of those cases. I can personally testify to the high and noble character of this good lady, now aged and infirm, dependent, without property and without means. I do beg this committee in this case to grant the increase proposed in the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina and make it $16 per month. Her husband was a gallant soldier and she is a devoted and deserving widow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Florida to make——

Mr. TALBERT. I moved to amend the bill by striking out "twelve" and inserting "sixteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out "twelve" and insert "sixteen."

D. 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report read in this case. I know there are some worthy cases; I do not say there are not. I want to get the record in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. BRICK), as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2199) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Jonas Albert, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out the words "and directed" in line 4.

Your committee, after having carefully considered the record and evidence in this case, believe that the soldier should be relieved from the charge of desertion now standing against him. While it is a fact that he deserted from parole, his faithful service after this desertion of his parole should be taken into consideration; and it is satisfactorily shown that he broke the parole to enter the service, and in doing so did it simply to fight for his country, and not for extra pay or for any reason other than that, about which the record following particular attention is asked. The evidence and record presented to your committee are hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

STATE OF INDIANA, County of St. Joseph, ss:

In the matter of the military record of Jonas Albert, of Middlebury, Elkhart County, Ind.

[To be filed with the Committee on Military Affairs, in connection with House bill No. 9297, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.]

On this 13th day of November, A. D. 1900, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the county and State aforesaid, duly authorized to administer oaths, Jonas Albert, aged —— years, whose post-office address is Middlebury, Elkhart County, Ind., and who is a resident of that place, and, being first duly sworn, upon his oath deposes and says, with respect to his military record, as follows:

I was enrolled in the latter part of July, 1862, and was mustered into the service on August 16, 1862, as a private in Company D, Seventy-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, to serve three years. I proceeded with my company and regiment to Kentucky, and marched with them on Richmond, when we were captured, near Lexington, on or about September 1, 1862. I was paroled, and then, with others in similar circumstances, marched to Maysville; from there we took a boat to Cincinnati. At Cincinnati we took cars to Indianapolis, and there we reported to the adjutant-general. The adjutant-general gave us permission to go home on condition that we promise to hold ourselves in readiness to come to Indianapolis, or Camp Carrington, at any time on notice. Then I went home to Plymouth, Marshall County, Ind. I was there right along till the last week in December, when I received a letter to report at Indianapolis on January 1, 1863.

I went to Indianapolis, and had transportation from Plymouth to Fort Wayne, and from Fort Wayne to Lafayette, and from Lafayette to Indianapolis. I walked into the adjutant-general's office on the morning of January 1, and there were in the office at the time Governor O. P. Morton and Laz. Noble, the adjutant-general. I went there alone, no other soldier being with me. I then remained at Camp Carrington all the time until March 23, 1863; and during that period, from January 1, 1863, and March 23, 1863, I received some pay from the paymaster which will show that I was present at the camp, subject to orders. On March 23, 1863, I went home to Plymouth again after having the same kind of an understanding as before, that I was to be in readiness to come to Indianapolis on a moment's call.

David Redding and John I. Stockman went with me when I went that time, with the same understanding, as I was told. John I. Stockman went West later on, and I never heard from him again. David Redding has since died. I was home then from March, or the end of March, of 1863, until the fall of that year. I waited patiently for some word to report at Indianapolis, but none came. During my stay at home that time, before going West to enlist, the provost-marshal met me one day at a neighbor's house. The provost-marshal asked me why I was here, and I told him that I was a paroled man, and was waiting for my exchange, as I was constantly under the impression that I had not been exchanged. He asked me to show him my parole, and I took it from my pocket and showed it to him. He studied the matter a moment, and then said, "Have you had no notice of your exchange?"

To this I replied, "No, sir." Then he said to me, "Well, I have not had any notice of your exchange, either, and therefore I can not arrest you."

All this time I kept myself in constant readiness to report and to be exchanged. I waited until the fall, and being anxious to enter the service, and despairing of getting an exchange, I went West, going through Chicago, then to La Crosse, Wis., and Menominee, Wis., and then hearing of the organization of a regiment in Stillwater, Minn., I finally went there and enlisted in the Second Minnesota Cavalry Volunteers, Company K, and served in that company from the winter of 1863, and served faithfully thereafter until May 4, 1866. It was not my desire to desert my duty, but I was anxious to serve my country, and the delay became irksome to me while waiting for orders from Indianapolis. I was constantly ready to go, and willing, and was publicly and openly at home, the county seat of Marshall County (Plymouth), and the circumstances surrounding my presence there were well known. I make this statement from my best recollection, and my personal knowledge, and it is true, and the affidavit is written up at my instruction, and from my statements.

JONAS ALBERT, Affiant.

This affidavit of four pages was fully read and explained to Jonas Albert, who makes the same, and was fully understood by him, and was read to him in my presence, and signed by him in my presence, and being duly sworn he declares that he is the same Jonas Albert who was a private in Company K, Second Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry, and who was also a private in Company D, Seventy-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and that the above affidavit is the truth, and he subscribes and swears to the same before me this 13th day of November, A. D. 1900.

[SEAL.] BLANCHE IRENE GEE,
Notary Public.

(My commission expires August 8, 1904.)

Case of Jonas Albert, late of Company D, Seventy-third Indiana Infantry Volunteers.

A report in this case was furnished the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, on Senate bill No. 5115, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, January 9, 1899.

Following is a copy:

"It is shown by the records that Jonas Albert was enrolled July 29, 1862, and mustered into service August 16, 1862, as a private in Company D, Seventy-third Indiana Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years. He appears to have been present with his company until September 1, 1862, when he was captured by the enemy and paroled at Lexington, Ky. He never rejoined his command, and was therefore reported as having deserted on September 1, 1862. The company remained in service until July 1, 1865. It is further shown by the records that he enlisted on September 15, 1863, in Company K, Second Minnesota Cavalry Volunteers, in violation of the twenty-second (now fiftieth) article of war. He was mustered into service January 4, 1864, as a private in that organization, and appears to have served faithfully with it until May 4, 1866, when he was mustered out and honorably discharged the service.

"The name of this soldier has not been found on the rolls of any company of the Second Minnesota Infantry on file in this Department."

"Applying for removal of the charge of desertion the soldier testified July 25, 1885, as follows:

"That he entered the United States service under the name of Jonas Albert on or about the 24th day of July, 1862, as private in Company D, Seventy-third Regiment of Indiana Infantry Volunteers, at Plymouth, Ind., commanded by Capt. William Kendall, and was taken prisoner on or about the 1st day of September, 1862, while on retreat from Lexington, State of Kentucky. He further declares that he was paroled the third day of his capture, and that he arrived at Indianapolis, Ind., on the 6th day of September, 1862, and that he reported immediately thereafter to the adjutant-general of Indiana, and that he was told by the adjutant-general to go home and stay till he received further orders, and that on or about the 1st of January, 1863, he received orders to report to the adjutant-general at Indianapolis, and that he did report immediately as ordered, and remained at Camp Carrington, Indiana, to the 23d day of March, 1863. There being no signs of his being exchanged, he returned to Plymouth, Ind., and waited further orders. Not getting any orders to return, he went to Minnesota on or about the last of November, 1863, on a hunting expedition, and while there, on or about the 15th day of December, 1863, was enrolled in Company K, Second Regiment of Minnesota Cavalry Volunteers, commanded by Capt. Henry S. Howe, and was honorably discharged at Fort Snelling, Minn, on the 4th day of May, 1866."

"Adam Holem, a resident of Burroak, Marshall County, Ind., testified July 20, 1885, as follows:

"'That Jonas Albert, now a resident of the township of York, county of Elkhart, State of Indiana, entered the United States service under the name of Jonas Albert, on or about the 24th day of July, 1862, as private in Company D, Seventy-third Regiment of Indiana Infantry Volunteers, at Plymouth, Ind., commanded by Capt. William Kendall. He further declares that on or about the 1st day of September, 1862, while on retreat from Lexington, in the State of Kentucky, Jonas Albert and this affiant were taken prisoners under the following circumstances: That they had become footsore and completely tired out, fell behind the command, and were overtaken by the rebels and ordered to surrender; we had been out of the road a short distance after water and when we returned to the road were confronted by the rebels and ordered to surrender. We were released on the third day and returned to the Union lines on the 6th day of September, 1862; immediately thereafter Jonas Albert and this affiant reported to the adjutant-general of the State of Indiana, and were told by him to go home and await further orders.'

"Under date of August 22, 1885, David Redding, 45 years of age, a resident of Plymouth, Marshall County, Ind., declared under oath as follows:

"'I am well acquainted with said Jonas Albert. I was a member of Company I, Twenty-ninth Indiana. I first got acquainted with said Albert at Camp Carrington, Indianapolis, Ind., either the last part of 1862 or the first part of 1863. I was there as a paroled prisoner, as was also said Albert. I recollect seeing his parole there. He and I and one or more other prisoners, out of curiosity, compared our paroles.'

"David Henney, 44 years of age, a resident of Plymouth, Marshall County, Ind., testified August 22, 1885, as follows: 'I was a member of Company D, Seventy-third Indiana Volunteers, and knew and was well acquainted with said Albert while in the service. I was a musician and therefore was not always with the company. The last time I recollect of seeing said Albert with his company was on the retreat at Lexington, Ky., about the 1st of September, 1862. The next time I saw him was some time during the winter of 1863, at Camp Carrington, Indianapolis, Ind. I had been captured myself and released on parole, and myself and Albert and other paroled prisoners were there in camp awaiting exchange. I understood at the time that he had been captured in Kentucky on the retreat from Bragg and Smith's army. I knew that he was reported missing soon after he was missed, but I did not know that he was charged with having deserted until we were there at Camp Carrington together.'

Mr. TALBERT (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if this man ever received any bounty. It seems from what I gather from the report that he must have left his command several times.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Chairman, I can explain that. At the time Jonas Albert entered into the Indiana regiment he received $25 of the bounty in advance; that left $75 to be paid later on. He never received any of the other $75, but he did receive, after having entered the Minnesota regiment at the end of his term, $100. The $25, if you desire to figure it, would have been amply earned in the time that he served after his capture and service in the Indiana regiment.

Mr. TALBERT. It is evident that he never intended to desert.

Mr. BRICK. Oh, no; he never did. He entered the Minnesota regiment under his own name. It was not a case of desertion, but a desire to fight for his country.

Whitbeck, late colonel Sixty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $75 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee, which are set forth in the report, were read.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report in that case read. That is a pretty big pension.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The report (by Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12800) granting an increase of pension to Horatio N. Whitbeck, submit the following report:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of this officer from $30 to $75 per month.

Horatio N. Whitbeck, the officer named in this bill, now 65 years of age, is shown by the records of the War Department to have served as second lieutenant and captain of Company E, Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteers, and as major and lieutenant-colonel of the same regiment from October 2, 1861, to August 16, 1865, when honorably discharged by reason of physical disability.

The medical certificate upon which his discharge was based sets forth as follows:

"Lieut. Col. Horatio N. Whitbeck, of the Sixty-fifth Regiment Ohio Veteran Volunteers, having applied for a certificate upon which to base an extension of sick leave of absence, I do hereby certify that I have carefully examined this officer and find him to be suffering from the effects of a gunshot wound of the left breast and lung (the missile not extracted) received at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, June 27, 1864. The wound having recently broken out anew renders this officer unfit for duty.

"I further declare my belief that he will not be able to return to his duties in a less period than twenty days.

"Dated at Berea, Ohio, this 20th day of July, 1865.

"Z. B. DISBRO, M. D."

The officer has been a pensioner ever since his discharge at $30 per month for this gunshot wound of the chest, left arm, and back; was reduced, however, to $22.50 per month on the biennial examination of 1877, but was again restored to the original rating of $30 per month from the date of reduction, and is now in receipt of that pension.

He never applied for increase of pension since the action of the Pension Bureau in 1878 restoring him to the original rating of $30 per month from June, 1877.

When last examined, on January 2, 1878, the board of surgeons described his disabilities as follows:

"Gunshot wound of left side of chest. The ball entered the inner third of left clavicle, fracturing that bone and first rib. No wound of exit, or evidence as to course of ball. Results are removal of fragments of bone, with consequent depression and weakness in left arm and shoulder. Respiration at present seems unimpaired. Complains of pain, shortness of breath, and cough at times, which seem probable.

"Gunshot wound of left arm, side, and back. Ball passed through the posterior surface of the arm at the middle third, with exit 2 inches from point of entrance, reentered the lower margin of the scapula of the same side, passing transversely across the back, fracturing the lower border of the right scapula, with exit at ribs side at point of fracture of scapula. Ball passed in its course posterior to spinal column and through muscles of back."

The wounds of the left arm and left shoulder were received at Chickamauga on September 19, 1863.

There has been filed with your committee the affidavit of Dr. G. J. Jones, of Cleveland, Ohio, setting forth that he made an examination of the beneficiary on May 3, 1902; that he found scars of the gunshot wound of the chest, left breast, and back; that he had treated him frequently for the last twenty seven years; that he had been totally unable to perform any manual labor during the whole of that time; that he is suffering from frequent attacks of bronchitis and laryngitis, many times losing his voice, which is always weak and uncertain; that he also suffers from acute attacks of articular rheumatism and disturbed action of the heart, which is enlarged and dilated; that in consequence of this he has frequent attacks of general prostration, running several days, when he is scarcely able to sit up; that he requires to be under the care of a physican most of the time, and that he is entirely dependent upon the pension of $30 per month, which is inadequate for him to do justice to himself.

Other proof filed with your committee shows that by reason of the wound of the chest the officer's organs of speech were so injured as to almost deprive him of the power of speaking audibly; that his loss of voice totally disabled him from engaging in business; that he has been subject to frequent attacks of physical prostration, requiring residence in a hospital and daily medical attendance, and at times medical attendance two or three times a day; that as he advances in years, in addition to the suffering from the gunshot wounds received during his four years' service in the Army of the Cumberland, he has been subject to acute rheumatic attacks, and of late years has been suffering from rheumatism and lung affections; that he has no property of any kind, is a physical wreck, and that a change of climate is absolutely necessary in his case during the severe winter months, etc.

There has also been filed with your committee a resolution adopted by Memorial Post, No. 141, G. A. R., of Cleveland, Ohio, petitioning Congress, in view of the long term of gallant and patriotic services and of the severe wounds and suffering of this officer, to grant him a pension at the rate of $100 per month; also a statement signed by Hon. WASHINGTON GARDNER, a member of this House, setting forth that he was constantly with the officer in the service, except when he was absent on account of his wounds, and that he can say without hesitation or reservation that it is simply impossible for the Government to compensate him in money for the services that he performed, for the risks he took upon his life, and for the sufferings which he has endured and will continue to endure till the end of his life, in behalf of his country, etc.

In view of the gallant and meritorious services of this officer, the wounds received by him in action, his suffering and destitution, your committee believes that a grateful country can well afford to come to his relief, and an increase of his pension from $30 to $60 per month is recommended, and the bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass after the same shall have been amended as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Colonel," insert the word "Lieutenant."

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know much about the medical names mentioned in this report. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "sixty" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to amend by striking out "sixty" and inserting "fifty."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. I am not out of sympathy with the gentleman from South Carolina in his watchfulness of the special pension legislation; but I am happy always to say a word in behalf of worthy individual cases of which I have knowledge.

This officer, having been promoted from captain to major, commanded the regiment of which I was a member in the battle of Stone River, where he was first wounded. He recovered sufficiently to command it again at the battle of Chickamauga, where he was severely wounded.

Thirty-eight years ago next Wednesday I myself was wounded on the line at Resaca. I think I owe my life to this man, for when it was reported to him that I was hurt he directed that I be carried back and have immediate medical attention. On the 27th of June following he received a gunshot wound in the side, which entered his lung and remains there to this day.

I have seen him several times since the war, and for many years after the war he was unable to speak above a whisper. He has been a constant sufferer from this last wound, particularly, for nearly thirty-eight years. When the first colonel of the regiment was fatally shot in the assault on Kenesaw Mountain, Colonel Whitbeck received what was thought to be a mortal wound. The captain who succeeded to the command of the regiment was shot dead immediately after him. Colonel Whitbeck wrote me two years ago that his pension did not pay his expenses when he was compelled to be cared for in hospitals. I know this soldier well, for I served three years with him. The Government is not able to pay him for what he has done and what he has suffered for this country of ours. For thirty-eight years his life has been a living sacrifice. No words that I can say can add to his heroism and his worth as a man. He gave up a business of much promise when he went into the war, sacrificing everything. He was unable to do business after he returned. He has been a constant sufferer, and now needs this increase of pension to enable him to be properly cared for in his necessitous and suffering old age.

I know if my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] knew him as I know him, and saw him as I saw him fall in three battles in the war, if he knew his valor and virtue as a man as I know it, he would unite with his comrades in Cleveland who petitioned that this be made a hundred dollars a month as the minimum of what he is entitled to because of his services.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted, but that the bill will be passed at $60 a month, as fixed by the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt every word the gentleman has stated is true; and no man has a greater regard for the patriotism, the bravery, and the heroism of the soldier than I do, whether he wore the blue or whether he wore the gray. But in considering this matter it seems to me, these being the facts, that this pension ought to have been increased at the Pension Bureau; and I fail to understand, these being the facts, why it is his pension could not have been continually increased until it reached the maximum of $72 per month at the Bureau.

But what I object to, and what I think is wrong, is for applicants who have failed at the Pension Bureau to get their pensions increased, after trial after trial, that they should come here for special legislation. It does not seem to me that it is right to come to Congress, as a court of appeals, and override the decisions of the Pension Bureau, which has its boards of examiners and every means of investigation to determine whether or not these claims are just and proper; and after thinking of this and after listening to the reading of the report, it seems to me that it will be ample to allow this hero, for he was a hero, I know, $50 per month. It seems to me that that is sufficient when you consider the mere pittance that you are giving the poor private soldiers, whose heroism and disinterested patriotism eclipses the mere laurels of the ranking officer—the man that stands in the front rank all the time.

I can not understand why gentlemen here should advocate such excessive pensions for officers; that they do not advocate as much for the private soldier and his widow as they give to the officer and his widow. I do maintain here and submit now and forever that the private soldier and his widow and children deserves as much, if not more, consideration than the officer, his widow, and children. Now, I am not willing to make this more than $50. I think that is quite liberal, and I hope my amendment will prevail. I submit to the committee that I have no idea of calling a quorum; there is not a quorum here, but I do not propose to call for a quorum. If the committee desires to retain it at $60, well and good. I am not willing to vote for more than $50, and will content myself with entering only my protest.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, just one word. This man, according to the report of the committee, has never applied for an increase of pension since the action of the Pension Bureau in 1878, restoring him to the original pension rate of $30 a month. Here is a soldier of splendid battle record who has not been seeking an increase of pension except a restoration. There was a time when he was treasurer of Cuyahoga County, of which Cleveland is the county seat.

Mr. TALBERT. Does not the gentleman think it was the place for him to go? Why did he not seek this increase of pension at the proper place?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I can not answer that, because I have not talked with him about it.

Mr. TALBERT. Mind you, I am not objecting to anything he is entitled to. If his disabilities entitle him to $72 a month he ought to have it, and the Bureau ought to give it to him liberally, and I believe he could get it there.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Just one word further. He has not made the application. Why I do not know. But he certainly has not been a "pension mendicant," seeking time and again to have his pension increased. It is said by those who know him that he will not live a year. I do not know how that is; I hope he will live many years; but that does not alter his necessities nor the justice of his case.

One word about the private and the officer. I was a soldier in the ranks, and when it comes to the man who commanded a regiment and took the responsibilities of a thousand or less men in battle, in camp, on the march, everywhere—I speak now as a soldier who carried a musket—he is entitled to more than the man who simply fired his gun when he was told to. In saying that I detract nothing from the man in the ranks. The world has always recognized the burden of responsibility, and in proportion to the measure of responsibility has it bestowed the measure of its rewards. This is no exception; not even in the amount granted as a pension.

Mr. TALBERT. The law recognizes that distinction.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, if I may be pardoned just a word. This I believe to be as meritorious a case as has been brought into this committee by the committee I am a member of. This officer was shot in the breast and has a bullet in his lungs or in the vicinity, and it has been there all these years. He is a total wreck and has been a great sufferer. He ought to have been allowed $72 a month at the Bureau beyond any question. My friend asks why he was not. That is one of the things God never intended that I should know, for I can not find out. [Laughter.] They are not allowed what they ought to be down there, and possibly because they are not and because the evidence in this case is absolutely conclusive we have recommended $60 when we ought to have recommended $72. We almost always scale under in order that we may have the confidence of this body, and I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a little something to the professed problem that the gentleman from South Carolina has put to the committee, and I will give him an illustration of how these things are done. There was a soldier in my district by the name of Palmer; he was a good soldier; served entirely through the war as a private. He secured for the disease of rheumatism a pension of $10 or $12 a month. He had a very bad case of rheumatism, that grew on him from time to time, and his eyesight began to fail; and while his rheumatism grew in intensity the eyesight grew more and more feeble. At last he went totally blind, just as blind as a man could be with both eyes dug out.

I worked with the best testimony that could be produced. Physicians of eminent distinction testified that they had treated him, that they knew all about the development of his case, absolutely knew to a moral certainty that the rheumatism and the accompaniments, the incidental conditions that grew out of it, produced that blindness. The Bureau of Pensions stood there stolidly, saying that under their rules blindness never came from rheumatism, and that is all there was of it. They rejected all the testimony of these eminent physicians; they rejected all the teachings of the books, and just stood there impervious to common sense and to the evidence that they had. What are you going to do with a concern like that? I succeeded in getting the committee to report a bill for $40 a month and the Senate cut it down to $30, but I am willing to take it, when I can get it, as the best I can do.

The gentleman puts a problem that he can not answer and no other man can answer—a problem that no power can answer except the omnipotent power of the Almighty. Such a combination of organized self-stultification was never formed in the history of mankind. That is all there is about this matter.

Mr. TALBERT. I have no doubt of the facts as stated, and I believe that in the case to which the gentleman from Ohio has referred a pension of $72 a month ought to have been granted under the law. But the man here mentioned did apply to the Pension Bureau, where, for some unknown reason—on account of some technicality or of some abstract rule—the pension could not be granted, although doubtless the officers were honest in their action. But in this other case the officer did not apply. I believe he has not applied at all for any increase of pension, and in view of that fact and knowing that these disabilities are the result of wounds received in the service, are traceable to service origin, I withdraw my amendment. I am willing to let the matter go, because the man has not appeared at all to ask for anything, as was done in the case stated by the gentleman from Ohio. I will not knowingly or intentionally do an old hero an injustice if I know my own heart.

The question being taken on the amendments reported by the committee, they were agreed to.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11858) for the relief of William E. Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to so amend the military record of William E. Anderson, Company H, Third United States Artillery, as to show him honorably discharged to date June 18, 1847.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following: "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the committee now rise and report to the House the various bills which have been acted on.

GOTTLIEB C. ROSE.

Mr. VANDIVER. Before the gentleman presses that motion I ask him to yield a moment. I discover, Mr. Chairman, that the bill (S. 35) for the relief of Gottlieb C. Rose—No. 1371 on the Calendar—has not been considered, for the reason that, technically speaking, it does not come exactly within the rule. Yet it has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and is practically of the same nature as other bills which have been acted on. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be now considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon further consideration, since the matter was mentioned between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER] and the Chair, the Chair is constrained to state that as the Committee of the Whole is operating under specific rules which apply specially to particular classes of bills and none others, it seems to the Chair hardly competent for the Committee of the Whole to take up a bill of this kind. The Chair is so advised, and feels that perhaps it would be better for the gentleman from Missouri to bring this bill up at another time, when there can be no question in regard to the rule under which it is presented.

Mr. VANDIVER. I respectfully submit to the ruling of the Chair, although I thought that this bill was so nearly of the same character with some which had been acted upon that it might be disposed of in the same way.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon further examination of the bill by the Chair and by those with whom the Chair has consulted, the Chair is constrained to believe that the bill referred to by the gentleman would not come within the rule under which the Committee of the Whole is now operating.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LACEY) having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CAPRON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills and had directed him to report the same back to the House, some with amendments and some without, and recommend that the bills, with the several amendments, do pass.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE OF CUBA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to the consideration of the bills reported back from the Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent of the House to have a conference committee appointed on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported from the Senate to-day, and move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask a conference thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 13996) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the republic of Cuba.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if this is a general diplomatic and consular bill?

Mr. HITT. No. It is a bill prepared to provide for the diplomatic and consular service for the republic of Cuba.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is simply now to put it in conference?

Mr. HITT. That is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore announced the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. HITT, ADAMS, and DINSMORE.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on all of the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole and the amendments to their final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole and amendments to their final passage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

COMMUTATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 9037) to allow the commutation of homestead entries in certain cases.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, what is this amendment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that in the Fifty-sixth Congress an act was passed granting to homestead settlers who had commuted their homesteads, or who from any cause had never received any benefit under the homestead act, the right to make a second homestead entry. The Department, in construing that act, held that a homesteader who made final entry by paying for his land, and who could have had the benefit of the free homes' law had he not made such payment, was not entitled to make a second entry; that is, a settler who had commuted could make a second entry, but a settler who had lived upon his land for the full period of five years and then paid for his land could not make a second homestead entry.

Mr. McRAE. Did you ever find anybody who would live on a piece of land for five years and then pay for it, too?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; we have had a very few of those cases, and it only affects those few.

Mr. McRAE. It seems to me that a man of that kind ought to have a guardian.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, he certainly ought to have the same privileges that are given to the man who only lives on his land fourteen months and then commutes by paying for it.

Mr. McRAE. A man who would pay a dollar and a quarter an acre for his land when he did not need to ought to have his money back.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There were some such cases.

Mr. McRAE. I have no possible objection to the amendment, if that is what it relates to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment enlarges somewhat the scope of the original bill. It will require unanimous consent to consider it in this way. The Chair therefore submits the question as to whether these amendments to this bill shall now be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. What is this, a pension bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a bill on the Speaker's table; a House bill with a Senate amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Is it on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SIMS. How can we consider it in a pension session?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The other bills have been disposed of, and this, being upon the Speaker's table, has been called up because it is unfinished business. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

LEVI HATCHETT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 2975) granting an increase of pension to Levi Hatchett, with a House amendment thereto, to which the Senate disagrees, requesting a conference.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GIBSON, Mr. DARRAGH, and Mr. KLEBERG.

HELEN A. B. DU BARRY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1037) granting an increase of pension to Helen A. B. Du Barry, with a House amendment thereto, to which the Senate disagrees, asking a conference.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SULLOWAY, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. LINDSAY.

FREDERICK O. CLARK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 12148) granting an increase of pension to Frederick O. Clark, with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ENOS G. BUDD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5254) granting an increase of pension to Enos G. Budd, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

OSCAR W. LOWERY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5870) granting an increase of pension to Oscar W. Lowery, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure on Wednesday afternoon of this week to give an explanation of the Fowler bill in the city of New York at the request of the Associated Savings Banks of the State of New York. I have been requested by a number of members, both on the Democratic and Republican sides of the House, to have that explanation printed in the RECORD. The remarks relate wholly to the bill now pending before the House, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD remarks upon the Fowler banking bill. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not understand what the remarks were.

Mr. HILL. I stated that I had on Wednesday of this week given an explanation of the Fowler bill to the Associated Savings Banks of the State of New York in the city of New York, and did so at considerable length. I explained it as plainly and as briefly as I could. I have been requested by members on that side of the House and this side to give that explanation to the House. I do not care to take the time of the House to do it, but ask unanimous consent to print it in the RECORD. The remarks relate wholly to the bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and to no other subject whatever.

Mr. BARTLETT. What was the request? I have just come in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to insert an explanation of the Fowler bill in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. E. J. HILL, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT, DELIVERED BEFORE THE SAVINGS BANKS ASSOCIATION OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK AT THEIR ANNUAL MEETING HELD IN NEW YORK CITY WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1902.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: When the Japanese worshiper goes to the Buddhist temple in the city of Narra, in Japan, he has his prayers printed on slips of tissue paper, and, wetting them in his mouth, he throws them at the idol.

If they stick he goes away happy, believing that the prayers are answered.

So I am here to-day to fling some thoughts at you from this manuscript, in the firm belief that if I can make them stick in your memory somewhere and somehow the answer will come in a sounder currency and a better banking system for our beloved country.

My subject will be House bill 13363, entitled "A bill to maintain the gold standard, provide an elastic currency, equalize the rates of interest throughout the country, and further amend the national banking laws."

While we may not all agree concerning every feature of this measure, of one thing I am sure—that, representing as you do more than 2,000,000 depositors in this State and over a billion in amount of the savings of your people, you not only strive to guard with jealous care and keep in perfect safety the trusts committed to you, but when the savings of the past are called for in times of stress and sore necessity your duty and your pride as well will lead you to meet those calls with money that is good the world around and with the highest purchasing power everywhere.

In one respect you are the eyes and ears and brains for nearly one-third of the population of this State.

So far as deposits are made for investment purposes, they are a tribute to your sagacity, and their great increase a testimonial to the confidence which is placed in you; but the weekly savings which are intrusted to you represent the vigor and strength of active life which are stored and held till age and weakness make their use imperative, and any shrinkage in the purchasing power of the money which measures these means just so much less of comfort and so much more of deprivation when old age comes.

It is therefore to the everlasting credit of the mutual savings banks of this State, that when the kind of money in which those deposits should be paid became a disputed political question in '96, you promptly declared "that in our judgment the future prosperity of the country and the welfare of the people demand not only that the gold standard shall be maintained, but the currency system now in use shall be so changed and remodeled as to meet and adapt it to the increasing needs of commerce, and equal in security and credit with the best in circulation by any of the civilized nations of the earth."

In the House of Representatives the Committee on Rules often bring in a rule that a certain subject shall be made a "continuing question until disposed of," and I take it that this resolution was one of that kind; that what you said in 1896 you mean to-day, to-morrow, and all the to-morrows in the future.

Now let me tell you what has been done to carry that resolution into effect.

Then the only dangerous feature of our currency system was fiat money.

Then we had $346,681,016 of greenback promises to pay.

Every dollar of it is still outstanding.

Then we had 401,688,649 silver dollars, worth 52.2 cents each, but legal tender for 100 cents.

Now we have 534,606,654 silver dollars outstanding, worth about 41 cents each, and are steadily coining a million and a half a month, and have been doing so from that day to this, and, unless legislation is had forbidding it, will continue to do so till the aggregate will be 570,000,000.

Since you passed your vote not one dollar of the demand notes has been canceled, and no provision whatever has been made for maintaining the parity of our enormous mass of silver. Indeed, so far as legislation is concerned, barring the right to issue 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness given in the war-revenue act, the Treasury Department has less power than it had prior to the act of March 14, 1900, to maintain the parity with gold of all forms of money.

That act, in its first section, did declare that 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, should be the standard unit of value, but in its last section it proclaimed Senatorial faith in international bimetallism.

It did increase our gold reserve from one hundred to one hundred and fifty millions; but where, under the old law, all of it could, in the discretion of the Treasury, be used before the signal of distress in the shape of bond issues was put out, now such use is limited to fifty millions, and I need not say to a convention of bankers that a reserve which can under no conditions be used is a delusion and a snare.

It did, perhaps, strengthen the position of the greenback by restricting to this one form of currency all of the powers which the Treasury before possessed to maintain all our money at parity with gold, but in so doing left a much larger amount of silver stark naked and alone to maintain itself by use, with the confidence of the people as its only redeemer.

I take the position here to-day that the United States has no more right to put in circulation any form of legal-tender money which it will not redeem in the money of the standard which it has itself proclaimed than an individual has to issue his note with the deliberate intention of defaulting in its payment.

No good reason can be given why the greenback, which is all fiat, should be redeemed in gold, and the silver dollar, which is more than half fiat, should not be also.

Indeed, the only excuse—for there is no reason—which can be offered is that it would be dangerous, and that it would increase the so-called "endless chain," and so prove a burden which the Treasury could not carry.

The claim refutes itself, for the silver dollar is a legal tender for all dues to the Treasury, and Hon. Lyman J. Gage, who filled the position of Secretary of the Treasury with an ability equaled by few men in our country's history, told the simple truth when he said:

> The Government might just as well face the redemption at the front door as to delay it until it must take it under the revenue laws at the back door.

The danger is ever present in our financial system, and it is far safer to find it out and be prepared for it, than it is to ignore it and have it find us unprepared, as it did 1893.

God, in His goodness to us as a nation, has given us splendid crops and an abounding prosperity, and the miner, with his pick and shovel, has more than doubled our stock of gold since then, and so shielded us from the otherwise inevitable result of our foolish financial policy; but Congress has had little to do with either of these causes, and, indeed, so far as effective financial legislation is concerned, has been practically content to let things drift, and will be so content in the future, unless an aroused public opinion shall demand some action or adversity shall come again to compel it.

Do you doubt it?

The late Comptroller of the Currency, in a speech a few days ago, used this language:

> The adoption of asset currency would involve the reorganization of the entire banking business of the country, and this, of course, is not be thought of during times of prosperity. Those things are best done during periods of adversity, when a little uncertainty added to the total can not influence business much for good or bad.

It may be that this is good policy and good politics as well, but I do not think it is either; for when trouble does come, as come it will, the people will hold the party in power to a strict responsibility for failure to prepare for it when they had the opportunity.

Many years ago the wise man said: "A prudent man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself, but the simple pass on and are punished."

I commend this proverb, with all that it implies, not only to those who, having given little thought to the question, are content to "let well enough alone," but especially to those who, fully realizing the situation, are indifferent to it because a Congressional election is approaching. Is the currency system of the United States always to be a political football, only to be kicked back and forth between the parties and, when the game is finished, to be laid away as a trophy of victory, battered and bruised and soiled with the dirt of party conflict?

Three months ago the National Board of Trade recommended "that Congress enact such legislation as may be necessary to put this country on a permanent gold basis," and by specific votes declared that the retirement of the greenbacks and the exchangeability of the silver dollar for gold were essentials to that end.

On the 5th of March the New York Chamber of Commerce, upon an elaborate report prepared by John Harsen Rhoades, Henry W. Cannon, E. H. Perkins, jr., August Belmont, and George G. Williams, unanimously voted that "the first stone in the foundation of the structure of national credit is the inviolate character of its unit of value, and now is the time to complete the act of March 14, 1900," and to that end favored the exchangeability of the silver dollar with gold.

And yet, since the 13th of January, a bill to that end has been upon the House Calendar, and can not be touched because, forsooth, some Republicans who voted for it two years ago now fear that the agitation of the silver question will hurt them in their districts this fall, and some Democrats, who were driven by public sentiment to cast a like vote then, now say that political conditions have changed.

When you add to this the fact that one great committee of the House of Representatives has reported a bill deliberately putting the government of the Philippine Islands into the banking business to maintain the parity of a full legal-tender silver coinage at a ratio of 2 for 1, and that coinage issued with the openly avowed purpose of perpetuating the wage system of the islands on its present silver basis, and then supplement these things by a report of the Senate Committee on the Philippines in favor of the unlimited coinage of a full legal-tender silver dollar on private account as the currency system of the islands, and add to that that this dollar may be coined in San Francisco from American bullion, with the great probability that it will enter into American circulation precisely as the trade dollar did, is it not high time that the sound-money men of the United States should demand from their Representatives and Senators and their President and Cabinet that the overwhelming victories of 1896 and 1900 for honest money and a sound financial system should not be frittered away and go for naught?

Gentlemen, there is no room in a gold-standard system for fiat money.

It must either be paid and canceled or the responsibility for its current redemption squarely assumed by the issuing power. And when the Government does this it, in effect, gives notice to all the world that it will furnish all of the gold required for international trade, for it has no control of interest rates, and can not check demand as a bank can by raising the price of discounts.

With fiat money in circulation there is neither place for nor safety in a bank-note issue "adapted to the increasing needs of commerce," to use the language of your resolution of five years ago, for every bank note practically becomes a sight draft upon the Treasury reserve of gold, and every bank will look to the Treasury for relief in time of panic, as they have been doing for thirty years, even when their notes have not been made redeemable in gold.

The financial barometer of this country to-day is the accumulation of gold in the Government Treasury, and we watch each day for its rise and fall.

Every dollar of it above a fair working balance should be employed in the industries of the country, and is so used by every one of our commercial rivals.

Who thinks of looking at the treasury holdings of any European country to judge of the possibilities of a panic?

It is the business of the banks there to safeguard and keep sufficiently abundant the supply of redemption money. And it should be here, but it never will be till the demand notes of the Government are eliminated from our system.

It is fiat money which has made impossible every scheme for the improvement of our banking system since the civil war.

It was this which paralyzed the excellent plan of Hon. Joseph H. Walker, for he was compelled to propose a heavy penalty tax upon the deposits of all the banks of the country to force them to maintain the parity of all our moneys, which of course was impossible unless they could control the amount which the Government should issue.

It was this which made hopeless the plans of Carlisle and Gage and the monetary commission, and it is this which complicates the Fowler bill and brings its intrinsic benefits to the country far too slowly for the country's good.

The greenbacks should be paid and the ultimate retirement of the legal-tender silver dollar provided for now and meanwhile made exchangeable for gold.

It could be done, as Mr. Gage said to the Banking and Currency Committee, "without making a ripple upon the financial surface of the country."

He had the courage and power to do it, but Congress would not permit it.

Charles S. Fairchild had the courage but not the power.

If this was done, a bank-note issue redeemable in gold could be provided which would respond to every legitimate trade requirement and by its economy save to the business interests of this country in the next five years more than the amount of the entire volume of the outstanding greenbacks.

Think of the difference between a greenback and a bank note.

So far as the issuing is concerned the greenback has absolutely no relation to trade and commerce, for the Government borrows but never lends, and can not issue currency except to pay an existing debt which represents past consumption, as the greenback represents debt incurred in the civil war.

When the greenback is issued there is no returning stream of assets to provide for its redemption, and it is in essence the equivalent of an individual note perpetually renewed. But a bank lends and is not supposed to borrow except from its depositors, and when it issues its note it swaps its credit for its customers' credit, and at the time of issue receives back something which it can use to cancel its own obligation when it is presented for redemption.

One deals with the past and pays for "horses" which are eternally dead, the other with the future and buys live and productive assets.

Two reasons are given for the continued existence of the greenback:

First. That it is a loan without interest.

Second. The sentimental one that it saved the nation in the civil war and must now be held as sacred as a soldier's grave.

For reply to the first I cite you to the report on the pending bill on page 7, where the Treasury actuary clearly proves that the cost to the Government of maintaining the greenback since resumption in 1879 has been nearly 7 per cent per annum.

For reply to the second I have no recollection that the "greyback" of the Confederacy had any such effect upon its fortunes, and am therefore compelled to believe that the resources of the North rather than its liabilities were the deciding factor in that conflict.

The fact is that we are flying in the face of the experience of the whole commercial world by maintaining a system of fiat money, and this bill recognizes that and proposes to get back slowly but surely to the solid ground of gold as the legal tender, silver as subsidiary coin, and bank notes as the instruments of trade.

Then deficits may come and surpluses may go, but the money of the people will be unchanged and unchangeable.

Then the ghost of parity will no longer haunt our sleeping hours and the governmental relation to commercial interests will be one of taxation only.

The bill proposes, first, to stop the further coinage of the silver dollar, to use the bullion remaining in the Treasury for subsidiary coin, and when public necessities require more, to begin the recoinage of the dollar into subsidiary.

The committee believe that with our rapidly increasing population the whole amount can in time be converted into change money and held in daily use among the people, and with the greenbacks retired, with no bank notes below $10 and silver certificates restricted to $5, it can be safely carried.

It has been strongly urged that the United States should follow the example of Germany and Japan in melting down and selling all of our legal-tender silver which is not in actual circulation, but this means assuming a loss of 59 cents on every dollar so treated, and recoinage means a nominal gain of about 7 cents on every dollar which can be permanently held in circulation.

The difference between the two plans would aggregate about $300,000,000.

The second feature of the bill providing for the maintenance of the gold standard is the retirement of the greenbacks.

In my judgment this should be by the direct and independent action of the Treasury, for they are a Government debt and in no sense a bank obligation.

The complications which are certain to arise by throwing a part of this burden upon the banks are wholly unnecessary, and there is no essential relation, even in point of time, between the withdrawal of the greenback and the issue of the bank notes, for whenever a greenback is paid, a gold dollar will go into circulation and the bank note is only a credit instrument and not a legal tender; but the committee thought that it would be politically wise to induce the banks to assume the current redemption of such an amount as could not be canceled with the gold now in the Treasury, and in that way divest the Treasury more promptly of its banking functions, even if it did delay the date of their entire payment somewhat longer.

It is proposed that any bank which shall assume the current redemption in gold of greenbacks to the amount or 20 per cent of its capital shall have the privilege of issuing within two years thereafter a like amount of bank notes redeemable in gold over its own counter and at some clearing house or agency in a clearing-house city, and such notes shall not require a previous deposit of bonds and shall bear a tax of but one-fourth of 1 per cent per annum. The greenbacks thus assumed for current redemption will have the indorsement of the separate banks, and each bank must hold itself ready to currently redeem its respective share in gold, either over its own counter or by immediate reimbursement to the Government if redemption is demanded at the Treasury. These greenbacks so assumed are to be finally paid by the Treasury from a fund derived from taxes on all bank-note circulation and the interest on deposits in national banks of all Government funds in excess of a working balance of $50,000,000, which deposits the bill prescribes shall hereafter be covered by Government bonds at par and shall bear an interest charge of 1 per cent, but no reserve is to be held against them.

Concurrently with the assumption of the greenbacks referred to, the banks shall present an additional 10 per cent to the Treasury for immediate payment and cancellation and receive the gold therefor.

With 65,000,000 greenbacks paid and 130,000,000 assumed for current redemption by the banks, the remaining 151,000,000, less those lost and destroyed in forty years, can easily be met from the reserve fund in the Treasury.

The success of the plan depends upon the willingness of the banks to assume the current redemption of greenbacks to the amount of 20 per cent of their capital.

In the opinion of the committee the inducements are sufficient. What are they?

First. The banks so consenting will have the exclusive privilege of note issue on assets until the entire 130,000,000 of greenbacks are assumed.

Second. An abatement of 1 per cent in the tax upon asset note issues on an amount equal to the greenbacks assumed.

Third. The final redemption of the assumed greenbacks in the inverse order of their assumption, so that the tax abatement remains longest with those who avail themselves of it first.

Provision is made for the change from bond secured to asset note issues, without reference to the present limitation of 3,000,000 per month, and in view of the fact that the present bond secured circulation is over $320,000,000, there is little question but that 130,000,000 of it would be promptly changed in order to realize the greatly increased profit which this plan would give.

If it was so changed, as I have no doubt but that it would be, the entire volume of the greenbacks would be retired and canceled within twenty-five years, and any increase of the present amount of bank-note circulation would hasten the happy day. Then the grand international choir of England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Japan, and last of all the United States, could join in singing the old hymn, "Believing, we rejoice to see the curse removed," and so far as the great powers of the world are concerned, fiat paper money would be dead and buried.

ASSET NOTE ISSUES.

You have already seen that the bill involves a change in our note-issue system.

Seven years ago, when I entered Congress and was appointed by Mr. Reed as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, I was a sincere and enthusiastic advocate of a bond-secured currency and an independent bank system.

Persistent inquiry, constant study, and patient investigation have brought me squarely to a belief in asset note issues and branch banks, and, I believe, will bring any man there who will pursue the subject with an open mind.

I declare it as my honest belief, as a bank officer with a modest interest in the game, that the sole stake which the banks are now playing for, in dealing out bank notes, is the profit on the bonds, and that not a single dollar of the three hundred and twenty millions circulation now outstanding remains out with reference to any commercial transaction. How could it be otherwise, in view of the fact that the profit on such circulation, even when all of it is loaned all of the time—which, you know, is impossible—is, in a 6 per cent locality, but two-thirds of 1 per cent when based on 2 per cent bonds, one-sixth of 1 per cent on threes, one twenty-fifth of 1 per cent on short fours, one-half of 1 per cent on fives, and a loss of about one-fifth of 1 per cent on long fours, and the additional fact that at least $32,000,000 is locked up in premiums when it should be available for commercial purposes. As the national banking system was instituted for the purpose of making a market for Government bonds, it is only fulfilling the plans of its creator; but conditions have changed in forty years, and there is no reason now why $110 of capital should be locked up in bonds in order to put $100 of notes into circulation.

Over against a bond speculation and a possible two-thirds of 1 per cent profit on circulation this bill gives an asset note issue of 60 per cent of the capital, with a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent on the first 20 per cent and 1¼ per cent tax on the other 40 per cent, and a profit to the banks above all expenses, taxes, interest on redemption funds, cost of carrying greenbacks, etc., of at least 4¼ per cent, or a corresponding reduction of interest rates to the country, or, preferably, a fair division between the two.

On the three hundred and twenty millions outstanding it means a gain to somebody of more than ten millions annually, and a very much larger amount, proportionately, in those portions of the country where higher interest rates prevail.

There is but one question concerning it. Is it safe?

If three billions of deposits are safe, the three hundred millions of asset notes would be, for they would be controlled by the same men and would have a prior lien upon the assets.

The fact is that when anyone suggests asset note issues we at once recall the days of "wild-cat" banks and "red-dog" bank bills, with banks started at will under varying State laws or without any law or supervision or responsibility.

Under the provisions of this bill a board of three comptrollers will pass upon the charter; the capital stock must be fully paid in; a rigid Government supervision is provided for; no issues beyond the amount of the capital are permitted under any conditions, and none above 60 per cent without special approval of the comptrollers; all notes are redeemable in gold; a 5 per cent redemption fund must be deposited with the Government in advance; 5 per cent more is added to it from taxes on circulation; a special emergency tax of 1 per cent on all circulation annually is authorized, if necessary; a first lien on all assets is given; the double liability of the stockholder is continued, and, best of all, prompt and frequent redemptions are compelled in district clearing houses or redemption agencies, where each bank must make provision for redemption of its notes satisfactory to the clearing house as well as to the board of control before it can take out any notes for issue at all.

The records of the Treasury show that a tax of twenty-two one-hundredths of 1 per cent on circulation laid annually would have paid in full every note of every failed bank from the organization of the national banking system to this day, and the margin of safety in the tax prescribed here is nearly ten times greater than that, without any reference to the 5 per cent redemption fund.

In my opinion it is safe, far safer than the bank-note system of any other country, and fully as safe as the present bond secured bank note, for I do not believe that a single dollar in either case could ever be defaulted.

It is feared by some that the withdrawal of bond security would disastrously affect the price of bonds. Not so at all; for, even if every note so secured was changed as rapidly as possible under the provisions of the bill, it would take five years, and, including bonds to secure Government deposits, the requirements of the sinking fund would, in that time, take all thus held, saying nothing of saving banks' and insurance companies' purchases at any reasonable price. Objection is also made that asset note issues by large banks under restrictive legislation or monopoly privilege in other countries afford no criterion by which we can judge of such note issues here, where we already have more than 4,000 national banks and an open field for more.

Personally, I would have preferred to have limited the issue privilege to banks of not less than half a million of capital, or, better yet, to one large bank in each redemption district, or, best of all, to one bank in New York City; but none of these propositions is politically possible to-day, and can only become so by a process of evolution, a process which we must admit to be in excellent working order just now.

The principle of asset banking is equally applicable to large or small banks.

Both can be made equally safe.

The difference between the two is that the large bank is an ever-present help in time of trouble, and the little one is apt to be an ever-present trouble when help is needed.

Of course, economy of management is found in the large bank rather than the small one, but if we are to be controlled by our prejudices we must be willing to pay for the privilege.

With an increased profit to the banks shown, and with safety provided for, the unquestionable advantages to the people of an elastic bank-note issue are so great that it would be presumption to discuss them before a bankers' convention.

BRANCH BANKS.

There is one other feature of the bill—and, I think, the most important one—which I wish to bring to your careful attention, and that is branch banks.

Whenever a man finds himself at variance with the almost universal opinion of mankind it is high time for him to begin to doubt his own infallibility, and this is precisely the position in which the opponent of the branch-bank system is placed to-day, for, after a careful examination, including the laws of 40 countries as compiled by Comptroller Eckels in 1896, I can find no government in the world where branch banks are not permitted except our own; and even here they are excluded by the laws of only 20 States and by the national-bank act, and even that act permits them where State banks come into the system with branches already in existence. The United Kingdom has 116 banks, with 5,515 branches, in a territorial area less than half the size of Texas, 3,517 of them having been established in the past forty-four years.

France made it a condition precedent to the extension of the charter of the Bank of France that a branch should be established in every department of the Republic. Europe and South and Central America are solidly in favor of the system.

Voyaging around the world last year, I found branches of British banks throughout the Philippines acting as commercial drummers for English trade and financial agents for our Government at the same time.

German, English, Russian, every one our commercial rivals in the Orient, but not an American bank and hardly an American ship.

All through Japan, English, German, and Russian banks are taxing American trade by excessive charges for exchange on London, and from Vladivostok to Moscow, straight through Siberia, German branch banks and department stores are laying foundations for the future trade of what is sure to be one of the great markets of the world.

In the city of London alone there are 58 incorporated banks, with $453,000,000 of capital, and one hundred and seventy-six millions of surplus and undivided profits employed in international trade, with 2,253 branches scattered all over the world, extending English prestige and developing English trade everywhere, and we pay tribute to them.

The Committee on Banking and Currency could see no reason why American capital and American enterprise should not do its share in promoting American trade in other lands, and long for the time when American national banks will fly the American flag and care for American interests in all the great capitals of the world.

The bill limits the foreign-branch privilege to those national banks which have a full paid-up capital of $5,000,000, for, if we are to enter upon this work, it should be in such a way as to command the respect and confidence of all, and so insure success.

The field is the world, and duty and self-interest bid us go forth and take it, for the time is soon coming, if it is not already here, when we must fight for markets abroad or find stagnation at home.

But, important as this is, the establishment of a domestic branch banking system is still more worthy of serious consideration.

In 1901 the average capital and surplus of national banks was $880,314,389.96, and the current expense of doing business, not including taxes, was $72,043,890.98, or about 8.07 per cent on the capital employed.

The average loans for the same year were $2,881,594,312, and the percentage of expense was 2.5.

In Germany the Imperial bank, with average loans of $138,030,935, had a percentage of expense of 2.3, maintaining 330 branches.

The Bank of France, with 392 branches and average loans of $175,040,000, had a percentage of expense of 1.9.

When we consider that both of these institutions perform much of the work transacted by the Treasury here, and, in addition to this, that the Bank of France is compelled by law to discount notes as small as $1 in amount, which adds greatly to the expense account, the difference in cost of maintenance of the branch and independent systems is plainly seen.

The bank loans of the United States on June 29, 1901, as shown by the Comptroller's Report, aggregated $6,491,630,743, and if the economy of the French system could be applied to this business the banks or the people of the United States would save in a single year $38,949,784.45.

I presume many of you will think that this would be impossible in this country, and I thought so, too, until I procured from the Comptroller's office the loans and expenses of banks, and demonstrated conclusively to myself that a thoroughly developed branch-bank system, with large parent banks, would make even greater economies possible.

First, let me give you the relative expense of bank management to loans in different parts of the country by grand divisions, from September, 1900, to September, 1901:

	Average loans.	Expenses, not including taxes.	Percentage of expenses to loans.
New England States	$416,335,831	$9,025,653	2.17
Eastern States	1,240,251,875	29,285,344	2.36
Southern States	230,969,403	8,441,336	3.70
Middle States	769,921,542	20,300,994	2.64
Western States	126,856,280	5,114,780	4.12
Pacific States	64,786,931	2,081,549	3.23

This did not entirely satisfy me, so I tried another plan. I compared the 10 largest banks in New York City with 10 fairly representative New England banks of $100,000 capital each, and 10 representative banks in Iowa and Nebraska of $50,000 capital each, and 10 representative national banks of $25,000 capital each, in different parts of the country, and found this surprising result:

	Average loans.	Expenses, not including taxes.	Percentage of expenses to loans.
The 10 largest New York City banks	$370,273,620	$6,228,429	1.68
Ten representative New England banks of $100,000 capital each	2,244,664	88,418	3.94
Ten representative national banks in Iowa and Nebraska of $50,000 capital each	1,337,803	71,270	5.33
Ten representative national banks of $25,000 capital each in different parts of the country	448,068	31,382	7.00

So that, if it were possible to conduct all of the banking business of the United States on the same relative basis of expenses to loans as obtained with the 10 largest banks in New York City last year, the annual saving to either the banks or the borrowers or both would be $53,231,172. Of course, I do not assume that this could be done, but I do believe that the twenty-five and fifty and even the one hundred thousand dollar banks could all be converted into branches of large and strong institutions with a great saving to the people and profit to the stockholders.

It is wholly useless to make comparisons of interest rates between this and other countries to show the greater economy of the branch-bank system, for like differences will be found between countries where the system is the same, and interest rates depend largely on conditions in no way connected with expense of management; but that the expense account is a very important factor in effecting the general result is clearly shown by the strenuous claims put forward by the independent banks that they could not compete with the branch system, and therefore that the existing banks would be driven out of business.

I admit that in many cases this would be true, but in the end it would mean the survival of the fittest and result in inestimable advantage to millions of borrowers who have a right to have their welfare considered in framing legislation.

And I know of no reason why a bank should be restricted to one place of business any more than an insurance company, for a fair distribution of risks is just as essential to safety in one case as in the other.

But I do not believe that the stockholders of any bank which has a reason for existence would suffer by the change, for every such institution well established could enlarge its field of work without a proportionate increase of expense.

The process is going on every day now, on the "community of interest" plan, and it is far better to have it done under the law than outside of it.

A few days ago I sold some stock in a Kansas bank at 125 which for the past three years has been unsalable at par.

It was bought by the managers of a Missouri bank, and the organization will hereafter be to all intents and purposes a branch of the larger institution.

The necessities of the community were greater than the limited capital of the little bank could meet and the expense of management consumed the profits.

Now, all the legitimate wants of that vicinity will be met by the aid of the larger bank, and the increased patronage and reduced expenses will fully justify the price paid for the established business and unused good will, and all parties will be benefited.

On the other hand, all through the manufacturing towns of the East banks have been capitalized beyond the normal necessities of the places where they are located to meet the wants of one or more factories there and not violate the law concerning the 10 per cent limit and single-name notes bought "on the street" have absorbed the surplus funds at rates utterly ruinous to the dividends of the country banks.

In the West and South, where bank capital is limited, an expensive system of rediscounts compels heavy rates to borrowers. A well-regulated branch-bank system would adjust itself to these conditions, and not only provide a better distribution of loanable funds, but with like conditions of security and credit is sure to result in lower and more uniform interest charges.

This has been proven beyond dispute in Canada, Great Britain, France, and Germany.

How is it in this country? As shown by the Comptroller's report for 1899, the average discount rate of national and State banks was:

	National banks.	State banks.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
New England	4.7	5.2
Southern	7.4	7.4
Middle West	5.8	6.8
Western	8.9	10.1
Pacific	7.8	7.3

Every banker here knows that the difference between the rates received by the State and national banks in the same locality is due to the more conservative character of the national-bank loans caused by the restrictions of the law; but he knows also that the great difference in national-bank rates of 4.2 per cent between New England and the Western States is due to an unequal distribution of capital and small independent banks operated at large expense, both of which a well-regulated branch-bank system would correct, as it has done in Canada, where, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, discount rates vary less than 2 per cent.

The bill does not provide for speculative branches, opened here to-day and there to-morrow, but specifies that in each case where a branch is instituted the articles of association shall be amended upon the unanimous vote of the board of directors, and then only when approved by the board of comptrollers in Washington.

Under these circumstances how absurd it is to talk of lack of local interest and refusal to aid in development of the towns where branches are and to fear that the parent bank will suck deposits from the branches and give back nothing in return.

Was it for this or the reverse of this that the French Parliament compelled the Bank of France to establish branches in every department?

Is it to aggrandize London or to build up the colonies and so make money for themselves that the British joint-stock banks have followed the English drumbeat around the world?

Do independent country banks send their funds to their reserve agents at 1½ or 2 per cent when good loans are offered at home at 5 or 6 per cent?

Men do not conspire against their own welfare, and to claim that the interests of the permanent customer in the country will be sacrificed to the temporary needs of the city speculator is contrary to the experience of the branch system everywhere.

Indeed, Mr. E. S. Clauston, the general manager of the Bank of Montreal, in a reply to Hon. J. H. Walker's remarks before our committee, says:

> Mr. Walker's fear that the customers of a country branch are in times of stringency sacrificed to the necessity of the parent institution is a phantom of his imagination, for the loans of a branch being less liquid, the knowledge of the difficulty of realizing them and the small proportion they bear to the whole amount leaves them practically undisturbed in the acutest panic, and their only knowledge of a stringency is imparted through the medium of newspaper articles.

NO BANK MONOPOLY.

It will not do to cry "trusts" and talk of bank monopoly as an argument against this bill, for its very purpose is to strip one man of the power which he now has to paralyze the industries of the land at will, and that man, the Secretary of the Treasury, controlled by party politics.

I can conceive of but one money trust in a country as large as ours, and that is to have all of the currency issued by the Government on the Populist plan.

The very object of this measure is to get as far away from that as possible; to divest the Government of all banking functions; to put the money taken for taxes at once into industrial use; to make the gold standard a reality and not a dream, by compelling gold redemptions by the banks from their own reserves instead of at Government expense, and lastly by taking the whole banking business out of politics by putting it under the supervision of a board of three comptrollers, appointed for periods of twelve years each, with one man's term expiring each four years, so that no Administration can destroy their influence or prestige by packing it with ignorant or inexperienced men, or using it as a headquarters for future political campaigns.

A CHANGE NECESSARY.

And now as savings bank managers and investors in Government bonds, as officers and stockholders in national banks, what is to be your policy in the future?

That some change must be made in our note-issue system is plain to every thinking man.

If the character of security is to be changed, admitting the bonds of States and cities, it only adds to your troubles by bringing another buyer into the field and lessening the returns from your investments.

To longer depend on Government bonds as a basis for circulation is impossible, for the requirements of the sinking fund will soon exhaust the supply, and the increasing premium is even now forcing the withdrawal of circulation as fast as the law permits.

There is no probability whatever of bond issues in the future, for whatever else of good or ill came to us from the Spanish war, it demonstrated as never before that the possibilities of taxation in this country have hardly been touched.

It is a bit of unwritten history of that war that at its beginning Secretary Gage intended to issue but $100,000,000 of bonds for immediate contingencies, and to rely upon taxation for funds to carry it to a successful conclusion.

He was overruled by those who did not realize as he did the resources of this great country, or who lacked the faith which he possessed in the patriotism of the people.

As a result, two hundred millions of bonds were issued, of which one-half are still outstanding, on which we must continue to pay interest till 1908, or buy them in at heavy premiums.

Meanwhile the money which they represent lies idle in the Treasury.

A few days ago I requested the Treasury Department to make up a balance sheet of receipts and expenditures as they would have appeared from March 31, 1898, to March 31, 1902, if no bonds at all had been issued, and if the Treasury had availed itself of the power given it under the war-revenue act to issue certificates of indebtedness at 3 per cent, payable within one year. It is as follows:

	Receipts.	Expenditures.
Quarter ended June 30, 1898	$97,407,328.04	$140,009,448.89
Fiscal year ended June 30—
1899	515,960,620.18	605,072,179.85
1900	557,240,851.89	487,713,791.71
1901	587,685,337.53	509,967,353.15
Nine months ended Mar. 31, 1902	419,002,879.50	357,844,901.97
Available cash, exclusive of $100,000,000 gold reserve, Mar. 31, 1898	126,166,934.78
Proceeds of 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness, act June 13, 1898	100,000,000.00
Redemption of 3 per cent certificates with interest for one year		103,000,000.00
Transfer of gold to reserve fund under act Mar. 14, 1900		50,000,000.00
Available cash, exclusive of $150,000,000 gold reserve, Mar. 31, 1902		159,856,285.35
Total	2,413,463,960.92	2,413,463,960.92

It shows that, starting with the cash on hand and adding proceeds of the certificates, we could have paid from taxation alone the entire expenses of the four years, amounting to $2,100,607,675.57, retired all of the certificates with a year's interest added, placed fifty millions in the gold reserve, as we have done, and on the 1st of April this year found the Treasury with the comfortable sum of $159,856,285.25 on hand and the country ready to repeal all war taxation, and all this without any bond issue whatever.

Our past experience will fix our future policy, for the power to issue one-year certificates still remains, and with our rapidly increasing wealth and almost limitless taxing power the necessity for greenbacks and long-time bonds is passing away, never, I trust, to come again.

Something, then, must be done or our bank-note circulation will soon disappear.

It is for you and such as you to say what legislation shall be enacted.

The Committee on Banking and Currency do not claim that this bill is perfect or that the individual members all agree as to every detail of it, but they are a unit in the firm belief that the principles upon which it is based are everlastingly right, and they ask your cooperation and the kindly criticism of every sound-money man in the United States in what they believe to be the patriotic work of making the monetary system of our beloved land the best which the world can show.

W. B. MARTIN,

[SEAL.] By D. A. HITES, Deputy.

Preamble and concurrent resolution in relation to the interstate-commerce law.

Whereas it is generally believed that the effectiveness of the interstate-commerce law has been seriously impaired by certain decisions of the Federal courts, and that the law in its present state is practically inoperative in remedying the evils of the transportation service of the country, which was the purpose of its enactment; and

Whereas a bill, designated as H. Resolved by the senate, the house concurring, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be, and are hereby, respectfully requested to give said measure careful consideration and to use their efforts in every proper way to secure its early enactment, or the enactment of some other measure which will afford the relief sought.

RELIEF OF CITIZENS OF FRENCH WEST INDIES.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill and ask for its present consideration. After it is read for the information of the Senate I will say a word in its support.

The bill (S. 5736) for the relief of citizens of the French West Indies was read the first time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be purchased such provisions, clothing, medicines, and other necessary articles as he shall deem advisable, and tender the same in the name of the Government of the United States to that of France for the relief of the citizens who have suffered by the late earthquake and eruption in the islands of the French West Indies.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into operation this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is authorized to use necessary steamers and vessels belonging to the Government to carry into effect the purpose of this act.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, we are shocked by the intelligence which comes to us of the great destruction of life and property in the island of Martinique and of the probable loss of both life and property in adjacent islands. In all history there seems to have been but one disaster of similar character which was equal to it. It would seem from the reports which have come to us that it is exceeded only by the destruction of Pompeii. It is, indeed, to be hoped that later and more authentic reports may not justify the present estimate of the tremendous loss of human life.

That there is immediate necessity that aid should be extended to the survivors there is no doubt.

Let the United States lead in the work of caring for the stricken. She and her people have never yet failed to be moved by the cry of distress which has come up from other lands. Let us extend our sympathy for our unfortunate fellow-men and send with it from our abundant stores the means necessary to succor those upon whom has fallen a sudden and overwhelming calamity.

I believe that in tendering our sympathy and assistance we shall but interpret the wishes and purposes of the humane, generous American people.

I ask, Mr. President, for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the bill be read again.

The bill was read the second time at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,950 to enable the Secretary of the Navy to consummate the purchase of additional land adjoining the naval station for naval purposes at Key West, Fla., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $13,500 to grade and macadamize New Hampshire avenue, Whitney avenue (Jackson street) to Seventh street (Brightwood avenue), intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NONDISAPPEARING CARRIAGES.

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate how many barbette carriages have been manufactured in each year since July 1, 1893, and what has been the cost or price paid for manufacture. Also how many and what caliber of guns have been mounted during that time on nondisappearing carriages. Also report of contracts made with the Bethlehem Iron Company and Bethlehem Steel Company for guns and forgings and other ordnance material in each year since July 1, 1893, and the contract price.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know that I shall object to the present consideration of the resolution, but I ask permission to propound a question or two to the mover of it.

I wish to know what ground this particular resolution covers that has not already been covered by the three several resolutions which the Senator from Vermont has already introduced bearing on the same general subject?

Mr. PROCTOR. The resolutions that have been adopted by the Senate have asked for no information in regard to barbette carriages, the number manufactured, or the number of guns mounted on nondisappearing carriages. It is all a new inquiry.

Mr. WARREN. I shall not interpose an objection at this time, but if all this information is desired in conducting a certain inquiry that has been determined upon, and which should be consummated during the present session of Congress, then I hope the mover of the resolution has now included everything he needs or wants, or if still further information along the line is intended I hope the further inquiries may come in very soon. We have already had three, and this is the fourth resolution of similar import in the last three weeks, I believe.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

SALES OF OSAGE INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to inform the Senate—

First. The total amount of money received from the sale of the Osage ceded and the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas.

Second. The amount received by the Government from the sale of each class of said lands by each register and receiver.

Third. The amount paid (in fees or in salary) to each register and receiver out of the money received from such sales.

MILITARY ORDERS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 347, first session, Fifth-seventh Congress, being a letter of the Secretary of War communicating certain information regarding the issuance of certain military orders by the military authorities of the United States in the Philippine Islands, for the use of the War Department.

ALLEGED CRUELTIES IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I obtained leave a few days ago to print in the RECORD a statement of Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, a very eminent clergyman of the Episcopal Church, in regard to the report of alleged cruelties in the Philippine Islands. My colleague [Mr. LODGE] had printed in the RECORD at that time all that had come to him—all that was printed in the paper—of the bishop's charge on the subject. The bishop has sent in a little fuller statement, not in any way in conflict with what my colleague presented, but making one or two other statements.

I had the right granted me by the Senate to have it printed yesterday, but I did not find it until this morning, for printing. I ask leave that it may be printed in the RECORD, and I should like to have it read. I think Senators would like to hear it. It is very brief and very temperate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

During the past few months vague rumors and well-authenticated reports of cruel treatment of the Filipino insurgents by our soldiers have been passing through the press and mail.

Within the last few weeks there have been made by responsible men, by soldiers and officials of the Government, statements of cruel and barbarous treatment of the natives by our soldiers acting under orders of superior officers, of methods of warfare which are condemned by civilized nations and are contrary to the regulations of our Army, such as have confirmed some of our worst fears and sent a shock of horror throughout the land.

It behooves the church to speak, and in the name of the Master and of humanity to utter her solemn protest. This in behalf of the diocese I now do. Against the background of the splendid work that is being done by our Government for the education and uplifting of the Filipinos, these deeds take on a blacker hue. Great as may have been the provocation in some instances, hard as were the conditions, treacherous as may have been the enemy, this people, we believe, will not countenance cruel or barbarous modes of warfare with even an inferior people.

Were we to do so, the worst punishment would fall upon ourselves in hardened natures and pitiless tempers. Condemned as such acts are by the people, I sincerely believe that they are even more keenly regretted and condemned by the rank and file of our Army, for not only is the country's honor at stake, but their honor as soldiers is in jeopardy.

Again, I express my confidence that, regardless of party issues and questions of political policy, the members of our National Administration, who are more intelligent than we as to the conditions, are just as alert as any citizen in the land to get at the facts and, in the spirit not of revenge but of justice, mete out punishment upon the offenders, such punishment as will convince the Filipinos as well as the people of this country that our work in those islands is not to degrade but to uplift, not to kill but to make alive.

One mistake might be made under the pressure of an indignant people which would be a disaster and a shame—it would be the hasty and unjust punishment of men who had not been proved guilty. With witnesses and accused separated by an ocean and a continent, justice can not be meted out in a day. We have, certainly I have, complete confidence in the justice, the humanity, and the courage of our President. Whether some of you have confidence in the other members of the Administration or not, I have; this President is the Administration.

Patience, self-restraint, caution as to our accusation of men still on trial—these, it seems to me, are the qualities that we need just now, and a strong support of the Administration in its efforts to redeem the fair name of this nation.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PATTERSON, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby directed to send to the Senate copies of the reports of its inspectors showing the condition and defects of safety appliances and the practice of operating trains by train or power brakes, as required by the act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, approved March 2, 1893, on the following-named railroads and their leased lines: Baltimore and Ohio; Chesapeake and Ohio; Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific; Erie; Illinois Central; Lehigh Valley; Louisville and Nashville; Lake Shore and Michigan Southern; New York, New Haven and Hartford; Norfolk and Western; Pennsylvania; Queen and Crescent; Southern, and Southern Pacific.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12804, making appropriation for the support of the Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriation for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for action first upon the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Adjutant-General's Department," on page 2, line 23, after the word "staff," to strike out "school" and insert "college;" and in line 25, after the word "artillery," to strike out "college" and insert "school;" so as to make the clause read:

United States service schools: To provide means for the theoretical and practical instruction at the artillery school at Fort Monroe, Va.; the school of submarine defense at Willetts Point, N. Y.; the general service and staff college at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and the cavalry and field artillery school at Fort Riley, Kans., etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of officers of the line," on page 4, line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That officers appointed to the Regular Army from the volunteer service, whose service has been continuous, shall, in the computation of leaves of absence after their appointment in the Regular Army, be entitled to the leave credits which accrued to them as volunteer officers where such leave credits were not availed of during their volunteer service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of enlisted men," on page 5, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no enlisted man who has passed the examination for promotion shall be commissioned or paid as an officer until he shall have taken such course of instruction as the President may deem necessary to determine his fitness for the grade of second lieutenant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "For pay of the staff," on page 8, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no officer detailed or appointed under the provisions of section 26 of the act of February 2, 1901, shall serve under such detail or appointment or be paid as if on the active list beyond the date of his retirement.

Mr. PROCTOR. In lieu of the amendment as printed I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which means the same, but it is worded more accurately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment which has been reported by the committee will be rejected in the absence of objection. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 10, page 8, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no officer hereafter detailed or appointed under the provisions of section 26 of the act of February 2, 1901, who has less than four years to serve from the date of his detail or appointment to the date of his retirement shall serve under such detail or appointment or be paid as if on the active list beyond the date of his retirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Retired officers," on page 11, line 13, after the word "cents," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of War shall have power to order any officer on the retired list before a retiring board, and if found competent by said board shall be returned to the active list.

Mr. PROCTOR. In lieu of the words which the committee reported to strike out, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 13, after the word "cents," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the President or the Secretary of War may, when for the interest of the service, appoint officers on the retired list on court-martial, courts or boards of inquiry, or other service of that character, or upon the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, to fill any vacancy on that board, and without any restriction as to the corps to which such officers so appointed belonged while on the active list, and all officers appointed under this provision shall, while so serving, have the full pay of their rank.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the amendment is to be inserted in the place of the words proposed to be stricken out by the committee.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as originally reported will be agreed to; and the amendment just read agreed to, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 11, line 17, after the word "Provided," to strike out "further."

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont was in lieu of the proviso which the committee reported to strike out.

Mr. PROCTOR. It was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the way it was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. That inserts one proviso, and so the amendment reported by the committee, in line 17, striking out the word "further" after the word "Provided," should be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee, on page 11, line 17, after the word "Provided," to strike out the word "further."

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 11, line 21, after the word "President," to insert:

And when the ordnance storekeeper with the rank of major now on duty as disbursing officer and assistant to the Chief of Ordnance is retired he shall be retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 7, after the word "retirement," to insert "unless retired on account of wounds received in battle;" so as to make the clause read:

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $425,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for payment of further increase of longevity pay to officers now on the retired list and officers hereafter retired from active service shall not be therefrom allowed or paid any increase of longevity pay above the sum allowed and paid to such officers at the date of retirement, unless retired on account of wounds received in battle.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 14, line 18, before the word "officers," to insert "commissioned," and in line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the pay proper of all commissioned officers and enlisted men serving beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union and the Territories of the United States contiguous thereto shall be increased 10 per cent for officers and 20 per cent for enlisted men over and above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law for time of peace, and the time of such service shall be counted from the date of departure from said States to the date of return thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Philippine Scouts," on page 16, line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all enlisted men of the Regular Army who served as commissioned officers of United States Volunteers organized in 1898 and 1899, or who have served or may be now serving as such in the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment or in the Philippine Scouts, who, upon their muster out, have returned or may return to the ranks of the Regular Army, shall have such period of service counted as if it had been rendered as enlisted men, and that they be entitled to all continuous-service pay and to count, in computing the time necessary to enable them to retire, as enlisted men.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quartermaster's Department," on page 23, line 24, after the word "Department," to strike out "and an inspection by such Department;" so as to make the clause read:

Horses for cavalry and artillery: For the purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry and members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $600,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, and unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department, under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 10, before the word "million," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, recruiting stations, and for the hire of buildings and grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, $4,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to strike out all after the word "for" where it occurs the second time in line 6, on page 14, down to and including the word "posts," in line 9, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, line 6, after the word "for," where it occurs the second time, it is proposed to strike out "temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts," and to insert "the construction and repair of such permanent or temporary buildings at established posts as the Secretary of War may deem necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 24, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And in addition thereto the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend for the construction of necessary garrison buildings the sum of $250,000 from the unexpended balance of the appropriation for barracks and quarters for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and the further sum of $100,000 from the unexpended balance of the appropriation for barracks and quarters for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, which sums are hereby reappropriated; and whenever in the opinion of the President the lands and improvements, or any portion of them, of any military post or reservation have become undesirable for military purposes, he may, in his discretion, cause the same to be appraised and sold at public sale at not less than the appraised value, under such regulations as to public notice and terms and conditions of sale as he may prescribe, and the proceeds to be deposited in the Treasury, and all such proceeds are hereby appropriated for the purchase of such other lands as may be required for military purposes, or for building barracks and quarters on such other lands devoted to military purposes; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to make such purchases.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to strike out all that portion of the amendment after the word "Treasury," in line 2 on page 25.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Treasury," in line 2 on page 25, it is proposed to strike out:

And all such proceeds are hereby appropriated for the purchase of such other lands as may be required for military purposes, or for building barracks and quarters on such other lands devoted to military purposes; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to make such purchases.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 3, after the words "Philippine Islands," to insert "including the acquisition of title to building sites where necessary;" so as to make the clause read:

For the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including the acquisition of title to building sites where necessary, to be expended in the discretion of the President, and to be immediately available, $1,500,000; and the President is directed to report a detailed statement of the expenditure of this sum to each session of Congress until the entire appropriation is expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 13, to insert;

For the purchase and preservation of the battlefield of Balls Bluff, and the soldiers' burial place there, and for putting the same in suitable condition, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical Department," on page 32, line 3, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred thousand;" and in line 8, after the word "reappropriated," to insert:

And out of such sum so reappropriated an amount not exceeding $200,000 is hereby made available, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, for the payment, or the reimbursement of payments made, of just bills and charges for the support, care, and treatment, including proper hospital charges, of sick officers and enlisted men of the Regular and Volunteer armies of the United States while they were absent from duty on leave or on furlough, or otherwise, by direction or by permission of proper authority, on or after April 21, 1898, and up to and including April 11, 1899, in like manner as if the said officers and enlisted men had been on duty at the times when and places where the said bills and charges were incurred; and that the appropriations above designated shall remain and continue available for the purposes hereinbefore set forth for and during the term of two years from and after the date of the approval of this act.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 4, after the word "services," to insert "not personal;" and in line 9, before the word "reported," to strike out "immediately;" so as to make the clause read:

Purchase of medicines and medical stores, or the engagement of services not personal for the Medical Department of the Army, may be made by the Medical Department in open market in the manner common among business men when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $300, but every such purchase or employment shall be reported to the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Engineer Department," on page 35, after line 14, to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, from the unexpended balance of the appropriation for barracks and quarters for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, which sum is hereby reappropriated, for the construction of the necessary buildings for the Engineer School at Washington Barracks, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 23, before the word

"trains," to strike out "ponton" and insert "pontoon;" so as to make the clause read:

For pontoon trains, intrenching tools, instruments, and drawing materials, and for purchase and printing of engineer manuals for use in the engineer equipment of troops, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if it is in order at this place, I desire to submit an amendment to the bill. It is to insert on page 1, after the word "three," in line 6, the following proviso:

Provided, That no money appropriated by this act, or by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, shall be expended in defraying the expenses of anyone in going to, or coming from, or in attendance upon, the coronation of any hereditary king, prince, or potentate.

Mr. President, it is proposed, for the first time in the history of this Republic, to send a special embassy to attend the coronation of a King. That King, it is true, is the sovereign of a friendly Government and is entitled to all respectful consideration at the hands of our Government.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question? Is he quite correct in saying that this is the first time? Surely a special embassy was sent to the coronation of the Czar of Russia.

Mr. BAILEY. I was not aware of that. I was of the opinion that this is the first; but I am willing to accept the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, who doubtless is more familiar with such matters than I am.

But even if I am mistaken in my statement of fact, I can not be mistaken in the proposition with which I intended to follow it. That proposition is this: That if we send this special embassy to the coronation of this monarch we must hereafter send a special embassy to the coronation of every monarch, or else we must affront the nations whose monarchs are hereafter to be crowned by making a discrimination against them.

Right at our door we have seen empires crumble to the dust, and upon their ruins we have seen patriots erect republican forms of government, and yet no man ever proposed that the United States should signalize the establishment of those republics by sending special embassies to the installation of their chief ruler.

If it be true that we have once before sent a special embassy to the coronation of a hereditary ruler, then I want to know if it is also true that any monarch ever sent a special embassy to witness the inauguration of a President of this Republic? And I pause for a reply from the Senator from Massachusetts, who is familiar with these questions.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there has ever been any such case.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. President, can it be possible that as advocates and citizens of a republican form of goverment we are to confess before the world that monarchies are entitled to receive courtesies from us that they do not extend to us?

This is not the time and place to discuss the different forms of government. The people of Great Britain are entitled to a King if that kind of a government suits them best. I would not deny to the most powerful nor would I deny to the most helpless people in this world the right to establish their own form of government. While I might regret that in this enlightened age they saw fit to establish a monarchy instead of a republic, I would not offend the decent regard that nations ought to entertain for each other by assailing their choice. But what I protest against is that the greatest Republic in the world shall perform for monarchies a courtesy that monarchies have never performed for the Republic. When they esteem it to their advantage or according to their judgment to send embassies to witness the installation of a chief ruler chosen by the suffrages of a great people, then it may be asked that we shall return the compliment.

But, Mr. President, not only am I opposed to sending an embassy on an errand like that, I am likewise and equally opposed to the manner in which it is sought to be done. In the House of Representatives, if it be parliamentary for me to refer to that, they did insert a provision in an appropriation bill providing for these expenses, but it was intimated to those who control such matters that a direct appropriation was not necessary and that authority would be found under some of these appropriation bills to meet the expenses of this special embassy.

Not only, sir, do they intend to find the money without a direct appropriation for the purpose, but the President of the United States, it seems, intends to appoint an ambassador without the sanction of the Senate. Just exactly how he will describe the man who is sent as the chief representative of this Government, I am at a loss to know.

Mr. HOAR. I am sorry to interrupt the Senator, but I wish the amendment on which he is speaking might be read from the desk. It has not yet been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Texas please send his proposed amendment to the desk, and will the Senator suspend for one moment while it is read to the Senate?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I thank the Senator.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, after the word "three," in line 6, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no money appropriated by this act, or by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, shall be expended in defraying the expenses of anyone in going to, or coming from, or in attendance upon the coronation of any hereditary king, prince, or potentate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. President, if our money is to be spent, let Congress authorize the expenditure; and if a representative of this Government is to be sent, then the Senate is entitled to say who shall go. He goes as a special ambassador. Such an official is as much to be confirmed by the Senate as the ordinary—I believe the diplomatic language is "extraordinary"—ambassador; and yet we have here the remarkable anomaly that we are to be represented by a man designated by the President to the Government of Great Britain when the Constitution requires that he shall be nominated by the President to the Senate of the United States; and then the expense of this illegally appointed ambassador is to be paid out of some appropriation not made for such a purpose and not justified under the will of Congress.

It seems to me if it is not intended to misuse this money for such a purpose there will be no objection to the amendment, and if it is intended to use it, then not only ought the amendment to be voted down, but the special authority ought to be given to the Secretary of War to use a part of the money appropriated in this bill for the purpose of sending officers of the Army to participate in the celebration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should suppose this amendment might be open to the point of order, but whether it is or not it seems to me that to attempt to stop embassies to coronations by withholding the salary of a retired officer of the Army is hardly the way to reach it.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that this is the only way. If the matter had been brought before the Senate in a frank and open fashion, and the Senate had voted to send the embassy, I should never have uttered another word.

Mr. LODGE. The power of the President of the United States to send a special diplomatic agent for particular purposes or for a specific single purpose is entirely established. I think I am not mistaken in saying that Mr. Mann, who was sent to report on the condition of the revolution in Hungary, and from whose mission there came the famous Hulseman letter of Mr. Webster, was appointed in that way.

We have a much more recent case, when President Cleveland sent Mr. Blount to the Hawaiian Islands as paramount commissioner, giving him authority, as I remember, to overrule the minister who had been confirmed by the Senate. It seemed to me at the time to be going altogether too far, but that the President of the United States has authority to send a special agent for a special purpose to make a report or to present compliments or that he may detail an Army or Navy officer for that purpose, it seems to me is clear.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to suggest this difference, which exists in my mind? Undoubtedly the President would have a right to select a confidential friend or agent and to send him anywhere in the world to obtain information desired by the executive department of the Government; but an agent to obtain information, as in the first case to which the Senator alluded, is a different thing from making a man the representative of the Government.

Mr. LODGE. Where an ambassador or minister or agent is sent for a special purpose, whether that purpose be to acquire information or whether it be to deliver a special message of compliment, as in this case, it seems to me the President has the right to do it. This was done at the coronation of the Czar. I believe, in fact, I know, that a special ambassador has been appointed to Spain for the coming coronation of the King of Spain. Now this special embassy has been appointed to Great Britain.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Curry has gone.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; Mr. Curry, who was appointed special ambassador to Spain, has gone, and I think the special ambassador to Great Britain has also gone. This is the third case; there may have been others in our history. Of that I am not aware. As to one of these special embassies (there are two, one to Spain and one to England) to put in an amendment saying that the retired Army officer is to be deprived of his pay on that account after the thing has been done, it seems to me would be a needless affront, and I can see no good reason for doing it at this time.

Now, having said that much, I will say to the Senator from Texas that with his general proposition I agree. I do not believe in these special embassies to coronations, and for one, speaking solely for myself, I sincerely hope that there will not be any more. I think that there is a great deal in what the Senator has said, but the thing has been done, and I think now in the case of either Spain or Great Britain, if the amendment covers them both, to withhold the salary of some officer detailed for that duty would be a discourtesy which I should not wish to put upon any friendly power where we have advanced so far in what is merely a gracious and complimentary action.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator if the language of the amendment of the Senator from Texas would prevent an officer on the retired list or an officer on the active list of the Army who was sent over there from drawing his regular salary?

Mr. LODGE. If it would not, then it has no possible effect of any kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think it would.

Mr. BAILEY. The purpose was simply to prevent the Secretary of War from sending an active or a retired officer in the Army to report to the American ambassador at London, who would then say to this retired or active Army officer, "Attend the coronation of the King."

Mr. COCKRELL. How does it affect the salary?

Mr. BAILEY. It does not affect the salary at all, because the amendment provides that it shall not be used in defraying the expenses of anyone in going to or coming from or in attendance upon the coronation. It is not intended to touch the salary. That would be an effort to punish an officer who, being detailed, would have no choice but to go. I would not be willing to do that.

Mr. LODGE. I understood it was to withhold the salary if he went.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; it is simply the expenses.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator to mean that it is to prevent the Secretary from making that detail. Now, can we prevent the President, as Commander in Chief, from making any detail he chooses?

Mr. BAILEY. No; it prevents the appropriation which we make from being used to pay such expenses.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; then the President orders this officer or makes the detail and we take away the pay, which returns to the exact point I made, that it takes away the salary and the pay.

Mr. BAILEY. Which leads me to observe that under that kind of an amendment the Secretary of War would make no such order.

Mr. PROCTOR. I suppose the amendment of the Senator from Texas can only refer to the detail of an Army officer.

Mr. BAILEY. It would not otherwise be germane here. If I were satisfied that we will have an opportunity to vote directly on the question, I would not have offered this amendment. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that this is not my way of meeting propositions of this kind; but as we have been offered no opportunity to express ourselves directly, I resorted to this as the only possible way.

Mr. PROCTOR. The committee in examining this saw no vision of King Edward or anything that could be used for this purpose. I suppose the Senator sees no item in the appropriation that could be used except for the pay of an officer of the Army. I suppose there is no other possible one.

Now, as I understand it, the President has no authority to detail a retired officer of the Army. He may, I believe, detail a retired officer of the Navy; but I know of no law which authorizes the President or the Secretary of War to put a retired officer upon this duty, and he goes with no more security for his expenses than a civilian would have.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, this amendment of the junior Senator from Texas has opened a very interesting question. I share exactly his opinion about the propriety of a great republican Government sending a special ambassador to a coronation of any hereditary monarch.

In the first place, our diplomatic system has never embraced until recent years any such person as an ambassador. It has had ministers, ministers resident, envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, and has gone no further. The reason of that was this, that an ambassador does not represent the government, but the person of the king. A minister represents the government of the country which accredits him. Until very recently it never occurred to the American Republic, until we had imperial tendencies here, that we could be represented abroad by an ambassador. When it comes to a special ambassador, then the person designated by the President of the United States becomes particularly the representative of the President of the United States. In other words, it is the courtesy which one crowned head gives to another one on occasions of great ceremony, like the coronation of a king, and occasions of great rejoicing, as in the case of the jubilee of Queen Victoria.

The word "ambassador" ought not to be in the vocabulary of the Republic. It has no business to be there. The only excuse for its being there to-day is that other countries seeing the importance which our Republic had attained desired to raise the rank of their ministers here to that of corresponding courts in the Old World, and they could not do that unless we raised our ministers to the rank of ambassadors at their courts. That is the only reason why it was done.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has not forgotten that the word "ambassador" is in the Constitution?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, I recollect that, too; but I am speaking now of the meaning of the word "ambassador." It has been conceded, and nobody knows better than the Senator from Wisconsin, that an ambassador is a person representing not a government, but the person of the monarch of that government; and while it is true, and I very well understand that the word is used in the Constitution, it was never fixed in the diplomatic literature of this country until very recently, and for the reason I have given.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not want to take any credit in this matter, because that provision was passed in a Democratic Administration a few years ago, and all of our first ambassadors were, without exception, Democrats.

Mr. BAILEY. It was a partially Democratic Administration.

Mr. BERRY. A so-called Democratic Administration.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to say as to that matter; but certainly, so far as I know, it was before modern imperialism got started.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the force of the remarks of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]; but this shows the tendency of the political ideas of this country, which has materialized in the last few years into something I call results, not vague and distant, but present in concrete form. As I said, a special ambassador——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say right here that I once studied that matter very carefully and proposed the present provision, which passed the Senate and finally became a law, which resulted in the creation of the office of ambassador.

While it is true that in monarchical countries the word "ambassador" signifies a person who represents the person of the monarch, in ordinary diplomatic usage that signification has long gone by and become obsolete, and the word "ambassador" is now used ordinarily, and the official is appointed as indicating the superior importance of the state he represents at the court to which he goes. The universal diplomatic etiquette of mankind, except in this country, gave ambassadors precedence, so that if there were twenty ministers waiting at the foreign office of Great Britain or France they were received in the order of their seniority; but if an ambassador came in he went right into the presence of the foreign minister, though he came in after the whole of them, and they were obliged to wait.

This was the case with Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Coolidge. Mr. Lincoln was a man of great personal respectability and the son of Abraham Lincoln, and Mr. Coolidge was the grandson of Thomas Jefferson, though I do not know that that should make any difference, except that it would be likely to be respected abroad. The same was the case with Mr. Eustis. They would go to the foreign office in Paris or in London or in some other important country, wait there all day, and just as they were about to be admitted to an interview some ambassador, for instance, from the Argentine Republic or from Haiti, or some older minister would appear and be heard first, and they would have to come back another day.

So that Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Coolidge had to contrive methods which made it a favor, not a right, to get speech in the English foreign office under pretense of some social engagement or some other than a formal way. They complained of this most bitterly. I happened to be abroad and to see both of them, and they were full of that complaint. When I came home I said I would try to get that changed, and I introduced the amendment, which was adopted by our Committee on Foreign Relations and which passed the Senate and the other House and became a law.

So this matter of the ambassador representing the person of a king had nothing to do with the creation of that office. It was only that the United States might be received as a great and powerful nation, worthy to be respected and worthy to take the precedence which belonged to its character, and not to be cooling its heels until San Domingo, or Terra del Fuego, or Guatemala, or any such country had been heard, although the representatives of the United States had got there first. That is the whole of it.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I had already stated in a sentence the reason which the Senator has given in such great detail for making ambassadors of our ministers plenipotentiary and envoys extraordinary. He has added nothing to the statement I made, except a mass of details with which we are all familiar.

As a matter of fact, no representative of a great country like the United States cools his heels in any antechamber in Christendom or elsewhere. A government is heard in accordance with its importance and the importance of the business which its representative comes to present. The ambassador is nearer the person of the king, but he is not nearer the person of the government; and a minister has the same access to an administration, as it is called, as has an ambassador. It is not from the government, but from the person, the monarch, that the ambassador receives his exequatur.

As I said before, this matter of an extraordinary ambassador, when we have already an ambassador there, seems to be entirely unnecessary and pushing still further the idea to which I referred in the outset of my remarks. The ambassador is the direct representative of the person of the monarch who sends him to the monarch who receives him.

The word "ambassador," it is true, has been used, like many other words, with extraordinary latitude, and we have become accustomed to that until at last one-half of the English language has become the synonym of the other half. We have lost the value of terms, and nobody seeks now to derive a word to see exactly what it means. We hear it here every day. Senators say they are the ambassadors of their States, when they are nothing of the sort and have no such function. The word can be abused and has been abused, but the true diplomatic meaning of it is not changed. As I said in the beginning, the only reason that has been given to us was that our country had risen to such great importance in the world that we wanted to be able to say that our ministers should have such rank as would agree with the rank of those commissioned by the greatest countries of the world. The highest type of ambassador is a matter which concerns their diplomatic regulations, and not ours. Some of us may tickle ourselves for a moment by saying that we would have ambassadors to foreign courts, and they might have the same titles here.

I am not at all attacking the system as I find it; I am only enforcing what my genial young friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] said, that it is not the proper thing to do, and for the additional reason that other countries have never yet found it necessary to send an ambassador, a minister extraordinary, or a chargé d'affaires to the inauguration of any President. Have any of these countries ever deigned to send a special ambassador to us to attend the inauguration of our Chief Magistrate? They have ambassadors resident here at Washington whom they think quite sufficient to convey to us all the courtesy and all the good will of the nations they represent here when we change our Chief Magistrate; and it is quite sufficient that the ambassador we have at the Court of St. James should be charged, in addition to his routine and usual business, with the extraordinary function of presenting the good wishes and good will of the people of this country—not of its President, but of its people, who are the sovereigns here. There is but one sovereign in a republic, and that is the people. The others are but public servants, whatever their official place or their official capacity or function.

So I think the whole thing is inappropriate. I speak of these things because one opportunity has been offered. If the question again comes up on the payment of the ambassador, I shall have something to say to you about that. I do not suppose, however, that it will prevent the work going on; but it is well enough that occasionally the Senate should be brought to consider things as they once were and not as they now are.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I agree with the argument of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. I agree that it is well for us to promote all the harmonious expressions of sympathy and good will which can be made between nations without going into "holy alliances" or compacts. I do not understand that the Senator from Texas objects to that; but it seems to me his point that we ought not ordinarily to pay marks of respect to other countries, whatever may be their form of government, that they do not pay to us, is well taken and is unanswerable, and I should think that practice ought not to go on.

But the trouble with the Senator's amendment, in my mind, is this: There are a great many things that it is not well to do in intercourse with other people, whether social or in the intercourse of governments; but having publicly done or begun to do a thing, if you take it back it turns it into an affront.

Queen Victoria touched very much the sympathies of our people when she sent her wreath to lay on the coffin of President Garfield, and the expressions of sympathy which came from foreign countries at the time of our recent bereavement moved and stirred the hearts of our people profoundly.

Now, suppose the reverse had been the case; suppose that the Emperor Alexander had been assassinated, as the old Emperor Alexander was, and the President of the United States had ordered a wreath to be placed on his coffin, and somebody had said in the Senate, "That is not a proper thing to do; this man has been a tyrant, and he has been murdered by some victim of his tyranny, stung to madness;" and while that wreath was on its way both Houses of Congress put into an appropriation bill a provision that no money should be spent for furnishing wreaths for the funerals of dead emperors, they would have converted an act of courtesy into an affront.

Everybody knows that, whether wisely or unwisely, the President has sent to Spain, to represent us at the coronation, Dr. Curry, a very distinguished and highly respected gentleman from Virginia, who is a Democrat, I suppose, and belongs to the Senator's party. So there is no politics in it. Dr. Curry has gone, and one of the persons who has been selected to attend the coronation in England has gone, and is there now. After that has been done, to adopt such a provision as is proposed, which, as everybody knows, the people in those countries who read such things at all will read, that Congress disapproves of that, it seems to me would be a very awkward thing. While I entirely sympathize with the Senator's argument and am convinced by it—and the point which I have just suggested came from him and is new, so far as I recollect, and I think it very sound and wise—I hope that, after this expression and calling attention to this practice, we shall not actually put the proposition into legislation, as our ambassador has gone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate may continue the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the consideration of the Army appropriation bill be continued. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is a very proper one, and it had occurred to me. Indeed, it had occurred to me with such force that at one time I hesitated about proposing this amendment.

But there is another view of this question which, it occurs to me, the Senate can not afford to pass without any notice, and it is the assumption—I choose to call it an assumption rather than a usurpation—the assumption on the part of the President of the United States that he alone, without the concurrence of the Senate, may appoint ambassadors to represent this Government.

The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] cited the case of Mr. Blount, who was sent by President Cleveland to the island of Hawaii; but the Senator from Massachusetts must recall that Mr. Blount was not sent as an accredited representative of this Government to any government. He was sent there simply as the President's special messenger to the representative of the United States who was then in that island. I believe that representative probably had hoisted the American flag, and Mr. Blount was sent there, not to tell the Government of Hawaii what was the pleasure or displeasure of this Government, but he was sent there to tell the American representative in that island to undo, not the acts of that Government, but the acts of the American representative. I undertake to say that you can analyze every such case and it will be found that where the President of the United States has assumed to send any man to any foreign country he has sent him there as the agent of the President, either to convey instructions to those under the President or has sent him there to collect information which the President desired to use in the discharge of the duties of his great office. In no single instance, I venture to say—although I say that without having especially examined the subject—has the President of the United States ever accredited a representive from this Government to another government without the advice and consent of the Senate.

Now, disagreeable as it may be, that the Senate should seem to interpose its negative upon a programme which the President has not only initiated, but which he has partially carried into execution, it seems to me there is nothing else left for us to do. I repeat for the second and third time that I should very much prefer that the matter should have come directly before the Senate, and I waited in the hope that it would; but one appropriation bill after another has been passed and yet, if nothing is done now, this whole transaction will be concluded, and so far as the history of the times may show there would appear to be no objection to the President of the United States assuming the power to accredit representatives from this Government to a foreign government for this special occasion.

I am unwilling that this shall appear, and, not as the best method, but as the only method left open by which the Senate can express its disapproval of such a course, I shall insist upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say a single word, Mr. President, before the vote is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not understand that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], in his observations about the incompatibility in the office of ambassador with a republican form of government, was in agreement with anything the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] said.

Mr. MONEY. I can not help that.

Mr. SPOONER. The Constitution, as I suggested to the Senator—of course he knew it, but perhaps for the moment had forgotten it—was framed by men very familiar with international etiquette and with the methods of diplomacy, and by men who knew very well what was in harmony with a republican form of government. They made the Constitution for a Republic which, with all our wonderful growth, has been found entirely adequate. They contemplated that other governments might send ambassadors to this Republic, and so they gave to the President the power to "receive ambassadors and other public ministers." They also gave him the power to "nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," to "appoint ambassadors and other public ministers," etc.

I suppose they thought that other governments might send ambassadors to us, and then if ambassadors were sent to us it might become entirely proper, and indeed almost necessary as the life of the Republic went on, that we should send to them in turn diplomatic representatives of equal rank. When the Senator, contradicting the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, observed that because of our power and dignity American ministers of whatever character had never cooled their heels in the anterooms of foreign governments, I think he was abundantly mistaken. If I am correctly informed, that has frequently been the case.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, in addition to what I stated of the complaint made to me in person by Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Eustis when the subject was being considered here, Vice-President Morton was in the chair of this body; he had just been minister to France, and he expressed very earnestly to Senators the same complaint, that he had himself suffered from this want of rank, and he took great interest in having the amendment for the creation of ambassadors passed.

Mr. SPOONER. Vice-President Morton expressed the same views to me; and others who have represented the United States abroad have spoken with very great bitterness of the fact that their inferiority in rank—and we can not determine that for other nations—had been to them a source of embarrassment in the transaction of public duty, and not only that, but a constant source of humiliation.

So I think it was all right in the fathers in the establishment of this republican Constitution to contemplate the sending of ambassadors to us and to provide for our sending of ambassadors abroad when, in the opinion of the Congress and the President, the public interests would be thereby well subserved or better subserved.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that under the Constitution an ambassador is a constitutional officer and can not be sent abroad without the action of the Senate. The Constitution upon that subject is very plain. Nothing can be plainer.

> And he shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers, etc.

What a "special ambassador" is as contradistinguished from an "ambassador," mentioned here in the Constitution, I have not yet learned.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator think there is any such distinction?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think, because I have not learned that there is.

Mr. BACON. But the Senator does think. The Senator is not one of the nonthinking kind. The Senator is an eminent lawyer.

Mr. SPOONER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BACON. And as the point is raised, I should like to have the Senator state whether he believes the proposition as stated by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is correct, that the President of the United States has a right to draw the distinction between one kind of ambassador and another kind. Has the Senator not determined in his own mind which is the one whose name is to be sent by the President to the Senate in obedience to the Constitution, and which one he can send abroad without any reference to the consent of the Senate?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think any ambassador can be sent from the United States to a foreign court without a nomination to the Senate and confirmatory action by the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I was quite sure that was the opinion of the learned Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator knew that that was my opinion.

Mr. BACON. Yes; but I wanted the Senator to state it. The Senator is too good a lawyer to think any other way.

Mr. SPOONER. I thank the Senator again. The Senator will convince me after a while. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. I know the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPOONER. Always, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. I thought the Senator was doing himself an injustice, and that he was not candid with himself when, in what he was stating to the Senate, he implied that there was a doubt in his mind on that legal proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that.

Mr. BACON. I was absolutely assured, in my confidence in the eminent ability and learning of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, that he had no such doubt, and I thought I was doing him a service in eliciting from him an explicit statement that he had none.

Mr. SPOONER. I thank the Senator again. [Laughter.] I did not intimate any doubt. I only said I had not yet learned of any such distinction.

Mr. BACON. The Senator said he did not think.

Mr. SPOONER. Nor have I any doubt now. There might, perhaps, be an ambassador, a special ambassador; perhaps the Congress might pass an act providing for a special or temporary ambassador to be sent to a court where there was already an ambassador provided, but he would have to be, I think, nominated to the Senate and confirmed by the Senate. I am not finding any fault at all with the Senator from Georgia in his interruption. I agree generally with what the Senator says on the subject of sending ambassadors, as a Congressional policy, to coronations, although I am in favor of paying, in every decent and proper way, respect and compliment and courtesy to foreign governments.

It was a very gracious thing for the President to send some one to Spain. There was never anything more gracious or more proper, because we have come out of a war with Spain, and it was disastrous and humilitating to Spain. If there were technical objections to it, I would not be disposed to make them. I do not know what Dr. Curry is called, and I do not know what this gentleman who goes to England is called. I am quite satisfied that whatever he may be called he is not an ambassador in the sense in which that word is used in the Constitution. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas is very narrow.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I recognize that, and I was seeking what we have about obtained—an expression from the Senate. That expression seems so general in one direction that, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator is quite right to withdraw it. I wanted to say that the amendment only applies to the allowance to be made to the Army officer to be sent over there.

Mr. BAILEY. To the Army officer.

Mr. SPOONER. It is entirely proper, and it might be very useful, where there is to be a great massing of troops, to send an Army officer to report. He is the very man to report. In the same way, where there is to be an assembling of squadrons or of any great naval power, it is proper to detail a naval officer, who goes in a professional way, to observe and to report to the proper department; and I think that it is rather necessary, and certainly proper, to pay his expenses in the discharge of that duty.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the trouble with this amendment is that it is offered at the place where it was least desirable to offer it. If it had been offered to any of the other appropriation bills—to the diplomatic bill—we then could have raised the question of the power of the President to accredit this representative, which I should have been very much pleased to do. But in this particular instance and at this particular place it simply reaches the Army officers who are more subject to the control of the Executive than any other employees of the Government. I am myself so well satisfied with the general and practically unanimous expression from both sides of the Chamber, and I believe it will serve such a useful purpose in preventing a repetition of this mistaken policy that I am willing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, before the amendment is withdrawn, I wish to say simply one word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope unanimous consent will be given, but before it is given I desire to say a word.

The amendment is truly a very narrow one. It can only apply to the mileage, even if it would apply to the mileage of officers of the Army who might be ordered or detailed by the War Department for service at the time of the coronation.

Mr. BAILEY. Yet, if the Senator will excuse me, if I had made it any broader it would have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it would have been subject to a point of order. Therefore the Senator of course desired to move such an amendment as could be debated on the floor without being ruled out by a point of order.

The Senator seems to think that this matter would have been considered properly on the diplomatic appropriation bill and that in that case he would have had a better opportunity then than now. I wish to say that when the diplomatic and consular bill came to the Senate from the House there was an appropriation in it which it was said was intended to be used in paying the expenses of whatever agents or persons might be sent to the coronation or be present on the occasion of those ceremonies. I took occasion, as chairman of the committee, to make inquiry of the Secretary of State upon that subject, and I have his letter, which is in the committee room, in which he states that that particular appropriation—which was the only appropriation that by any possibility could have been used for the purpose of paying the expenses of anyone in a civil capacity to the coronation ceremony—was not so intended, and the phraseology employed would not authorize its use for that purpose. Then the Secretary of State added in his letter that it was not the intent or purpose to have any portion of the expenses of the people accredited to London paid by the Government of the United States, and that no request would be made for an appropriation either directly or indirectly.

I assume, of course, that the President of the United States is quite familiar with the Constitution as respects the appointment of diplomatic and other officers. I think he would hardly make an appointment in absolute violation of the letter and the spirit of the Constitution itself. A President after a few months' service has a large experience in the matter of selecting officers, and generally he has it a few days after he is inaugurated as President. So I assume that he is not violating that instrument, and that he has not appointed ambassadors or similar officers in this particular case, as such appointment would be a violation of the particular provision quoted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. And he is reminded of it by the debates here.

Mr. ALLISON. And, as the Senator from Wisconsin very properly adds, he is frequently reminded of what the Constitution is by the debates in this body, and especially as they appear from time to time on subjects now occurring.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if that is the view, if there is any doubt about the President's right to appoint these officers, and if at the time I am about to withdraw it and have no vote on it it is suggested that the President has the power, then I am not going to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. What power?

Mr. BAILEY. The power to appoint the people who have been accredited as the representatives of this Government to attend the coronations of these hereditary monarchs.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly make no such intimation. On the contrary, I suppose the President would not do it or has not done it.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that the President was doubtless familiar with the Constitution, and he assumed that he knew exactly what his power was in respect to such appointments. That is precisely what I am not willing to assume, because I am not willing to assume that the President in the face of knowing he had no authority to make such appointments would have made them. But he having made them, I must assume that he thought he had the authority to do it. Precisely what I am certain about is that he had no authority to accredit the representatives to these foreign governments. My whole willingness to withdraw the amendment was upon the theory that there was no difference practically in the Senate about it, and I had no desire to force a vote in respect to it. But if there is anybody here who believes that the President of the United States has the power to select representatives and accredit them to foreign governments, even on special occasions, then, while this is a narrow way of reaching it, it is still the broadest way open to us, and I shall ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], whom I do not see in the Chamber. I will transfer my pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], and vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY. If agreeable to the Senator from North Dakota, we can transfer our pairs. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS]. We can then both vote.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will so transfer my pair, Mr. President. I vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], but not regarding this as a political question, I shall take the privilege of voting. I think the Senator from Florida will justify me in voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who is detained from the Chamber by sickness. I withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. HOAR (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently, in the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. If the Senator from Missouri will transfer his pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], with whom I am paired, then he and I can both vote.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I voted "nay."

Mr. VEST. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], but I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], who does not seem to be present. I will state that if I were at liberty to vote, I believe I would vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me suggest to the Senator from Illinois that we can arrange a transfer so that we may both vote.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], who is necessarily absent. Let the Senator from Illinois and I transfer our pairs.

Mr. CULLOM. That is entirely agreeable to me. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I vote "yea."

Mr. PATTERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to ask whether the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I will transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], and let my vote stand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KEARNS], and vote "nay."

Mr. MONEY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY], is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. If both Senators were present the senior Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea." I also desire to state that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is unavoidably absent from the Senate to-day, and if he were present he would vote "yea." He has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

Mr. PATTERSON. I am requested to state that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

Mr. TELLER (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is not present. I do not know whether he is paired or not. I told him that on any subject that seemed to assume a political character I would pair with him or secure him a pair. I do not consider this to be a political question, but some Senators seem to so regard it. I should like to know if the Senator from Connecticut is paired with anybody. I understand that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] is not paired, and, therefore, we will pair the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 26; as follows:

Cockrell,	Hanna,	Rawlins,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In answer to the roll call, 41 Senators have responded. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. HALE. If Senators be sent for I think there is a quorum about the building.

Mr. MASON, Mr. TURNER, Mr. CARMACK, and Mr. MONEY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, in order to avoid any further delay on this bill, and to raise the question in a more proper and fuller form, I will withdraw the amendment and offer a resolution touching the subject, which I will ask to have printed.

Mr. BACON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment on which the vote has just been had. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Texas offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That it is contrary to the policy of the United States to accredit to any foreign government any ambassador, minister, or other diplomatic officer or agent to especially represent the United States at the coronation of any hereditary prince or potentate.

2. That no power exists in the President of the United States to appoint any ambassador, minister, or other diplomatic officer or agent and accredit him as the representative of the United States to any foreign government except by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as prescribed in section 2, Article II, of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that the resolution be printed. Possibly we had better refer it under the practice, or it might just lie on the table, if that is permissible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To lie on the table to be taken up at any time would require unanimous consent. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the same be printed and lie on the table subject to his call.

Mr. HOAR. I should hardly think that ought to be granted in the present state of the business of the session.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts there is no probability that I will attempt to interfere with the business of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Of course if the Senator desires to call it up for the mere purpose of addressing the Senate upon it, according to the usage of the Senate, that would be accorded at any convenient time; but the resolution goes a good deal further than the amendment went, and to have a vote on it without discussion or to agree that this particular subject shall take precedence of all the other business of the Senate is what I objected to.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no desire that it shall even interrupt the usual and necessary business of the Senate, but I think it proper that at some suitable time the matter shall be discussed and decided by the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. May I suggest to the Senator that having introduced the resolution, as he has done, it goes over until to-morrow morning in the usual way, and after the routine morning business it will come up and it will be in his power either to speak to it at that time or indicate what other disposition he desires?

Mr. BAILEY. That is entirely satisfactory to me, Mr. President. I want to get it out of the way of this bill immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rules.

Are there further amendments? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to give notice that I should like to speak on the pending bill on Tuesday morning immediately after the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Notice has already been given that on Tuesday morning, immediately after the routine business, the Agricultural appropriation bill will be called up.

Mr. STEWART. I will say Wednesday morning, then.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are twelve or fifteen pension bills on the Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that they be now considered.

Mr. LODGE. What has become of the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is before the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not the floor. I am not entitled to the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] desires to proceed at this time or not.

Mr. STEWART. I think the hour is rather late.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I renew my request.

Mr. STEWART. I will say in regard to my notice that if the Agricultural appropriation bill is disposed of speedily on Tuesday morning, I should like to speak on Tuesday.

Mr. LODGE. If no Senator is prepared to go on this afternoon with the Philippine bill, I have no desire to press it at this late hour and in a thin Senate, but I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that while this bill is pending the Senate on Wednesday and thereafter shall meet at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday and thereafter, until the final disposition of the pending bill, the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. RAWLINS. I object to that.

Mr. LODGE. Then I give notice that on Tuesday next I will make the motion that on Wednesday and thereafter the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock until the bill is concluded.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills and bills to correct the record of soldiers. There are only a few on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate consider pension bills and bills to correct soldiers' records. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 9th instant approved and signed the act (S. 5105) fixing the terms of the circuit and district courts in and for the district of South Dakota, and for other purposes.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on yesterday, when the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] was under discussion, looking to the discharge of the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of the House amendment of the Constitution, relating to the election of Senators by the people, I inquired of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] whether he did not believe that if that amendment were adopted Congress would have the power to prescribe the qualifications of electors for Senators. Subsequently the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] inquired of me if I believed my own question, and I answered "Yes," that I did.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator's inquiry was directed to another Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. At the time I did not have the House amendment before me, and I was not aware of the fact that in that amendment there is a clause prescribing the qualifications of electors. Had I known that, of course, I should not have made the answer that I did. The attention of the Senate was subsequently called by the Senator from Texas to the fact that the following clause is a part of section 3 of the House joint resolution, which is really a copy of the clause in the Constitution of the United States relating to the election of Representatives:

And the electors shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

As a matter of course no one would claim that if that clause were adopted the Congress of the United States would have any power to prescribe the qualifications of electors. My mistake arose from the fact that I was not aware that that clause was in the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 10, 1902.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock m. by Hon. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL, Clerk, who read the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1902.

I hereby designate Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, to preside over the House this day.

D. B. HENDERSON, Speaker.

Mr. DALZELL thereupon assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BARK HOMEWARD BOUND.

Mr. MCLACHLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4992.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4992) to provide an American register for the bark Homeward Bound.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built bark Homeward Bound, owned by George F. Ellis, a citizen of the United States, and repaired by him, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "Homeward Bound," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Otto Gildemeister:" after the word "States," in the seventh line of the bill, insert the following: "And give the said bark the name of Homeward Bound: Provided, however, That such register shall not entitle or authorize said bark to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States, nor shall said bark receive or be entitled to receive any subsidy, bounty, or aid of any kind that may hereafter be granted to American vessels.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what there is about this that it can not be registered under the general law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This bill, Mr. Speaker, was introduced in the Senate, passed by the Senate, and came to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Quite an investigation took place in regard to it. It was under a German register. The vessel was wrecked, and brought into the port of San Francisco. It was owned by the captain. He has expended a large sum of money in its repair. There are various reports as to the amount of it; but it seemed so large that failure to get his ship recognized in some way so that he could borrow money upon it he claims would be ruin to him. The committee was not in favor of giving to him an American register without conditions, and so the terms which are put into this bill were imposed. Will the Clerk read the conditions at the end of the bill?

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That such register shall not entitle or authorize said bark to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States, nor shall said bark receive or be entitled to receive any subsidy, bounty, or aid of any kind that may hereafter be granted to American vessels.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So the effect of it is to give an American register to the ship, but deprives it of the beneficial results of our navigation laws. The captain thought if this was done he could borrow money on his ship; and as a concession to his condition the committee made a favorable report on the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, no repairs have yet been made.

Mr. McLACHLAN. About $75,000 worth of repairs were made.

Mr. PAYNE. Have already been made?

Mr. McLACHLAN. Have already been made.

Mr. PAYNE. What does he want to borrow the money for if he has done the repairs?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not indorse the $75,000 as having been spent for the repairs.

Mr. McLACHLAN. The captain is here, and has expended about $75,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is thought he could get credit in some way. I do not know how. Gentlemen from San Francisco have urged us to allow this bill to pass, among those being Mr. Scott, of the Union Iron Works, who seems to have taken a good deal of interest in behalf of this captain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not object. I only want to know a little about the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3123) to make Port Arthur a subport of entry and delivery in the customs district of Galveston.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

On motion of Mr. TONGUE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MAJOR-GENERAL FOR MARINE CORPS.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10159) to give the commandant of the Marine Corps the rank of major-general.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of the passage of this act the commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major-general in the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

STOREKEEPERS AND GAUGERS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12097, to amend the internal-revenue laws in regard to storekeepers and gaugers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the internal-revenue officer holding the combined office of storekeeper and gauger shall hereafter be known and denominated as a storekeeper-gauger, and when performing the combined duties of storekeeper-gauger, or when assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to perform the duties of a storekeeper only at any distillery, or at any general or special bonded warehouse, he shall receive for his services the compensation of storekeeper only; but when assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to perform the duties of gauger only, under the internal-revenue laws, as provided by those laws, he shall receive only the compensation for his services and the traveling expenses which are allowed by law to United States gaugers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to ask, Mr. Speaker, if this bill has been reported from the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means. To recall the matter to the gentleman's mind, I will say that it appears that it has been the custom of the Department to administer the law in accordance with the provisions of this bill, supposing that was the law. When a man was employed as a storekeeper, he received a storekeeper's pay, and when he was employed as a gauger he received a gauger's pay; but a recent decision of the Comptroller has set aside the former practice and made it necessary to enact this bill, and it was introduced at the request of the Commissioner.

Mr. CLAYTON. It does not increase the compensation of the office?

Mr. PAYNE. Not from what the practice has been for years back; it is the same. I think the pay of a gauger is a little more than that of a storekeeper.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is in the interest of more efficient public service?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly; it is to pay them for the actual duties they perform under the general law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER NEAR COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1295) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., approved February 13, 1891, and amended by an act approved January 28, 1893, and by an act approved April 21, 1898, and to authorize the Omaha Bridge and Terminal Railway Company, successor to the Interstate Bridge and Street Railway Company, to complete, reconstruct, and change a bridge for railway and street railway purposes over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr.

The Clerk read at length the bill and the amendments proposed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments proposed by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARIVELLA D. MEEKER.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1305) for the relief of Mrs. Arivella D. Meeker.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to Mrs. Arivella D. Meeker, of Greeley, Colo., the sum of $9,012.83, out of the annuities of the confederated bands of Ute Indians, as a recognition of the services of her husband, the late Nathan Cook Meeker, as Indian agent at the White River Agency, in Colorado, and for the losses his family sustained by reason of his assassination and the destruction of his property by the Indians of said agency in the year 1879.

The following amendment was recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs:

In the fourth and fifth lines strike out the words "the sum of $9,012.83" and insert "an annuity of $500 per annum for life, commencing on the 15th day of June, 1900."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, that is the sixth recognition on the Republican side and only one on the Democratic side this morning, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that there have been no applications for unanimous consent. Objection is made.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, to my friend from Tennessee that this is not my bill. It is a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee. The Chair will say to the gentleman that there has been no request for recognition from the Democratic side.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But here is the gentleman who has the bill in charge, the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. SHAFROTH.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman from Colorado did not have the bill in charge; he was not on the committee. I would be glad to yield to him, however.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not in charge of this bill. I introduced a bill of similar character, and this is an amendment to the Senate bill, which is a copy of my bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has this bill been reported by any committee?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes; it has been reported with an amendment, which is satisfactory to the gentleman from Colorado. I was requested on behalf of this old lady, who is now 87 years of age, to have the bill called up. I shall be glad to yield to anybody on the other side who may wish to take charge of the matter. I have no interest whatever in the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I should like to know what committee this bill comes from?

Mr. LACEY. From the Indian Committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. LACEY. It seems to me that when we are able to take care of the leader on the Democratic side we ought to be able to do as much with the leader on this side. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Subsequently,

Mr. PAYNE said: Mr. Speaker, I objected a moment ago to a bill called up by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. Since that time I have learned the facts about that case. The bill does not propose to pay a pension out of the Treasury, as I supposed the proposition to be from the reading. It proposes to pay an annuity from the Indian funds, and for a very good reason. This is an old case where some women were outraged and shamefully treated years ago. Congress provided, in consideration of the circumstances, that an annuity of $500 should be paid both to this lady and her daughter, the payments to continue twenty years. The daughter has died, but her mother is still living—now a very old lady. As the twenty years limited in the original act of Congress have expired, the annuity has ceased. This bill contemplates simply that the annuity shall be paid to this old lady for the rest of her life. When I objected, I supposed this was a bill which ought properly to have gone to the Committee on Claims; but I have found that it is in no sense a claim, and it comes properly from the Indian Committee. I therefore withdraw my objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. At the time of the granting of this annuity, to continue for twenty years, it was expected to cover the lifetime of this lady. She will probably live only a year or two longer.

Mr. LACEY. She is now 87 years old.

Mr. SHAFROTH. So I understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection of the gentleman from New York to the consideration of this bill is withdrawn. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5736. An act for the relief of citizens of French West Indies.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. HEATWOLE. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 74) relating to publications of the Geological Survey, has unanimously directed me to report the same back favorably and to ask its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That hereafter the publications of the Geological Survey shall consist of the annual report of the Director, which shall be confined to 1 volume of royal octavo size; monographs, of quarto size; professional papers, of quarto size; bulletins, of ordinary octavo size; mineral resources, of ordinary octavo size; water-supply and irrigation papers, of ordinary octavo size; and such maps, folios, and atlases as may be required by existing law.

That hereafter the reports of the Geological Survey, except the annual report of the Director, shall be published in editions as recommended in each case by the Director and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, but not to exceed 10,000 copies.

That whenever the edition of any of the reports of the Survey shall have become exhausted, and the demand for it continues, there shall be published, on the requisition of the Secretary of the Interior, as many additional copies of the report as the Director of the Survey shall state will, in his judgment, be necessary to meet the demand.

That the bulletins and professional papers shall be distributed gratuitously, and not sold; and that of the number published 1,000 copies shall be delivered to the Senate and 2,000 copies shall be delivered to the House of Representatives for distribution.

That the provision of law approved June 11, 1896, restricting the water-supply papers to 100 pages and to editions of 5,000 copies shall be, and hereby is, rescinded.

That the Director of the Survey shall transmit to the Library of Congress two copies of every report of the Bureau as soon as the first delivery to the Survey is made, such copies to be additional to those received by the Library of Congress under existing law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What change does it make in the existing law with reference to these publications?

Mr. HEATWOLE. It permits the Director of the Geological Survey to issue to different sections of the country such publications as he thinks will be of most benefit to those particular sections; that is to say, if it were desirable to have printed and published 2,000 copies of a document especially applicable to the gentleman's section of the country, bearing directly on a subject in which the people there are especially interested, it could be done under this resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then it does not add anything to the expense of publication?

Mr. HEATWOLE. No; in fact it will save nearly $22,000 a year to the Government in the publication of the reports of the Geological Survey.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will these documents be distributed through the folding room?

Mr. HEATWOLE. Two thousand copies of each document will be distributed through the House folding room.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To the credit of the members, respectively?

Mr. HEATWOLE. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF CONGRESSIONAL FRANKS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report back with an amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 82) providing for the printing annually of franks required for sending out seeds, and to ask immediate consideration of the same.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Public Printer shall furnish to the Secretary of Agriculture on his order such franks as the Secretary of Agriculture may require for sending out seeds on Congressional orders and for sending out seeds on order of the Secretary of Agriculture, such franks to bear the names of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates printed thereon and the words "U. S. Department of Agriculture, Congressional Seed Distribution," or such other phraseology as the Secretary may direct, and that such franks shall be furnished each year at such times and in such quantities as the Secretary of Agriculture may require.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and substitute the following in lieu thereof:

"That the Public Printer shall furnish to the Department of Agriculture such franks as the Secretary of Agriculture may require for sending out seeds on Congressional orders, the franks to have printed thereon the facsimile signatures of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, also the names of their respective States or Territories, and the words "United States Department of Agriculture, Congressional Seed Distribution," or such other printed matter as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct; the franks to be of such size and style as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; the expense of printing the said franks to be charged to the allotment for printing and binding for the two Houses of Congress."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARK HOMEWARD BOUND.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I objected to the consideration of a bill presented by the gentleman from California [Mr. MCLACHLAN], S. 4992, to provide an American register for the bark Homeward Bound. I have examined the bill since then, and it seems to be a case of great emergency. There is not much involved in it, and I withdraw the objection I made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his objection. Is there further objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LAND AND PENSION DECISIONS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am further directed by the Committee on Printing to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 15.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Printing, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Public Printer estimates the cost of this work at $3,850.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is to print the decisions of the Land Office.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I suppose the committee in each one of these cases have made a report.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And does the report in each case show the amount of cost of printing these publications?

Mr. HEATWOLE. It does.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think, Mr. Speaker, that these reports ought to be printed in each case, in order that the House may be informed as to the cost of the several publications; and I shall ask that in each case the report be printed, in order that the House may know the cost. The rules require that in each case where there is printing under these resolutions the report shall show to the House the cost of the publication. Unless that fact appears in each report, I shall object to consideration. Now, I understand from the gentleman from Minnesota that in each case he has conformed to the rule of the House which requires that the report shall show the cost of the publication, and that being so, I ask now, before I give consent in this case, that the report in each one of these cases of publication be printed. I think it ought to be done in order that the House may have the benefit of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that these reports are printed as documents. Does the gentleman wish to have them printed in the RECORD?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; they ought to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LACEY. I will suggest to the gentleman that this is only to print a few copies of these reports for sale.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But that is a bound volume of 700 pages.

Mr. LACEY. It has been printed from stereotype plates, and it is printed for sale. They are out of print, and they are sold for $5 or $6 a volume.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Still we ought to have the cost of the publication.

Mr. LACEY. It is not for Congress at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But we ought to have the cost of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the reports accompanying the various resolutions from the Committee on Printing be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Minnesota states that any one of the reports is long, as sometimes they have to be, I would not insist on printing the report at length, but that the cost be printed as given in the report in each case.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I would like to say that the cost of each document, whenever it is attainable, is attached to the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is right. The rule of the House requires that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 (engrossed copy of resolution) strike out the words "two thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "one thousand five hundred."

In line 11, after the word "thousand," and before the word "copies," insert "five hundred;" so that the same shall read as follows:

"Resolved, etc., That there be printed 10,000 copies of Senate Document No. 84, being a message from the President of the United States transmitting a report of the Secretary of Agriculture in relation to the forests, rivers, and mountains of the Southern Appalachian region, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,500 copies for the use of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of this publication at $16,350.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MORALS OF JESUS OF NAZARETH, BY THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the following privileged report:

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 15.

Resolved, etc., That there be printed in facsimile for the use of Congress 9,000 copies of Thomas Jefferson's Morals of Jesus of Nazareth, as the same appears in the National Museum, 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 6,000 copies for the use of the House.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

So that the resolution shall read as follows:

So that the resolution shall read as follows:

"Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound, by photolithographic process, with an introduction of not to exceed 25 pages, to be prepared by Dr. Cyrus Adler, librarian of the Smithsonian Institution, for the use of Congress, 9,000 copies of Thomas Jefferson's Morals of Jesus of Nazareth, as the same appeared in the National Museum, 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 6,000 copies for the use of the House."

The Public Printer estimates the cost of this work, exclusive of the proposed introduction, at $3,227.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, what is this?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, Congress has published all the works of Thomas Jefferson with the exception of this volume, and that was not published because it was not then in the Congressional Library. Since then it has been added to the Library.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is it?

Mr. LACEY. "Morals of Jesus of Nazareth," as compiled by Thomas Jefferson. It makes a small volume, compiled textually from the four Gospels. This is a work of which there is only one copy in the world; and should it be lost, it would be a very great loss.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would the gentleman consent to put Dillingworth's spelling book as an appendix to the work?

Mr. LACEY. That would be very amusing, Mr. Speaker; but this is really one of the most remarkable contributions of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not more so than a great many other works of private enterprise by various individuals.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not substitute the four Gospels?

Mr. LACEY. The Government owns this manuscript, and it is the only copy in the world.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish it had never been found. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, there is a little volume of 164 pages in the library of the National Museum, bound in red morocco by a Richmond bookbinder, which is one of the curious things in Washington, that is rarely seen. Thomas Jefferson's library was purchased by the Government and is now contained in the splendid Congressional Library. Some time ago, in giving the Jefferson collection a careful examination, I found that the "Jefferson Bible," as it is sometimes called, was not there. No one could tell me where it was until I asked A. R. Spofford, who knows everything about books, and he told me it was in the National Museum library. It appears that the volume was not included in the sale of Mr. Jefferson's library, but was afterwards purchased for $400 from Miss Randolph. This book is too valuable to be kept upon the shelves of the Museum library, but Dr. Cyrus Adler keeps it under lock and key and carries the key himself.

Mr. Jefferson was a freethinker, but his clear and just mind appreciated the teachings of the founder of the Christian religion, and the study of the Scriptures was the frequent occupation of his busy mind. He read Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, and other ancient writers on moral philosophy, and he conceived the idea of condensing the life and teachings of Jesus into a small volume, in which everything of a supernatural character should be omitted, evidently believing that the great truths of the religion of our Saviour would lose nothing by being separated from the miracles and wonders with which they are accompanied in the text of the Gospels.

John Adams and Mr. Jefferson, at one time bitter enemies, became in their retirement ardent friends, and were as regular in their correspondence as a pair of boarding-school girls. This compilation became the subject of their correspondence, and Mr. Jefferson promised to complete the work.

On January 29, 1804, in a letter written at Washington to Dr. Priestly, he said:

I rejoice that you have undertaken the task of comparing the moral doctrines of Jesus with those of the ancient philosophers.

I think you can not avoid giving, as a preliminary to the comparison, a digest of his moral doctrines, extracted in his own words from the Evangelists and leaving out everything relative to his personal history and character. It would be short and precious. With a view to do this for my own satisfaction, I had sent to Philadelphia to get two testaments Greek of the same edition and two English, with a design to cut the doctrines of morality and paste them on the leaves of a book in the manner you describe in framing your harmony. But I shall now get the thing done by better hands.

In his letter to Mr. Adams August 22, 1813, he says that he had prepared a syllabus of the Christian teachings for Dr. Priestly and Dr. Rush, and that Dr. Rush's family had returned it after the death of that gentleman, to Mr. Jefferson's great delight, for he found that it would involve him in a religious controversy.

On January 9, 1816, he wrote to Charles Thompson on the subject:

I, too, have made a little book from the same materials, which I call the Philosophy of Jesus. It is a paradigma of his doctrines, made by cutting the texts out of the books and arranging them on the pages of a blank book in a certain order of time or subject. A more beautiful or precious morsel of ethics I have never seen. * * * If I had time, I would add to my little book the Greek, Latin, and French texts in columns side by side.

On October 31, 1819, he wrote from Monticello to William Short:

As you say of yourself, I too, am an epicurean. I consider the genuine (not the imputed) doctrines of Epicurus as containing everything rational in moral philosophy which Greece and Rome have left us. * * * But the greatest of all reformers of the depraved religion of his own country was Jesus of Nazareth. * * * Epictetus and Epicurus give laws for governing ourselves, Jesus a supplement of the duties and charities we owe to others. * * * I have sometimes thought of translating Epictetus (for he has never been tolerably translated into English) by adding the doctrines of Epictetus from the syntagma of Gassendi and an abstract from the Evangelists. * * * The last I attempted too hastily some twelve or fifteen years ago. It was the work of some two or three nights only, at Washington, after getting through the evening's task of reading the letters and papers of the day. But with one foot in the grave these are now idle projects for me.

Evidently Mr. Jefferson did resume the work and reproduced it with great care. The book is a duodecimo volume of 82 double pages, or 164 pages, though Mr. Jefferson has paged only the left-hand page. On the left hand he has pasted the clippings in two columns, first in Greek and then in Latin. On the right hand he has put the French version first and the English in the last column. So the whole is neatly pasted in four finely printed columns in Greek, Latin, French, and English. There are marginal notes in Jefferson's own handwriting, with a table in front giving the pages and citing the chapters and verses from which the clippings are taken. In his writings he says that he has sent for two Testaments in each language for the purpose. The scope of the book is indicated by the title page, which is in Jefferson's handwriting: The Life and Morals of Jesus of Nazareth, Extracted Textually from the Gospels in Greek, Latin, French, and English.

In a marginal note he gives the Roman law on sedition under which Jesus was tried. A map of Judea is attached, convenient for reference, and the whole work bears evidence of the compiler's care and characteristic neatness.

He has omitted everything of a miraculous nature and has confined his clippings to the pure teachings of Jesus. He has clipped from all the Gospels, using the verses which make the clearest statement where the texts are practically the same, but he inserts texts from all of them, so as to include the entire teachings of the Saviour. The result is unique. In a clear, lucid form, apart from all surroundings of the supernatural, appear the words and moral teachings of the Son of Man.

In the concluding verse of the work he takes John xix, 42, and Matthew xxvii, 60, and combines them, clipping out all but the plain statement of the burial. The result is as follows:

John xix, 42: There laid they Jesus, * * *
Matthew xxvii, 60: * * * and * * * rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulcher, and departed.

So he leaves Jesus buried forever in the grave and gives no hope of the "resurrection and the life."

Though it is a blue-penciled and expurgated New Testament, it has not been prepared in any irreverent spirit. The result is a consolidation of the beautiful, pure teachings of the Saviour in a compact form, mingled with only so much of narrative as a Virginia lawyer would hold to be credible in those matter-of-fact days, and the opportunity is given, plain and unadorned, to compare these teachings with Marcus Aurelius's and other pagan "morals." They are in striking contrast to Plutarch's morals, or, rather, his immorals. No greater practical test of the worth of the tenets of the Christian religion could be made than the publication of this condensation by Mr. Jefferson. The jewels are taken from their settings, but they shine with their own luster. A verse of John is combined with a verse of Matthew with no interlineations, but is blended into a harmonious whole.

In these days of photolithography this little volume can be easily reproduced in facsimile. The work was intended to place the morals of Jesus in a form where, simple and alone, they could be contrasted with the teachings of the pagan philosophers. In doing this work Mr. Jefferson has builded better than he knew, and I trust that we may now have a reproduction of this beautiful little volume in a form to be accessible to the Christian world.

It has been said by an eminent minister of the gospel that Christianity must be true or it could never have survived so much poor preaching. Mr. Jefferson has put it to a still better test by this abridgment of the doctrines of the Divine Author.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was considered, and the amendments agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following concurrent resolution (No. 26), which I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals for the calendar year 1900, bound in cloth and wrapped; 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

Resolved, That there also be printed 8,000 additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint covering the operations of the mints and assay offices of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901, to be bound in cloth and wrapped; 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

RELIEF OF CITIZENS OF FRENCH WEST INDIES.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand a bill has just come over from the Senate which is on the Speaker's table, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 5736) "for the relief of the citizens of the French West Indies," and for its present consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let it be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be purchased such provisions, clothing, medicines, and other necessary articles as he shall deem advisable, and tender the same in the name of the Government of the United States to that of France for the relief of the citizens who have suffered by the late earthquakes and eruption in the islands of the French West Indies.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to carry into operation this act.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is authorized to use necessary steamers and vessels belonging to the Government to carry into effect the purpose of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is wise at all times to help our neighbors if they are really in distress. I know of no reason why this Government should turn its Treasury into an eleemosynary institution, and I do not see any necessity for our having a legislative spasm about the condition of our neighbors to the south of us. If we can furnish them relief, it will take days to purchase the provisions and supplies and equip the ships and send them down there. It is impossible at this time, in view of the scarcity of details in the dispatch which we only got this morning, for the President of the United States or anybody else to know about the conditions. This class of legislation, of getting up and throwing a hundred thousand dollars away without information, without investigation by a committee, I see no reason for.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about the terrible calamity and that many thousands of lives have been lost, and there must be much suffering resulting from it. In these days of swift communication the President can quickly learn the conditions that exist, and raise the supplies that are necessary to these people, and if we are going to give anything it seems to me we ought to give quickly. If we are to move at all it will take time to purchase supplies and we ought to begin at once. There is no difficulty in finding out just what is necessary. Experience in the past would teach us what was necessary, and if not by cable we can soon find out what is necessary.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Are these people not French subjects and on French territory, and is not the Republic of France able to take care of her own sufferers?

Mr. PAYNE. Probably France is able, but still it is a neighborly act. I do not think it improper, in dealing with a friendly power, to offer this aid.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, what I wish to say is this: I believe in helping people in distress. I prefer to help our own people, and we have many in distress. There may be a good reason for helping these people, but there is nothing to show that the President of the United States has requested us to do it, or that he sees any occasion for doing it, or that he has got any information about this matter. We only heard of this matter this morning; the information has just come to this Congress, and it may be exaggerated and it may not be. If these people at our doors are in distress and ought to be assisted, I am willing to assist them; but I think that our State Department should first furnish some information for us to act upon. It can not delay the matter but for a day. It can be reported on when we have more full information. I do not think it wise for the House to get into a legislative spasm about matters of this kind when information can readily be obtained, and when a resolution can be passed upon proper information; and, therefore, I think the bill ought to go to a committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to say to my friend that we were about twelve months getting supplies to Russia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made by the gentleman from Alabama.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5467. An act for the relief of William Persons—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5736. An act for the relief of citizens of French West Indies—to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. CANDLER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. PERKINS, until Thursday, on account of important business.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE POLK.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, I call up the special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that Saturday, May 10, at 1 p. m., be set apart for the purpose of paying a tribute of respect to the memory of the late RUFUS K. POLK, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for paying tribute to the memory of Hon. RUFUS K. POLK, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions with the exception of the portion relating to the immediate adjournment of the House.

The remaining resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, before these exercises begin, I wish to ask unanimous consent that members not now present be permitted to print in the RECORD such eulogies on the late Mr. POLK as they may desire to publish. The reason for making this request is that a number of members have been unable to attend here to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN] asks unanimous consent that all members desiring to exercise the privilege be permitted to print in the RECORD eulogies on the late Mr. POLK. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is accordingly granted.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, amid the carnival which the Grim Reaper has been holding with the members of this body, I am called upon to perform the most difficult and the saddest task of my life.

With graceful words and elegant phrases it is easy to pay a last tribute to colleagues respected, admired, and esteemed; but this man was my friend, my comrade, my roommate, and I loved him.

Not with the flowers of rhetoric, but with heart throbs and with tears I approach his grave.

The rose and the forget-me-not, with the violet and the leaves of the sturdy oak, I would weave in a chaplet to his memory and bind them together with heartstrings.

Justice I can not do him, for the feelings of the heart are not told by words.

While he lived I never knew how much attached I was to him, and his death has left a void which time alone may fill.

When the rumor of his sudden and unexpected death was brought to me I felt benumbed, and the truth came as a bolt from out of the clear blue of sunny skies. Never will I forget the shock.

Never the lonely feeling I had for days afterwards when I came back to the cosy apartments where together we lived. I never thought I could miss one so much, and I never felt so thoroughly alone and less inclined to resume the work piling up before me.

What endeared this man to me? I can not tell.

I met him but two short years ago, when we came to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

One makes few warm friendships in middle life. This was one, and the stronger perhaps for that reason. I liked him from our first meeting, and as we were drawn oftener together the bond of union strengthened.

He was ten years my junior, and it surely was not his advice nor his judgment I sought.

But what made every man, woman, and child who knew him love him?

He had many warm friends among his colleagues, and when you heard even his acquaintances refer to him it showed that he had impressed them with his irresistible charm.

At his funeral, when the long line of brawny workmen whom he had employed filed by his coffin, pausing to take a last look at his face motionless in death, you could plainly read in each man's countenance the fact that they, too, had come under the spell of this charm, and sincerely mourned the loss of one whom they regarded as a dear friend.

He was a lovely fellow. I never met one more lovable.

His voice, soft and sweet, and its musical accent and expression bespoke him a son of the "Old South." No one who ever heard him talk will ever forget its gentle, winning tones.

More winning than his voice were his manners. They were never acquired, but inherited from aristocratic ancestors, polished gentlemen and charming ladies of the old school who ruled the South in the antebellum days; and this inheritance was strengthened by education, breeding, and refined surroundings.

His nature was sympathetic. He could not bear to see man or beast suffer, and was always ready to give to distress such relief as was in his power.

His generosity was proverbial, and not only did he spend his money with lavish hand, but I never heard him fail to give everyone the benefit of a doubt, and never, unless richly deserved, have I heard him say an unkind or uncharitable word about even a social or business acquaintance.

So much did he crave the good opinion and esteem of his associates and so prodigal was he with his favors to them that I sometimes thought him vain and seeking admiration.

To an exceptional degree he possessed the charming spirit of camaraderie, and that made him popular at home and abroad.

His faults were but skin deep, and never reached his heart or scarred his soul.

With all these traits his character and personality were strong, not weak, and no one could ever say "no" more firmly or was more tenacious to his own carefully formed opinions. Often, when a man or a question was being discussed with general agreement, to the surprise of all would he announce a different opinion and advance convincing arguments in its support. Yet his manner of announcing such a difference, although firm, never seemed to offend. I envied his tact on such occasions.

But more than all these he was manly and just and strictly honest in word and thought and deed. In our close association I never heard him utter a word from which one could form the suspicion that he sought to injure or obtain an unjust advantage of anyone with whom he dealt, and he exacted the same business integrity from others in their dealings. He despised a dishonest man and left him severely alone.

He had a vein of stubbornness running through him, and at times it took a rough bit and a strong hand to control him when his teeth were set. These fits happened but seldom. As a rule he was gentle, full of warm, generous impulses, kind-hearted, sympathetic, courteous, and tolerant even of the prejudices of others.

Much of his life and of his ambitions I learned from his own lips as we sat after dinner in the evening twilight and exchanged mutual confidences before we took up the never-ending tasks of Congressional life.

He would light a cigar and stretch out on an easy chair and talk of his wife and his babies, of his parents, and his illustrious uncle Leonidas, the fighting bishop, and many other things. These were our social chats and heart to heart talks. This was the history of his life as I gleaned it chiefly from these talks.

RUFUS KING POLK was born August 23, 1866, in Maury County, Tenn., on his father's plantation, some 7 miles from Columbia. This was just after the close of that gigantic struggle between the North and the South, and he was the first-born. His father had little but this plantation left after that struggle, in which he and every able-bodied kinsman took an active part on the side of the Confederacy.

Both his father, Lucius E., and his uncle, Leonidas, had reached the rank of general. Both were famous for their intrepid bravery, as a result of which his father was left for dead lying under his horse in front of the breastworks of a fortification where both horse and rider had been shot down. Here he sustained an injury which he carried to his grave in the winter of 1892–93, a few weeks after RUFUS was married.

His youth was passed on the old plantation with his parents, three brothers, and a sister, until he was sent to a local academy and fitted for college. He entered Lehigh University, in Pennsylvania, and graduated with the class of 1887 with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and then took a post-graduate course in mining engineering. After leaving college he located in Danville, Pa., and was employed as chemist by the Montour Iron and Steel Company. With the exception of a few months during which he had charge of the furnaces of the Hocking Valley Coal and Iron Company in Ohio, he engaged in business in Danville, as assistant superintendent of the Montour Iron and Steel Company, general manager of the North Branch Steel Company, and finally became a partner in the firm of Howe & Polk, manufacturers of structural iron, in which business he was engaged at the time of his death.

As a business man his partners and all who knew him in business circles agree that he possessed especial talents, had keen discernment, was aggressive yet cautious withal, and by his strict integrity, agreeable and friendly manner and strong personality was able to obtain advantageous contracts and settle tangles and disputes which necessarily arise. He told me that his business had increased to such an extent that the last year his firm had made and disposed of $1,000,000 worth of product.

During his residence in Danville POLK fell in love with the reigning belle of his town, Isabella, only daughter of I. X. Grier, and left her, with five young children, to survive him.

In the spring of 1898, when the United States declared war with Spain, POLK, with his associates in the National Guard, left his wife, family, and large, growing business interests and was mustered in as first lieutenant of Company F, Twelfth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served until his muster out and honorable discharge after peace was established.

Almost immediately after his return home from this service he was nominated and elected as a Democrat to represent the Seventeenth district of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Columbia, Montour, Northumberland, and Sullivan, in the Fifty-sixth Congress, and although that district was then represented by a Republican, his majority was nearly 2,000.

This was his first appearance in the political arena. Two years afterwards he was reelected to the Fifty-seventh Congress with an increased majority of nearly 1,500, so popular had he become, and he would have been renominated and elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress had he lived and not positively refused to run again on account of the exactions of his large and onerous business interests.

One evening he told me the reasons why he enlisted in the Spanish war and went to the front in spite of the fact that he left a wife and family of young children and large business interests which required his care and attention behind—a sacrifice which no man under such circumstances could reasonably have been called upon to make. The story was, as near as I can remember it, as follows:

"You see, GREEN, all my people in the civil war were what you Yankees called rebels. Every mother's son of them fought from start to finish the battles of the Confederacy, and were loyal sons of the South, where they lived when the outbreak occurred. They were generals and colonels and majors in that war. We were of fighting stock from Revolutionary times down, and until that time had always been loyal to the Stars and Stripes, and its patriotic supporters in the trying times when the Republic was formed. My greatgrandfather, Thomas Polk, of Mecklenburg County, N. C., was one of the organizers of the Mecklenburg Convention and one of the signers of the Mecklenburg declaration of independence. My grandfather was Col. William Polk.

"This medal which I wear is the badge of the Order of Cincinnati, founded by the officers of the American Revolutionary Army in 1773. No man can become a member of the order who is not a male descendant of an original member, and inherits it under the law of primogeniture. I proved my right before I was admitted. Well, after the rebellion my brothers and I entered into a solemn agreement that should there ever be a war in which the United States was interested we would all enlist.

"So when war was declared with Spain my brothers and myself and many young cousins were mustered into the United States service and showed that we were loyal to our country and ever ready to sacrifice our lives in the defense of its honor and its flag. Our pledge has been so far kept, and we stand always ready to redeem it while life and strength shall last."

This little incident ennobled this man in my eyes, and I knew him well enough to be able to vouch for every word he had told me.

Is it any wonder that the people of his district, Northern men and loyal men though they were, nevertheless were ready to intrust him with their interests in the great Legislature of this nation, with a firm conviction that their interests and the Republic's interests were intrusted to a loyal and patriotic man.

Representative POLK was an aristocrat in the fullest and best sense of the word.

The bluest blood of the Southern States flowed through his veins. Both on the paternal and maternal side his ancestors were gentlemen and gentlewomen to the manner born, and their position and standing among that old aristocracy was unquestioned. The men were ever men of action and fought in the front ranks of every field of progress. He inherited this spirit, and that brought him from the retirement of the Southern plantation to the fields of industrial action and enterprise in Pennsylvania. For this he refused a division of his father's property and sought new fields for his energies. This furnishes a ready explanation why he succeeded and prospered before he had reached his thirty-sixth year.

While he loved his ancestors and the history and traditions of his family, he was a thorough Democrat, for he believed that—

> Kind hearts are more than coronets,
> And simple faith than Norman blood.

The doctrine of humanity was deeply graven on his heart, and he believed in that the greatest of all commandments, "Love one another." He practiced the golden rule and did unto others as he would be done by. No creed bound his faith or circumscribed his duty to his fellow-man. He has made the world the better for his having lived, and added to the happiness of others, from the highest to the lowliest, who came within the influence of his sympathetic and generous life. Living, he did many generous deeds which his closest friends will never know; and, dying, he leaves to them pleasant memories of cherished associations; to his wife and children a name and a heritage of which they may justly be proud, and to the people he represented an honorable and untarnished reputation.

But a few short weeks ago the slender figure and manly presence of the young statesman of the Seventeenth district of Pennsylvania was in our midst. His sunny smile and cheerful greeting met us on every side. He left us in the strength of manhood's prime never to return.

As I sit, in the silence of the midnight hour, in his favorite chair and my thoughts wander and dwell upon him these oft-repeated lines of the Rubaiyat haunt my memory:

> 'Tis but a tent where takes his one day's rest
> A sultan to the realm of death addrest;
> The sultan rises and the dark Ferraish
> Strikes and prepares it for another guest.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, early death excites commiseration, particularly when the object of some special usefulness is thereby taken. The fate of youthful Marcellus—untimely cut off—called forth the most graceful strains of Virgil, and moved to fervor—that has become historic—the family of the imperial household of Augustus.

Some few years ago a young business man of Pennsylvania, in conversation with Governor Nash, of Ohio, used these words: "I come," he said, "from a Southern State and family whose representatives joined and fought with the South in the civil war. I believe, however, in maintaining right relations with all with whom I come in contact. I live in Pennsylvania, and have a brother who lives in Tennessee. We have made a compact and taken a vow together that if ever an opportunity comes that we can draw a sword or shoulder a musket in behalf of the United States Government under the old flag we will engage in that cause to the fullest extent and with our utmost devotion."

It was only a few months until that opportunity came in the war with Spain. That Southern brother proved his mettle and narrowly escaped with his life, having received the most terrible injuries, and the young man from Pennsylvania at the head of his company marched away, willing to give his service, and his life if need be, for the common cause of his country, to emphasize the devotion that he in common with all his people felt for the flag and what it represented. The name of this young man was RUFUS K. POLK, one of the distinguished family which bears that name in Tennessee. He came to Pennsylvania and engaged in business and lived in that State which claimed him and now claims him as her own. It is he whom we mourn to-day.

More than that, when the time came to decide whether he should go, he called his business associates and partners about him and said, "You do not want me to go; you may think I can not go; but I am going, and every man in my company who works in our mills is going without let or hindrance; more than that, every Saturday night while we are gone there is to be sent to the wife, the mother, or the family of each man who goes with me the full week's wages, just as if they were here. These are things I insist on—there need be no discussion. I am going. Good-bye." And this request was considered a sacred one, so that his business associates saw that it was honored and fulfilled.

We can refer to this because it emphasizes and brings out in this young man one of the most admirable traits in human character—patriotism, love of country, and devotion to principles in which he fully believed. We can speak of this because this side of his nature was one which became most prominent in the latter days of his life and one which commends his memory to the love and esteem of not only his immediate family and friends, but all with whom he came in contact and who hear the story of his short but patriotic life.

Any man who carries on a business at home and attends to the arduous duties often imposed on members of Congress lives a strenuous life indeed. Is it any wonder that the mortality among the membership of the last, the Fifty-sixth, Congress was greater in proportion than all our soldiers who fell in the war with Spain? It is this modern materialistic tendency on the part of our American people that makes the "strenuous life." It is the life of toil and effort, the life of labor and of strife, the life which does not shrink from hardship, from toil, from danger even, and who out of these wins splendid ultimate triumph—The life which thanks God for the iron in the blood of our fathers, for the men who upheld the wisdom of Lincoln and bore the sword or rifle in the armies of Grant.

We seem to have adopted as a national motto that no country may long endure if its foundations are not laid deep in the material prosperity which comes from thrift, from business energy and enterprise, and from hard unsparing efforts in the field of industrial activity. We pay due honor to the architects of our material prosperity, to the captains of industry who have built our factories and our railroads. This spirit has made it possible to take into our domain islands of the sea, to enter into a closer struggle for naval and commercial supremacy, to build up our power within our own borders, and to grasp the vantage points which will enable us to have our own say in deciding the destiny of the oceans of the East and West. It was this spirit, this indomitable energy, which possessed the life and soul of our young friend who has so lately fallen in the battle of life. I count him one of the martyrs to that spirit of restless energy which has lately possessed the soul of so many Americans, and while many splendid achievements have ensued it has been at great cost, even at the cost of life itself.

With apparent health and strength, with prosperity and abundance in his pathway, with the highest honors his people could bestow showered upon him, with the love and affection of wife and children—those to whom he was dearer than life itself—it seemed as though an honorable and useful career was marked out for him. But "Man's ways are not God's ways, and His purposes are past finding out."

The summons came from on high, and we are again called upon to contemplate the saddest, the strangest, the most inscrutable event in all this riddle of human life—death. As we utter these words our hearts go out in tenderest and deepest sympathy to those who mourn his loss so much in the old home.

In his departure this House has lost a valuable, upright, and energetic member, his State a true representative, his country a devoted patriot, his family a loving husband, father, and son.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, were I to speak from a personal acquaintance with the deceased whose memory this memorial service is held to commemorate I could indeed say but little.

The first time I met Mr. POLK was in the closing session of the Fifty-sixth Congress. Yet we did not meet as strangers meet. Each of us knew the close ties of friendship and intimacy that had bound our respective families together for more than two generations past. I knew from what people he sprung, and I found him what I had good reason to expect him to be—a splendid type of manhood.

I can, with becoming propriety, refer to my personal acquaintance with Mr. POLK's mother—the friend of my youth—a granddaughter of James Jackson, whose residence, "The Forks," in the vicinity of Florence, Ala., was famous in the palmiest and most glorious days of the South for its princely hospitality. The name and memory of its owner is to-day honored and cherished by those people as a household word, and his descendants are true representatives of the highest Southern sentiment and culture.

If there is anything, Mr. Speaker, in birth, our deceased friend had all of its advantages. In his ancestry on both his father's and his mother's side he had the greatest cause to be proud, for the South held them as among the most honored and distinguished of all its honorable people. That Mr. POLK was modest, unassuming, and of retiring manners was but natural, and readily noticed by the most casual observer. His career is significant and bears a lesson that is not often given under the conditions that surrounded him. Born among the most cultured people of the South, at the conclusion of the great civil war between the States of the Union, it might be truly said that the strong passions and bitter prejudices that swept the sections of the country that opposed each other in that eventful struggle had subsided before Mr. POLK reached his majority. Hence his marked course in life was not guided or influenced by sectional feelings.

He was educated at a Northern university. The associations of his young manhood, his college ties, which cling so tenderly to one's memory and are cherished so dearly by the heart, were cast and formed in the great State of Pennsylvania.

The crowning joy of a man's life, the love of a true and noble woman, a native Pennsylvanian, brought to him its blessed tribute of a happy and contented home. Yet, 'midst all these endearing scenes he honored and loved the traditions and memories of the people of his native section.

Stricken by the hand of death ere he had reached the prime of manhood, yet he lived long enough to demonstrate to his countrymen that in private and public life he was preeminently a practical man and a wise and safe counselor. That he was conscientious in the discharge of all of the duties allotted to him was deeply impressed upon me in a conversation I had with him on the floor of the House but a few days before his death, in which he told me that the demands of his growing private interests were such that he could not give the attention that he desired to the interests of his constituents, and that at the close of this Congress he would retire from public life. Reared as Mr. POLK was he could but be a broad-minded, liberal, and patriotic man in all his views. He ardently loved the institutions of his country and gloried in everything that gave renown and honor to our Government. At the beginning of the Spanish-American war he enlisted in the Twelfth Pennsylvania Regiment of Volunteers, and served with credit and honor to himself.

It can well and truly be said of him that private business with increasing profits was not so engrossing to him as to silence the voice of patriotism. He was ready to lay his life on the altar of his country. No nobler and braver sacrifice can a man make than this. Rarely does it fall to the lot of man to achieve, as Mr. POLK did at his age, combined success in private business matters and in public life. In the private and public affairs of the life of a man we are prone to judge him by the results. Under the application of this just and fair rule, RUFUS K. POLK leaves as a heritage to his stricken family, loyal and admiring friends, an enviable and honored record—a record worthy of emulation. He made his home among a people who but a few years before had met on bloody battlefields the brave men of the section where Mr. POLK was born and where his kindred lived.

Yet, by the purity, frankness, and honesty of his own personal efforts and conduct, he achieved a success and prosperity in business matters that stamped him as a man of great strength of character and ability. It was unerring judgment and strong common sense that controlled his actions and governed his life. It was his high love of justice and truth, his scorn of hypocrisy and deceit, that secured for him the confidence and respect of his fellow-man. And again, when we scan his remarkable career we find him twice called from his private life and triumphantly elected by these same people to the distinguished honor of representing them on the floor of this House. I dare say, Mr. Speaker, no man could have achieved such a success without possessing to an eminent degree the noblest virtues of life. He must certainly have been generous, kind, thoughtful, charitable, and considerate.

It was my sad duty to attend his funeral services at Danville, in the State of Pennsylvania. The tribute paid on that mournful occasion to his memory by the people among whom he lived was simply inspiring. It was a wonderful expression of the love of a people for a faithful public servant, a generous friend, and a noble, kind man in all the walks of life. No man could have witnessed that scene, could have beheld the immense crowd of people from all the walks of life that gathered on that inclement day to do honor to his memory and remained unmoved in tears and sympathy. I was impressed, Mr. Speaker, by that scene with the comforting assurance that so long as the people of our country generously and willingly pay such honor and reverence to the memory of a public servant we can safely rely on the growth and strength of our republican institutions.

[Mr. CLAYTON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Speaker, the custom existing in the American Congress of paying tribute to the memory of a deceased member is one which has long continued, as it has ever appealed to the noblest instincts of the mind and heart.

In the association which is brought about in the discharge of common duties, which are performed with a unity of feeling and a patriotic purpose, friendships naturally arise which last through life and are ever cherished with deep devotion.

Death is the saddest of life incidents. It is ever mysterious; it is always inexorable; it is certain, and whether it occurs on the tented field, in the legislative hall, in the forum, or the workshop, it exacts reverence and awe from the most callous heart. And when it overtakes and cuts down in the meridian of a bright manhood and terminates the useful and honored career of a friend it becomes the sad but cheerful duty of his companions to chronicle the events of that life and thereby perpetuate his memory. And so to-day "death's dishonorable victory we with our stately presence glorify." I knew our deceased friend so well that it bordered close to intimacy. He frequently communicated to me his hopes and his aspirations, and I never knew a soul of loftier sentiments.

Among the first acquaintances made by your speaker when he became a member of the Fifty-sixth Congress was our lamented friend, RUFUS KING POLK. He being a member of the North Carolina chapter of the Order of Cincinnati, from which State came his ancestry and where lived many of his kindred, he naturally felt an interest in that State, and in that way sought the companionship and gained the friendship of some of its members. His career is much to be admired. Sprung from an honorable ancestry, prominent alike in Revolutionary days as well as in our Union afterwards, he inherited much of the culture and refinement, much of the courage and patriotism, much of the modesty and gentleness that is so characteristic of his people.

Born at the close of the late civil war, he was early impressed by the scenes and incidents of

> The land where the ruins are spread
> And the living tread light on the hearts of the dead.

He grew up taught to cherish with sacred pride the acts of heroism and the deeds of daring of the Confederate soldier, but to accept in good faith and as forever settled the causes which brought about a fratricidal war.

Like most Southern families whose fortunes were either entirely swept away or shattered by the great conflict, our friend, by the sacrifices of his family, was enabled to obtain an education at Lehigh University, and immediately thereafter sought employment in the State of Pennsylvania, where he soon secured the confidence and respect of his employers; and afterwards became a joint owner in the large structural iron business. His success in his new home was rapid. It was due to his earnest nature, his indomitable energy, his fidelity to principle, and his unswerving integrity of character.

While he became thoroughly identified with the social and financial spirit of his new home and affected by its environments, he never forgot the traditions, the recollections, and the experiences of his native Southland. He loved to refer to its past history and to its great future possibilities, and heard with eagerness the narration of its wonderful development. He was intensely patriotic in every fiber of his being; he loved his whole country and fondly boasted of its achievements; and no man hailed with greater pleasure the arrival of the era of good feeling between the sections, and the obliteration of the last vestige of sectional bitterness than did he, and was wont to say that he believed that the Union was now more harmonious than it had ever been before since its origin.

When the war against Spain was declared he was among the first to volunteer and offer his services to his country, and he was eager for his command to proceed "to win renown, even in the jaws of danger and of death." But by the decrees of fate he was denied the privilege of active service in Cuba, and was mustered out at the end of the war holding the commission of a first lieutenant.

In 1898 he was nominated for Congress in the Seventeenth Pennsylvania district. During the campaign his opponents, to counteract his personal popularity, urged against him the fact that he was the son of Lucius Polk, a Confederate general, and that he flaunted his father's record in the face of Pennsylvanians by keeping his father's uniform on exhibition at his home. Our friend on the stump admitted the soft impeachment; he declared he was proud to say he was the son of General Polk, and he cherished his memory, and preserved his uniform as a priceless heritage for his children. The people of his district, admiring courage and character, recognizing the war as over, and taking an equal pride in the valor of the followers of Lee and Jackson with that of the followers of Grant and Sheridan, as contributing to the common glory of the American name, applauded this bold avowal of his veneration for his father and his distinguished career, and it won for him the admiration of all classes, and he was triumphantly elected in a Republican district.

RUFUS KING POLK was a courageous man. The blood and courage that renowned his forbears ran in his veins. His father was a Sempronius; his mother a Cornelia.

He was a modest man. And while he never intruded his opinion on others, yet when occasion demanded him to speak he never faltered in giving expression to his sentiments.

He was an honest man. His sincerity and his rectitude of purpose pervaded all his actions, whether in social or business life. And the moral beauty of his character is a source of pride to his friends and family.

Cut down in his early manhood, he has left behind him a reputation as an honest citizen, a patriotic and chivalrous Christian gentleman, and has added to the glory of a name already honored in the nation's annals.

Among the Mohammedan legends there is a bridge which extends from this world across the dark and unfathomable abyss of chaos and hell to the shores of paradise. The structure is so attenuated and difficult of passage over this dreadful chasm without danger of being engulfed in the inextricable abyss below that the souls of mortals are only permitted to cross over with an ease proportioned to their virtues while living. That the soul of our friend has safely crossed the Al-Sirat and now rests in paradise we are assured by reason of the many virtues he possessed and displayed in his intercourse with his fellow-man while living.

But our friend has gone. May we so live that we may meet again in the great hereafter, where sorrows are unknown and joys are eternal.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, if a stranger had come into the city of Danville, Pa., on Saturday, March 8, 1902, his attention would have at once been called to the fact that something out of the ordinary was taking place. He would have noted that there were an unusual number of people in the streets; that there were teams hitched at all of the racks; that there was an expression of sorrow upon the faces of those he met. All places of business were closed, and the insignia of mourning was on every hand.

During the forenoon there passed through the streets, in solemn and orderly procession, the employees of the Structural Tubing Works, also of Howe & Polk, and of other manufacturing concerns of the city, all marching to a residence where, just inside of a window, lay the remains of a man.

There was a profusion of flowers over the casket, some of the floral emblems showing the skill of the professional florist; others showed that the hands that prepared them were moved thus to testify to their affection and respect.

As the grim, stern men turned away from the bier their look and manner indicated that they were mourners at heart. After a time the house filled and the streets were crowded with people. A short service was conducted and the procession started for the last resting place—long and imposing in the number of carriages, touching in the orderly march of the great number of workingmen through the mud and the slush. The last sad office was performed by eight stalwart employees of Howe & Polk, who as pallbearers laid him away in his last resting place.

The stranger would have inquired, What of this man that he should receive such honor and so much genuine grief be shown? The reply would have been that the dead, when in life, was Congressman RUFUS K. POLK; that he was born down in the "Old Volunteer State" in 1866; that he had an ambition, and to carry out his plans worked his way through the Lehigh University, taking a post-graduate course in mining engineering.

Then he came to Danville, laid away his cap and gown, put on the garb of a workingman, and went to work in the mills for $1.25 a day. He had prepared his brain by study; now he was to educate his hands. He had determined to master the business from all sides. Soon he was chemist for the Montour Iron and Steel Company; then passed to the charge of the furnaces of the Hocking Valley Coal and Iron Company; then general manager for the North Branch Steel Company, which position he held for seven years. His fellow-workmen told with pride that Mr. POLK could do a good day's work in any department of that great concern.

He had keen business discernment, coupled with practical knowledge. He invented a plan for the manufacture of structural tubing and then became a member of the firm of Howe & Polk.

He was intensely patriotic, being one of the first to follow the colors as first lieutenant of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the Spanish-American war, and, while making a splendid record as a soldier, found time to keep in touch with every detail of the work of his firm.

The people insisted that he should represent them in Congress, to which position he was elected and reelected. Last winter he gave out an address stating that he would not accept a nomination; that his desire was to return to his work.

Our stranger must have concluded, with this knowledge of the facts, that the lesson he learned from the life of RUFUS K. POLK was to be thoroughly fit for the struggle of life, to be persistent and to keep in touch with the ideals of the people.

I have noted that there is a general idea which is prevalent among men that a college degree is a testimonial that the possessor is partly educated. The ordinary graduate is a helpless sort of a being; he knows about books, but is an untried man on practical lines.

Books are the most useful tools in the world, when well selected and the reader constantly keeps in mind that they express another's observations and ideas. In this time one must be educated by his own observations; he must be able to handle every detail; he must work; he must do things; he must be constructive; he must be affirmative, self-reliant, and not dependent upon others.

Such a man was Mr. POLK. But he made the common American mistake. He put in too many hours at work and took too little time for recreation and rest.

It came home to me as I stood by his grave that his grief-stricken widow and children, his aged mother, and his brothers would have gladly given up the fortune he had amassed, the honors that had come to him, if he could return to them and start over again with the dinner pail and the working clothes. His life, his death, fully evidences that a man can only do a certain amount in this life with safety to himself. When the limit is overstepped, nature demands the penalty.

It was my good fortune to serve with him on committees during his service in Congress. I found him to be an able man, possessed of as kindly a disposition as any man I ever met. The tribute paid to him by the Morning News, published in his home city, is truthful and merited, and shows the great true-loving life as known to his family, friends, and neighbors:

Thus passes away one who has made the world better for having lived, in that he added to the happiness of others. Of him it may truly be said that in all his dealings with others he was uninfluenced by caste, by social, political, or religious distinctions, while his natural courtesy, his kind, tolerant disposition, his sympathy for the unfortunate, his open-handed generosity, his fair dealing, and his inflexible honesty, made him a prince among men; a strong and gracious personality, whose impression will remain long after the sod grows green above his grave.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, to-day we assemble to pay a just tribute of respect to the memory of an associate and colaborer who has fallen in the great conflict. Were we to consult our feelings we would stand in reverent silence, for we realize that upon an occasion of this character words are inadequate fully to express our deep sense of sorrow over the untimely death of our deceased friend or to convey an adequate expression of our high appreciation of his worth as a man, his merit as a citizen, and his usefulness as a legislator.

RUFUS KING POLK was born in Maury County, Tenn., August 23, 1866, of noble parentage. His ancestors were of Scotch-Irish descent, and in the early history of our country settled in the State of Pennsylvania. We are informed that about the middle of the eighteenth century they removed to the State of North Carolina, and in that State they became identified in a marked degree with the best thought and life of the country and contributed materially to the development and upbuilding of the country. They were associated with and contributed much to the betterment of the social conditions of that State and to its growth and progress.

In the early part of the nineteenth century some of the family removed to middle Tennessee and located in Maury County, Tenn.

True to the traditions and past history of the family, and moved by the same noble and generous impulses which had characterized the family, they at once became identified with the best thought, the best purpose, and the best life in their new home and began to contribute to its progress and development. Everyone who reads the early history of Tennessee in its social, material, and political phases will find the impress thereon of the Polk family—an impress full of encouragement, worthy of preservation, and an inspiration to noble living.

Our departed friend was not unfaithful to the traditions of his family nor a stranger to their virtues.

He attended, in his boyhood days, the common schools of the country, and when about 17 years of age entered Lehigh University, in the State of Pennsylvania. After finishing the course of study he took a post-graduate course in mining engineering. After finishing his studies in the school, he came face to face with life's work. He was Southern born, and reared in the best social life and surroundings of Southern society. He loved the Southland and its cherished institutions. He had a profound respect and love for the people of his native South, but his training and education fitted him for work in another field, and he cast his lot and life among the people of the great State of Pennsylvania, where he might find suitable employment for his talent. Coming among these people, he did not surrender his love or veneration for his Southern home, nor was it necessary or proper that he should do so. His love for his native land only fitted him the better to love and cherish the people and the country of his adoption.

He had only returned to the land of his forefathers, and in this incident we have an illustration of the oneness of our country and the unity of our people.

The seventeen years of his home life in Pennsylvania as he came and went among her people, and touched elbows with his associates and clasped hands with his friends, and drew to himself their love, their confidence and esteem, and himself shared his own life and love in their homes and around their hearthstones, demonstrate his character and proved his worth as a man, and, more than this, they bring to us a better realization of the truth, in object lesson, that no sectional lines confine friendships or banish love.

His election to Congress and the circumstances attending it vividly testify to the confidence and esteem of his people, and the multitude beside his bier, listening to hear the last sad requiem, and the throng at the open grave tell their love.

Mr. Speaker, our departed comrade was a man of many virtues and of much excellence. He was a man of energy and industry, and the practice of these virtues secured for him much of this world's goods in the few years of his business career. Prosperity crowned his business efforts. He was strictly honest in his business transactions and honorable in his dealings with men. He was a man of integrity, of character and purpose. He was broad-minded and warm-hearted. He conceived generous thoughts and executed them with liberal charity, and at his home town many there are who know of his love by his charitable deeds.

He did not suffer a narrow circle to circumscribe his thoughts, nor permit a narrow view to limit his vision of life, its duty, and its work. He was, with it all, unostentatious and unassuming; gentle in his manners, but firm in his convictions; suave in his demeanor, yet positive in his purpose. These qualities made us love him, for we believe that he loved mankind.

Our friend has departed. Almost in the twinkle of an eye he left us. In the very prime of manhood, in the midst of his hopes, expectations, aspirations, and honors, he has fallen. Verily, "in the midst of life we are in death." These things we can not comprehend. The mysteries of death we can not fathom. But this we believe: Wherever the true, the noble, and the good shall be found there we shall find him. To us it is a comfort to have labored with him. We are glad to count him among our friends. The memory of his virtues we shall preserve and cherish, and we shall endeavor to make the aspirations of his life an inspiration to our own.

We shall not contemplate his death as the end. Except the seed perish, the plant shall not grow and flower. Except the acorn die, the oak can not be the monarch of the forest. Through the chambers of seeming death lies the path to the larger, richer, and better life.

[Mr. GRIGGS addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, truly "in the midst of life we are in death." Here in this Hall we were accustomed to see RUFUS KING POLK day by day as he did his part in the work of this great body. Giving no hint of approaching dissolution, no sign of failing powers, young, strong, vigorous, virile, he went in and out among us, and if one had been asked to pick out among us all him who seemed the most unlikely to be the next victim of the Grim Reaper's scythe many of us would have pointed to Mr. POLK. Stricken down without warning almost at the very threshold of his active, manly life, the shock of his sudden death was to us, his friends, intensified. Painful as would have been such tidings even though he had lain on a bed of sickness for many weeks with the inevitable end clearly foreseen, the news would not have come to us with such startling force, with such blighting intensity. Like a bolt out of a clear sky came the announcement of his death, and at first it seemed to us who knew him well impossible of belief. Death is always sad, whether it comes to the young or to the aged; but when the visitation falls upon the strong man, "rejoicing as a giant to run his course," full of confidence in his own strength, we stand appalled.

Mr. Speaker, in a few short, pithy sentences in the Congressional Directory we find embodied the story of his life. Born in Maury County, Tenn., in 1866; educated at Webb's Academy in Culleoka, Tenn., and at Lehigh University in the State which during the short remainder of his life he was to make his home; graduating as mining engineer; serving his country as first lieutenant in Company F of the Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry during the Spanish war; a successful business man; delegate to the national convention of his party in 1900; a member of the Fifty-sixth and of the present Congresses. Is not this a record of successful achievement of which any man might be proud? And yet when he died he was still less than 36 years of age—just one-half of the allotted span of human life had been run, but he had made for himself a name, he had gained the devoted love and loyalty of a great circle of friends, and he had won the admiration and esteem of all on this floor with whom he had come in contact.

Mr. POLK, when he went from Tennessee to Pennsylvania, was absolutely without means, and he was compelled to borrow most of the money he needed to carry him through college. Every cent of this indebtedness he afterwards repaid out of his wages as a laborer in the iron mills of his adopted State. He began work in these mills at $1.25 a day, and by his diligence, ability, and devotion to duty he rose to the position of manager and partner in the iron mills at Danville. At the time of his death he was also interested in several other large iron industries. These facts show the man's business ability. But he had greater qualities than the mere ability to make money; he was manly, self-reliant, faithful, considerate, absolutely loyal to his friends, and essentially fair-minded. By his own unaided energy, integrity, and self-reliance he advanced step by step until he had attained to the proud position of a Representative in the Congress of the United States.

He has gone from us, leaving to mourn his loss a loving and devoted wife and four young children. May his life and his example be to them and to us alike an encouragement and an inspiration to higher things.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the House be now suspended, to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Clerk transmit to the family of the deceased and to the governor of the State of South Dakota a copy of these resolutions with the action of the House thereon.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect, at the conclusion of these exercises, the House do adjourn.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, little did I realize or imagine when elected to the present Congress that before the expiration of my term death would enter our delegation and remove one of our respected and esteemed members, and yet within a few months Senator KYLE, apparently in good health and comparatively a young man, was suddenly stricken with a severe illness of brief duration, which terminated fatally, and he was taken from us, and we were called upon to mourn his loss, his death occurring in Aberdeen, S. Dak., July 1, 1901.

His unexpected and untimely death only illustrates the great uncertainty of life, and is another manifestation of the will of a divine providence, to which we must all submit, realizing that His will is supreme and His way is best.

This being the occasion set aside for the purpose of paying tribute to our departed and distinguished Senator, in the time alloted to me it will be proper to briefly refer to his history and record in the Senate of the United States, and say a few words appropriate to the occasion.

JAMES HENDERSON KYLE was born in the State of Ohio, February 24, 1854, and therefore at the time of his death was but 47 years of age. He moved with his parents to Illinois, where he received his early education, attending for a time the State University of that State, where he took a course in civil engineering. In 1873 he returned to Ohio and entered Oberlin College, taking a classical course, graduating in 1878. He at first determined to take up the profession of the law, and spent some time in taking a law course, but later changed his mind and decided to enter the ministry, and he attended the Western Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in 1882. He began his career as a minister in the State of Utah, and for a time was connected with a seminary at Mount Pleasant, in that State. From Utah he moved to Crested Butte, Colo., where he assumed charge of a church and remained until 1885, when he went to the then Territory of Dakota and located at Ipswich, where he remained until 1889, and removed to Aberdeen, where he became pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, and was pastor of this church when elected to the State senate in 1890.

At the time he was nominated as State senator, in addition to his ministerial duties, he was acting as financial secretary of the Congregational College at Yankton, S. Dak., which made it necessary for him to be away from home a greater part of the time, and he therefore gave but little, if any, attention to his political interests and was apparently indifferent to his election. He was, however, elected and took his seat in the State senate when the legislature convened in January, 1891, affiliating with what was then known as the Independent party. There were several candidates for United States Senator, resulting in a very bitter contest lasting for several weeks. Finally a compromise was effected, and the name of Mr. KYLE was proposed, and in a very short time he was elected to the Senate to succeed the Hon. Gideon C. Moody. He entered the Senate March 4, 1891, and at once interested himself in legislation for the benefit and advancement of his immediate constituency and began his record which marked him as a capable, industrious servant of the people, generally commanding the respect of his colleagues.

In 1896 he was a candidate to succeed himself. His party was successful in electing a majority of the legislature, but there were several candidates for the Senatorship, which developed a strong and heated contest that continued for many weeks, and it ultimately became apparent that Senator KYLE could not be reelected by the majority party, and that possibly there would be no election and the State would suffer the loss of having but one representative in the upper branch of Congress. Rather than have this happen, and realizing and recognizing in Senator KYLE a man upon whom the State could depend to faithfully represent its interests, and that he would ever be true and loyal to his country, the Republican minority came to his support, and with the votes of a few of his personal friends of the majority he was successful and again elected to the Senate.

It was at this time that I became intimately acquainted with him, being then a member of the legislature, and I want to take occasion at this time to say that I was personally in a position to know all that occurred in connection with his last election to the Senate, and that nothing transpired leading up to the Republicans in the legislature giving their support to Senator KYLE that was not strictly honorable, and he in no manner compromised himself and was as free to act and express himself as if he had been elected by the party with whom he was affiliating, and it was on account of his independence and manly position, as expressed by him at that time, that I formed a respect and regard for him which resulted in a warm personal friendship between us, and I considered him as one of my intimate friends, and I deeply deplore his death and mourn his loss as one friend mourns for another.

During Senator KYLE'S service in the Senate he was a tireless worker, especially in the interests of his own State, which he dearly loved and for which he accomplished much. He occupied the position of chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and always favored any legislation benefiting the laboring classes, and was ever on the alert to advance and promote the laboring interests. It was largely due to his efforts that Labor Day was made a national holiday, and it was he who was the author of the bill and the originator of the idea. He also introduced the bill, which subsequently became a law, creating the Industrial Commission, of which he was chairman, and the work done by that Commission was very largely under his direct supervision, and the number of reports is an evidence of what the Commission accomplished, and the reports contain much valuable information in the way of data and statistics that are now and will be in the future of great value to the country.

Senator KYLE took especial interest in legislation for the benefit of the civilization, education, and advancement of the Indians, and was a member of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. He was devoted to the cause of the old soldiers of the country, and as a member of the Committee on Pensions accomplished much in securing the passage of many meritorious private pension bills and securing general favorable pension legislation.

Senator KYLE was not a strong partisan, though pronounced and firm in his convictions, and in his public as well as private life always aimed to be upon the side that his conscience and judgment prompted him was right, and I do not think he was ever challenged or accused of throwing his influence or using his position to promote or advance his own personal or selfish interest, but was invariably, as before stated, found standing for and advocating what seemed to him to be the right.

He was devoted to his country, and during the trying times leading up to the Spanish-American war and its continuance he arose above partisanship, and his vote and influence in the Senate were ever with the Administration, which in his opinion represented American statesmanship and patriotism, and his loyalty to his country was greater than what might be called duty to his party. He did not change from this position in relation to the many questions and problems which arose as a result of the war, but continued to stand with the Administration on all these questions.

He had a very high sense of honor, was extremely conscientious, was devoted to duty, and his integrity was supreme. It was always his ambition to do that which seemed best for his State and the country. Personally he was extremely generous and kind, and invariably responded cheerfully and willingly when called upon to assist a friend or aid one in distress. If he had a weakness it was that he could not refuse the request of a friend.

His death is a great loss to the State of South Dakota, and he is mourned by all who knew him, without regard to politics. He will long be remembered for what he accomplished in his public career, and for his many acts of kindness extended to those who called upon him for assistance, and although he is no longer with us in life his memory will long be cherished by the people of his State and his friends throughout the country.

He was possessed of a noble character, generous to a fault, unselfish, and ever striving to do good for his country and his fellow-men. It may be well and truly said that he was a statesman, a loyal citizen, a good neighbor, a devoted husband and father, and a true Christian man.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, most of those who enter Congress come from the profession of the law or of medicine, the bank counter, the business world, or the farm. JAMES H. KYLE came to the Senate from the clerical profession, and was one of a few from that class who served in Congress during the time of his incumbency. Many times, no doubt, in following his calling as a clergyman he had occasion to speak feelingly and soothingly over the remains of the dead. Many times, no doubt, in his ministry he dwelt upon the virtues of the departed, gave consolation to the stricken, and drew a moral for the benefit and guidance of all. And of him, as one numbered with the dead, we speak to-day.

Pursuing his duties as a clergyman in the agitating time and political upheaval of 1890, he was caught in the sweep of the reform movement that passed over the West, touched with the general dissatisfaction with conditions then existing, and thrilled with the general desire for a change. New to the political field, he very naturally became as enthusiastic upon the questions then agitating the masses as his temperament and his calling would permit. Elected to the State senate, he served but a short time, when, at the end of a bitter contest, he was taken up and elected to the United States Senate.

It happened during a portion of his service here that I was quartered in the same house at which he also lodged, and naturally we became quite well acquainted, and naturally, too, we and others, of similar minds upon many of the political questions of the day, often talked over the issues and the prospects. At that time Senator KYLE was full of the sentiments which animated and directed the course of those who had placed him in office. He was full of the reform movement of the day, full of the belief that legislation had been turned into the wrong channels, that the many had not derived from lawmakers and laws and the executors of the laws the benefits and security justly due them, and that something ought to be done to change the general course—the lawmakers should look to and strive to promote and protect the interests of the many to a greater extent, and the interests of the few to a lesser extent.

That Senator KYLE was an amiable man, kindly disposed, and of generous impulses, I think all who knew him can truthfully testify. He was not aggressive nor obtrusive. He had that amiable disposition, was of that well-balanced and placid temperament which always go with regard for the feelings, opinions, and interests of others. He never pushed, in an aggressive way or in an offensive manner, his own opinions or projects. He passed through his Senatorial service in a quiet and unostentatious, undemonstrative way, at a time when there was a good deal of turmoil and a good deal of feeling in the political world.

As his first Senatorial term approached its close, and the time came for the election of his successor, those who knew his sentiments and feelings and his course here were hopeful that he might be returned. I recollect talking with him upon the eve of departure for the West, for the contest which, before his return, would be settled; for before he would be with us here again it would be known whether he would come as the Senator-elect or as the defeated aspirant for the Senatorial succession. It was known that the party with which he affiliated had a small majority in the legislature of his State, and the only question seemed to his friends here to be whether that majority party would unite upon him, or whether some other member of his party would be successful in getting its support. It was found that the Senator's party was not for him. His party wished him to retire that it might honor another with the Senatorship.

Again a bitter contest ensued. Again a deadlock occurred, and finally, after much balloting and many conferences, and a great struggle, Senator KYLE was reelected, as was stated by the eloquent gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], by a few votes of his own party and the solid vote of the opposition party. He won—his party was defeated.

Naturally, when he came back, it was appreciated by those with whom he had been associated politically that a change had taken place in his relations to political parties, and that probably a change would take place in his relations to political questions. So, no surprise was expressed when, later on, he became affiliated with the majority party in Congress, the Republican party, which he had first opposed, but which in his second election had returned him to the Senate.

I do not think there was any harsh criticism of him; certainly not here. I know not how it was in the State in which he dwelt. It is not for me, or for anyone, recklessly, to say that his change of sentiment did not correspond and entirely keep pace with his change of party. He was educated at Oberlin. Republicanism was deeply instilled into him in his youth. He went to Dakota no doubt an intense Republican. A movement for reform which swept over the country carried him from the party of his fathers, from the party of his earlier devotions, into another, and it is not so remarkable that under changed circumstances he again became fast in the faith which was his early faith, and turned from the course which for a time he had followed.

He was a kindly man, of generous impulses and blameless private life. No feelings except kindly feelings can be entertained of him personally by those who knew him here. He has passed off the stage, gone in the prime of life, gone with the largest portion of the strongest years of life, in the ordinary course, cut off.

To be a Senator of the United States is a great honor. To have the esteem and veneration of the people who elect Senators is something to strive for and to be proud of. If one retain that esteem and veneration after the Senatorial office is gone until life itself is gone, his memory becomes a rich legacy.

As one who knew Senator KYLE, and whose relations with him were pleasant and kindly, as one who esteemed him for his virtues in private life and who has no judgment to pass upon his political faults or failings—no one is perfect—I lay my tribute of personal respect upon his bier.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, it was not my pleasure or profit to have known JAMES HENDERSON KYLE well in the sense of having met him often, or to have spent any considerable time with him. On the contrary, although we were near neighbors, but little opportunity was offered to know him through the ordinary means by which men know each other, and I must therefore leave to others the office of speaking of him from the standpoint of close acquaintanceship, and others can better give the particulars of his birth, education, and life.

But we may know a man well and divine his character through the medium of a multitude of mutual friends, and thus view him through an atmosphere that neither magnifies, reduces, or refracts.

The true likeness of a man in active public life is reflected as in a mirror from the people among whom he lived and labored.

For over a year it was my pleasure to spend the greater part of my time among the people who knew Senator KYLE best and came in close contact with his home constituents, and there was thrown on my mind and heart a composite picture of the man which I shall never forget and which I shall ever cherish as one of the pleasant memories of my life. That picture is the average of the views of a great number of people, and is neither colored by friendship nor distorted by dislike. All narrow individual views merged, interwoven, and overshadowed into one, and the picture of the true man stands forth in my mind clean-cut, complete in outline, and beautiful, and I regret that these feeble words of mine can not reproduce for you the picture of this man.

The men are few in active political life who have the intellectual and moral strength to withstand the searchlight of daily familiarity with a large local constituency and rise above local jealousies and criticisms.

Few there are who can stand forth unsullied, transparent, and flawless under the X-ray of public opinion, but Senator KYLE was such a man.

Having been educated for the ministry and followed the profession, Senator KYLE, inexperienced in politics, was suddenly injected into official life by one of the strange circumstances which are so apt to arise in Western politics, and at a time when political issues were at fever heat.

He stepped from the place of a minister of the gospel and financial agent of a church college to State senator, and from there to the highest office in the gift of the entire people of a State. Thrown into the place by a veritable political maelstrom of contending factions—elected under the most trying circumstances by the union of opposing and radically differing parties. Through it all, and in all the years that followed, he was the same clean, earnest, honest, unassuming, kindly, manly man and Christian gentleman that he had been in the past.

Although in high political station, he did not grow away from
